Quand on parle de protection des renseignements personnels sur la santé, on parle également de protection de la dignité humaine. Nos renseignements personnels sur notre santé, ce n'est pas des choses qu'on veut partager avec tous et chacun. C'est des choses pour lesquelles on doit être capable de dire, « Cette information-là, je suis d'accord de la partager avec tel et tel professionnel, mais je ne veux la partager avec d'autres. »

Ça, c'est notre droit absolu. Ça, c'est ce que la loi nous permet de faire. Mais dans la vie quotidienne de ceux qui offrent ce type de protection, ils doivent avoir les ressources nécessaires pour le faire. On parle ici non seulement de protection des droits, mais on parle également de protection de notre dignité humaine.

En revenant aux histoires qui se retrouvent souvent dans les manchettes, j'aimerais mettre l'accent plus précisément sur les organismes de soins de longue durée. Les maisons de soins de longue durée ont demandé depuis longtemps au gouvernement provincial de recevoir un minimum de 3,5 heures de soins personnels par bénéficiaire. Malheureusement, on est encore loin de là, bien que le niveau de besoins des gens dans les maisons de soins infirmiers continue d'augmenter.

Il y a quelques années de ça, on n'aurait jamais pensé que quelqu'un qui recevait de l'oxygène se retrouverait dans une maison de soins de longue durée. Avant, ces gens-là devaient demeurer à l'hôpital. Maintenant, on en voit de façon courante. Même chose avec des gens qui ont des problèmes d'alimentation : avant ça, ces gens-là devaient demeurer à l'hôpital. Maintenant, on en voit de plus en plus dans les maisons de soins infirmiers, et c'est un pas dans la bonne direction.

Ces maisons-là sont faites justement pour essayer d'être des maisons. C'est une résidence. Donc, c'est quelque chose de bien, mais il faut quand même être en mesure d'avoir les ressources nécessaires pour venir à bout de rencontrer les besoins toujours croissants de ces gens-là. Ça, c'est pour protéger la dignité autant de ce qu'on essaie de faire avec notre projet de loi.

Un autre aspect que l'on aimerait voir augmenter, c'est les pratiques interdisciplinaires. En ce moment en Ontario, il y a des centaines de milliers d'Ontariens et d'Ontariennes qui n'ont pas accès au soins de santé, qui n'ont ni médecin de famille, ni accès à un centre de santé communautaire, ni accès à une clinique d'infirmières praticiennes. Parce qu'ils n'ont pas accès, ils sont à l'extérieur, et vraiment nous regardent de l'intérieur. Ça pourrait changer, et ça pourrait changer vite, en mettant en place des équipes interdisciplinaires qui sont gouvernées par la communauté pour s'assurer que dans les petites communautés, qu'elles soient rurales ou du nord, où il y a souvent un problème de pénurie, si le médecin vient puis repart, le centre, lui, qui est gouverné par la communauté, demeurerait là pour s'assurer que ces gens-là continuent d'avoir accès : continuent d'avoir accès à leur dossier médical, continuent d'avoir accès aux autres pourvoyeurs de soins de santé pendant que le recrutement continue.

On parle également d'avoir un mécanisme pour investiguer les plaintes, et là, on parle de l'ombudsman. Ici en Ontario, l'ombudsman demande le pouvoir d'investiguer les plaintes dans les hôpitaux depuis longtemps. Nous, les néo-démocrates, on le demande au ministre de la Santé depuis des mois. Je pense qu'il n'y a pas une semaine que je ne me lève pas à la Chambre pour demander au ministre de la Santé d'accorder à l'om-budsman le droit d'investiguer les plaintes dans les hôpitaux. Malheureusement, pour une raison ou une autre, le gouvernement refuse.

Bien que l'ombudsman ne puisse pas investiguer les plaintes, il reçoit quand même des centaines de plaintes à chaque année envers les hôpitaux. Malheureusement, tout ce qu'il peut répondre, c'est qu'il n'a pas juridiction. Ça aussi amènerait le système de santé un pas plus loin, et il serait important que ce soit mis en place.

En somme, nous, les néo-démocrates, appuyons la revue de la Loi sur la protection des renseignements personnels en matière de santé. On pense que c'est une loi importante. Les agences de santé ont travaillé fort afin de la mettre en place et de s'assurer que toutes les parties de la loi étaient respectées parce que c'est quelque chose de bien pour nous, les consommateurs, les clients, pour ceux qui vont demander des services de santé. Mais une revue est importante pour s'assurer que toutes les parties du système ont été capables de la mettre en œuvre et ont des ressources nécessaires afin de la mettre en œuvre de façon cohésive et cohérente. Donc, pour nous, la revue de cette loi servira à s'assurer qu'elle est bien en place, mais à s'assurer également un pas de plus envers le respect de la dignité des gens qui ont besoin du système.

Mr. Shafiq Qaadri: I think it's very important that we, as a Legislature as well as the government, move forward on this very important motion on the Personal Health Information Protection Act and improvements that will no doubt occur subsequent to its passage, as well as review.

The idea of information privacy is of course one that physicians are taught very early in medical school, as custodians, as stewards of what is no doubt the most personal, significant and impactful information there is about individuals—way beyond, by the way, credit cards, social insurance numbers, alarm code keys or whatever—information that deals with individuals and their personal health. By the way, Speaker, as all of us mourn, as you know, the loss of one of our chief medical officers of health, Dr. Sheela Basrur, all of this really underlines the fact of how important and personally significant this type of information is.

This has been true through the ages, and certainly when we were going to medical school about 20-plus years ago, but I think it's even more accented and highlighted now that we are truly in the information age.

I'll give you some personal examples. A patient who comes to a medical office, to a family physician, will no doubt share with them all sorts of information about their personal background, about their genetic history, about family problems, be they genetic or social. For example, are there conditions of things like alcoholism or depression or Alzheimer's within the family? Then the family physician will, hopefully, do an excellent physical examination, probing and prodding and measuring and essentially cataloguing all the various findings from top to bottom. Then the patient will be asked to undergo a number of tests, whether it is with regard to blood or any kind of radiology imaging—for example, ultrasounds or what we call upper GI series. We really want to have a look at the insides as best we can.

Then comes the small matter of the results that we have to share with the patient. Of course, there is a certain amount of finesse, sensitivity, humanity and regard for a fellow human being who is, no doubt, at their most vulnerable. All of that information can literally make or break the person's day, the person's year and the person's life. That sort of information, whether it is shared with the individual alone—there are people we will be diagnosed with very significant conditions, be it cancer or HIV or chronic hepatitis B or any number of conditions, and very often they do not want that kind of information disseminated to the public, but perhaps even to members of their own family or their own circle. Of course, there is legislation that governs those kinds of rules as well.

Altogether, these are very significant pieces of information. Therefore I think it's only appropriate that, as a provincial Legislature that has oversight for health care, we bring to bear our collective wisdom and initiatives and stakeholder consultations to make sure that we have the best legislative framework we can—the rules that govern this particular domain.

One of the privileges but also challenges of being a family physician is that you will actually have multiple generations of the same family. I've had even four generations of the same family: the great-grandparents, grandparents, parents and the kids. When you discover particular conditions or if, let's say, a teenage girl wants to come in and access various forms of medication, sometimes other members of the family will actually ask and try to intrude into the discussion. Again, there are very specific rules—and they're age-based, of course, in terms of age of consent—that govern all family physicians' conduct in these matters.

It goes beyond just the idea of conduct in an office setting, though. There are rules that actually talk about the protection of this information, be it the digital version or the hard copy version, for years and years after that patient encounter. I think there are probably a number of reasons why that information is kept available or made available. For example, perhaps subsequent to the physician encounter, maybe two or three years hence, there may be an issue—whether it's medical or legal or maybe the individual is now up for kidney transplantation or heart transplantation or blood transfusion or any other number of scenarios—and there may be the necessity for actual review of those particular medical records. So there is very specific legislation in place that actually governs how those records are kept even decades after that initial patient encounter.

The other thing that's very interesting is that patients who will be diagnosed with things like elements of the cardiometabolic syndrome, basically the evils of obesity—none of my colleagues or members need think that I'm speaking of them specifically, although they often come and talk to me afterward. Elements of the cardiometabolic syndrome show elevated sugars, cholesterol, blood pressure, waist circumference and so on. They will often say, "Doc, please don't release this information to anybody, or if my insurance company calls"—or if this office or that office or an employer or anyone else calls.

Of course, what's always interesting and amusing is that we have to reassure the patient that until they allow us, with a signature on a specific form that essentially allows to us release that information, not even the Prime Minister of Canada, the Premier of the province, or even your own esteemed office, Speaker, can ask for that information without actual written consent. That is part of the law of Ontario, and of course other jurisdictions in this country, to protect the privacy of this very personal and deeply impactful medical information.

I say that to you as part of the larger context under which the medical information flows. But now I speak to you about the digital age, because all of those pieces of information that I was mentioning—whether it is lab tests; the results of radiology exams; pap smears; HIV testing; VD testing or any number of other tests; or, for example, the patient's own patient record, meaning the encounter with the patient, whether it's by the way of a psychiatric nature or a depressive nature—all of these things are now going digital. This, of course, is not only increasing the flow of information, but the traffic and the points of intersection and the areas of flow are now literally increasing exponentially.

Very often, for example, some of us are signed up to alerts that are sent to us by e-mail. Let's say there's a patient who comes in and we're vaguely dealing with the condition of some kind of chest pain. We send the patient off for an electrocardiogram and cholesterol tests. We try to match their risk in terms of their overall picture. As family doctors, we have no doubt been watching them, tracking them and following them for years on end, and something is going on, some vague kind of chest pain. Some of us are actually now signed up to e-mail alerts where the laboratory in question will send us directly, or possibly fax us directly, and/or all of the above, that there are some conditions that are very important and need to be acted on on an immediate basis.

That, of course, opens up a whole opportunity, unfortunately, for missed calls, misinformation, disinformation and the incorrect spread of that information. For example, some physicians will inevitably receive information about patients who are not their own. Sometimes it comes because you happen to be in the same building. Sometime it comes because perhaps your e-mail happens to mimic others. All of these issues are now in play and are amplified and accentuated because of the digital age in which we live.

It's extremely important that we talk about, as I say, this very deeply impactful personal information, as well as the whole area, which is a major discipline in and of itself: the idea of patient confidentiality; the consent that is required for a physician to actually release, use, redirect that information; the very personal and intense rules that govern physicians' custodial responsibility or stewardship of these records, whether it is access requests from individuals, other members of the family, other institutions, insurers and employers; and, of course, the overlay that is now so important because of the digital age that we are now in. That's why, as Minister Bryant and others have talked about, it's extremely important for us to move forward, not only with this motion but also the review that it will eventually lead to.

Having said that, I think it's important for us to review the fact that the Personal Health Information Protection Act, 2004, was actually regarded as a model and really understood, incorporated and responded to, and talked to the idea that the management of health care information is of course changing, evolving, self-regulating and self-upgrading.

Part of what this motion speaks to is the idea that a legislative committee will actually allow us to consult with patients and stakeholders. And no doubt, as part of that consultation, we're going to have a relatively healthy dose of consultation with digital software providers, because time and time again we hear in the press and in the newspaper and elsewhere the idea not only of the sanctity of digital information but unfortunately the opposite: how it seems to be relatively easy to make off with it, to actually steal it, whether it's personal information, banking information or even the whole idea of identity theft.

This particular privacy act came into force, as you'll recall, on November 1, 2004, and has some fairly intense specifications for the rules, the usage and the ability to redirect and disclose personal health information by terms that need to be specified and amplified: "health information custodians," which of course include doctors, laboratories, long-term-care homes and hospitals.

I'll give you an example. I had the opportunity recently of chairing a medical conference on a new domain that is just becoming better and better appreciated in Ontario. It talked about cardiovascular disease, or heart and blood vessel disease, that is now unfortunately exploding. It now, by the way, accounts for something in the order of 40% of all the deaths in Canada. But one of the spins or skews or nuances that we're learning is that one of the risk factors, along with the usual suspects of blood pressure, smoking and obesity, happens to be one's ethnocultural background. The Heart and Stroke Foundation has actually just allocated fairly significant resources to go after the health information on some of these areas for specific communities—for example, aboriginals, the Chinese population, the black population and South Asians.

I just say that to you in terms of the background, but what was extremely interesting is that one of our American colleagues, a physician, came back and said, "Listen, if there is a higher risk of cardiovascular heart and stroke disease in these particular populations"—and of course, God bless America, it's kind of an American question—"do we really want to tell anybody? Do we want to disclose this information?" Because from the American perspective, he was talking about a person's insurability, a person's ability to actually get health coverage. Of course, that's an entirely different kind of debate. In America, it seems they were interested in perhaps the opposite—once again, God bless America—in terms of the suppression, shall we say, or the very specific targeted use of this kind of health care information.

In any case, all of these various issues, whether it is the extraordinary exponential flow that we now see on a day-to-day basis of information in the digital age, the very important regulations that we have been brought up on and are still living on and that still resonate in our medical offices with regard to privacy and patient confidentiality or the release of documentation, be it in the public domain, the private domain, electronically by fax and so on, I would say the deeper responsibility that we have as a Legislature is to make sure that the stewardship of this information accounts for all of these different issues and struggles and initiatives and challenges.

With that, I would urge members of this House to support this particular motion that was brought forward by our government so that we can offer best practices on the personal health information protection domain.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I'm going to share some words on behalf of our party regarding this motion dealing with the Personal Health Information Protection Act, 2004, which is going to be reviewed, in this motion, by the Standing Committee on Social Policy. That committee, once this motion is passed, will have the opportunity to report back to the House its opinions, observations and recommendations concerning amendments to this 2004 act.

I think it's already been mentioned that this review is necessary and it is, as has already been mentioned, overdue. It deals with the protection of personal, private health information. We have heard this morning repeatedly that people obviously want and require that their personal health information be protected at all costs. Certainly, the government in the province of Ontario has an obligation to make sure that happens.

This particular legislation dealing with the protection of personal health information—we have been trying to draft legislation since about the year 2000 and we are now at a point where we have legislation and we need to review the legislation. I don't anticipate that this review is going to result in a major overhaul of the act, but I think what this review will enable us to do is to ensure that the legislation is effective as we move towards the establishment of a province-wide e-health system. I guess that's what we are looking forward to.

That is a priority. Unfortunately, it is a priority that we have not yet seen the realization of in this province. But certainly coming out of this review, if not before, this government must—and I stress the word "must" because this is what we're doing and why we're doing it—clearly communicate to the public, the Legislature and the committee information as to where we are going with electronic health records. Of course, when this electronic health system is in place, we need to ensure that this legislation that we are reviewing is going to be adequate to maximize the potential of electronic health records. We need to ensure that the legislation we are reviewing is adequate to protect the private, personal health information of Ontarians. I guess that is the missing information that we still don't have. What progress is being made on electronic health records? We really need that information in order to do the review that we are undertaking, and I think that's really been the missing ingredient.

This government spent $647 million on the Smart Systems for Health Agency between 2002 and 2008. This is a considerable amount of money, and we still don't know when people in this province can expect a full electronic health system that will give every person in the province a health record that all authorized health care workers can access. We do not have any final decisions on timelines or announcements on timelines for the full implementation of the electronic health record. Regrettably, if we don't have that information, this review will not do all that is necessary, and that is ensuring that it's going to adequately protect the information in preparation for the full implementation of electronic health records.

Deloitte did a review of the Smart Systems for Health Agency in 2006, and regrettably that review indicated that despite the fact that this government has spent millions of taxpayers' dollars, there was still no strategic direction and the government didn't seem to be accountable for any of the spending and really had nothing to show for it. In fact, the report found that "significant questions exist relating to the effectiveness of certain decisions and the value obtained from significant investments." The report called for "an aggressive agency turnaround plan."

This electronic health record, which still has no timelines or goals, would help us to bridge physical distances, it would help us to penetrate the silos, it would allow for unprecedented communication amongst health care providers, and it would have tremendous benefit to patients. They'd be more informed. There would be the whole issue of safety. It would allow them to move also in a seamless transition along a continuum of care. It would mean that no matter where you travel in this great province, if you become ill and require any services at any emergency ward, that ward will have all the information that pertains to your personal health history. That would save us tremendous costs because we wouldn't have to repeat tests, but, more importantly, it would ensure that all of the health care providers in this province who are entitled to your information have it available when it comes to your treatment. Regrettably, we don't know when that electronic health record is going to be available for people in Ontario because we've not seen any timelines and we don't know what the goals are. In fact, we don't see any announcements of timelines.

In 2007, the Ontario Information and Privacy Commissioner, Ann Cavoukian, confirmed what I have just said, and that was that Ontario is far behind other provinces when it comes to implementing electronic health records. According to Canada Health Infoway, Ontario lags far behind other jurisdictions such as, for example, Alberta, British Columbia and, on the east coast, PEI, regarding the implementation and adoption of electronic health records. If we take a look at Alberta, they have an electronic health record system in place, and they hope to have all people in that province on the record by the end of 2008. We don't have any timelines at all. If we take a look at British Columbia, they intend to build the infrastructure they need to develop a province-wide electronic system by 2009.

I think we can see that in Ontario, unfortunately, the health system is falling behind. We see this when it comes to doctors and the growing doctor shortage, and the fact that in 2005, we saw doctors leaving this province for the first time ever, really. In 2007, the number of doctors leaving this province to go to other provinces had tripled. We've seen the government's lack of action on C. difficile. We've seen that they failed to introduce the PET scanner, a new piece of diagnostic equipment which is available in provinces such as Alberta and British Columbia.

This province, when it comes to health, is falling behind. We're increasingly seeing gaps in our health care system. We know that the poll that was taken by SES just before the end of last year indicated that over 60% of the people in this province weren't seeing any improvements to the health system. If we talk about e-health, in April 2007, Tony Fell, who was chairman of RBC Capital Markets, resigned from the Toronto Central LHIN because, as he said, he was "extremely disappointed with the low priority that had been accorded by the Liberal government to e-health." According to Fell, "An advanced e-health system could save many billions of dollars annually while, at the same time, providing vastly improved service and care to our citizens and a major reduction in medical errors." That was April 19, 2007, in the Toronto Star.

In 2008, the Ontario Hospital Association also reported that, "The evolution of e-health in Ontario has been hindered by the absence of a health system funding approach that recognizes e-health as a strategic investment priority." The OHA believes that "the current funding environment does not effectively support the adoption, collaboration and integration necessary to enable the timely realization of e-health's true value." According to the OHA report, "Improved availability, integration and communication of health care information will result in improved care for those with chronic diseases...." There are so many people in the province today—I want to deal with that a little later, about the impact of e-health on chronic disease.

They also said that if we had it, it would create "greater efficiency in interactions with patients, improved patient safety"—and, a very important fourth point—

“improved patient participation in their own health....” This is critical.

Currently, if you try accessing the e-health strategy, you aren’t going to get much except a phone directory.

Who else had something to say about the government’s inaction, lack of timelines or goals towards the e-health strategy? The quality council. The quality council was quite critical of the government regarding the lack of activity and, again, they came back to the fact that it would enable the ministry to focus on the prevention and the management of diabetes and other chronic diseases. Also, e-health investments would support the government’s diabetes strategy in the shorter term and form the foundation for the longer-term goal of creating electronic health records for all Ontarians.

In fact, when the Ontario Health Quality Council released their report recently, the council chairman, Ray Hession, said, “Ontario needs a province-wide electronic health records system to better monitor and treat patients with chronic disease.” They actually went on to say that nearly 8,000 lives in this province could be saved annually if the province did better testing, treating and monitoring of patients with such diseases as diabetes and heart disease. They indicated that currently, slightly less than half of those with diabetes have their blood sugar under control, while only 28% of patients with diabetes and high blood pressure have their blood pressure under control. As well, only one in three patients with coronary artery disease received all three drugs—Aspirin, beta-blockers and cholesterol-reducing medications—recommended to prevent their vessels from clogging.

We know what is necessary to deal with these chronic diseases. Electronic health records throughout the province would help us to better monitor and treat these patients. But Mr. Hession also said that the government has not released a plan with a budget and targets to “get us from where we are to where it’s widely accepted we ought to be. In the absence of that, it doesn’t matter what we say about when it’s going to happen,” he said.” If there are no such prerequisites in place, it won’t happen, and that is our concern.

Now, this is the Ontario Health Quality Council that was set up to look after what progress we are making, and in this instance they found there were failings in Ontario’s e-health system: that the government had no plan, had no timelines, and as a result, lives that could be saved were simply not being saved.

We have no idea how the government plans to achieve its targets; we just know that we haven’t seen any timelines. It is most regrettable that they are so slow when we know that this system could deliver better health care. I’ve just pointed out what actually could happen.

I’m going to conclude my remarks. I think we recognize that this review that we’re undertaking is necessary. It is overdue. It will give our stakeholders an opportunity to tell us about the effectiveness of the legislation and what improvements need to be made. But it will do so because we are moving forward, we hope, to the establishment of a province-wide e-health system. We just don’t know when that will happen.

Really, in the absence of that type of information, we probably aren’t going to do total justice in this review, because it’s going to be impossible to adequately ensure for what is ahead of us that we can adequately protect these electronic health records. At the end of the day, we need to have information about where we are with electronic health records, what are the timelines that the government has in place, when they are going to make announcements about the timelines, and what is their goal. Because without that information, we’ll never know whether this review of the legislation is going to adequately protect the privacy of Ontarians. We’ll support this, but we certainly hope that in the interim, the government comes forward with a plan of action for electronic health records.

Mr. Bob Delaney: I’m pleased to join the debate on a subject that I find very interesting, that is, the government’s notice of motion on PHIPA. Does the fact that a behaviour is permissible make it mandatory? And, indeed, does the existence of a technology or a capability mean that it must be either compulsory or forbidden? This is, I think, what this motion seeks to address. And while I’m not a lawyer and I don’t bring a legal mind into the considerations, I was trained in science and mathematics, so I can bring an opportunity to apply some logic.

If one looks at where this motion is taking us, Ontario, with its aging population, is going to be looking at roughly twice the number of seniors in the next generation that we have now. With the evolution of technology, we’re seeing the technology of connectivity and bandwidth expanding greatly, thus giving us the ability to look at data and health records in a manner in which, as we grew up, we couldn’t even imagine. Add to this the technological savvy of not merely doctors, but also their patients, and what we have is the ability to share health records in a manner in which we have never been able to do so before.

The sophistication and stability of networks, distributed storage and delivery platforms using such applications as the browser and Internet portals will mean that health information that heretofore existed in silos is going to be something that doctors and their patients can use to advance the standards of care. What this motion seeks to do is to bring together a body of knowledge and to position us not so much where we are now, but where we would like to be in 10 and 15 years, in which doctors and their patients can collaborate in ways that we’re only beginning to imagine now, and do so in a manner in which a doctor and his or her patients can collaboratively determine where they’re going in their treatment and how to share their diagnostics. I think this is a good, forward-looking motion that deserves the support of this Legislature.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Further debate?

Mr. Wilkinson has moved government notice of motion number 60. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. I declare the motion carried.

Agreed to.

Hon. David Caplan: Mr. Speaker, I seek consent of the House to recess until 10:45 of the clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Is there such consent? Agreed? Agreed. This House stands in recess until 10:45 a.m.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): We have a number of guests we'd like to introduce this morning and welcome everyone to Queen's Park.

On behalf of the member from Beaches–East York: Carmen Carrasco, Cheryl Duggan, Ken MacLeod, Sharon McPherson, Chris Sartor, Nancy Van der Plaats, Kyle Vose and Mike Yale, in the west members' gallery.

On behalf of the member from Parkdale–High Park: Choesang Dhenub, Tsering Dolma, Jigdel Kuyee, Tenzin Nyendak. These are members of the Friends of Tibet, in the west members' gallery.

On behalf of the member from Lanark–Frontenac–Lennox and Addington, I'd like to welcome in the public gallery today members of the Ontario Landowners Association, visiting from approximately 30 counties.

On behalf of the member from Oakville, I'd like to welcome the guests of page Natalie LaMarche: her mother, Shaida Tabatabai; David LaMarche, her father; Mina Hunt, her aunt. They are in the members' east gallery.

On behalf of the member from Glengarry–Prescott–Russell: in the east members' gallery, Richard Lalonde, Jeanne Charlebois, Conrad Lamadeleine, Jean-Yves Lalonde, Gary Barton, Robert Kirby, Denis Pommerville, Ken Hill, Grant Crack and Stephane Parisien. These are guests visiting today from the member's riding, and it's Glengarry–Prescott–Russell day here today.

MEMBER FOR GLENGARRY– PRESCOTT–RUSSELL

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd just like to take this opportunity as well: Today is a special anniversary for the member from Glengarry–Prescott–Russell. Today marks Jean-Marc Lalonde's 38th anniversary in public life. Let's acknowledge Jean-Marc and his contribution.

ORAL QUESTIONS

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: My question is to the Premier. Premier, I could stand here today and blame your government for the impact on the auto sector over and over again, but it's not going to resolve one issue, and that's the issue of jobs and support for the number one industry in the province of Ontario. Premier, you've mentioned the plan that you have in supporting the auto sector and how it's going to ensure that we have jobs for future generations in the number one employer. Today's announcement at General Motors in Oshawa is only the beginning. We're going to see five or seven times the number of those announcements coming forward as the support industries for that particular industry announce their layoffs.

Premier, the plan isn't working. Do you have an alternative form or way to support the auto sector in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Let me first of all say that our hearts go out to the workers affected by today's announcement from GM. My friend opposite will know that GM has decided, because truck and SUV sales have plummeted by 40% in the last year alone, that they are closing plants: two in the US; one in Mexico, which is rather extraordinary; and one here in Ontario.

We will do everything we can to lend support to those workers and those families. We understand that this is a particularly difficult time, but I'm also mindful of the advice I received from a worker recently in Windsor. When I said, "What can we do for you?" he said, "Keep fighting for the auto sector in Ontario." We intend to do exactly that.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: Premier, certain sectors of the plan don't appear to be working. For example, the taxation of ethanol is one small method of deterring the sale of ethanol—which supports the E85, which is 85% ethanol—a method of deterring the sales of technology-leading advantages that General Motors and the other Big Three would have in the province of Ontario. Small things like that or just-in-time delivery service, with the cost of fuel, are not necessarily the way to go.

What I'd mentioned before in this Legislature was that we need alternative methods to support just-in-time delivery service such as having taxation for warehousing to make it more cost-effective, because bringing goods in from other jurisdictions may not be the way to go. We need to think outside the box and find alternative methods to support this. Do you have some other plan that we can look at and work on with you to make sure that the number one employer in the province of Ontario stays the number one employer?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I appreciate and do not doubt for a moment the sincerity of the offer coming from this particular member. But I can tell you, from day to day, it's hard to know where the Conservative Party is coming from on this score. Their single, most important economic priority is that we cut taxes, corporate taxes in particular. I can tell you, in talking to GM right now, they're not paying corporate taxes because they're not making a profit. They were paying capital taxes until we eliminated capital taxes for them, and they voted against that. So it is difficult, from time to time, from day to day, from question period to question period, to know where they are coming from on this score.

I can say that we will continue to work with GM. Because we have invested together with them in their new Beacon project, which is a new flex plant, that means we are at the front of the line when it comes to landing a new car manufacturing investment in Ontario.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: Premier, we've brought forward a number of alternatives. I've raised this issue in the Legislature on a number of occasions going back years. I have brought forward things such as the fuel-consumption tax as a method to reduce the taxation on some aspects, as a gesture to the auto sector, and particularly the truck plant in Oshawa, as one way of support.

In a previous government, one of the Premiers came forward with an all-party committee to address issues called the alternative fuel committee. Would you consider looking at an all-party committee on the auto sector and the number one employer on how we can move forward in making sure that it remains the number one employer in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: We're pleased to give real consideration to this idea, but I must say that when we spoke with the auto manufacturers, they told us that their number one concern was capital taxes. They told us their second concern was business education taxes. We've also come to understand that, at the beginning of the 21st century, in a world where one of the states was prepared to put up $1 billion to land a new key investment, we have got to be at the table.

I would prefer to be at the table together with a strong partner in the federal government, so that we can work together to further strengthen the auto sector in Ontario. But until that day comes, I'm more than prepared to work with my colleague opposite, to continue working with the CAW and to continue to work with our auto manufacturers to ensure that we have a bright and vibrant future for our auto sector in the province of Ontario.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE CONTROL

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: My question is to the Minister of Health, who has taken a very incredulous position on C. difficile and the crisis in recent weeks. Minister, you have known since at least 2004 about the threat of C. difficile, but you have not developed a plan nor have you revealed the numbers.

We learned that between October 2006 and September 2007, 14 patients at University Health Network in Toronto died from C. difficile. At Mount Sinai, between April 2007 and March 2008, it contributed to three deaths.

Minister, we were able to get these numbers by simply contacting the hospitals. You can't continue to stonewall and say you don't have this information. I ask you: Will you release the C. difficile fatality figures today?

Hon. George Smitherman: As the honourable member would know, firstly—she talks about a crisis in the context of the last few weeks, and this is the difficulty with the approach by the honourable member, because maybe that's when she was first alerted to it, but the health care system has been working diligently on this issue for a long time. I've been in contact over the last few days, as an example, with some of the hospital CEOs, just to go through, step by step, the initiatives they've taken in their hospital environments. They've been grappling, struggling and working hard to address this challenge over several years.

On the matter of reporting, the honourable member knows that on September 30 we'll be implementing real-time reporting on C. difficile rates across the broad hospital platform in Ontario. That will be the first time that all that information is brought together in one place. I think that, under the leadership of Dr. Baker, this is going to dramatically enhance the amount of information that the public knows about patient safety circumstances in all of our hospitals.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: The confidence in the health system in the province of Ontario has been badly shaken in recent weeks and months.

Today, we learn—in fact, the media just had a big story in the papers and on TV; I was watching—there are seven more C. difficile outbreaks at St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto and there are outbreaks at Stevenson hospital in Alliston.

Ontarians know what is happening, but you are not providing any comfort or consolation to them that you know what's going on and that you have a plan for their future. I ask you today, Minister: Will you develop a plan and will you let us know why you have failed the test of leadership these past four years?

Hon. George Smitherman: It's interesting to watch the honourable member, whose tenure as Minister of Health led to the dismissal of her government, talk about confidence and about leadership.

Ontarians know that the steps we've taken will dramatically enhance the amount of information that the public has with respect to a broad range of patient safety indicators.

We put out this release last week. I'll repeat it for the honourable member. On September 30, we'll have public reporting of C. difficile; on December 31, MRSA, VRE and hospital standardized mortality rates; and on April 30 of next year, rates of ventilator-associated pneumonia, rates of central line infections, rates of surgical site infections, and hand hygiene compliance.

Where the honourable member continues to miss the mark is that C. difficile has been well known as a struggle and a challenge in health care, and that's why those who lead our health care organizations have been working to address it in each of the 157 hospitals across Ontario. This is not a crisis just of the last few weeks; this has been an ongoing challenge.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: The minister has one thing right: This has been an ongoing challenge. Unfortunately, he has refused to assume any responsibility. As a former Minister of Health, I know that the buck stops and starts with the minister. He has been evading his responsibility and the need to be accountable to the people in the province.

When SARS broke out, our government acted quickly in order to restore confidence in the health system, and we had the support of leaders in this province.

Minister, when are you finally going to take responsibility for the fact and not blame the hospitals or the front-line workers but acknowledge that it was your inaction over the past four years that has shattered the confidence?

Hon. George Smitherman: It's a ridiculous assertion that the honourable member makes. The health care system, including me, the ministry, all of those 300,000 or 400,000 people who work in health care—we all bear responsibility for improved performance and enhancing patient safety in health care. I bear part of that responsibility, of course, but it's not appropriate for the honourable member to pretend that it's about a piece of paper from Queen's Park when it requires front-line battling every single day by those who lead health care organizations. The honourable member, as a former Minister of Health, knows that and she knows it very, very well.

The initiatives that we're taking, under the leadership of Dr. Baker, will provide for Ontarians a degree of transparency which will dramatically enhance the knowledge that they have about a wide variety of patient safety—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: My question is for the Premier. Premier, this morning General Motors announced it is closing the truck plant in Oshawa, eliminating the final 1,000 jobs there. This comes after General Motors received a $235-million cheque from the McGuinty government. The money is gone, and because there were no job guarantees, there will be 2,500 fewer jobs at the Oshawa truck plant than existed before you handed over the money. Can the Premier explain why the McGuinty government gave General Motors $235 million without getting job guarantees from General Motors in return?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: First, I want to take the opportunity once again to acknowledge the tremendous contribution that the auto worker makes to the Ontario economy.

One of the things that the GM executives told me when I was briefed on this issue this past Sunday was that we continue to excel when it comes to quality and productivity, which is all about how quickly we can produce that quality.

I also want to take this opportunity to commend the CAW for the recent agreements it has entered into with some of our auto manufacturers and for the concessions they have made, which have been very realistic in a very trying time.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I was listening hard for an answer there. The question was, how could the McGuinty government give $235 million to General Motors, a huge multinational corporation, and get no job guarantees? I've asked that question for weeks and still don't have an answer.

The news is actually worse, because chief executive officer Wagoner said the plant will cease production in 2009 and "we don't have plans to allocate future products." This means it's a permanent closure. This means thousands of parts jobs will go as well.

Will the Premier finally admit that giving General Motors $235 million of public money without getting job guarantees in return was not a very good jobs strategy?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I think a few facts on this score would be helpful.

We landed a $2.5-billion investment; it's called the Beacon project. There was a $235-million co-investment; $60 million of that went to universities to help them conduct research to help us land the next-generation vehicle. All the remaining money that went to GM was a loan. That's point number one.

Secondly, although it was a car production facility, we looped in the truck plant so that if there were job losses in the truck plant, there would be early repayment of that loan required. If GM is, in fact, in breach of that agreement, then we will enforce it as such and seek early repayment on that loan.

Mr. Howard Hampton: This story becomes more interesting every day. When this announcement was originally made by the Minister of Economic Development and Trade three years ago, he said that this was going to guarantee thousands of jobs for GM workers in Oshawa, in St. Catharines, across Ontario. Then we found out there were no job guarantees. A few weeks ago, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade said they weren't in breach of any obligations. Now, today, the Premier says it was a loan and there is a breach.

Premier, can you tell us how much of the money is going to come back to Ontario, when is it going to come back to Ontario, and is it going to do anything for the 2,500 workers who've lost their jobs and the thousands more who are about to go?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: We'll have to wait and see what happens at the end of 2009 in terms of actual job numbers, but there are specific provisions found within this contract.

Let me tell you why we still have reason to be optimistic. This investment that we made together in this new Beacon project was to build a new, flexible manufacturing plant. A flexible plant allows us to shift on the fly, essentially, and respond quickly to changing market conditions and new consumer demands. We know that North Americans buy at least 15 million new vehicles every year. We know that they're buying fewer trucks and SUVs because of rising gas prices. GM has told us they want to make new cars. Guess who's at the top of the line to land a new car investment in North America? It's the Beacon project in Oshawa, because of our investment that we've made together. The fact is, we have positioned ourselves well for the future and we look forward to an ongoing dialogue with GM, working with CAW to land the next new investment here in Ontario.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Premier: This is interesting. As thousands of workers lose their jobs every week, the Premier says this is good positioning.

But it's not just to General Motors that the McGuinty government has been handing out money and not getting job guarantees. Two years ago, at the Dell call centre in Ottawa, the Premier bragged, "High-value jobs like the ones announced today will help us continue to build more opportunity for Ontario families and strengthen our future prosperity." Well, today the call centre is closed, the jobs are gone, the workers say they received little training and, yes, Dell, a huge, profitable, multi-million-dollar corporation, got $11 million of Ontario's money. Does the Premier still say that the laid-off workers and the public got a good deal on the $11-million gift to Dell?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities.

Hon. John Milloy: I'm proud to be part of a government which offers over 150 apprenticeships in the province of Ontario, and I'm proud of the training that was received at Dell. The guidelines for the trades offered at Dell required approximately 4,000 hours of both in-school and on-the-job training, and the workers there received transferable skills.

I'd like to draw the member's attention to a quote in the Sun, where David Weedmark, managing partner of the AIM Group's IT services division, was asked to comment on the Dell situation. He said he "fields dozens of calls every week looking for exactly the type of employees who worked at Dell."

"I would say over the next couple of months a third to a half of them should be able to find work. This is not a time to give up hope, because those skill sets are very much in demand. There are people like us scouring the streets looking to find"—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The question was to the Premier, and I think I know why the Premier wants to duck the question. His hometown newspaper, the Ottawa Citizen, tells quite a different story. It points out that many of the workers were already fully trained. It points out that others who were contacted said they received little training for the $11-million gift to Dell. Dell was so worried about this—the workers speaking out—that it forced them to sign a gag order before they left the company.

I think Ontarians deserve to know how their $11 million in training money was spent since so many of the workers didn't get training. My question to the Premier: Will the Premier ask the Auditor General to come in and look at the Dell handout, where they got $11 million and 1,000 workers wound up in the street?

Hon. John Milloy: I find this a little bit offensive. We are talking about real people and real jobs. We are talking about people who are undertaking training and transferable skills.

The honourable member asked what the funding is used for. Let me tell you about the trades: information technology support agent, 3,340 hours of on-the-job training and 600 hours—20 weeks—of in-school training; information technology call centre inside sales agent, 3,730 hours of on-the-job training and nine weeks of in-school training; information technology call centre customer care agent, 3,730 hours of on-the-job training and nine weeks of in-school training.

We care about making sure that we have well-trained workers and we're not going to stand in the House and make fun of them as the honourable members do across the way.

Mr. Howard Hampton: Most people in Ontario think that an apprenticeship involves years of training with a skilled journeyman, an instrument mechanic, an electrician or a welder. But it appears that for the McGuinty government, if you can sign something that says you might provide three weeks of training for someone in how to answer the phone, you'll get apprenticeship money. No other province in Canada doles out apprenticeship money for this kind of thing. No other province in Canada doles out $11 million to a profitable, multi-national corporation and then has 1,000 workers out on the street—and says it's a good deal.

My question to the Premier: When are you going to call in the Auditor General to look at what was a very bad deal for workers, a very bad deal for the public and a gift for Dell?

Hon. John Milloy: I'm very proud of the fact that we have an apprenticeship system in this province which recognizes the needs of the business community and the changing nature of our economy. Right now, we have 152 apprenticeships which are registered in the province, many of them providing similar training guidelines as the ones at Dell. I'll give you some examples: automotive glass technician, hoisting engineer, roofer, chef, construction craft worker, heavy equipment operator and automotive accessory technician. These are very similar training regimes as the ones offered at Dell.

We're in changing times. We actually recognize that, in a new economy, there are new skill sets that are needed, such as those offered at Dell. We don't sit there and make fun of hard-working individuals who receive transferable skills that will be useful throughout the Ottawa job market. I'm very proud of our record on apprenticeships.

SCHOOL CLOSURES

Mr. Randy Hillier: My question is to the Premier. Last September, you said the following: "For rural kids, few things are more important than being able to go to school in your own community, with your own friends. Rural schools help keep communities strong, which is why we're not only committed to keeping them open—but strengthening them." Those are your words, Mr. Premier, not mine.

Today, we have at least 50 rural schools closing, and many more are on the chopping block. These closures are another example and consequence of your relentless and uncaring attack on our rural culture, our rural heritage and our rural economy—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Stop the clock for a moment, please. I just remind the members from the government side that heckling is one thing, but some of the personal shots that I'm hearing are not acceptable. I just remind the government members of that.

Member?

Mr. Randy Hillier: Mr. Premier, why are you once again betraying the trust of rural Ontario and breaking another promise? Do you know how to keep a promise? Do you know how to be truthful?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Education.

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: Yes, let's talk about records. Since we came into office, we have increased funding to rural boards by $632 million. On our watch, there have been 404 new schools opened, and that is in the face of declining enrolment. We all know that there will be 90,000 fewer students next year than there were in 2003.

I'm not sure which party the member's speaking for, but the record of the Conservative Party is that under their watch, there were 50,000 more students and 500 schools closed.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Supplementary?

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: To the Premier: In 2002, in this very Legislature, you felt it was critical to keep Thames Valley district schools open. Now, on your watch as Premier, these schools are on the chopping block. That same year, you asked the Eves government for a moratorium on school closures. Now there are accommodation reviews starting in 300 schools across the province.

When are you finally going to stop playing politics with our students? When are you finally going to keep your promise, or is your legacy as education Premier going to be the closure of rural schools?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: It is beyond rich for a member of that party to be talking to us about playing politics on education. It is absolutely absurd. Since we came into office, 690 new teachers have gone into our rural schools—$632 million.

The reality is that school boards in this province must be able to make decisions based on the program that they need for their students in their schools. They must be able to plan for the students who are in their schools. This is why we have put pupil accommodation review guidelines in place that require the board to consult with the community, that look at the value of the school to the community and look for alternatives, but at the end of the day, if schools must consolidate or close, boards must be free to do that in the interests of the students in our publicly funded education system.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE CONTROL

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Ma question est pour le ministre de la Santé et des Soins de longue durée. Minister, we know that hundreds of people have died from Clostridium difficile. Patients at St. Michael's Hospital, as recently as this morning, are reporting that there are no signs posted at the hospital warning them of a C. difficile outbreak.

How many more shocking disease outbreaks will occur before this minister realizes that health care facilities must clearly warn patients of disease outbreaks?

Hon. George Smitherman: I think that the honourable member's suggestion is one that merits consideration by Dr. Baker, but I think that a far more appropriate starting point for all patients, for visitors to hospitals and for people who work in hospitals and other institutional environments is to understand the necessity of the obligation to take steps to protect themselves and to make assumptions, frankly, about the risks that are occurring in these environments.

What has surprised me to some extent is that in the House, the characterization by both parties is that they became aware of this issue just a few weeks ago, but the health care system has known about the attendant risk associated with superbugs in hospitals. They've been taking proactive steps to manage it, but these are very serious challenges indeed.

I'll take the honourable member's suggestion under advisement and ask Dr. Baker to give us some advice around that, but at the heart of it, all of us who are in those environments must make assumptions and take appropriate steps to protect ourselves and especially to do the right thing to protect others.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: In the face of a public crisis, Ontarians are losing confidence in our health care system. One way to rebuild public confidence is to give them an opportunity to bring their issue to a neutral third party such as an Ombudsman. Why is the minister afraid to bring in Ombudsman oversight of hospitals?

Hon. George Smitherman: In the matter at hand, the honourable member uses a word like “crisis,” then she calls for investigation by those who don’t have express capacity in this area.

We have a different approach. We believe fundamentally that the important step forward is to ask Dr. Michael Baker, an accomplished expert in the areas of patient safety, to lead an initiative which will dramatically enhance the information that Ontarians have on a wide variety of patient safety indicators. We believe this is the approach which is prudent in the circumstances and delivers the most timely results and benefits to the people of the province of Ontario.

I remind the honourable member that C. difficile is not something that’s come about only recently. This is something that hospitals and the hundreds of thousands of people who work in those environments, visit those environments and are patients in those environments have an obligation to be aware of and to take the steps that they can take, such as rigorous handwashing and dedication to cleanliness, that can provide very, very effective capacity in these circumstances.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Phil McNeely: My question is for the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. Minister, the issue of emergency room wait times is well known to all members of this House. This issue is not a new one, but something that my constituents of Ottawa–Orléans have raised with me a number of times. You recently made an announcement about new investments to reduce emergency wait times. Hôpital Montfort was one of the recipients of direct funding. My constituents would like to know how this money is going to reduce wait times and when my constituents are going to see improvements.

Hon. George Smitherman: Under the leadership of Dr. Alan Hudson, we’ve taken another significant step forward, which is to bring the successful Ontario approach to reducing wait times to one of the public’s biggest battles, which is with wait times in hospital emergency rooms. A $30-million pay-for-performance fund will target and incent the practices that will enhance performance in our 23 poorest-performing emergency rooms.

But in addition to that are a wide variety of initiatives led by Kevin Smith, the CEO of St. Joseph’s hospital in Hamilton, to provide better alternatives to hospital care so that we can reduce the proportion of alternate-level-of-care patients. That means providing more resources to home care and enhancing the number of hours that people can receive, $22 million in priority funding that each LHIN will have the opportunity to roll out and support local initiatives, $4.5 million for dedicated nurses for ambulances arriving, and nurse-led teams that will outreach the long-term-care homes—all in an effort to stabilize populations where they are.

Mr. Phil McNeely: Minister, I know my constituents will be glad to see that Hôpital Montfort is receiving some of this targeted funding. Hôpital Montfort is an important aspect of health care in Ottawa and provides very good care to my constituents in Ottawa–Orléans. While this $30 million in targeted funding will help the 23 poorest-performing emergency rooms, I would like to know what is being done to help the rest of the ERs across the province that are struggling with long ER wait times. I would like the minister to tell us what he is doing to ensure that all hospitals benefit from this recent announcement.

Hon. George Smitherman: Our efforts are to take coordinated steps to reduce wait times and enhance patient satisfaction in Ontario’s emergency rooms—this is a challenge in many hospitals—but most precisely are focusing in on 23 hospitals where the performance has been the poorest. By targeting the $30 million, we’re going to provide a pay-for-performance capacity where we incent the hospital and have expectations of improved performance on behalf of patients.

All hospitals in Ontario will benefit from the efforts to reduce alternate-level-of-care patient loads. Hôpital Montfort will be receiving $686,000 as part of an investment in the Champlain LHIN and in Ottawa hospitals that totals more than $4 million. With these initiatives and the alternate-level-of-care initiatives which complement them, we feel confident that we will begin to make substantial progress to reduce wait times and improve patient satisfaction in Ontario’s emergency rooms.

SEWAGE SPILL

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: My question is to the Minister of the Environment. The city of Ottawa has been struck by unbelievable news that there were over a billion litres of raw sewage dumped into the Ottawa River by the city of Ottawa and their sewer system.

You found out about this in May 2007, according to the records. Your spokesman for the Ministry of the Environment says you started your investigation on May 26, 2008—last month. Why did you do nothing for a year?

Hon. John Gerretsen: I thank the member for the question. Obviously, we share Ottawa’s concern as to what happened there in August 2006, but we have—

Mr. John Yakabuski: It’s a cover-up.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Member for Renfrew, withdraw the comment, please.

Mr. John Yakabuski: I withdraw.

Hon. John Gerretsen: In May 2007, when we found out about this, the ministry immediately contacted the city of Ottawa and the following steps have been taken to ensure that this kind of an event—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member from Welland will withdraw the comment, please.

Mr. Peter Kormos: I withdraw, Speaker.

Hon. John Gerretsen: Speaker, I'm somewhat surprised that the members opposite wouldn't want to hear what was actually done by the Ministry of the Environment when they heard about this in May 2007.

In any event, we take this very seriously, and we wanted to make sure that this kind of an event, which meant that the gates were open for an extra two weeks back in August 2006, wouldn't happen again. So what did we do? The ministry gave top priority to the certificates of approval that were required for the city's sewer system upgrade to be on track. It also ensured that all the certificates of approval for the city's sewer system upgrade included the enhanced and stringent monitoring, reporting, contingency planning of the combined sewer overflows.

We have been working with—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary?

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: You still haven't answered the question as to why you began your investigation on May 26 this year. Mr. Minister, why don't you do what the city of Ottawa did, that is, have an independent investigation of its role in this whole matter? Why don't you agree to an independent inquiry into your role in this whole debacle?

Hon. John Gerretsen: The member still doesn't understand that the Ministry of the Environment started to work with the city of Ottawa as soon as it heard about this in May 2007. It wanted to make sure that the kind of occurrence that happened in August 2006 didn't recur. That's why it put more stringent monitoring systems into place to make sure that it didn't happen, and also to make sure that the certificates of approval that were in the process of being approved, were going to be adhered to.

Our main concern within the Ministry of the Environment is to absolutely assure the people of Ottawa that the kind of occurrence that happened in August 2006 won't happen again.

The investigation that he's talking about was as a result of what the city of Ottawa employee didn't do in August 2006, and that didn't occur until we were notified by the department of public health about two or three weeks ago.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr. Michael Prue: My question is for the Premier. Thousands of Ontarians have disabilities. Those disabilities include mental, physical and emotional illnesses that pose serious barriers to their ability to work and earn a living. Through no fault of their own, people with disabilities who also receive ODSP payments are condemned by this government to a life sentence of poverty. ODSP benefits leave single adults $6,000 below the after-tax Statistics Canada low-income cut-off number. When will this government stop forcing Ontarians with disabilities to live on sub-poverty-level benefits?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: It's a very interesting question. This government has worked, since we have been elected, to improve the quality of life of those on ODSP. We have removed most of the barriers that were put in place by the previous government to prevent them from improving their quality of life. For instance, we consulted with them and some of them told us that they would go back to work if this government provided their medication. They were also telling us that they would like to be able to retain more of what they are earning. So we worked on that. We have listened to them, and we have amended our processes to help them to improve their quality of life and to help them if they want to go back to work.

Mr. Michael Prue: To the minister: And you continue to claw back everything they earn above $350 a month.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd just remind the members of the use of some language in here. Thank you.

Mr. Michael Prue: Six ODSP recipients are here with us today: Ken MacLeod, Cheryl Duggan, Kyle Vose, Mike Yale, Chris Sartor and Sharon McPherson. They're all here in the west gallery. They are here to ask the Premier to listen to their stories and to consider standing in their shoes. The meagre 2% ODSP increase that was in this budget amounts to 60 cents a day. What they want and what we all want is a commitment from this Premier that no Ontarian with a disability will be forced to live in poverty forever. Does this government believe that $2 a day is a reasonable amount for these people to have, after rent and food expenses, in their pocket?

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: I will continue to let the people in the gallery know what this government has done since we came into power. We've listened to them. We have increased social assistance by—it's going to be 9% this November. We know that they have had a lot of challenges. Every time that we move forward to improve their quality of life, this party votes with their friends who reduced their benefits by 22%. We're listening to them. We want to improve their quality of life. We want to help those who are able to return to work. We are improving their quality of life, so that they can keep their health benefits, they can keep their medication benefits, and they can keep more of what they are earning. We will continue to work with them to improve their quality of life.

AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Mr. Jean-Marc Lalonde: My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. But first, I would like to take this opportunity again to welcome the mayors and councillors of Glengarry, Prescott and Russell who are here with us in the gallery. They are here for a very special day, Glengarry–Prescott–Russell day at Queen's Park. This is going to be done every year now.

The united counties of Prescott and Russell and the municipality of North Glengarry have many of the same challenges that exist elsewhere in the province, such as infrastructure deficit, shortage of affordable housing, growing transit needs and many more. Bien que ces problèmes soient fréquents—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister.

Hon. Jim Watson: I want to congratulate the honourable member on celebrating his 38th anniversary representing the good people of eastern Ontario and Glengarry–Prescott–Russell. What a change to see constituents and municipal leaders from eastern Ontario here to support Mr. Lalonde.

About two weeks ago, the member from Lanark brought some constituents here, and do you know what? He had a press conference with them and they turned on him. They asked for his resignation. So I would encourage members to go to YouTube, type in “Randy Hillier,” and you'll see quite a sight—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I remind the member that we do not refer to individuals by their name, but by their riding.

Answer, please.

Hon. Jim Watson: I know that there will be a lot of hits on that YouTube site. Here he comes back again. So I'm very proud—

Interjections.

Mr. Tim Hudak: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I'd ask you to rule if this answer by the minister has anything whatsoever to do with his portfolio. This question should clearly be ruled out of order as a direct attack on a member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The government House leader on a point of order.

Hon. Michael Bryant: On that point of order, I think that the question and answer are entirely consistent with the kinds of questions and answers that are undertaken by the official opposition and third party. I respect whatever latitude the Speaker wishes to undertake, but the idea that the opposition and third party do not engage in ad hominem questions and ad hominem answers is completely absurd, and I know—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. I do agree with the member that that was, I believe, a personal attack at the member. I would ask him to withdraw the comment.

Hon. Jim Watson: I withdraw.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for Glengarry–Prescott–Russell.

Mr. Jean-Marc Lalonde: We often hear the need for housing framed as an urban issue, but the fact of the matter is that it affects every municipality, large or small. Often, small municipalities can feel ignored over discussions around housing. The mayors of Glengarry–Prescott–Russell's diverse municipalities want to know that they have a partner in this government. What have the minister and his government done to assure these municipalities that their concerns have been heard and are being addressed?

Hon. Jim Watson: I'm very proud of the work that we've done with respect to social housing. For instance, $100 million was announced in the budget for rehabilitation and repair. In Prescott and Russell, $381,000 was delivered; in Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, $774,000.

The Premier announced the continuation of the rent bank, a $5-million investment. Prescott and Russell received $29,000; Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, $71,000. This is another example of a member of this side, of the government, working hard for their constituents. I can tell you, those men and women up there are not going to be calling for Jean-Marc Lalonde's resignation.

POLYGAMY

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: My question is to the Premier. Yesterday, just before British Columbia launched a criminal probe into the illegal polygamist marriages taking place there, I demanded the same in this chamber for Ontario's well-documented polygamy problem. Last night, I sent the Premier an urgent letter to ask him to heed BC's action and initiate a criminal probe here too. Will the Premier send a strong message of support for Canada's laws and immediately launch a criminal investigation into these illegal polygamist marriages taking place in Toronto?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Government and Consumer Services.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: I'll respond to the honourable member's question by reminding her of what the Attorney General said in this House yesterday. He said that in Ontario, where there are allegations of criminal activity, the police are responsible for investigating—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I ask the member from Renfrew to withdraw the comment.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Withdraw.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: —and determining whether or not there are grounds for charges to be laid. I want to further highlight his point that political interference is not something that this government is desirous of getting into. In fact, it's not something that's proper. In the course of an investigation, the police can seek legal advice from crown attorneys—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: Apparently they don't care about breaking the law either. This government is passing this issue around the cabinet table like a political hot potato. The Minister of Government and Consumer Services' responses often contradict federal law. The women's issues minister won't stand up for gender equality. Now you have the Attorney General, and apparently this minister, wanting to sweep this dirty little secret under the carpet.

So I ask: Will they do the right thing? Will they do what it took 20 years for British Columbia to do and launch a criminal investigation, or will they continue to pass the buck around for another 20 years, at the expense of the rule of law in this country and gender equality rights in this province?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: It's not my place to comment on criminal law. It is entirely my place to express in this House today that we have full confidence in the ability of the police to carry out their investigative responsibilities.

Repeated calls for interference in police investigations are not helpful and unfairly discredit the police, diminish public respect for the work that they do every single day, and unfairly jeopardize public safety. In the event that charges are laid by the police, they will in fact be prosecuted by the crown in the normal course of events.

EVENTS IN TIBET

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: My question is to the Premier. The Parliamentary Friends of Tibet of Ontario are asking, along with the Tibetans of Ontario and His Holiness the Dalai Lama, that the torch relay not pass through Tibet. Many are not aware that the epicentre of the earthquake was in Tibetan territory. This will add to the instability of the situation there and is not necessary. Will this government add its voice to those around the world calling to stop the torch relay through Tibet?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: We've addressed this matter in this Legislature by way of a very specific resolution. It's not specific to this particular issue, but we indicated, as a government and as all parties—I'll read it: "That the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, as a long-standing friend of China, express concern with the current situation in Tibet and encourage the parties to engage in meaningful dialogue." I understand my friend's concern with this specific issue, but we prefer the resolution that we supported unanimously in this Legislature.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: Again to the Premier: Not so long ago, we discovered that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade went on a secretive trip to China as Tibetans and others around the world asked for attention to be paid to the human—

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: We have Tibetans who are watching this in the gallery; they don't appreciate the laughter—and others around the world asked for attention to be paid to the human rights abuses that were taking place in Tibet.

Understanding that Ontario is home to one of the largest Tibetan populations in the western world, could the Premier give the House a list of any cabinet members who are attending the opening ceremonies of the Olympic games?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the best of my knowledge, nobody is representing our government there—certainly not any elected representative.

We will continue, however, to support our athletes who want to participate, our Olympic athletes and those who are going to participate in the Paralympics. We've had funding through our Quest for Gold program, which has been set aside for quite some time now to help in that regard. But when it comes to this difficult situation between China and Tibet, we think that we gave expression to our values and our aspirations on behalf of both sides through a resolution that we endorsed unanimously in this House.

INFRASTRUCTURE RENEWAL

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: A number of municipalities in my riding of Lambton-Kent-Middlesex, including Dawn-Euphemia, have been notified by the federal government that they were approved for funding important infrastructure projects. This funding comes from the federal municipal rural infrastructure fund that was announced in 2007. The support from the federal government, however, depends on assurances that these same municipalities can fully fund the remaining two-thirds cost of those projects. In the case of the township of Warwick, their council will have to obtain over $4 million in order to receive the federal assistance. That's not an easy feat for a town of 600 households, in order to upgrade their sewage system.

My question is for the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal. Could the minister clarify for my constituents the criteria the federal government used to select projects that were actually submitted under a previous COMRIF?

Hon. David Caplan: I want to thank the member for the question. I want to let the House know how concerned the government is with announcements like the example the member has just brought forward. As the member mentioned, these announcements have created uncertainty and situations which I believe were completely avoidable. I wish I could tell the House how the federal government selected these projects, what criteria were used. Only the federal government can say for certain what they had in mind.

What I can tell the House is that Ontario welcomed the news of the so-called $200-million top-up and was fully prepared to make contributions on the same basis which had gone previously. It was a complete surprise that the federal government decided unilaterally to select projects and announce them without informing or engaging the province of Ontario. What we see emerging from the federal government is a list of projects that were not successful in previous COMRIF rounds that had been granted provisional approval based on—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: Earlier this year, I was pleased to announce that municipalities in Lambton-Kent-Middlesex had received over $21.3 million to fix roads and bridges as my riding's share of the $400-million investment this government made. As well, I was able to announce an additional $18.3 million for projects approved in Lambton-Kent-Middlesex under the municipal infrastructure investment initiative. But in making a federal municipal rural infrastructure fund announcement for the municipality of Brooke-Alvinston, my federal counterpart explained in the Glencoe Transcript and Free Press, "Communities and provincial governments will match it, one third each."

Minister, given that we have already made substantial financial investments in municipal infrastructure this year and, as you have stated, we were not consulted in any way on the recent federal projects approvals, will this government be participating in any of these federal municipal infrastructure projects?

Hon. David Caplan: An excellent question. In fact, I wrote to every COMRIF-eligible municipality to tell them that no provincial support should be presumed. This government works with our municipal leaders to make sure they have real dollars in hand to make projects happen. We've established a relationship with our municipal partners that demonstrates a responsible, balanced approach to recognizing the infrastructure priorities that vary across the province. The municipal infrastructure initiative, for example: $450 million into 243 projects right across this province, projects that municipalities have under way because they have the cash in hand. That's a real commitment to infrastructure that goes beyond the federal government phony announcements.

We are very disappointed with the MRIF process and with the direction the federal government has chosen, the situation that several communities are facing, and we're looking forward to continuing and urging our federal colleagues to engage in a real partnership with us.

BEEF PRODUCERS

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: My question is to the Minister of Agriculture. Today, the Ontario Cattlemen's Association is here at Queen's Park to share the concerns of their members. I want to thank them for coming here to meet with us and for all the hard work they do on behalf of those members. I also want to thank them for inviting us all to join them for a barbecue lunch with great Ontario corn-fed beef, which is famous throughout the country, if not throughout the world. We hear from them about the tough times that our beef farmers are facing.

Minister, they have asked you for a $20-million safety net fund to guarantee a floor price for producers. Will you stand up today and commit to them that you will create such a fund?

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: First of all, I would like to join the member from Oxford in welcoming the Ontario cattlemen, and we invite all members of this Legislature to come outside on the front lawn of the Legislature and enjoy some of Ontario's finest corn-fed beef.

Our government has, certainly, a history of working very closely with the Ontario Cattlemen's Association. Last fall, when the signs were very apparent that the industry was in difficulty, we met with the Ontario Cattlemen's Association, we met with the Ontario pork producers and horticulture producers in Ontario, and we came up with a program. The Minister of Finance, in December, announced a $150-million new program—$150 million in new money—to support cattle, hogs and horticulture in the—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: Minister, people who know what's going on in the beef industry know that the CAIS program isn't working for beef farmers, because prices are steadily declining. They know that a lot of beef farmers in need were missed by your cattle, hog and horticultural program. We've been telling you about this in this Legislature day after day.

The cattlemen are here. They told us of the type of program their farmers need. Will you commit today to provide the $20 million to fund a guaranteed floor price for the producers?

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: I would remind the honourable member that I do have a letter from the president of the Ontario Cattlemen's Association. It says, "I would ... like to thank our Premier, the Honourable Dalton McGuinty. It is very encouraging to see his government take a leadership role in recognizing the financial hurt that producers are currently" suffering. So they very much appreciate the reaction that our government has had to the crisis in the industry.

I would also like to say that, when you look across this great nation of ours, Ontario has stepped up to the plate to address the crisis there is in cattle, in hogs and in horticulture, unlike most other provinces. Geri Kamenzen—again, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture—has offered very positive remarks. I think that it's very clear—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. New question.

NORTHERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: My question is for the Premier. Yesterday, I attended the northern growth plan consultation in Sudbury. Part of the development of the growth plan is the work of G-North, the round table of the 17 ministries. Can the Premier tell us why the meetings of the G-North round table are not being held in northern Ontario?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal.

Hon. David Caplan: In fact, this is a very unique process, where we have 17 ministers and 17 ministries coming together on a regular basis to bring the unique perspectives, the expertise in policy and the resources available to be able to work on this incredibly important policy initiative. It has never been done before. It is unprecedented in the history of Ontario government and, I would say, in government anywhere in this country. To be able to get that level of support and the coordination—it's an incredible thing.

This table of ministers has been incredibly welcome in northern Ontario. Northern Ontarians are very excited about the northern growth plan. They're excited about the consultations. They're excited to finally have a government who stands up for them, who's working for them and developing a plan which is going to see northern Ontario move forward and see the prosperity—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for question period has ended. It is now time for petitions.

PETITIONS

LONG-TERM CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I'd like to petition the Legislature as such:

"Whereas understaffing in Ontario's nursing homes is a serious problem resulting in inadequate care for residents and unsafe conditions for staff;

"Whereas after the Harris government removed the regulations providing minimum care levels in 1995, hours of care dropped below the previous 2.25 hour/day minimum;

"Whereas the recent improvements in hours of care are not adequate, vary widely and are not held to accountable standards;

"Whereas there is currently nothing in legislation to protect residents and staff from renewed cuts to care levels by future governments; and

"Whereas care needs have measurably increased with aging and the movement of people with more complex health needs from hospitals into long-term-care homes;

"We petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to immediately enact and fund an average care standard of 3.5 hours per resident per day in the regulations under the new Long-Term Care Homes Act."

I support this petition. I will affix my name to it and send it with page Aaron.

CHILD CUSTODY

Mr. Kim Craitor: This petition is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. The petition reads as follows:

"Whereas the people of the province of Ontario deserve and have the right to request an amendment to the Children's Law Reform Act to emphasize the importance of children's relationships with their parents and grandparents as requested in Bill 33;

"Whereas subsection 20(2.1) requires parents and others with custody of children to refrain from unreasonably placing obstacles to personal relations between the children and their grandparents; and

"Whereas subsection 24(2) contains a list of matters that a court must consider when determining the best interests of a child. The bill amends that subsection to include a specific reference to the importance of maintaining emotional ties between children and grandparents; and

"Whereas subsection 24(2.1) requires a court that is considering custody of or access to a child to give effect to the principle that a child should have as much contact with each parent and their grandparent as is consistent with the best interests of the child; and

"Subsection 24(2.2) requires a court that is considering custody of a child to take into consideration each applicant's willingness to facilitate as much contact between the child and each parent and grandparent as is consistent with the best interests of the child;

"We, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to amend the Children's Law Reform Act to emphasize the importance of children's relationships with their parents and grandparents."

I'm pleased to sign my signature in support of this bill.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. John O'Toole: I'm pleased to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. This was a particular group from Blackstock, and one of the presenters is Reid Bongard. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its rightful place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition: It is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I am pleased to sign this and present it to page Radhika.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Bill Mauro: I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario which reads:

"Whereas an all-party committee is reviewing the recital of the Lord's Prayer at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message is one of forgiveness, of providing for those in need of their 'daily bread' and of preserving us from the evils that we may fall into; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena for conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the Lord's Prayer in the Legislature."

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mrs. Christine Elliott: A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas many young people with developmental special needs have no meaningful social, recreational or vocational opportunities after high school; and

"Whereas many of these young people have no real options for living independently in the community; and

"Whereas current supports in place are insufficient to meet the needs of these young people;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the McGuinty government allocate an appropriate level of funding to advance the transformation agenda of individualized funding for adults with developmental special needs in the province of Ontario to allow them to live with dignity and to reach their full potential as members of our communities."

I'm pleased to affix my signature in support.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East ... LHIN ... board of directors approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan, subject to public meetings; and

"Whereas it is important to ensure that the new birthing unit at Centenary hospital, a $20-million expansion that will see 16 new labour, delivery, recovery and postpartum (LDRP) birthing rooms and an additional 21 postpartum rooms added by October 2008, will not cause any decline in the pediatric services currently provided at the Ajax-Pickering hospital; and

"Whereas, with the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million (of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government); and

"Whereas it is also imperative for the Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding; and

"Whereas the parents of Ajax and Pickering deserve the right to have their children born in their own community, where they have chosen to live and work;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service; and

"That our Ajax-Pickering hospital now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain its full maternity unit."

I will affix my signature to that and pass this to Damian.

ANTI-SMOKING LEGISLATION

Ms. Laurie Scott: A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas children exposed to second-hand smoke are at a higher risk for respiratory illnesses including asthma, bronchitis and pneumonia, as well as sudden infant death syndrome ... and increased incidences of cancer and heart disease in adulthood; and

"Whereas the Ontario Medical Association supports a ban on smoking in vehicles when children are present, as they have concluded that levels of second-hand smoke can be 23 times more concentrated in a vehicle than in a house because circulation is restricted within a small space; and

"Whereas the Ipsos Reid poll conducted on behalf of the Ontario Tobacco-Free Network indicates that eight in 10 (80%) of Ontarians support 'legislation that would ban smoking in cars and other private vehicles where a child or adolescent under 16 years of age is present'; and

"Whereas Nova Scotia, California, Puerto Rico and South Australia recently joined several jurisdictions of the United States of America in banning smoking in vehicles carrying children;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to approve Bill 11 and amend the Smoke-Free Ontario Act to ban smoking in vehicles carrying children 16 years of age and under."

I appreciate all the people in my riding of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock who have signed it, and I hand it over to the page Radhika.

ANTI-SMOKING LEGISLATION

Mr. Jeff Leal: I have a petition today. Actually, there's an interesting name on here. It says "Steven Harper," but this is a Steven Harper who lives in Apsley, Ontario.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas children exposed to second-hand smoke are at a higher risk for respiratory illnesses including asthma, bronchitis and pneumonia, as well as sudden infant death syndrome ... and increased incidences of cancer and heart disease in adulthood; and

"Whereas the Ontario Medical Association supports a ban on smoking in vehicles when children are present, as they have concluded that levels of second-hand smoke can be 23 times more concentrated in a vehicle than in a house because circulation is restricted within a small space; and

"Whereas the Ipsos Reid poll conducted on behalf of the Ontario Tobacco-Free Network indicates that eight in 10 ... Ontarians support 'legislation that would ban smoking in cars and other private vehicles where a child or adolescent under 16 years of age is present'; and

"Whereas Nova Scotia, California, Puerto Rico and South Australia recently joined several jurisdictions of the United States of America in banning smoking in vehicles carrying children;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to approve Bill 11 and amend the Smoke-Free Ontario Act to ban smoking in vehicles carrying children 16 years of age and under."

I agree with this petition and will affix my signature to it and give it to Chris.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mrs. Christine Elliott: A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, believe that Ajax-Pickering hospital should have full funding for mental health, including beds;

"Whereas this would affect the mental health programs and mental health beds at the Ajax-Pickering hospital;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to:

"Fully fund the mental health beds and programs at Ajax-Pickering hospital."

I'm fully in agreement with this. I'll affix my signature and hand it to page Damian.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Phil McNeely: This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas part-time college workers in Ontario have been waiting for 30 years for bargaining rights; and

"Whereas thousands of part-time college workers have signed OPSEU cards, and the Ontario Labour Relations Board failed to order a timely representation vote; and

"Whereas the Ontario government must immediately make good on its promise to extend bargaining rights to college part-timers;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"The McGuinty government must immediately pass legislation legalizing the rights of college part-timers to organize, and direct the colleges to immediately recognize OPSEU as the bargaining agent for part-time college workers."

I will put my name to this petition.

LORD'S PRAYER

Ms. Laurie Scott: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition: It is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

It is signed by many people from my riding.

HIGHWAY 138

Mr. Jim Brownell: I have a petition from some of the constituents from Stormont-Dundas-South Glengarry. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas provincial Highway 138 is one of the province's only two-lane roadways within the region and provides the main connection from the international bridge at Cornwall through Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry to Highway 401 and Highway 417. Speed and traffic volumes are of particular concern and may have been contributing factors in numerous collisions and fatalities;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To urgently consider measures that will address the serious public safety and traffic hazard concerns on provincial Highway 138."

As I agree with this petition, I'll affix my signature.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network (CE-LHIN) board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan, subject to public meetings; and

"Whereas, despite the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government, this plan now calls for the ill-advised transfer of 20 mental health unit beds from Ajax-Pickering hospital to the Centenary health centre in Scarborough; and

"Whereas one of the factors for the successful treatment of patients in the mental health unit is support from family and friends, and the distance to Centenary health centre would negatively impact on the quality care for residents of Ajax and Pickering; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service to our Ajax-Pickering hospital, which now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain the badly needed 20-bed mental health unit."

I will sign that and pass it to Alie.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Jim Wilson: I want to thank St. Peter's Anglican Church in Minesing for sending this petition to me.

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I agree with this petition, and I will sign it.

ANTI-SMOKING LEGISLATION

Mr. Jeff Leal: I have a petition today from the Wheeler family on Franmor Drive in Peterborough.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas children exposed to second-hand smoke are at a higher risk for respiratory illnesses including asthma, bronchitis and pneumonia, as well as sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS) and increased incidences of cancer and heart disease in adulthood; and

"Whereas the Ontario Medical Association supports a ban on smoking in vehicles when children are present, as they have concluded that levels of second-hand smoke can be 23 times more concentrated in a vehicle than in a house because circulation is restricted within a small space; and

"Whereas the Ipsos Reid poll conducted on behalf of the Ontario Tobacco-Free Network indicates that eight in 10 (80%) of Ontarians support 'legislation that would ban smoking in cars and other private vehicles where a child or adolescent under 16 years of age is present'; and

"Whereas Nova Scotia, California, Puerto Rico, and South Australia recently joined several jurisdictions of the United States of America in banning smoking in vehicles carrying children;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to approve Bill 11 and amend the Smoke-Free Ontario Act to ban smoking in vehicles carrying children 16 years of age and under."

I agree with the petition, and I will affix my signature to it.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The time for petitions has expired. This House stands recessed until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: Well, the axe has started to fall. Only 16 days after the contractual agreements are signed, General Motors announces another huge loss for Oshawa and the closing of the award-winning truck plant. I cannot understand why I stand in this House time after time and express my concern over the changes coming in the auto sector and the cabinet doesn't see the light.

Fuel for consumption tax hits trucks hard. No help. Taxing ethanol, where environmentally friendly vehicles run on corn, works as a deterrent to have it available. Instead, the current government taxes it and, lo and behold, we have four stations selling ethanol. Mind you, I'm not sure the fourth has been announced yet, but I believe that the member from oh, say, Oxford, should be happy shortly.

The job losses aren't just in Oshawa. One of the Magna plants in St. Thomas, whose number one customer is the truck plant in Oshawa, and the thousands of individuals employed there: What's going to happen with them, and all the other feeder plants throughout the province of Ontario?

Premier, we hear about a plan. We hear how first it's a grant, then it's a loan, then it's 50 years and then it's 15 years. First it's $100 million and then it's $160 million. Even your minister doesn't seem to know when asked the question. The plan, quite frankly, isn't working.

The Premier is leaving a legacy of change from manufacturing to service. I would not expect that that would be the change he'd want to be known by. The government's job is to create an environment where business can flourish and Ontarians can live, work and raise a family. I may not have all the answers, but working together, we may be able to find ways by which the Ontario sector can once again reign supreme. I ask the Premier to please consider an offer to establish a sector review committee so that we may all be able to keep Ontario's auto sector strong.

INTERNATIONALLY TRAINED PROFESSIONALS

Mr. David Zimmer: I want to emphasize the importance of newcomer integration in Ontario's economy. Internationally trained individuals help Ontario's businesses to compete and function in the global marketplace. Last week we heard from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that our government is expanding its bridge training programs. This $27.4-million investment will help newcomers to transition more easily into Ontario's labour market.

To newcomers in Willowdale, this funding means that they'll be able to enjoy greater access to job-specific training, mentorships, skills assessment and work experience. For example, the $346,000 investment in CARE—that's the Centre for Internationally Trained Nurses, which is located in Willowdale—will enable the centre to offer language training courses. The Ontario Society of Professional Engineers, also headquartered in Willowdale, will now be able to offer examination skills preparation for internationally trained engineers. These are some of the examples of the 20 different bridge training programs available throughout the GTA.

I've said it before and I'll say it again: Ontario is renowned throughout the world for the diversity of its population. This important investment in bridging programs will help internationally trained individuals, local communities and businesses across this province.

RURAL ONTARIO

Mr. Randy Hillier: Today the Premier skirted my questions on his government's broken promises and rural school closures. He tries to hide from his words and hide from rural Ontario. But, since he won't come to us, rural Ontario has come here to Queen's Park today.

While he sets up his cap-in-trade programs with Quebec, he asks Ontario to go cap in hand to him. Our schools stand as a foundation for small-town Ontario; it's not only a school, it's also the library, the gymnasium and the hub of activity for our communities. This government has attacked our mills, our markets, our church suppers, and now it's our rural schools.

These assaults on our institutions are consistent with the relentless, uncaring attitude of the McGuinty government as our rural culture, our heritage, our economy and our homes find his crosshairs. Success or failure as a society is to know which core values to hold on to and which ones to discard.

This government has betrayed the trust of rural Ontario. We all know it only takes a jackass to kick a barn down, but it takes a carpenter to build one.

LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Paul Miller: Yesterday I visited the GGS Plastic plant in Bolton to support Teamsters Local 938 workers, primarily Punjabi women, who are on strike and who are here in the gallery today. I was appalled by the conditions that these women have faced every day of their six-week strike. The employer is bringing in scab labour to do their work rather than negotiating fairly and reasonably with these long-time employees.

These women have finally reached a pay level that brings them above the poverty line so they can enjoy a bit of disposable income. They have been loyal employees for 10 years or more, and how do they get treated? They are told to take a 20% pay cut, head back to the poverty line and forget the years of hard work it took to finally reach this income level. And when they use the only tool available when the employer is callous, inflexible and won't negotiate a reasonable contract, when they are forced out onto the picket line, what does their employer do? He trucks in scab labour.

This is why we are in desperate need today of anti-scab legislation. Ontario is facing even more of these travesties as we lose so many manufacturing jobs and employers flex their muscles against decent working wages and working conditions.

For the sake of these hard-working Punjabi women at the GGS Plastic plant in Bolton and many more like them around this province, I encourage all members in this House to vote in support the NDP anti-scab legislation that will be introduced later today.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd just like to go back to the statement that the member from Lanark-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington made.

Hon. Jim Watson: Resign.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Minister of Municipal Affairs, I've already warned you once today.

I'd just ask the member to reconsider his last comments. It's not in the standing orders, but throughout parliamentary tradition you can't do indirectly what you can't do directly in a comment that you made. I'd just ask that you would consider withdrawing that comment.

Mr. Randy Hillier: I will certainly withdraw.

SENIORS' MONTH

Mr. Pat Hoy: I'm pleased to commemorate Seniors' Month across Ontario.

The Chatham-Kent Senior Information Fair will be held at the Blenheim recreation centre on June 13. It is with great pride that we will gather to recognize and pay tribute to the ongoing contributions of seniors to our communities.

This is a generation that did more with less, made do with what they had, and made personal sacrifices then so we could have opportunity and advantages now.

The McGuinty government is committed to ensuring that Ontario's elderly population enjoys a high standard of living. The 2008 budget provides a new grant to help offset property taxes for low and moderate-income senior homeowners. In 2009, about 550,000 seniors will qualify for up to $250, doubling to $500 by 2010. When combined with the existing property and sales tax credits, some seniors could see up to $1,000 in total tax relief next year and up to $1,325 in 2010. Our government is also increasing support for community services like home care, funding more nursing staff and long-term-care homes, and continuing to invest in health care.

Our seniors have made and continue to make important contributions to our province. Our government is on the side of seniors, and we are improving the supports they need to live in safety and with dignity.

SENIORS' MONTH

Mr. Peter Shurman: I'm pleased as well to speak in the Legislature today to recognize Seniors' Month in Ontario. This is a time when we can reflect upon the accomplishments of previous generations and how they built this province into the wonderful place that it is today. It is also an opportunity to reflect on what an aging demographic means for Ontario and both the challenges and the opportunities that are in store for us as our population continues to grey. These challenges will require innovative solutions from legislators.

Unfortunately, an opportunity for innovative legislation was lost last Thursday when the Liberals decided to vote en masse against Bill 78, which would have created a province-wide, provincially administered property tax deferral system for low-income seniors and disabled persons.

During last week's debate, we heard all sorts of ridiculous excuses as to why members of the governing party couldn't possibly vote in favour of that bill, from accusations of, "It's downloading," despite the property tax deferral program being provincially administered. "It favours the rich." Tell that to the old couple in Niagara-on-the-Lake who bought their house after the war but are being forced to sell because they can't afford their assessment rate. "Seniors would rather have the Liberal $250 than assistance promised by Bill 78." Really? Tell that to CARP, who supported the bill and slammed the government's lip service to seniors.

These lame excuses lead to one conclusion: The Liberals voted en masse against Bill 78 simply because it wasn't a Liberal idea. This government prefers hollow photo ops to actually introducing legislation that does anything for Ontarians. God forbid that the opposition should try to fill the void.

Bill 78 is the latest addition to a long list—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, and I thank the armchair Speakers as well.

EVENTS IN AJAX AND PICKERING

Mr. Joe Dickson: The municipalities of Ajax and Pickering have significant events commencing this week on Friday, June 6.

In Pickering, there will be the gigantic Rotary Ribfest on Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Esplanade Park beside the Pickering city hall. This will be a huge success and attract thousands, and I congratulate their chair, Lon Harnish.

This week also commences Ajax Home Week, the 10 days commencing the largest annual event in the town, under chair Peter Hudson. This is a week we started 38 years ago to say thank you to the people of Ajax from the five Ajax service organizations: the Ajax Kinsmen, Legion, Lions, Optimists and Rotary. Events are free for everyone for over 50% of the items and are free regardless of gender, religion, race, age or personal means.

We promote the town of Ajax regionally and on an international basis and encourage former Ajax residents to return home for a visit.

The week kicks off Saturday at 12 noon with the Ajax Home Week parade under chair Angela Burke. The parade features 50 entries of animals, clowns and, for the first time, the 40-foot Chinese dragon and the Panmasters Steel Band. There's also the special emergency services day featuring the Durham police service helicopter.

We also have the Village Jazz Festival, the Young Singers concert, the Lions Pasta Nite and a multitude of others.

On Tuesday, we see Dee Miller off on her 100-day bicycle Ride for Renewed Strength for Cancer Survivors, and I look forward to speaking to this again next week.

JACK BYERS

Mr. Jeff Leal: I rise today to pay tribute to an exceptional individual from my riding of Peterborough.

Mr. Jack Byers possesses a unique ability to see the good in all youth. He is cognizant of the possibilities they bring to the world they live in. It is because of this desire to see all children succeed that he created the breakfast club for kids. He recognized the fact that children are the product of their environment and, as such, require a helping hand. Since retiring from A&P, Mr. Byers has dedicated himself to the coordination of a breakfast program for students. This has been a 12-year labour of love, during which time he served over 125,000 breakfasts each morning for 185 mornings per year.

The true value of a volunteer comes from the desire to work to help others without seeking public recognition, but public recognition was bestowed upon Jack Byers when he received the June Callwood volunteerism award on April 28, 2008.

Everyone who knew June Callwood knew how hard she advocated on social justice issues for women and youth. She was directly involved in the creation of over 50 Canadian social action organizations. During her lifetime, she worked tirelessly as a volunteer. I know she would have recognized the value of Mr. Jack Byers's efforts on behalf of our youth.

I had the distinct pleasure of being present at that awards ceremony. I was proud of Mr. Byers, who, at age 79, represents what it truly means to be a volunteer in the community of Peterborough.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. Phil McNeely: I am eager to share with my colleagues some exciting news to come out of my riding of Ottawa–Orléans. I had the good fortune of playing host to Minister Smitherman this past Saturday as he announced that my riding of Ottawa–Orléans will receive the first of 50 new family health teams in Ontario.

The McGuinty government has also announced that it will provide a planning grant of up to $100,000 to develop the proposal and business case for the proposed family health hub that will accommodate the family health team and other health care programs in Orléans.

The Orléans health hub will bring together multiple health care services under one roof, including family health care and a range of diagnostics and treatment services.

Additionally, the minister announced that the Orléans Urgent Care Centre will receive up to $300,000 in additional funding to boost nursing facilities at their clinic.

This is truly an exciting time and has done much to improve the future outlook of health care in Orléans. Residents will be able to seek necessary medical attention within the community, which will consequently reduce the wait times of hospitals around the region.

Orléans has always been a great place to live and work, and with the addition of this new health care hub, it will assist in maintaining Ottawa–Orléans as one of the best communities in Ontario.

I want to thank all those who worked tirelessly to get better health care for Orléans. Without the support of the front-line workers and community members, this great announcement would not have been possible. Special thanks to Janise Johnston, Sandra MacInnis, Marion Moritz, Robert Paiement and Brenda Johnston.

I also want to extend my thanks to Minister Smitherman for listening to the needs of my community. It has been a long time coming, but health care in Orléans is on the mend.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I beg to inform the House that today the Clerk received the report on intended appointments dated June 3, 2008, of the Standing Committee on Government Agencies. Pursuant to standing order 107(f)(1), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

Report deemed adopted.

SPECIAL REPORT, OMBUDSMAN

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I beg to inform the House that I have laid upon the table a report of the Ombudsman of Ontario, entitled Building Clarity—Investigation into how the Ministry of Government and Consumer Services represents its relationship with Taron Warranty Corp. to the Public.

Mr. Bradley moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 85, An Act to permit the issuance of photo cards to residents of Ontario and to make complementary amendments to the Highway Traffic Act / Projet de loi 85, Loi permettant la délivrance de cartes-photo aux résidents de l'Ontario et apportant des modifications complémentaires au Code de la route.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The minister for a short statement?

Hon. James J. Bradley: I will reserve my statement until the time designated for ministerial statements.

LABOUR RELATIONS

(REPLACEMENT WORKERS), 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LES RELATIONS DE TRAVAIL
(TRAVAILLEURS SUPPLÉANTS)

Mr. Kormos moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 86, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act, 1995 / Projet de loi 86, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1995 sur les relations de travail.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for Welland for a short statement.

Mr. Peter Kormos: The purpose of the bill is to restore the provisions that were incorporated into the Labour Relations Act by the Labour Relations and Employment Statute Law Amendment Act, 1992, and subsequently repealed by the Labour Relations Act, 1995. The purpose of the provisions being restored is to prevent an employer from replacing striking or locked-out employees with replacement workers. The bill allows replacement workers to be used in emergencies.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

PHOTO CARDS

Hon. James J. Bradley: I rise in the House today to talk about another step in Ontario's plans to keep people and goods moving across our borders and maintain a strong economy.

Today, the McGuinty government is introducing the Photo Card Act, legislation that would provide new, secure personal identification cards for Ontarians.

We are proposing to introduce an enhanced driver's licence card that would include citizenship information. This would become an acceptable travel document, a passport alternative, for US land and sea cross-border travel.

If passed, our government would also develop a photo identification card for people who do not drive or are unable to. Like the enhanced driver's licence, the enhanced version of this card could be used as a convenient passport alternative.

Each year, millions of US citizens visit Ontario, pumping hundreds of millions of dollars into our province's economy. As many of us are already aware, the United States government recently passed the western hemisphere travel initiative, one of the key recommendations from the 9/11 commission report.

The western hemisphere travel initiative has been implemented in stages. Since January of last year, travellers entering the United States by air have had to present a passport or other accepted secure document proving citizenship. Since January of this year, travellers crossing into the United States by land and sea have been required to show proof of citizenship with their identification, such as a birth certificate. The next phase will go into effect on June 1, 2009, when all travellers to the United States will have to present either their passport or an acceptable alternative.

Our proposed legislation follows close on the heels of recent security improvements to the driver's licence card already in use. Anyone who has renewed their licence during the past few months will have noticed these changes. If this legislation is passed, the proposed enhanced driver's licence would be used in the same manner as the existing driver's licence, but would also include the additional information needed to show Canadian citizenship.

Our government has worked closely with the Canada Border Services Agency to develop this program. We will continue to work with this agency and the US Department of Homeland Security to make this program a reality. We have consulted with Ontario's Information and Privacy Commissioner about the development of the enhanced driver's licence, and we will continue to do so.

If passed, this legislation will make cross-border travel more accessible, saving our economy millions and reducing congestion at the borders.

In Ontario, nearly four million people do not hold a valid driver's licence. Our government understands the proof of identity challenges faced by individuals who in fact do not drive. The reality is that the Ontario driver's licence card is among the most commonly used identity documents in the province.

Proof of identification is frequently requested for everyday transactions, such as opening a bank account or proving age for a senior discount. The creation of a photo identification card has long been advocated by youth, people with disabilities and senior communities.

If passed, our proposed legislation would improve access to the kinds of services and conveniences currently enjoyed by drivers every day. Like driver's licence holders, photo card holders would have the option of enhancing their cards in order to show proof of citizenship for cross-border travel.

Making sure all of these new cards and the existing driver's licence are issued legitimately is critical to combating fraud and identity theft. One of the ways we can accomplish this is through the use of photo comparison technology. This leading-edge technology would help ensure that multiple cards are not issued to the same individual under different identities.

For a number of years, our government has played a leading role in advocating to US officials that they should accept an enhanced driver's licence and photo card as a passport alternative, in order to protect the efficient flow of travel and trade at our borders.

This is about maintaining a strong economy and secure borders. This is about promoting tourism and working with our neighbours. This is about combating fraud and identity theft. This is about keeping Ontario's roads among the safest in North America.

Finally, the legislation we are proposing today is about removing barriers and increasing accessibility for people who do not or cannot drive. This creates opportunity for all Canadians. I urge all members of the Legislature to support this bill.

SEXUAL HARASSMENT

Hon. Deborah Matthews: This week marks Sexual Harassment Awareness Week. This is the second year in which the McGuinty government has recognized this week.

Until sexual harassment and all forms of violence against women are eradicated, we will continue to bring attention to this important issue. Women are still faced with sexual harassment, where we learn, where we work and in our communities. Ontario women have the right to live free from the threat of violence. Women cannot live up to their full potential if they are faced with violence in its many forms: domestic violence, sexual assault and sexual harassment.

The McGuinty government wants to create a better future for women, but to achieve this goal, everyone needs to be involved. That means mobilizing communities, educating individuals and taking action. By recognizing Sexual Harassment Awareness Week, we are raising public awareness of harassment against women, reinforcing public censure of sexual harassment and helping focus community prevention efforts.

Our government is spending more than $190 million a year to provide a range of services to support and protect women. This includes $82 million in funding over four years for the domestic violence action plan. The plan aims to change attitudes and mobilize communities to stop violence before it starts by providing better community-based supports, public education and training, by strengthening Ontario's criminal and family justice systems response and by providing better access to French-language service.

As part of the domestic violence action plan, the Neighbours, Friends and Families campaign is a public education campaign geared to mobilizing communities and educating individuals on woman abuse. The campaign is now in more than 140 communities across the province. Kanawayhitowin, the aboriginal adaptation of Neighbours, Friends and Families, is being rolled out in many aboriginal communities.

We have also launched Equality Rules, a multifaceted public education campaign to help eight- to 14-year-olds develop healthy, equal relationships and change the attitudes that perpetuate violence, such as sexual harassment.

More recently, I had the pleasure of announcing the funding recipients of the Promoting Healthy Equal Relationships grants program. These grants support projects that challenge boys and girls to adopt the attitudes and behaviours necessary to having healthy, equal relationships.

To combat harassment and violence in schools, the safe schools action team has been re-engaged. It will focus on ways to improve school safety by making recommendations aimed at preventing inappropriate behaviour such as sexual harassment, homophobia and gender-based violence.

We will also be working closely with our community partners to develop a coordinated plan to target sexual violence.

Violence in the workplace is a key concern for our government. In fact, June 2 is the anniversary of Theresa Vince, who was murdered by her workplace supervisor. The death of Lori Dupont was another senseless tragedy. I offer my sincere condolences to the families of these women.

Our government has invested nearly $6 million in training thousands of professionals to help them better identify women at risk of violence. We are in the process of training 1,500 physicians and nurses in emergency departments to better detect early signs of abuse and to provide appropriate information and support. Under the Occupational Health and Safety Act, all employers are required to take every precaution reasonable in the circumstances to protect the health and safety of workers in the workplace. Further, a Ministry of Labour workplace violence prevention web page now links to the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board's violence prevention website. The website provides workers and employers with important workplace violence prevention resources and information.

I encourage my colleagues and those across the province to visit the Ontario Women's Directorate website for resources that will help them raise awareness in their communities. There you will find resources and information about sexual harassment and its prevention. It can be found at www.citizenship.gov.on.ca/owd/.

Progress has been made on ending violence against women, but there is more work to do. The McGuinty government is determined to do more for women. With our community partners, we will continue our efforts to keep Ontario women safe now and in the future.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Responses?

SEXUAL HARASSMENT

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the official opposition to the statement by the minister responsible for women's issues and to acknowledge the PC caucus's appreciation for increased awareness and zero tolerance for sexual harassment.

It's important to recognize that sexual harassment is a crime and even more important to equip women with the education needed to enable them to protect themselves from crime. I don't think that I need to remind the minister, as well as a number of the ministers and the Premier, that Sexual Harassment Awareness Week began yesterday, June 2, which was the anniversary of the murder of Theresa Vince, who was murdered by a workplace supervisor. It began yesterday, when the Premier and the minister responsible for women's issues felt it more important to be out of the province of Ontario, so it kind of shows where the priorities are in the Liberal government.

Interjection.

Ms. Laurie Scott: Well, it's true.

Nearly two years ago, the member from Chatham-Kent-Essex received full support from this House on the second reading of Bill 110, which would recognize in legislation the first week of June as Sexual Harassment Awareness Week. I don't believe that it's ever seen the light of day again under the McGuinty government.

The minister said in her comments that there is more to do, so I do want to acknowledge my colleague from Durham, who just recently received support from all sides of the House on his bill, Bill 10, to better protect victims of domestic violence, which is in recognition of the tragic death of Lori Dupont. I hope that this minister and this Premier are going to ensure that Bill 10 is a priority and move it forward through committee and through third reading and passage into law, in order to better protect victims of crime.

My colleague from Nepean—Carleton has also stood for victims' rights and raised the issue of polygamy and its damaging effect on women's rights and gender equality, and we, on this side of the House, encourage the minister responsible for women's issues to talk to her Premier and her cabinet colleagues and address the rights of victims in this province.

PHOTO CARDS

Mr. Frank Klees: In response to the Minister of Transportation's announcement that the government intends to move forward with an enhanced licence for Ontario residents, I want to say at the outset that we certainly support the initiative. What we are concerned about is that we address the privacy issues. Our privacy commissioner has indicated some concerns regarding the technology, and I'm certain that those consultations are taking place, and that will ensure that this technology will, in fact, protect the private information of our citizens.

I am concerned with some of the challenges that the ministry seems to have in terms of managing information. I raised the issue, on a couple of occasions in the House, of information regarding driver's licences and the access of that information by the Ministry of Transportation. I'm not convinced, at this point in time, that the minister has a full handle on that. I had asked him to have that department of his ministry investigate it and that he personally take an interest in it to ensure that this very vital information that his ministry has access to is properly dealt with and is protected.

Now, we lay on top of that this new project. The minister has his hands full, or the people who are responsible for implementation certainly will. We'll be watching very closely to consider and to see whether or not the funding for this project is, in fact, there and that the appropriate safeguards are being taken.

I want to take this opportunity to commend the Prime Minister of this country for his initiative in convincing the United States of the importance of this enhanced driver's licence facility as well. He, at least, understands the importance of some $1.9 billion of two-way trade daily between Canada and the United States, and that the security issues and backups that we have at our borders are negatively impacting our economy, not to mention the high tax rate of Ontario that the Premier seems to be ignoring. So while the Minister of Transportation is working on de-blocking the borders, perhaps he can also try to convince his Premier that the same effort should be made to make Ontario an attractive place for businesses to come. He can start that by reducing the corporate tax rate here in Ontario, which is the highest in North America.

SEXUAL HARASSMENT

Ms. Andrea Horwath: In response to the minister responsible for women's issues, 12 years ago, on June 2, 1996, Theresa Vince, 56 years old, was shot to death in the Chatham Sears store where she had worked for 25 years. Theresa was shot by her store manager, Russell Davis, who then turned the gun on himself. Vince was a wife, mother and grandmother, and was in fact to retire from Sears that very month.

Sexual harassment was a factor leading up to Theresa's tragic death. Theresa Vince was the company's human resources supervisor, and she had actually filed a sexual harassment complaint against her store manager, Russell Davis, in January 1995.

On November 12, 2005, nurse Lori Dupont was murdered by her ex-partner at the Windsor hospital where she worked. Again, sexual harassment was definitely a factor.

In Theresa's situation, 17 months after she filed her sexual harassment complaint, she was dead, killed at work.

After both of these tragedies, inquest juries deliberated and they came up with very concrete recommendations, steps that we could actually take in Ontario to enhance the safety of women and improve the government's response to the serious issue of sexual harassment.

I have to tell you, as community members gathered yesterday in Chatham and Windsor to mark another painful anniversary, there is an ever-present and growing focus on having Ontario adopt solutions that treat harassment as the crime that it is. Occupational health and safety websites, WSIB websites, simply do not cut the mustard. Websites are not good enough. You have to take this off the nebulous realm of the World Wide Web and put it where it belongs, which is into legislation that affects the workplace, like the Occupational Health and Safety Act. In fact, on behalf of Ontario's NDP, I introduced Bill 29, legislation that would place harassment in all its forms under the Occupational Health and Safety Act and would prescribe remedies for eradicating the harassment and protecting the harassed employee.

Notwithstanding what the minister says—I don't think she understands, and she can talk to her colleague the Minister of Labour—you cannot file a work refusal based on sexual harassment in the workplace in Ontario today. You can do it in Quebec. You can do it in many other jurisdictions around the world. But in Ontario, you cannot do it.

Those juries indicated very clearly in black and white, and I can send her those recommendations, that the Occupational Health and Safety Act needs to be amended so that workers who are being harassed in the workplace have, on any of the grounds available to them, remedy in the right to refuse. Because just as other kinds of incidents in the workplace like toxins or workplace procedures or processes or machinery can be a danger to workers, so can sexual harassment and other forms of harassment.

The bottom line is that workers do not have the ability or opportunity to indicate to their supervisor or to their shop steward that they are being harassed in the workplace and so they want to file a refusal to work. Those work environments where harassment is taking place are just as toxic, harming and damaging to workers as any of those other kinds of workplace situations that I indicated.

In Saskatchewan and Quebec, they absolutely already have this legislation. We know for sure that Ontario is far, far behind on this file.

To the Premier, the minister, the previous minister and every one of the members in this House, it's time to get our act together and start to put those amendments forward in the Occupational Health and Safety Act. It's not a matter of what I recommend as a member here; it's not a matter of what I say getting up year after year, pretty much every year that I've been here, speaking about these issues. It's a matter of getting our nose to the grindstone and putting those amendments in place so that there are real protections for workers, so no more Theresa Vences and no more Lori Duponts have to go to work knowing and expecting harassment that could ultimately end up in their death. That's absolutely unacceptable in the province of Ontario. I call on the minister to put those changes in place.

PHOTO CARDS

Mr. Gilles Bisson: To the new Photo Card Act that has been introduced today by the minister, I look forward to the work that we're going to be doing on it both at second reading and in committee. I think it responds to a number of issues in regard to entrance into the United States and where we're going to be in 2009, when it becomes a requirement for people to have ID such as passports and others to cross the border. Certainly we need to do something in order to make life easier for people.

I also noticed in this particular act a couple of things that are going to happen that I think at the end could be a good thing. One is the issue I've been raising in this House in regard to the case where a person in Kingston was reissued a driver's licence; he'd either applied fraudulently or there was an error. This particular act could deal with that, and I look forward to that. But I also noticed that we're going to be giving basic and enhanced cards to people so they can use them as a method of ID without a driver's licence. I want to thank Michael Prue for having raised this issue before and look forward to the work that is going to be done on committee on these issues.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Pursuant to standing order 38(a), the member for Beaches–East York has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Minister of Community and Social Services concerning the adequacy of ODSP rates. This matter will be debated today at 5:45 p.m.

OPPOSITION DAY

RURAL SCHOOLS

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I move that, whereas Ontario's rural schools are the hub and heart of their communities; and

Whereas, in September 2007, the McGuinty Liberals promised they would keep rural schools open because, in the words of Premier McGuinty, "For rural kids, few things are more important than being able to go to school in your own community, with your own friends. Rural schools help keep communities strong, which is why we're not only committed to keeping them open—but strengthening them"; and

Whereas, in less than nine months after the Premier made this promise, over 50 rural schools are slated for closure;

The Legislative Assembly of Ontario calls upon Premier McGuinty to suspend any and all board-recommended rural school closures until both the funding formula review and a thorough assessment of alternate uses for rural schools have been completed.

This is addressed to the Premier of Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Mr. Runciman has moved opposition day number 4. Mr. Runciman.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: This is an important debate. Rural, small-town Ontario is under siege and this Liberal government seems unwilling or unable to come to its aid.

Since July 2004, we've lost over 207,000 manufacturing jobs in Ontario, many of them in smaller communities, which also impacts surrounding rural areas. The government's response to the job crisis is essentially, "Don't worry; be happy. This too shall pass." That attitude of complacency is in many respects even worse when it comes to the closure of rural schools. I say that because of comments and promises made by Mr. McGuinty over many years, up to and including last year's provincial election, when he said he would not only save rural schools but he would strengthen them, no ifs, ands or buts—a clear, unequivocal promise. Eight short months later, with a re-election victory and a majority government in his pocket, over 50 rural schools are slated to close, with many more on the chopping block.

The man who likes to describe himself as the education Premier: What's his reaction? His reaction is silence—utter and complete silence. He simply refuses to answer questions in this House, and we saw another example of that today. He refers them to his Minister of Education, who dispenses the usual party spin: a touch of baffle-gab, along with a dose of blaming others. Of course Premier McGuinty can't stand up and answer, because he would once again be exposed as someone prepared to say or do anything to get elected, and when successful, betray that trust with the contemptuous and cynical view that voters will forget.

It is an approach all too common in politics, one that has brought disrepute to people serving in public office and one that Mr. McGuinty has set a new standard for, not one to be proud of. We all remember his no-new-taxes pledge and at least 50 other broken promises in their last term.

Another cause of lack of respect for parliamentarians that's endemic in this Liberal government is the acquiescence of Liberal backbenchers to any and every breach of promise or offensive decision taken by the Premier and his cabinet. We saw that recently with the suggestion that the Lord's Prayer be removed from our proceedings and that the government will start funding sex-change operations. On those pronouncements, the Premier and his minister never even consulted their own caucus, let alone looked for approval. Like everyone else, they were blindsided. That's much more than being taken for granted; that's contempt. That's disdain for the role of backbenchers. But if it bothers them, it's never reflected in votes. We hope that changes today.

Prime Minister Trudeau once said that backbenchers were nobodies once they left the Hill. Well, Premier McGuinty has refined that: Government backbenchers are nobodies even when they're in this Legislature. That can all change, and it can change today, with Liberal MPPs representing rural ridings finally standing up to their autocratic, arrogant and condescending leadership and instead standing up for the good, hard-working people who put them in office, their constituents.

The vote today is not draconian, it's not partisan; it's calling for a fair shake for rural Ontario, a moratorium on closures until an appropriate funding formula is developed and a plan is put in place to develop alternative uses for school properties facing closure—alternatives that will minimize or eliminate the collateral damage that flows from a closure: property values dropping; banks, grocery stores and gas stations closing.

A few weeks ago, the Ottawa Sun ran an outstanding piece on the rural school issue. I have the front page of the paper with me: "The Final Bell: Despite a pledge by the McGuinty Liberals to save rural schools, they're being closed at an alarming rate, leaving communities broken and dying." That line truly sums up the situation: "leaving communities broken and dying."

The article references the Rideau Lakes village of Delta and the erosion of its economy following the closure of its elementary school: property values down 19%; three restaurants, two gas stations and a bank all closed in the wake of that school closure, along with other amenities available to the community. That's the reality of school closure impacts in small rural communities.

This is an opportunity—

Interjections.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman:—including the members interjecting here today—for rural Liberal members to join with us, to do the right thing. Show that you believe in the promise that Mr. McGuinty made during the election campaign. Show that the students of rural Ontario are not out of your sight. You see them every day.

They're our sons and daughters, grandchildren, neighbours and, most importantly, our constituents.

The students of rural Ontario are not out of our sight or mind. We in the Progressive Conservative caucus are always mindful of the fact that our job here as representatives is to represent the people of Ontario, no matter how far away from downtown Toronto they might live. The students of rural Ontario will never be out of sight or out of mind on this side of the House. We will fight to keep those schools open, so help me.

The official opposition, the Progressive Conservative caucus, will keep standing up in this House and keep this issue on the front burner. The Premier may want to keep the students of rural Ontario out of sight and out of mind, he may want the residents of rural Ontario to forget his spurious promise to save and strengthen schools or his counterfeit concern for the well-being of rural communities, but he won't get away with it as long as we are here to stand up for them. He won't get away with it.

Today, Progressive Conservative MPPs will be voting for the students of rural Ontario. To my colleagues from all parties, whether you represent rural Ontario or not, remember this: Our job here is to represent all Ontarians, even the students of rural Ontario and the communities they live in. Colleagues and friends, it's time to stand up for students, to support education and to keep those rural schools open.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Thank you very much. Further debate.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I'll be sharing my time with my colleague from Hamilton East-Stoney Creek. I want to welcome the citizens of Ontario to this political forum. We're actually on live in the afternoon, as well in the morning at 9:00 when you get up, bright and early, fresh with your coffee in hand. Now fresh with your beer in hand and popcorn, it's 10 to 4. We are on live.

Interjections.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: You've got to get it on channel—I don't know; here in Toronto it's 105. You've really got to go up to get it. In some places you can't. I'm sure it's a program that a lot of people would like to see if they're not able to see it. I'm sure of it because there are so many great speakers here in this House.

Speaker, I want to tell you I support this resolution by the member from Leeds-Grenville and—

Hon. Jim Watson: Oh no, Rosie.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I do. And I'm going to hurt them a little bit and I'm going to hurt you a little bit, too.

Interjections.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: No, because I like distributing the weight around a little bit in the entire House. I have grown fond of the Conservative Party in opposition, I have to admit.

Interjections.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I do. I have to admit this because, when they were in government, I've got to tell you, I had no love for Mike Harris whatsoever. I had no love whatsoever, not even any warm feelings towards him—not much. And in terms of how they governed, God forgive them. I'm telling you, it was tough.

I recall Liberals saying, “Break ranks from Mike Harris” on this and that issue—as if you could ask Liberals to break ranks. They're not going to do that, right? They're not going to do that. Tories didn't do it, Liberals are not going to do it, and most New Democrats didn't do it either, except we had some folks with some intestinal fortitude from time to time who did do it. But on the whole, asking Liberals to break ranks just doesn't work. It doesn't make any sense because nobody does it.

So I tell you, no fondness for Mike Harris—God bless him, wherever he is. I'm sure he's doing well on whatever board he's sitting on, making some good bucks, left with a fairly good buyout, leaving the rest of us here alone, fending for ourselves. God bless him too in that regard.

But I have to say, on this resolution—

Interjection: There are others with buyouts.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: This is true. Some people did well. Some people did very well.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Including you; you got some.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I was the youngest of the group. If you were a young member of that cabinet crowd, you didn't get much. The ones with experience, long experience in cabinet and serving a lot of years in this place, did okay, leaving the rest of you newcomers to fend for yourselves—little, next to nothing.

But with respect to this resolution, it's reasonable, I have to admit. It's not often I agree with Tories. I have to admit that too, publicly. I know the Liberals want to have us collude on many issues. I understand why you would do that. But on the whole, we are in polarity most of the time politically; you know that.

But on this one, when they say, “The Legislative Assembly of Ontario calls upon Premier McGuinty to suspend any and all board-recommended rural school closures until”—here's where it gets even more reasonable—“both the funding formula review and a thorough assessment of alternate uses for rural schools have been completed,” it's going to be very difficult for Liberals to disagree, because it is eminently reasonable. It's tough when you say that of Tories, a resolution being eminently reasonable, but it is.

I have to put this in context because I got a few quotes from mon cher ami M. McGuinty. I know it's hard for Liberals to hear these things because they said a lot of things. They did. And now, of course, in government, they hate to hear it. They hate to hear themselves heard.

Hon. Jim Watson: Rosie, did you support the social contract?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Oh, dear, you've got to go all the way back there, too? Pretty soon you're going to go to Confederation, for God's sake. Come on.

Here's what mon ami Dalton, the Premier, said on October 22—it's not news to you, but just to refresh in your mind. Dalton McGuinty said to the then Premier, “Premier, I'm sure the people of Ontario are going to want to know the basic difference between you and me when it comes to school closures. Here is the difference: You took $2.2 billion out of public education, forcing school closures. We are going to invest $1.6 billion in public education to enable small communities to keep the rural schools open. That is the fundamental difference,” said mon ami McGuinty in this place.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: The Liberals acknowledge that he did say that. Okay. Let me quote further: October 22, the same day. God bless. “But we on this side of the House,” meaning he and the Liberals, “in this party,” meaning the Liberal Party, “happen to value smaller communities and rural Ontario.

“I ask you once again, why is it that you continue to have in place a funding formula that is biased against rural schools in small-town Ontario?” he said. It was a very reasonable statement that he made and it was a reasonable question.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Who said that?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Mon ami M. McGuinty, the then leader of the opposition Liberal Party. But there's more.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: We have a different structure now.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: No, no, there's more. He asks, “Why can you not agree to put a moratorium on any school closures at this time, until such time as the funding formula has been fixed?” Sounded reasonable in 2002; seems eminently reasonable in 2008.

He goes on. Everybody—

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Pardon?

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: The funding formula has been fixed.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: The funding formula has been fixed: I'll get to that in a second.

“Everybody knows that repairing the funding formula is going to entail putting more money into public education.” And you have—

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I'll get to that in a second.

“Why would you not agree that the sensible thing to do in the circumstances is delay closing any schools until we've had the opportunity to fix your broken funding formula?” Sound familiar?

Let me go on. This is October 8. I should have gone the other way, but it doesn't matter. Monsieur McGuinty asks, “Why would you not place a moratorium on school closures until you've had an opportunity to fix your broken funding formula?”

There is more. On June 10, 2002, Monsieur McGuinty again asks, “Will you put a stop to school closures that are being driven not by a desire to improve learning but rather by a desire to save money at the expense of learning?” Again, sounds eminently reasonable, almost intelligent. That's why he became the education Premier. And he asks some tough questions on education. Oh, if uttered by a New Democrat, as we have, or a Tory, as they have—God bless them, because they sound reasonable in opposition, as I was saying earlier. If uttered by us, we get laughed at by the government, but when uttered by Liberals in opposition then, they presumably sounded intelligent, except until you get into government, and then it changes.

I've got one final one on June 10: "It is your funding formula that is driving school closures in the province of Ontario. They're here to ask for your help. They want to know whether or not you're going to help them. These are good schools where good learning is taking place. Your funding formula is closing small schools in particular, where studies are telling us very good learning is taking place."

I needed to put that on the record. It ought to teach us, in opposition, because we all go around this circle here eventually.

If you're brave enough to say certain things in opposition, you ought to be brave enough to say them when you're in government, to keep the promise vis-à-vis your statements and your questions. If you don't do it, you look bad, you sound bad, you are bad. It doesn't cut it to say, "No, but we Liberals are different. The Tories were bad and everybody knows that, but we Liberals are different because we fundamentally, innately, are better. It doesn't matter what we say, what we do, as Liberals we are innately, philosophically, ideologically"—by the way, you have no ideology but I shouldn't have said it—"better than the rest of you Tories and New Democrats."

That's what I have difficulties in and with as an argument. It seems that they can argue anything, as the minister does—and I like the minister; this is not the issue. The minister then provides a multitude of rationales for it. She says, "We have lost thousands of students in the system." That becomes the rationale for everything they do, good or bad. In fact, she doesn't even say they're doing anything. She argues, "We're not going to take the right of any school board to do what they need to do. If they need to close schools, that is a right of school boards, and we don't want to interfere."

But Monsieur McGuinty had no problem demanding that the Tories have a moratorium; that they do a funding review before they closed any schools, in particular rural schools. He had no problems with it. So when you're in opposition, it's okay; when you're in government, "Oh, we don't want to interfere with school boards, oh no, because it's an inalienable right. We wouldn't take that right to close schools away." God bless. God knows. That's something they have been elected to do, and if they close schools, then that's something they have to do.

The problem we've got is that the current provincial funding formula does not sufficiently recognize or fund the unique needs of northern Ontario. Yes, the Liberals have done a few things here and there, and they make them sound like they are huge, as if they saved the northern Ontario community or saved all of the northern Ontario schools. They are unique, and what makes them unique is geography in particular, but it speaks to the unique problems they face, not just in terms of geography, not just in terms of lacking the specialist teachers and lacking access to special education, and yes, even today, fewer full-time principals. The large geographical area makes them very special in terms of why we need to intervene as governments to make sure that rural schools keep open.

We accept that declining enrolment has happened. We understand that. The question is, do you accept it as a challenge to do positive things or do you use it as an argument to close schools? It seems to me that the government has chosen the latter. It has become an argument to close schools, not an argument to say, "It is a unique opportunity for us to review how it is that we save small schools."

I said to the minister, in a question that I put to her just last week, why would you not talk about the fact that you cut $60 million of the declining enrolment grant just last year? Why wouldn't you speak to that? I say to you, 60 million bucks is a whole pile of money, and that was designed to allow boards to deal with declining enrolments. The Tories did it—

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I know.

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: They didn't have declining enrolment; neither did you.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: There was a declining enrolment grant. They did that, to be fair to them from time to time. The Liberals continued with the declining enrolment grant, because presumably they too understand that if there's declining enrolment, you've got to help with the grant. But not once did the education Premier or the minister say, "We've had to cut the declining enrolment grant." They often refer to the $420 million or $460 million. They throw out numbers, neglecting to say that the large bulk of that funding is simply to pay their collective agreements with teachers at the secondary and elementary levels and to pay the collective agreements with non-teachers. The bulk of that money is to make sure the collective agreements are paid. You would expect that you would flow money to pay the bills.

The remaining money is to pay for the promise they made, which is to cap the primary grades—under grade 3—at 20. To a large extent, that promise has been kept. There are still lots of schools that don't reach the capping promised by the Liberals, but that was a very expensive promise. That promise, plus paying for the collective agreements that were negotiated by this government—mostly, generally—that's where most of the money goes.

But do you Liberals know the chaos we have in all of our boards across Ontario—not just in the north, but across Ontario? Do any of you Liberal MPPs understand what kinds of pressures boards are under? My sense is that you don't, and those of you who do are zipping your mouths, and hoping that you're never quoted by anyone or asked by a newspaper to speak to any particular problem that your board may be having. If you did, you would have to dissemble by way of a response, because there is no proper response to the fact that most boards can't balance their budgets.

The Toronto Catholic District School Board, whatever you or others might say about some of their expenditures, which is a separate matter in terms of how the board and the minister is dealing with that, whatever you might say about that, the way that they're dealing with their deficit is by cutting 83 teachers—

Interjection: It's 85.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: You have to be accurate—85? They are cutting educational assistants, those who work with primary teachers—

Interjection: EAs?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Educational assistants, otherwise known as EAs. They're cutting youth workers. They work with troubled kids, kids at risk.

It's a very convenient thing for the government to have a board—this particular board—be embroiled in another problem, because it conveniently gives the ministry, the minister, mon ami M. McGuinty and all of the Liberals a way out of that problem, and then the public can say: "Oh, look at all the problems that this board has. Look at all the money they're wasting here and there. No wonder they've got a deficit."

Nah, they're two separate issues. The expenditures are not excusable. The government has made that clear and the public has made that clear, but in terms of the deficit, it's a separate matter.

We were talking $11 million, $12 million, $13 million, $14 million, and they can't make ends meet, so they are firing 85 teachers, beyond what the enrolment requires—so says the teacher federation representing teachers. And they're firing youth workers and educational assistants. How can the government, the minister and the Premier be happy to accept those kinds of cuts? Oh, because they're required by law to do so? Yes. But is it right? Ah, but does that not speak to the millions of dollars the government is giving? If the government is giving all those huge amounts of dollars, why is this one particular board required to fire teachers and assistants and youth workers? Why?

Maybe the government has a different kind of option to propose to the boards by way of what it is that they could cut. But how can the government sit there content that they're balancing the budget on the backs of people who are desperately needed in the educational system? How could you feel good? How could you justify it?

Then, hearing a report on the CBC—"The government hasn't yet declared whether or not they are going to take the school board over." Sorry, take the school board over? For what? They already made the cuts. They already have done the dirty work for the government. Why would the minister take over a board at a time when the board has made the cuts and has done the dirty work for the government? It's silly when the arguments are made that the government hasn't yet made up its mind as to whether or not they're going to take the board over. It doesn't make any sense. Why would they take them over? Speaker, you understand; you've been here for a while. No government is going to take any board over, because to do so would be to accept the responsibility for the cuts. Not doing so says, "Well, you know, it's not my problem." The government can argue, "It's not mon problemo. The problem is with the board. Boards have to decide how to balance their budgets, and if this is what they do, that's what they do."

So I argue with any citizen watching this political program: Does it sound like a government that's giving adequate dollars to our boards—southern, northern, eastern and western—to be able to balance their budgets without hurting teachers and our students? I argue they're not.

So we say, with respect, and with respect to school closures, that there has to be a better way. Schools are an important hub for a great deal of community outreach and community work. Schools are a part of how economies grow in those small communities. We all know that. Even Liberals know this. They made those very arguments in opposition. Schools are for community use after school, and northern schools are used for community use after school. So why would we not be creative? Why wouldn't we use it as an opportunity?

When the minister agrees with People for Education, as they propose that we have to become more creative and we have to look at ways of keeping schools open—and People for Education argue that we have to integrate services better; i.e., not simply use schools from a Minister of Education perspective and forget all of the other uses of a school. So we say, why couldn't we use schools and have parenting centres in them, child care centres, community kitchens, public meeting space, even public libraries, health clinics? They all add to the life of a school and strengthen the community sense of connection to their local schools. If that is true and if the minister thinks it's a good idea, then how fast are we moving toward that goal?

This is why I said to the minister, quite apart from what the Tories said in the past, you're doing a review of your funding formula in 2010; by that time, most schools will be closed. If you're going to do a review, do it today. Don't wait until 2010, because by then most of the schools will have been closed. At least 50 school closures have already been recommended, and many reviews are not yet complete. More recommendations for closures are inevitable. Therefore, I argue, like the Tories, put that on hold.

The minister has put together a little group to do the review. Good. God bless. Are there any timelines? We don't have a clue. Why aren't there timelines? Because, I submit to you, as lawyers would say, they have no interest in saving schools. They want school boards to move on school closures quickly, make the savings, and then, by 2010, be able to recommend something new and a new direction for the government, so that as they head into the next election, they have a new proposal: "This is how we're going to save schools from now until the next four years," as you fine people elect you fine Liberals for another four years. That's the plan.

If that were not the plan, the minister would do the following: Tell the working group that by the time we come back—maybe in September; it's hard to say—we're going to have a recommendation that deals with this problem, and we're going to review the funding formula by September so that schools have a better sense of what might be coming by September. If we do not have that commitment, it is very clear to me that they have no interest in taking up the challenge of saving small schools.

New Democrats say, "We want to save as many schools as we possibly can." Some schools we cannot save; I admit that. Some schools may be just too small to save. But what strategy do we have to save most schools? That's the argument. There is no strategy. That's the problem: We don't have a strategy.

Northern schools provide space free of charge to community groups. It's the only place, in some cases, where local communities can assemble. The high number of small communities and the great distance between those communities make the provision of adequate transportation service a constant challenge for northern schools. Transportation has been a problem for years. This government has promised to do a transportation review for years.

I remember mon ami M. Kennedy, who said he did a review, and I said to him, "Gerard, with all due respect, you've already made up your mind. You took some money from some boards and gave it to other boards." That was the extent of his review on transportation. "Oh, no," he argues in this place. "Everybody got an increase." "Of course you did, Gerard. You gave every board a 2% increase. That doesn't make it any better." What you did, by way of what the minister then did, is to take money from some boards and give it to others. Does that sound to you, Speaker, who have been here in this place, like much of a plan or strategy, stealing from some to give to others? It doesn't sound like much of a strategy. You're stealing from one group to give to the other group.

I argue, if you're going to do a review, make sure you do it fairly for everybody. This is not about taking from the rich to give to the poor. We have one public system here. It's about fairness for all. It's not like we've got loads of money in one area and less in the other. We've got a funding formula now that's supposed to treat everybody equitably, and everybody is getting equitably whacked in Ontario.

When you close schools in northern Ontario, transportation becomes a serious disaster. Some kids have to travel for hours—two or three hours. Maybe they're walking, running or using Rollerblades on those northern boards; I don't know what they use to get around, but it's tough. Maybe some kids still use horses to get around; I don't know. It's tough to get around. You can't close the schools. If there are only 25, okay, it's a problemo. If it's 50 or 60 or 70, it's a problemo. But you've got to use this as an opportunity to be able to save schools, use them as a hub and make sure you coordinate services with other ministries to be able to save those schools and save those communities.

It's for those reasons that I support this resolution.

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: It gives me great pleasure to have an opportunity to speak to the opposition day motion, which I think is fundamentally based on assumptions that are not true.

I want to first of all acknowledge the importance of our publicly funded education system. Every school obviously has a school community surrounding it. When there's change, there's always the potential for concern and turmoil. Both the elementary and the secondary schools that I attended in what was the small town of Richmond Hill are no longer housed in the buildings that they were housed in. There is always change; there's constant change. But in the end, as I've said before, those local program decisions must rest in the hands of the boards of education. It is impossible for the Ministry of Education at the corner of Wellesley and Bay in Toronto to make decisions about schools in northern Ontario, in rural Ontario, in other urban centres, so we have been, since we came into office, committed to supporting school boards in those decisions.

When we first came into office, we put a moratorium on school closures for two years while we did exactly what the members opposite are asking us to do now—we have already done it. If we look at the funding changes, we have made significant funding changes. We've increased funding to rural schools by $632 million. Had we not changed the funding formula, rural schools would have had to cut $650 million from their budget. So in fact, we have significantly changed the funding formula.

The other things we've done have been to introduce a school foundation grant. That guarantees that all schools that boards deem to be viable will have a principal and a secretary. That's the board deciding that the small elementary school in Sioux Narrows, which has 16 students, will have the leadership that it needs, as the 1,900-student elementary school in my riding of Don Valley West will have adequate administration. We put that school foundation grant in place to allow boards to have that administration and secretarial support in all of their schools.

We also introduced the supported schools grant, which means that the 300 most remote schools—those are northern and rural schools—receive a special grant of $63 million. That allows those rural and remote schools to have extra staffing in order to be able to deliver programming.

What all of this means is that our smallest schools—as I said, we have schools in Ontario that are fewer than 20 students and they are viable. They are in place because boards have deemed that it is too far for those little children to go to the next town for those early elementary years. Those schools are supported and those boards are buffered against the declining enrolment that we are seeing across the province. We've changed the funding formula to put those buffers in place.

The second thing we've done is that we've put in place pupil accommodation review guidelines to allow boards to assess the value of schools to their communities. In the process that is in place now, we asked boards to assess schools according to the value of the school to the student, the value of the school to the community, the value of the school to the school board and the value of the school to the local economy. So we've actually put in place the kind of assessment mechanism that the members opposite are asking for. That has already been done.

The thing that has not yet been done—and I have to say it was not done by the New Democratic Party and it was not done by the Progressive Conservative Party—is to have a rational discussion about how we deal with the fact that demographics in Ontario are changing. We all know that people my age and a little older, the baby boom generation, are aging. We are not being replaced in the population to the extent that we would need to be in order to keep every single school in the province open and not have that demographic shift. We have not had that discussion.

So I have set up a declining enrolment work group, led by the member for Brant, Dave Levac, who was a former educator and who lives in a rural and urban community. He's going to be working with Eleanor Newman, who is a director in the eastern part of Ontario. They're going to be looking at the kinds of recommendations that, over the long term, will allow us to plan for the decline in enrolment.

The member from the third party talked about schools as hubs. He didn't use that language, but that is the language that we use, starting with our Best Start program, where we have child care spaces located in schools. I've asked the declining enrolment work group to look at the alignment of school board cost structures with reduced enrolment and to look at the other agencies and the other ministries of the government that might have a role to play. These entities will include, but are not limited to: municipal government, so that could be public libraries, it could be other municipal services; provincial government services, so that could be health centres, it could be other services that are provided by the provincial government located in schools; and volunteer organizations, so other community agencies. So in fact we are asking this group to help us develop a plan that will look at the opportunities in our schools.

I want to share my time with other members of the caucus, but I want to close with a quote from the Brockville Recorder and Times, which I believe is a news outlet that the member—

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: That's right—that the member for Leeds–Grenville is familiar with. I think he's familiar with it. What this editorial said is:

“As enrolment continues to decline, Ontarians need to disabuse themselves of the notion that closing a school is bad for education. We've seen two examples in Leeds county in recent years where arguably students are better served after school closures, since they are now housed in far better facilities, namely Meadowview and Thousand Islands elementary schools.

“Facilities such as libraries, gymnasiums and science and computer labs are likely to be vastly improved when students are moved to schools that are somewhat larger.

“Premier Dalton McGuinty is correct when he argues that academic achievement, rather than the number of buildings, is the real measure of the province's school system.

“In fact, the money needed to keep open half-empty buildings would be far better spent in the classroom. It's the children, not the buildings, that matter most when it comes to education.”

It gives no one in our government pleasure to cause distress in communities. What we want is the best programming for our students. We want programming that's going to allow our students in our publicly funded education system to be the best citizens that we can have in this province. That's the work that we're doing on this side of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Before I recognize the member for Burlington, I wish to inform the House that the member for Beaches–East York, who previously had indicated an interest in an adjournment debate this evening, has withdrawn that request. So there will not be a late show tonight.

I recognize the member for Burlington.

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: I'm pleased to follow my colleague from Leeds–Grenville and support this particular opposition day motion today.

As PC critic for education, it's clear to me that regardless of how much I hear in this House about what the government is doing for education, I can see that any of the assessment formulas that are being put forward don't recognize the uniqueness of communities and the character and the values of each individual community. One size doesn't fit all, and the formulas that are being put forward are expecting communities to just fit under a category and move forward. That doesn't work.

As a mother and a grandmother, I am really concerned about the sheer disregard this government has for our students in our rural communities. It's the parents who are forced to advocate and to protect their children's right to education and a quality of life in our rural communities. If the parents of Phelps Central School in Redbridge had not ramped up their efforts and taken their objection to the school closure to that next level and created media awareness, then in the fall of 2008 their children would be travelling three hours and more in a school bus every single day just to attend school, because Phelps school would have been closed.

When asked for the list of school closures, the minister said she didn't have it. But that secret list of school closures miraculously appeared minutes after the question was asked. It did exist. Make no mistake, there are more closings on the horizon that appear on that list.

How can parents, students and school boards trust this government when they say one thing and do another?

They are completely untrustworthy. Evidence abounds of the Premier's broken promises to our rural communities. The minister says one thing, but when Premier McGuinty was Leader of the Opposition, he said in 2002 that he was extremely concerned about the plight of our rural schools and the negative impact the closures are having on our communities. I quote:

"Parents and students falling within the Thames Valley District School Board awoke to some terrible news. They have learned that there are five elementary and two high schools that are on the chopping block, in small communities. These schools are absolutely integral to the quality of life those communities offer."

Today, as we sit here in this House, five elementary schools and one high school are on the chopping block in the Thames Valley District School Board. This is on Mr. McGuinty's watch.

Mr. Paul Miller: The current provincial funding formula does not sufficiently recognize or fund the unique needs of northern schools. Ontario's northern schools have fewer specialist teachers, less access to special education supports and fewer full-time principals than schools in the rest of the province. Most northern boards cover very large geographical areas and their schools are, for the most part, very small and very far apart. Northern schools have a number of other unique characteristics: Their enrolment is rapidly declining, they have higher-than-average heating and busing costs, a high proportion of aboriginal students and less access to community supports. And now you're going to make things even worse for northern communities by closing more of the schools that these communities depend on.

Northern schools are well-used by their communities after school hours. A large number of northern schools provide space free of charge to community groups. In many communities, the schools represent the only place where the local community can assemble. The higher number of small communities and the great distances between those communities make the provision of adequate transportation services a constant challenge for the northern boards. Students in northern boards spend more time on buses than students in any part of the province, and northern boards struggle with very high transportation costs. Closing a northern school can mean even more hours on buses for students and increased risk to the students, particularly during the winter months. These students also find it impossible to participate in extracurricular school activities and events.

The closing of a school in a northern community can have a devastating effect on the local economy as areas are already reeling from job losses. This, combined with the hard impact on children's education, can have a significant negative impact on the social life and opportunities for many in these communities. Often in the north there are limited community social services. The closing of schools means that these already limited services are now even less accessible and less likely to be used.

Among the findings in the People for Education report, it states that:

"In four of Ontario's northern boards, enrolment has declined more than 20% since 2002.

"One northern board has 36% fewer students than it had in 2002.

"There are over 100,000 students in nearly 300 schools currently under review in the province.

"At least 50 school closures have already been recommended, but many reviews are not yet complete—more recommendations for closure are inevitable."

Accepting these recommendations for closures is accepting damage to our educational, social and community structures. New solutions are needed.

"In 2003, at People for Education's Annual Conference, Peter Gooch, then-Director of Education Finance at the Ministry of Education, said that declining enrolment was the biggest crisis facing school boards. At that time he said it was urgent that the province ... begin to develop long-term strategies to deal with it."

Simply closing schools is hardly what I call a strategy, but beyond small patches to funding formulas, few new strategies have been developed. Parenting centres, child care centres, community kitchens, public meeting spaces, even public libraries and health clinics can all add up to the life of a school and strengthen a community's sense of connection to it, and the pride in their community.

In both rural and urban areas, schools have the capacity to act as thriving hubs of activity and events for their local communities. Schools could include community centres and have extended hours in the evenings and on weekends for community use.

All of these things require greater vision—which this government doesn't have—in finally fixing the flawed education funding formula, greater flexibility in joint funding and greater co-operation across sectors, ministries and levels of government.

Next steps: Strategies to deal with declining enrolment do not necessarily cost more money. In many cases, they save money in the long run but they may involve municipalities, other ministries and sectors and will entail a funding formula with greater flexibility.

The province has said it will appoint a working group to examine the impact of declining enrolment in Ontario schools and to assess current government policies and evaluate other strategies. These names and the dates of consultations must be announced and the work begun very soon. But to be truly effective, this group must also be able to make recommendations about the education funding formula before the planned review in 2010, and it must have the latitude to suggest new thinking around the connection between municipalities and their schools and new approaches to the use of school buildings.

In the meantime, boards are making decisions that will affect hundreds of communities and tens of thousands of students across the province, now and far into the future. This government must get out from behind its rhetoric. It must announce the names of the work groups now, announce its critical path to successful resolution of this extremely serious education and social issue in northern Ontario and in rural schools and communities across the rest of Ontario.

In my community in Hamilton, we've got to a point where our board finds it necessary to sell three schools in the inner city to open one school in the suburbs. The funding formula allows for so many students, so many seats within the inner city. When enrolment declines in those schools, they're forced to make do with busing, make do with changing teacher strategies, the board strategies, and they can't even afford to build a new school. So the older cities, with their infrastructure crumbling, and people moving to the suburbs have caused unbelievable hardship in my community.

We need this government to step up to the plate now. Change the present funding formula because it's not working and it needs to be rectified. All I can say in closing is, it's time that the McGuinty government stepped up to the plate in education throughout this province.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Further debate? The member for Huron-Bruce.

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: I want to thank you for giving me the opportunity to talk about schools in rural Ontario.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Will the member please take her seat. I would ask the members of the opposition to refrain from heckling the member for Huron-Bruce, and I return to the member from Huron-Bruce.

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only hope that the official opposition will stop and listen to the voice of rural Ontario. We hear the comments from across the way, comments from the member from Leeds-Grenville about arrogant leadership—"not out of our eyesight."

But I do want to say to everyone who has the TV on and those members in the House today, we just had an election. And what was the position of the official opposition? Let's all remember what their position was. Their position was to fund private schools. I think about what that would have done to rural Ontario, what difference that would have made to the landscape if the official opposition had just won the election. So let's think about that.

When the Mike Harris-Ernie Eves government was in power, what happened with the funding formula that was existing under their government at that time? I can tell you: 200 new private schools, 40,000 new private school students—a 50% increase. That was under that funding under Ernie Eves and Mike Harris. If they would have been successful in the election, the growth in private schools would have been certainly much more dramatic than that. I say to the members from across the way, were they thinking of rural Ontario when they came up with that platform, that strong plank in their platform? I don't think so. I think, once again, they turned a blind eye.

But don't take my word for it. What does Mr. Tory have to say about our education system? Despite what the Conservatives are saying today, in April 2008—because I know the member always asks—John Tory told the Sudbury Chamber of Commerce that Ontario has an education system that is doing a good job. He understands. He gets it. If he was here, he could share that with them. In April, John Tory also said that Ontario has one of the best education systems in the world. And where was that speech made? That speech was made to the Brampton Chamber of Commerce. So we know that the leader of the official opposition understands and knows that if he had been successful going forward with private schools, I tell you, rural Ontario would have been damaged much more severely. But then, what can one expect from a group who certainly turned a blind eye to rural Ontario the whole time they were in government? There certainly has been no change from that side of the House.

But I do know that everyone is anxious to hear how the schools are affected in funding in Huron-Bruce, and I want to share that with you. As you know, I am from a rural riding. My largest town is just over 7,000, so that gives you a sense that it is all rural, not how some members would liken themselves to rural when they really represent large urban areas.

I have four school boards in my riding. I have shared those in the past with the member from Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound, the Leader of the Opposition and the member from Simcoe-Grey. Some of that has changed since the election, but I will share that with you.

First of all, there is the Bluewater District School Board, that being Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound. They have seen a 15.6% increase while having declining enrolment. I don't have the per capita numbers, but that is a significant number that one should look at as well, and I know there are other members who will add that. We also have the Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound Catholic board, and they saw a 22% increase. The Avon Maitland school board, which I share with the member from Perth-Wellington, had an over 18% increase. The Huron-Perth Catholic: an over 20% increase. These are all during declining enrolment. We know that it is very difficult to provide the level of education in rural Ontario because we understand in rural Ontario how important education and skills are.

One of the other things that I know the members from the official opposition will be anxious to hear: Two of my schools within Huron-Bruce also have high skills majors—

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: They just don't want to listen to rural Ontario. Two of those high skills majors are with agriculture. One is in St. Anns, which is in Clinton, and the other is in Chesley, which is in Bruce county. Both of those schools receive the Premier's agriculture awards. I share this story with the members from the opposition—not only are we respectful of our rural communities; we also understand what our rural communities need. I hope you're aware that in our agricultural communities, it's very difficult—as I know that you know, Mr. Speaker—to attract our young people and to retain them. By putting back what was taken out by the previous government and giving the ability for the agricultural community to go into our schools and get our young people engaged—I can tell you, being a rural member, how important that is. We know that in order to engage our young people in the future for agriculture, we must start at a younger age. So when the previous government withdrew so much of that, it really was difficult for our communities to go forward.

Also, within our agricultural high skills majors, one of the things that we've been able to do is to introduce agribusiness into that as well as our equipment dealers. They are providing the equipment. It's also a sub-branch, obviously, of agriculture. As we know, agriculture is the second-largest industry in the province of Ontario.

So I say to the members across the way: I know that during the election they went out and talked about private schools. But do you know what? In my riding of Huron—Bruce, my neighbour, he got it. The member from Bruce—Grey—Owen Sound, he knew it. He had the same position that I did on education. And so I say to the members across the way: Listen to your own members. Listen to the member from Bruce—Grey—Owen Sound about education. Listen to your leader about education. Listen to rural communities. You have not in the past; I hope you do in the future.

I do want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to speak to this very important issue.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Thank you very much for the opportunity to quickly debate on this motion today, a motion put forward by our leader, Bob Runciman, with respect to rural school closings. It seemed to be something that this government was very much opposed to when they were in opposition. If we go back to 2003, you'll remember when Gerard Kennedy, then Minister of Education, promised a moratorium, and in fact said he'd delivered a moratorium on the closing of rural schools. All the while, schools were closing, so his word wasn't any good then. The words of the Premier in 2007, they're no good either. In 2007, just prior to the election—

Hon. John Wilkinson: Why did people vote for him?

Mr. John Yakabuski: Well, they voted for him because they believed him, and they shouldn't have believed him.

"For rural kids, few things are more important than being able to go to school in your own community with your own friends," said the Premier at Newburgh Public School. "Rural schools help keep communities strong, which is why we're not only committed to keeping them open, but strengthening them." On September 18, 2007, that's what Dalton McGuinty said. A mere eight months later, we're now looking at 50 schools in the province of Ontario that are slated to close—rural schools—and 300 schools that are under review, including schools in my community of Petawawa.

During that moratorium, when then-Minister Gerard Kennedy said we weren't closing any rural schools, five schools in my riding closed, and now we're looking at the family of schools in Petawawa, including General

Panet High School, General Lake Public School, Pinecrest Public School, Herman Street Public School and Pine View Public School, which are all being reviewed as we speak; this from a government that promised they were going to keep rural schools open—and the importance of rural schools and how much they mean to communities.

Where we have seen rural schools close, we have seen communities suffer. The editorial from one of the newspapers that the education minister read was only about the facilities and what's offered to students at a bigger school. We're not dumb. We recognize that a bigger school has more facilities, but what about those communities and the effect on those communities? This government, because it can't keep its word, is not delivering on the promise that it made in 2007, not delivering on the promises it made in 2003, not delivering on the commitments that Dalton McGuinty made as an opposition leader in 2002—the importance of rural schools.

What we're asking for is that you put a moratorium in place until such time as you establish a new funding formula, which has been promised and promised and re-promised.

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: Done that.

Mr. John Yakabuski: It's not done; you say you're going to have a new funding formula in 2010.

Interjection.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Don't talk about envelopes money—a new funding formula for rural schools that includes transportation so that we can get on with the job of giving the best possible education for our children here in the province of Ontario. This government has not delivered on its commitments. It has only broken promises, broken its word and—oh, I can't say that, Mr. Speaker, but when you say you're going to do something and you don't do something, some people would call you something. In this House we can't say it, but that's what this government continues to do, and it continues to do it on the backs of rural schools.

In rural communities, we're trying to keep schools. In Toronto, they worry about pools; we worry about schools. Do something. Put a moratorium on this until a new funding formula is in place.

Mr. Pat Hoy: I'm pleased to join in this debate this afternoon on the very important subject of rural schools. My riding is largely rural. It has some small urban centres, but there's a lot of rural in Chatham—Kent—Essex. We recognize how important our schools are to our communities in the rural area. If you close a rural school, they may have to travel 10, 20, 30 miles to another school, or more, perhaps, so we know how fundamental they are to our communities.

What I find very, I'll be polite and say "interesting," in this motion coming from the Conservatives is their past history. They've suddenly gotten this new idea about rural schools. Let me tell you that Romney Central School, a rural school in Chatham-Kent, was the very first school to fall under the axe of the Harris government's short-sighted policies—a government that admittedly set out to create a crisis in our schools.

I worked with a lot of parents from the schools on the Mike Harris closure list. I worked with Romney Central. I asked questions in the Legislature urging the former government to reconsider the funding formula, which lacked the flexibility to meet the disparate needs of communities around Ontario. This inflexibility was ripping the heart out of rural Ontario. I attended many, many parent meetings and board meetings. One thing was very clear: The former government's funding formula was forcing the closure of rural schools.

Romney Central was in a location where there were virtually no houses around it. There were fields of various crops growing all around the school, and from time to time, I was told, there were deer running through the backyard. And guess what? This school, in that setting, did not meet the "rural" definition as put forward by the former government. So the parents, teachers and supporters of Romney Central travelled here to Queen's Park back in those days and begged the government to change the formula to at least recognize what "rural" meant.

Romney Central School was not a little red schoolhouse. It was the first graded school in the county; it was opened by William Grenville Davis and Darcy McKeough, who applauded the foresight and courage of residents in forming a township-area school. And the former government caused it to close.

Small schools, like small churches, are the primary threads that weave through the fabric of rural community and rural life. Mike Harris's then government didn't understand that one size does not fit all. He governed by what he could see from the CN Tower, and he could not see Romney Central or rural Ontario from there.

Ridgetown high school was a school also, at the time, talked about for closure. The former minister, Mr. Kennedy, came to Ridgetown and told them that he had a plan, a plan that is further carried on by the current minister. Ridgetown, in a location next to the Ridgetown agricultural college, was in fear of closure under the previous government. I'm proud to say that Ridgetown high school remains viable. Our government's commitment to rural Ontario and an outstanding publicly funded education system remains unwavering.

I'd just remind the members opposite that when the Tories were in power, 506 public schools closed while enrolment was going up and over 200 new private schools opened.

I find the motion put forward today by the opposition to be somewhat incredible.

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: I'm pleased to rise today in support of the motion to save our rural schools.

When he thinks it will get votes, Dalton McGuinty claims that he recognizes the importance of rural schools. During the election, he said, "Rural schools help keep communities strong, which is why we're not only committed to keeping them open—but strengthening them."

Unfortunately, we know what a promise from Dalton McGuinty is worth. Eight months later, 50 rural schools are slated to close and hundreds more are under review. Small towns are in danger of losing part of the foundation of their community, one of the things that attract people to live there.

I know how important these schools are to the future of our small communities. I've heard from many people who are concerned about the impact on their town and their children.

In Oxford, it was recently announced that Princeton Central public school will close in June 2009. I met with the people from Princeton, who told me how important it was for them that their kids learn close to home and be part of the community.

Other schools in Oxford, from Norwich District High School to Sweaburg Public School, are still under review. I've heard from many parents, teachers and local business owners in Norwich who are afraid that their high school will be next.

I've also received hundreds of great letters from students of Norwich District High School about what their school means to them. One of the students called it "the heartbeat of the community." Another said, "Even though NDHS is a small school in a small community with a small amount of students, it has a big impact with its big challenges," and helps create a big future.

Some of the letters spoke about the academic achievements and of the great sports programs. They pointed out that Norwich offers the only agricultural skills program within the entire board of the Thames Valley. Another letter talked about the contributions the school makes to the community. It is clear from all the letters that the students are committed to their education, their community and to participating in everything that the school has to offer. Is this really the kind of school we want closing?

It is not just residents in Oxford who are concerned about their schools. Across southwestern Ontario people are worried about the impact of school closing on their communities, schools like Metcalfe elementary school in the municipality of Adelaide Metcalfe, Caradoc South elementary school in Melbourne and Glencoe District High School.

I heard from one successful Glencoe graduate, Monte McNaughton, who said that, "Glencoe high school is the hub of the community. Families depend on having a secondary school in the Glencoe area so students can participate in the community and all the school activities instead of spending an extra hour a day on the school bus."

Mr. McGuinty needs to follow through on his commitment to rural schools and communities. Our students, our schools and our rural communities just can't afford another broken Liberal promise.

Thank you very much for allowing me to speak today, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. John Wilkinson: I'm delighted to join in this debate. I want to tell the good people at home who are watching this, these are the things you have to remember: Under the previous government, enrolment went up, the amount of money spent went down and therefore the funding per pupil went down. In our government, enrolment has declined but funding has gone up, so we are spending more per pupil. That's the first fact we have to get on the table.

The second fact is, I want to talk about my own riding of Perth-Wellington and about two communities in the midst of accommodation review. One is the great stone town of St. Marys, the place worth living in. In that community there are two elementary schools: Arthur Meighen, named after the famous Prime Minister who hailed from St. Marys, and also St. Marys Central Public School. Both are very old schools. In rural Ontario many of our schools are quite old, and as a result those two schools have been declared prohibitive to repair. It makes more sense to build a new school than trying to keep an old school up, particularly when it cannot be retrofitted to ensure that it is accessible to all children. I'm sure all of us in this House would agree that schools should be accessible and they should have the modern amenities available to them.

So that school board has decided that, with the two schools to be closed, they're going to build a new school. Yes, there will be one fewer school in St. Marys, and one could criticize us for that, but we are providing the money for a brand new, modern school to be built in the town of St. Marys, one that is right-sized for the community given the fact that the children of school age are declining. Though some people would say there should be a moratorium so that those two schools that are prohibitive to repair could be kept open in rural Ontario, I believe in a future for our students and I believe we should build that new school. We went through a process that was quite lengthy.

Next door in the community of Mitchell, they are doing an accommodation review. I want to read a letter from the chairman of the Avon Maitland District School Board, Meg Westley. What does she write? She writes Minister Wynne, and copied me—and I see the minister here.

"As the Avon Maitland District School Board approaches the end of its first accommodation review using the new guidelines"—those would be the guidelines set out by our government—"we would like to provide you with some feedback on the process....

"This accommodation review, in the town of Mitchell, has been a much more positive experience for all concerned than any in our last round." That would be the round under the previous government. "The longer timelines have allowed for in-depth community consultation, and we've had the opportunity to engage in a good deal of open, frank discussion with the community, and especially the ARC"—the accommodation review committee.

"All of our communities recognize the challenge posed by declining enrolment in our district. Although the prospect of closing a school continues to evoke a strong emotional response, our communities"—our rural communities—"know schools will have to close, and even recognize that spending money to keep half-empty schools open is not the best way to use taxpayers' dollars, nor the best way to ensure students receive a quality education."

When we first formed government, when enrolment had gone up and funding had gone down, when this funding formula we inherited was leading to the closure of schools, we imposed a moratorium. We changed the funding, and now we have to look at the reality of the situation. By working with the community, we have to look at what's best. What the proponents of the past want to say is that somehow we should keep the school open even when there are no students in it. God love us all, a school has to have pupils in it. A school has to have pupils who have teachers who can provide the kind of education that they are going to need to succeed in the 21st century.

I'm not a Luddite about this; I know how difficult it is. But by engaging the community, by spending more money per pupil, we are in a position now that we can look at, for example, in the town of St. Marys, having a new school that every child—a child in a wheelchair, a child who is blind, a child who is deaf—can go into that school. That is not the case today in St. Marys.

In our communities, we are looking forward to a day when all of our rural students are welcome and accommodated in a school that is accessible for them. Therefore, I will not vote with my friends opposite, because I remember their record in government. Thank you.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: I just wanted to say that it's not limited to rural schools. Recently, we've had a number of notices in my community of Oshawa, with the Durham Catholic District School Board announcing five closings that I will mention here, as well as some that hadn't been mentioned that I was informed of two days ago, which was quite surprising to myself.

But before we get into that, I just want to mention some of the other aspects that haven't been mentioned here. We talk about some of the changes. When there was another minister in this current government dealing with education, they made some suggestions for changes that came forward that haven't been brought up yet today. We talk, but we haven't heard about the impact.

In Oshawa, we now have portables coming out the ears in order to accommodate students. Yes, we understand the growth and the cycles of these areas, but now—which we didn't have before—we have a number of students in portables. We tried to point that out to the former minister, but it never came to fruition.

The other aspect was about the split classes now in our community. In our school, where our boys go, we saw maybe one split class, but every single grade now has a split class. What does that say? Yes, they may be under the required numbers, but lo and behold, we have one teacher teaching two different grades, with the impact that's having.

When you talk about impact, what about the impact within the schools locally: Canadian Martyrs Catholic School, Father Francis Mahoney, Holy Cross, St. Gregory, St. Michael? The number one question in the teaching community is, "What's happening? Where am I going? Do I have a job? How is it being affected?"

I think something that hasn't been brought up in the Legislature here is the capital expansion formula. I had a good relationship with the previous director, who retired in January. It came to my knowledge that there was no capital funding formula so that the school boards could actually do planning for projections in the areas.

The difficulty with that is that they have to close these before they can make announcements in coming forward, where the previous government, our government, as a matter of fact, had a capital funding formula whereby the school boards could actually look and make plans for future closures and openings. That's one of the difficulties that we're finding here, and that's one of the things I would say to the people at the Durham Catholic District School Board, that quite possibly, with the schools that are closing, we may see some changes come around in the near future. But at the current time there is certainly a strong concern within the education community.

The other aspect of concern is that the school board was approached by the city. I met with the mayor last night. The mayor specifically informed me that the school board absolutely refused to discuss any growth-plan areas in our community at all. The problem with that is that there's an intensification in the areas that all these schools are being closed down in. Brownfields are being revitalized and new development in that area is going to bring new young families into the community. Guess what? They'll be needing schools.

Lo and behold, the Durham Catholic District School Board refused to meet with the city in order to discuss some of the planning implications. The problem is obvious. Lo and behold, two or three years from now, when all this area is developed and Oshawa is growing and expanding hugely, we actually will be needing more new schools in the areas where they're being closed. I just wanted to raise that.

The one last thing I wanted to bring up before I close—because I know my colleagues are looking forward to speaking as well—is that it was brought to my attention and it appears, quite frankly, that the bureaucracy has made this decision, in that one of the schools is actually listed as Oshawa's oldest school. They're planning for a new school to be opened on Coldstream, but O'Neill is going to be closed. It was founded in 1909. Actually, my mother went there. It's been slated to be closed once the new school opens up.

Interjection: No respect for heritage.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: Part of it is the heritage in Oshawa, as the member is mentioning, as well as the families that have attended there and the traditions. Many are looking forward to having their kids attend the same school in a great facility at O'Neill. Apparently in a short time, in a year or so from now, it is not expected to be open and there will be strong concern in our community about that community as well.

Mr. Jim Brownell: I appreciate the opportunity this afternoon for a chance to speak on this opposition day motion. As a retired educator, I certainly can understand and appreciate the need and the wish to keep all schools in Ontario open, but really, it's just not the case. It's not feasible in many situations.

I look at some schools in my riding, and I'm going to give you an example of two schools, John Sandfield Macdonald public school and Bonville public school, that closed in the 1980s. Certainly, nobody was banging at the doors here at Queen's Park or at the doors of the school board to get involved. School boards made decisions then. School boards made decisions to close Finch Public School, and those two other schools that I just mentioned closed because school boards were elected to make those decisions. The minister stood up at the outset of this debate and commented about that very thing. We are not in this to micromanage our school boards; we are in this to make these elected officials make the decisions that they were elected to make, and sometimes they are very difficult decisions.

I would like to quote Greg Pietersma, the chair of the Upper Canada District School Board, who made a comment in the Brockville Recorder and Times on March 28 of this year, where he said, "We have to move from being champions of schools to champions of learning. We can keep a lot of schools open but at what cost?"

Shortly after that—it was about one month later, on April 29, 2008, in the same newspaper. I would like to quote comments made by the Leeds–Grenville member. It says:

"As enrolment continues to decline, Ontarians need to disabuse themselves of the notion that closing a school is bad for education. We've seen two examples in Leeds county in recent years where arguably students are better served after school closures, since they are now housed in far better facilities, namely Meadowview and Thousand Islands elementary schools.

"Facilities such as libraries, gymnasiums and science and computer labs are likely to be vastly improved when students are moved to schools that are somewhat larger.

"Premier Dalton McGuinty is correct when he argues that academic achievement, rather than the number of buildings, is the real measure of the province's school system.

"In fact, the money needed to keep open half-empty buildings would be far better spent in the classroom. It's the children, not the buildings, that matter most when it comes to education."

This is a quote in that member's newspaper, the Brockville Recorder and Times.

Here we have the community coming out and saying—I look in my riding at Dickson's Corners Public School. In December 2006, I went out to Dickson's Corners Public School because a young girl there designed my Christmas card and I went to present her with an award. I drove up to the school, a very large country school with a gymnasium, and I thought I would be making the presentation in the gymnasium. I went into the school and the number of students in that school filled the library, a small classroom library. With declining enrolment, the community closed that school.

I look at Newington Public School. Shortly after I got elected—the writing was on the wall in the previous Tory government's time here at Queen's Park—once again, declining enrolment closed that school.

I look in the city of Cornwall. I'm talking about a city school in Cornwall, but many rural students are bused to a French public school in that community, Horizon-Jeunesse. Here is the situation: Right at this time, the community is working to amalgamate the students from that school over to Rose des Vents, where they will have all the students housed in one school in that community. I think that's the way communities are making decisions. The parents, in many cases, are making decisions, but it rests on the school boards to make those decisions.

When I see the help that we've given—I look at the school foundation grant, $1.2 billion in the last two years; I look at $3.4 billion in rural schools this year—that's a 22.9% increase since 2003. Those are the supports that we've given to the school boards, and these school boards, being elected, are making the decisions.

I rest it there. I have great faith in the school boards in my riding to do what they were elected to do.

Mr. Randy Hillier: I hear all the broken promises, and this is what this debate is about. I'll be supporting this motion, and as the member from the NDP said earlier, it's eminently reasonable. I don't know if the people on the other side of the House know about those words, but it is eminently reasonable.

Broken promises: That's what we're hearing from the other side, a continuation of broken promises. Here is another one that the Premier said: "We're going to regret having closed schools prematurely when we could have kept them open." We've heard from the minister about a new envelope of money, we've heard about the declining enrolment work group, but they're proceeding. When I hear about this new envelope of money, it reminds me of the old days with Canada Post, when we used to hear, "The cheque is in the mail." There's another envelope of money; the cheque is in the mail.

Our rural schools are being closed because this Liberal government is managing the demise of rural Ontario. They are not protecting rural Ontario, they are not defending rural Ontario; they are managing the demise of rural Ontario. Those words come out of a report that that government adopted back in 2004—the panel on the role of government report. Right in there, it said that they will manage the demise of rural Ontario.

As this government just yesterday was playing hooky from their responsibilities and duties to the people of Ontario over in Quebec City, other people in rural Ontario were working. People in rural Ontario drafted up a report card on this government. It's by the Ontario

Landowners Association. Guess what? Let me just read a little bit from this report card. Rural affairs—

Interjection: An F.

Mr. Randy Hillier: Oh, an F—Mr. McGuinty "has demonstrated a thorough ignorance of all things affecting rural Ontario." Under education: Mr. McGuinty "demonstrates a complete and constant misunderstanding of the educational system"—another F. Under environment: Mr. McGuinty views this subject "as an exercise in wasteful economics.... He has disbursed millions of dollars to his favourite NGOs" via the greenbelt. Under ethics here, an F: Mr. McGuinty "demonstrates a complete lack of desire to learn the fundamentals. His daily responses are strongly indicative of a deep-seated pathological contempt."

There is a difference between this side and that side: On this side, we say what we do and we do what we say.

Mr. Jim Wilson: I'm happy to rise in support of this motion. It simply calls upon the government "to suspend any and all board-recommended rural school closures until both the funding formula review and a thorough assessment of alternate uses for the schools have been completed." I don't think that's an unreasonable appeal.

We know that the Premier, then-opposition leader, on June 11, 2002, agreed with this very same idea when he was quoted in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record as saying, "While schools 'will open and close in the natural order of things,' McGuinty said the province should avoid forcing closures while the funding formula is under review." He then went on to say, "We're only going to regret having closed schools prematurely when we could have kept them open." That was in 2002.

Fast forward to 2008, and we have 300 schools on the chopping block, affecting over 100,000 students. In my riding of Simcoe-Grey, the story is just as bleak. Currently, there are seven schools undergoing an accommodation review, which is essentially, depending on how you look at it, the first step before a school is allowed to close. Among those are Elmvale District High School, Stayner Collegiate Institute, Alliston Union Public School, Our Lady of Assumption in New Lowell, the Collingwood campus of the adult learning centre, Tecumseth Beeton public school and Tecumseth North Elementary.

I should note that an accommodation review committee is meeting tonight at 7 o'clock at Alliston Union Public School for a working session on the future of Alliston Union, Cookstown Central, Tecumseth Beeton and Tecumseth North Elementary schools. It's co-chaired by Councillor Jamie Smith. They will have a public meeting on June 17 at 7 p.m. at Tecumseth Beeton public school on Patterson Street.

Now, the list does not include facilities like Duntroon Central Public School that always seem to come perilously close to closure. In fact, Duntroon is a school that I fought very hard to keep open back in the mid-1990s, and I'm happy to say that we were successful in doing that. When the board wanted to close Nottawa Elementary School and bus the students to either Duntroon or Collingwood, I joined the fight, and we won a brand new school for Nottawa. The same goes for Admiral Collingwood. It was supposed to close, leaving Collingwood with only three schools, until we fought to have it replaced, which it was. That was the record of our government.

These schools are at the heart of our rural and small-town communities. As Mr. McGuinty said, again in 2002, "If a rural community loses a school, it's not the same as shutting one down in downtown Toronto where there's another one six blocks away. What you're doing is robbing the community of an important component. It's the heart and soul of a community. If you don't have a school, it's really tough to attract and to hold on to young families."

I completely agree, which makes me wonder why, years later, the Liberal government and the Premier are so bent on stealing the heart and soul right out of Stayner, Elmvale, New Lowell, Beeton, Alliston and Collingwood. It's deplorable, particularly when you consider the commitments the Premier has made. In the last election, on September 18, the Premier walked up to the podium at Newburgh Public School, outside of Kingston, and said, "Rural schools help keep communities strong, which is why we're not only committed to keeping them open—but strengthening them."

Keep this in mind, ladies and gentlemen: This is after the Premier had been in government for four years and he had all the data on finances and enrolment. At the end of the day, this is another example of a Liberal broken promise. The Premier said anything to get elected the first time, and as we saw again in the last election, they said anything to the people of Ontario to get re-elected.

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I'm pleased to rise today to speak to the official opposition day motion, and I really wanted to expand a little bit on what my colleague from Simcoe-Grey had mentioned in his comments just a few moments ago.

I think one of the worst things about the lack of appropriate funding or the threat of school closures is the worry that these communities have. There are two schools in particular that are not too far away from where I live that I wanted to mention.

The one school that has been under a threat for the last couple of years at least, and certainly there is a strong school council that is advocating and working and trying to lobby the school board to stop any threat of closure, is Moonstone Elementary School. It's a small community not too far away from what many people know of as the Mount St. Louis Moonstone ski resort area. Really and truly, if that school was ever to close, there would be really no community there. There would be a bunch of houses, but the school is the centre of the community. The Christmas concerts, the Canada Day celebrations, everything is held at the school, so the thought of moving those children away from that school and moving them off to a larger school somewhere else would be devastating. It would actually be the end of that community.

You know, I was encouraged last year even during the election campaign, when the Premier promised that those sorts of things would not happen, that we wouldn't lose rural schools. So it is disappointing when our critic for education comes forward and finds out there are least 50 schools in the province today under direct threat of closing, and quite frankly—

Interjection: There are 300 under review.

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: And as I've heard here now, there are 300 under review.

The second school—and it's not in my riding but it's in Mr. Wilson's riding: Elmvale secondary school. There's probably not a better rural secondary school than Elmvale secondary school in our province, for a small school. They've got a great spirit. For the community of Elmvale, which is a small community of 1,600 or 1,700 people, the threat of closure for that school would be absolutely devastating.

I was encouraged last year when I thought that there would be a policy put in place and legislation put in place that would have stopped that from occurring. So I hope the government members will take the time today—particularly the rural members—to support this resolution that is before the House. I think it's important for the government to prove they don't have the hatred of rural Ontario that we on this side of the House believe that they have.

Thank you very much, and again, I hope you'll all support this.

Mr. Toby Barrett: In my riding in Haldimand-Norfolk, a number of elementary schools have narrowly escaped closing. However, others have been less fortunate. As for the high schools, we fought the battle for the Delhi, Burford, Valley Heights and Port Dover high schools, and all but Burford remain open. This meant countless meetings and petitions and briefs, not only to the school board but also to the Ministry of Education.

Very recently, my hometown high school of Port Dover is again, for the second time, being eyed for review after trustees learned that enrolment had declined to 287 students. The board has abandoned its plans to review Norfolk high school for now, but the words and the actions of this present government since 2003 do not convince me that they will put their money where their mouth is and help keep these schools open.

Each and every time, I've reiterated my request for either special provincial funding or a moratorium. Last week, this side of the House once again called on this government to put in place a moratorium on these closures until the review of the funding formula has been completed.

In the interests of time, I want to reiterate that I'm personally underwhelmed by this government's—at one time, there was a toothless moratorium request. It was a voluntary moratorium put forward to two ministries. In spite of that, the closures did continue at that time. Prior to the 2007 election, this Premier said, with regard to rural schools, and I'm sure we have heard this already this afternoon, "We're not only committed to keeping them open but to strengthening them as well." Premier, with 50 rural schools closing, and we now see accommodation reviews on another 300, it's an awfully strange way to live up to that kind of statement.

What this government perhaps does not understand is that rural schools keep our smaller communities alive and vibrant. Regrettably, when a school closes, in particular a high school, there's a great deal of collateral damage that occurs. Once that school is closed, we see restaurants close; we see a decline in property values. Families are forced to move out of town, in particular those families with young people coming up to high school age.

I know that rural education in my riding does not have time to wait for action from this government. Smaller communities are already suffering at the hands of this government, and for many of these towns, a school closure would be that final nail in the coffin. As this government continues to delay honouring funding promises, school trustees across the province are left with that unfortunate task of making decisions for this government; essentially, making decisions in a vacuum. Sadly, we remain locked in this battle to convince those who hold the purse strings, those who have their hand on policy—we are seeing no action, and the need for action is presently in need right now.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I am pleased to be able to join the debate, but I must say that there's a certain amount of gall involved in criticizing Liberal government management of schools when we think back to the official opposition's record.

The Conservatives really mismanaged the education system. They cut $1 billion out of the education system. There were 15,000 fewer teachers in the school situation when they finished than when they began. How many days do you think were lost because of disruption in the school system? There were 26 million lost days from these people's mismanagement.

Now, as many of you know, I was a school trustee through all of the Mike Harris years and through all of the NDP government years. I'd like to tell you a little bit about my experience in closing a particular school, because one of the schools that I closed, I must say, with the consent of the community, was a small K to 6 school. It was an old, open concept school. There was a neighbouring school next door. We were closing this school in a very high-needs, high-risk area and building an addition at the neighbouring school and turning it into a K to 8.

The community was actually very supportive of the move, so with the support of the community, we closed the school because we could provide better programming and a better facility. But their rules said that if we closed a school, the provincial government got to scoop it back, and that's what they did. They took back this little K to 6 school in a high-needs community. Do you know what we found out they were going to do with it? What they were going to do with it was sell it to a private school operator, which tells you how it came to be that there were 200 private schools open when these people were in government, a 50% increase in private school enrolment.

Do you know what we did? We found out—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Will the member please take her seat. I ask the House to come to order, on both sides, and I return to the member for Guelph.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: So when we found out they were going to sell it to a private school, we actually unclosed the school, because we weren't letting it go to a private school. Do you know what we did? We then started the process all over again, and this time we managed to do what we had wanted to do in the first place. We quite legally, with the co-operation of the municipality, transferred the school to the municipality, which, in turn, transferred it to the children's aid and turned this school into a wonderful social service community support hub for a community which was very high risk and very high need. That is how you want to assess community need—the way we did it, not the way they do it, which is just selling it to a private school.

I do want to tell you what we have done since we came into office. Despite the fact that there are 90,000 fewer students in the system, we have actually added $4 billion to the school system. But, in particular, when we talk about rural schools—in fact, about all schools—we have funded a principal and a secretary for each and every school. They didn't do that. There wasn't enough money to go around for principals in schools.

We've put $3.4 billion into rural schools this year. That's an increase of 23% since we came in. In fact, the most rural schools have something called the supported school grant. I'd like to tell you about the supported school grant, because we recognize that there are some very small schools in very small communities that must stay open. We've created the supported school grant so that can happen.

So for very small, very remote elementary schools, we are ensuring that those very small schools get—they have to have at least 50 students and be remote—at least 7.5 teachers. That's almost one teacher for every seven students. The reason we're doing that is to ensure that we don't get into the situation where you've got three or four grades in one class. It ensures that the elementary program can be delivered properly.

At secondary, if it's a very remote school, the funding is even more generous. For just 50 students, we ensure that there are 14 teachers in that school, so that a full range of proper secondary programming can be delivered.

So we have no need to take any lessons from these folks on how to manage rural schools. In fact, Emily Noble, the past president of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, said, "The supported schools allocation recognizes that small elementary schools in remote areas have a number of challenges. No matter their size, these schools must provide a full range of services for their students."

It is true that some schools continue to close, but we actually have something called the prohibitive-to-repair grant, which allows us to provide better programming in better schools. In fact, all over this province, we are replacing schools that are old, that are worn out, and making sure that the kids have a better program, a better opportunity to achieve, a better opportunity to graduate.

That's what we believe in: a better experience for students, not necessarily a school building on every corner. Thank you very much. I will be opposing this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Mr. Runciman has moved opposition day number 4. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1732 to 1742.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): All those in favour of the motion will please rise one at a time and be counted by the table.

Mr. Bradley moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 85, An Act to permit the issuance of photo cards to residents of Ontario and to make complementary amendments to the Highway Traffic Act / Projet de loi 85, Loi permettant la délivrance de cartes-photo aux résidents de l'Ontario et apportant des modifications complémentaires au Code de la route.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The Minister of Transportation.

Hon. James J. Bradley: I rise in the House today to begin debate on new legislation that, if passed, would maintain Ontario's economic prosperity while improving access and opportunity for all Ontarians. Our proposed legislation, the Photo Card Act, is of importance to many Ontarians.

I will be sharing my time with my parliamentary assistant for transportation, Mike Brown, the member for Algoma, who will resume debate on this legislation when I have completed my remarks.

I'm sure many of our members are aware that the western hemisphere travel initiative is almost completely phased in. Air travellers have been subject to the new rules since January 2007, and at our land and sea border crossings travellers from Ontario are already being asked to prove citizenship and produce identification documents when crossing the border.

On June 1, 2009, the US government will require all visitors to prove their citizenship using a passport or an accepted passport alternative. With just over half of all Canadians holding a passport, we want to make it as simple as possible for Ontario travellers to have access to a secure border crossing document. An enhanced driver's licence could be used as a passport alternative at all Canada-US land and sea border crossings. This will mean less traffic congestion at the border and fewer delays for travellers and commercial drivers.

Our borders are the economic gateways to this province and, as government, we must be responsible for keeping them safe, open and accessible. Every day more than 92,000 cars, and over 22,000 trucks carrying $650 million in goods, cross our borders. That amounts to more than $330 billion in trade every year with the United States, Ontario's largest trading partner. In fact, nearly 60% of all of Canada's trade with the United States passes through these borders.

If this legislation is passed, our enhanced driver's licence would offer the same privileges as the existing driver's licence and would include additional information needed to show proof of Canadian citizenship. We are taking the right steps to make border travel more accessible and help reduce congestion, potentially saving our economy millions of dollars.

We also propose to provide a photo identification card for Ontarians who do not or cannot drive. Like the enhanced driver's licence, our photo card could be enhanced for use as a convenient passport alternative.

Of course, Ontarians who choose to add citizenship information to their driver's licence or photo card would expect this information to be protected from those who should not have this information. That is why we have already recommended a number of key security measures to Ontario's driver's licences. Anyone who has renewed their licence during the past few months will have noticed these new, leading-edge security features, such as a laser-engraved photo and signature, a fine-line security background and a 2D bar code. Making sure all these cards are issued legitimately is also critical to combatting fraud and identity theft. We propose to ensure the integrity of our licence and photo card issuing systems through photo comparison technology. This state-of-the-art technology would help us make sure multiple cards are not issued to the same individual under different identities.

The reality is that Ontario's driver's licence card is among the most commonly used documents for identification purposes. Proof of identification is frequently requested for everyday transactions such as opening a bank account or proving age for a senior discount. The photo card we are proposing today has been long advocated by groups representing people with disabilities and seniors. If passed, this legislation would improve access to many everyday services and conveniences. Like drivers, photo card holders would have the option of adding citizenship information to their cards. This enhanced photo card could then be used in much the same manner as the enhanced driver's licence, serving as a convenient travel document for entering the United States.

Our government has worked closely with the Canada Border Services Agency and the US Department of Homeland Security to make the enhanced driver's licence and enhanced photo card programs a reality. And we have worked with Ontario's Information and Privacy Commissioner every step of the way. Most recently, the commissioner has spoken to the federal government and identified the need for federal officials to support the province in providing citizenship information on its cards. We support the commissioner and are committed to ensuring the protection and privacy of personal information, and we will continue to work with her throughout the development and implementation process.

Stakeholders such as the Canadian Council of the Blind, the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, the United Senior Citizens of Ontario and the Ontario Provincial Police, for example, have contributed valuable input. Each of these organizations—and there are many—is to be commended for getting us to where we are today. We will continue to work with all of our stakeholders and counterparts to implement this legislation. Removing barriers to access enhances opportunity for everyone. So I again ask my colleagues today to support this legislation.

There is some history to this legislation, as members of the Legislature may be aware. I see my colleague from the Renfrew area here today. I was in the presence yesterday of his brother Mark Yakabuski, who is the president of the Insurance Bureau of Canada. What a distinguished individual and what a pleasant individual to deal with. I told him about his brother in the Legislature, and he was happy to accept the compliments and comparisons that were taking place at the time. But I know that all members of the Legislature are interested in this alternative.

The history of this is that after the attacks on New York City and Washington in September 2001, there was considerable and understandable concern about the fact that security would have to be increased significantly. What is actually sad about those attacks, among many things—the loss of life of course being the first and foremost, the loss of very expensive buildings and the damage that was done physically as well as the lives that were lost and the people injured—all of those are extremely significant and traumatic. But in addition to that, subsequently what we have is a situation where there has been an obsession—and an understandable obsession—with security, particularly in the United States, where the attacks took place and the effect is most profound. As a result, the Congress of the United States passed a rather interesting act called the western hemisphere travel initiative. It was going to require, among other things, documentation that would be a passport or another secure document for anyone coming into the United States from another country or for American citizens returning to the United States.

By the way, I am encouraged, I might note at this time, that the state of New York is at the present time working on a situation similar to ours; that is, a more secure driver's licence for the purpose of entry back into the United States. And we in Canada have expressed a view that we would be prepared to accept that.

There was a very significant outcry for security measures. But when people who reside along the border, or within 100 or 200 miles of the border, understood the ramifications of demanding a passport and only a passport or another very secure document that was difficult to obtain and perhaps expensive—when this was determined to be a great imposition on people crossing the border, we had friends on both sides of the border who were talking about finding an alternative. So this never was a fight between Canadians and Americans; or, in the United States, between Democrats and Republicans; or, in Canada, between our political parties—it was always a difference of opinion largely between those who reside along the border or within 100 or 200 miles of the border and those who were further into the interior, who did not perhaps appreciate the negative impact that such a provision would have. As a result, there were many of us who decided we would seek an alternative.

At the time, fewer than 25% of Americans happened to have a passport; 35% to 40% of Canadians probably had a passport. That meant that the majority of individuals did not have a passport. And it was unlikely that particularly those of us who reside near borders or have visitors from the United States coming to our areas—the member for Timmins–James Bay is here at the present time. He would have hunters and fishers who come up to his area from the United States, and other visitors who want to enjoy everything there is to enjoy in his riding. He would know that it's likely that those who travel every year and business travellers would be in possession of a passport. But for those who are more impulse visitors or decided one year to do so, the fact that they would have to go through the process of getting a passport may have deterred them from visiting our province and our country. That is why we looked for an alternative.

I want to give great credit to our friends on the other side of the border who are allies of ours on this particular issue. As a result, in British Columbia they have a pilot project with an enhanced security driver's licence issued to some people on a voluntary basis, and correspondingly, in the state of Washington a similar circumstance exists where in a pilot project a more secure—enhanced, as we call it—driver's licence is accepted for crossing the border.

Premier McGuinty has met on many occasions with officials of the United States, including the Great Lakes governors, who are quite sympathetic to the position that all of us are taking on this issue. I think the Premier met with other governors as well in different venues in the United States and, in some cases, in Canada and discussed this particular issue. As well, I have had opportunities on many occasions to meet, in Washington and other venues, with officials from the United States government and with those who are sympathetic in the United States to the position that Ontario was taking.

Initially, I think there was an inclination to accept things. I remember there was a meeting of Prime Minister Harper, the President of Mexico and the President of the United States in Cancun, Mexico. When they emerged from that meeting, Prime Minister Harper said, "Folks, you'd better get used to it. This is going to be the law." I think perhaps on that occasion the import of that was not impressed upon the three leaders. Even the President of the United States had said at one point in time that when he signed very detailed legislation, he may not have been aware of all of the potential implications of that legislation. Remember, it's a very comprehensive bill. And he was a governor in Texas, so he was a state governor who knew the importance of travel across borders.

Prime Minister Harper, I'm pleased, changed his position and the federal government changed its position when many of us along the border—I'm sure including members of the government caucus in Ottawa—recognized that we'd better find an alternative, we'd better look for an alternative, because the provision of a passport only would be very onerous. So meetings continued, particularly the provinces that were interested.

A year ago in April I went to Washington. Our officials, by the way, were very helpful and very accommodating at the Canadian embassy in Washington. On that occasion, I got an opportunity to meet with officials of the Department of Homeland Security and the Department of State in the United States and indicated that we in Ontario had developed the beginning of a more secure driver's licence—secure in terms of the security provisions within it. We enhanced security considerably, and from this basis we could add additional information which would be attractive, I thought, to them to use for going across the border. I was very pleased that they were open to the idea and informed me at the time that the state of Vermont was looking at that. We now know that Manitoba and Quebec are looking at this opportunity as well. What our hope is and what I see happening is that states on the other side correspondingly will develop a system where an enhanced driver's licence is used for the purpose of crossing the border and then crossing back into the United States. Because if we were to require passports, that would be difficult. It would have very significant ramifications for tourism and trade between our friends in the United States and ourselves. So meetings continued.

Representative Louise Slaughter in New York state led the charge in the United States Congress in terms of trying to, first of all, postpone the date of implementation—that was done successfully—and then to look at other aspects which would make it less onerous. I commend her for her work. And there were many others—to be fair, there were many others. I remember one day phoning the offices of two people in the United States Congress, Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska and Senator Patrick Leahy of Vermont. Those are two individuals who probably don't agree on a lot of things in the United States Congress. But here they were, they had co-sponsored a bill to delay the implementation. What would bring Senator Leahy and Senator Stevens—one a liberal Democrat, the other a conservative Republican—together on a piece of legislation? Well, geography did, because they both represented states which were adjacent to Canada, and they recognized the importance of movement of people between those two countries.

I was very encouraged when I saw that we had allies in the United States. I remember meeting with Governor Taft of Ohio; he was governor of Ohio when he was here in Toronto. We happened to be at the same tourism event. We had a lengthy discussion about the matter, and even though Ohio does not border directly on Ontario, he recognized the importance of the citizens of Ohio being able to visit here and then come back, and Canadians being able to visit Ohio and come back. There's been a long history of visitation between Americans and Canadians. Whether it's hockey teams travelling back and forth, marching bands that have appeared in parades on both sides of the border, friends visiting friends, business people visiting business people, sports fans attending events, there are a lot—

Interjection: The Cleveland Browns.

Hon. James J. Bradley: I hear mention of the Cleveland Browns. Many years ago, people used to travel to see the Cleveland Browns from a long distance; now, probably more the Buffalo Bills or Detroit Lions, because they're right on the border. But the Cleveland Browns would still have a large delegation of fans here. Correspondingly, Americans love to come up to Canada to enjoy what we have to offer.

We had to find an alternative. It wasn't easy. You will recall that early on there were US officials who said that nothing but the passport would be accepted. The ambassador of the United States said that, and he was being honest and up front, because that was the position of the administration at the time. I think as time evolved and people explained what could be used as an alternative, homeland security became more interested and more accepting, as long as all of the security provisions could be found within that document.

What is the advantage of the document? First of all, before I talk about the advantages of a licence rather than a passport, I'll go back. People can still get a passport; I must say that. If they want to get a passport, they can get a passport. If they want to get a Nexus card, they can get a Nexus card for crossing the border, or other special cards that require a lot of security checks. They can get that.

But I can say that the advantage of the licence is that it's a document that most people have in their wallet—younger people may not. I wrote to the Department of Homeland Security on behalf of the province of Ontario. I was given the responsibility by the government of Ontario as Minister of Tourism at the time to submit a document to the Department of Homeland Security indicating some of the changes we wanted to see.

One of the things I suggested—I wasn't by any means the only person suggesting this—was that children up to the age of 16 should be exempt from the WHTI provisions. Then I also suggested that those aged 16 to 18 who were travelling in groups—hockey tournaments, baseball tournaments, marching bands—under special conditions, as long as they had adult supervision and so on, should have the opportunity to be able to travel back and forth without a passport.

I'm happy to say that the United States government accepted both of those suggestions. I want to underline that I wasn't the only one who suggested them; I assure you of that. They would have received that kind of submission from many.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Don't be so shy about claiming credit.

Hon. James J. Bradley: My friend says, "Don't be shy about claiming credit," but I want to be realistic and say that I'm sure there are many others who were submitting the same idea.

What was encouraging was that they accepted the ideas that were submitted. But invariably the people along the border, when we met, whether they were tourism officials or business officials, said that a more convenient card is necessary. That is why we wanted to develop the enhanced security licence card as an identification piece to get into the US, and for those who don't have a driver's licence, to develop such a card.

By the way, there will be two possible cards for those not drivers. One will simply be for identification purposes when it's in place, but if you wanted to enhance it, if you wanted to put citizenship on it and accept the enhancements needed, you could do that as well. It would be the choice of the individual. What we require from the federal government—and I am very optimistic, because we've had co-operation from the federal government—is information that would be available on citizenship. The privacy commissioner of Ontario has suggested that the federal government provide that to the provinces and not have a bank of such information in each province, that it would be better for the federal government to do that, and again, I'm hopeful that the federal government will indeed do that.

My friend Ted Arnott is across from me. He used to be the critic in tourism. I remember one day he got up in the House and said, "Well, why would you develop a card of this kind which simply makes it easier for Canadians to go into the US?" Of course, we do it because Canadians have asked that, but also we do it to encourage our American friends to correspondingly develop this card. I'm happy to say I read in a newspaper from New York state that as of Labour Day this year, New York state will have produced an enhanced security driver's licence that will be accepted for Americans going back into the United States.

I think we've seen some progress and some success. There isn't anybody on either side of the border who doesn't recognize the need for increased security. We also recognize, however, that we have a special relationship between Canada and the United States that should be enhanced and not detracted from. Senator Coleman from Minnesota, I believe it was, said, "We should not embark upon a war on terrorism by embarking on a war on tourism," or words to that effect, and that has been repeated in different ways. Why would we do this to ourselves? The goodwill of people on both sides of the border—and I want to commend members of the United States Congress, the Congress presently elected who are sitting in the Senate and the House now, and members of state Legislatures, governors, senators and members of the administration who have modified their position when they recognized that the alternative we're providing is a reasonable alternative.

I want to say as well that this is only one alternative. People may choose not to get this if they wish, because the designation of citizenship will be on the licence. So this is voluntary on our part. In British Columbia, I should note that only 500 licences have been made available on a pilot project basis. We anticipate many more in Ontario. But what we have seen in some circumstances—and that is a choice that people make—is that some people who are close to the border have decided to get a Nexus card, as we call it, crossing the Niagara River. That requires quite a bit of background checking that takes place. Or some people have said, "Look, I travel internationally; I want to get a passport." Both of those are fine. We're providing yet another alternative for people, and I think that's what they're looking for.

I suspect, and I've noted this in the House, generally speaking, that members of all political parties in this House have said that it is desirable to have this kind of alternative. I think we recognize—each one of us, from our three political parties—the importance of having that option available to us.

I indicated that I was going to yield the floor to my colleague the parliamentary assistant in transportation, the distinguished member from Algoma-Manitoulin, and I'm going to do so at the present time.

I encourage all members of the House to give this matter serious consideration and I hope support eventually. I look forward to reading the Hansard for the comments that are going to be made on it. I know they'll all be constructive and helpful, as members of the Legislature try to be constructive and helpful on matters of this kind. I hope eventually, though that's the choice of the Legislature, that this legislation will be passed into law, enacted and that the new identification cards—licences—will be available to the citizens of Ontario as an option to be used to enter the United States.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I rise in the House today to continue the discussion on important new legislation that, if passed, would help keep people and goods moving across Ontario's borders. I do not need to remind members of the House that our borders are gateways to this province, and as a government, we must be responsible in keeping them safe, open and accessible to help maintain a strong and prosperous economy.

Our proposed legislation, the Photo Card Act, is a step in the right direction. It supports Ontario's plans to improve the flow of trade and travel between our province and our neighbouring American states.

This proposed legislation would pave the way for the creation of secure photo identification cards for Ontarians, including an enhanced driver's licence card that contains citizenship information. A new, enhanced version of the Ontario driver's licence would become an acceptable travel document, a passport alternative, for Ontarians to use at all Canada-US land and sea border crossings.

If passed, our government will also develop a photo identification card for people who do not drive or who are unable to drive. Like the enhanced driver's licence, the enhanced photo card could be used as a convenient passport alternative, something that you could have in your wallet or purse.

Millions of US citizens visit Ontario every year. They come here to spend their hard-earned dollars. These visitors pour hundreds of millions of dollars into our province's economy, and we cannot afford to keep them away.

As many of us are already aware, the United States government has started implementing the western hemisphere travel initiative, WHTI, one of the key recommendations from the 9/11 commission report. The western hemisphere travel initiative is being implemented in stages. Since January of last year, travellers entering the United States by air have been required to present a passport or other accepted secure document proving citizenship. Since January of this year, travellers crossing into the United States by land and sea have also been required to show proof of citizenship with their identification, such as a birth certificate. On June 1, 2009, all travellers entering the US will be asked to present either a passport or an acceptable passport alternative at the border.

As a province, we have to be ready. Our economy depends on it, and the people of Ontario depend on us.

A recent Canadian Tourism Research Institute study estimates that border delays cost Ontario more than $5 billion annually. Without new measures to deal with the new western hemisphere travel initiative rules, it has been predicted that Ontario could lose nearly 1.5 million US visitors every year unless we take action now—not to mention the added congestion at our borders if people cannot safely and freely cross.

The statistics speak for themselves: Right now, about 55% of Canadians hold a valid passport. Not everybody has a passport.

Ontario's long-standing position has been to support the US government's goals of improving security. At the same time, we want to have this happen in a way that continues to allow the efficient flow of legitimate travel and trade.

Many other states and provinces see a definite need to pursue their own enhanced driver's licence and photo card programs. Michigan expects to implement its program in early 2009. Manitoba intends to implement its program in the fall of 2008. British Columbia has already launched a pilot program of the enhanced driver's licence. Quebec is aggressively planning the implementation of a new card. New York expects to implement its program in the summer of 2008.

As a province, we cannot stand by. We must take action now. Ontarians need safe and secure alternatives so we can access our borders in time for the 2009 western hemisphere travel initiative deadline. Our neighbours expect us to move forward with our enhanced driver's licence and photo card programs to protect the safe and efficient flow of people and goods across our borders.

As an aside, I would just mention that I've had the opportunity, with many members from all sides of the House, to work with Americans in the states that border Ontario; in fact, states in the Midwest and eastern US in general.

I had the opportunity about this time last year to be in Washington, DC, with a senator from Indiana who was a co-chair of an international committee of the Midwest conference of American state legislators. We had the opportunity to visit senior officials of homeland security and discuss WHTI with them at that point and how we would deal with it, just to get their views on where they were in the implementation. Later, the next day, we also had the opportunity to talk to people at the state department. There is a tremendous willingness in the US, especially along the border, as the minister said, to find acceptable alternatives. But when we were at homeland security, one of the interesting things, to me anyway, was that the next day people from homeland security were coming to Ontario to see if our driver's licences were secure—how we actually issued them, the actual technical way we produced driver's licences in Ontario. They came and they found that to be acceptable. At the time, it was the very next day they were coming here to Ontario to do that. So we were working very hard on both sides of the border to make sure that we do have secure borders, but we also allow people and goods to move across the borders in a particularly efficient way.

I am the son of a customs officer at Sarnia who later was the manager of customs at Sarnia, so I know something about borders. I remember that in the early days—like most people who grew up along the border, we had family on both sides of the border—you could cross the border in a totally different way. I think the Speaker would know that; he's from near a border too. We all have people who move across the borders on a regular basis. In those friendlier times it was so much easier. But the world has changed, and we have to find methods of making sure that we can meet the realities of the world we live in. I think this particular legislation—

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Was that before the Blue Water Bridge?

Mr. Michael A. Brown: No, it wasn't before the Blue Water Bridge. I thank the member for Timmins—James Bay.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I remember when they built it; I was there.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: In 1936; right. I digress.

Anyway, as I was saying, it was a different time. Now we need to find a document that works. I think that with the will of all members of the House we will find that solution. I'm looking forward to an interesting debate on second reading. There are certainly privacy concerns that need to be addressed. There are issues that will be raised that are obviously legitimate. I look forward to working with the members of the House to find a solution that is good for Ontario and good for Canada.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Questions and comments?

Mr. John Yakabuski: I'm pleased to respond to the minister and his parliamentary assistant on Bill 85, the Photo Card Act. I commend the government for finally moving forward with this initiative. It's something that people have been looking for since 9/11, to remove some of the awkwardness that people encounter when crossing our common border with the United States. The minister said a couple of things in his address yesterday about this being part of promoting a strong economy and that "Each year, millions of US citizens visit Ontario, pumping hundreds of millions of dollars into our ... economy." Further on he said, "This is about promoting tourism and working with our neighbours." I want to touch on that because the Minister of Transportation is a former Minister of Tourism.

I think that this government missed a great opportunity when our party—our leader, John Tory, and Tim Hudak, our finance critic—

Mr. John O'Toole: Ted Arnott.

Mr. John Yakabuski: —and Ted Arnott, our tourism critic—made some significant and specific proposals that would have enhanced our economy this summer from the point of view of tourism. This card is supposed to be all about tourism. Why aren't they adopting, or at least looking at, some of the changes that we have proposed, some of the initiatives, some of the enhancements, some of the attractions and promotion things that we had put forward, specific things with regards to tax exemptions for hotel rooms and attractions and stuff like that that would help bring more tourism dollars to Ontario? The studies are showing that we're suffering in that regard.

While this card is important—and, again, I commend the minister for finally moving on this; it's something we've been hoping for for some time, because people on both sides of the border have demanded it and expected it—they should be looking closely at what our party proposed with regard to promoting tourism in Ontario, and the dollars and the help to the economy that would mean. This card could be part of it, but don't forget, when the opposition proposes something, you can't just dismiss it out of hand.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I appreciate the comments that were made by both the minister and the parliamentary assistant. I thought it was a good summation of where we're at and where we're from. I'm going to get a chance in a few minutes to start the lead for the New Democratic Party and I want to talk a little bit about how we got here, what we're doing and where we're going. I'll get a chance to talk to that a little bit later.

A question to the parliamentary assistant or the minister, whoever wants to respond: One of the things that was not mentioned in the debate is how much this is going to cost from the perspective of the citizen. We know, for example, that we're now going to have three types of photo IDs. We're going to have the basic one for anybody over 12 who needs a photo ID as a means of identification. If the person happens to be a citizen, he or she will be able to get the enhanced, which is basically the photo ID with the civic information on it, that you're a Canadian citizen. Then there is the combined one that has a driver's licence. For many people, this photo ID will be the only acceptable means of identification with a photo on it, and we want to make sure that we don't make the cost so exorbitant that it becomes an issue. For example, I'm a young 13- or 14-year-old or I'm somebody on a fixed income and I happen to live in Sarnia. I need that photo ID to get in the car and travel across with whom-ever, whenever we go across the border. Is the cost going to be so high that it will prevent people from getting it? So one of the questions I want a response to is, what do we expect the cost will be for the purchase of the various types of photo ID?

The other question I have—and I'm going to talk about this a little bit later in debate—is the issue of accessibility to these new super driver's licences, as I like to call them. I understand there's going to be a bit of a pilot—not a pilot, but it's going to be rolled out in various communities differently. I would just say, if you're living in Sault Ste. Marie or Timmins or wherever, are you going to have the same access to the application for those enhanced driver licences for the purpose of travel? If I can get a response to that, I'd appreciate it. Thank you.

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: First of all, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Transportation and his parliamentary assistant for introducing this extremely important piece of legislation. I want to quickly talk about the aspect dealing with photo identification for those Ontarians who do not have a driver's licence. In the last few months, I have heard from many of my constituents in Ottawa Centre who have indicated that they do not drive, for various reasons—some are senior citizens, some have certain disabilities. This has put them in a peculiar position: They do not have a driver's licence, thus they do not have a valid photo ID, which is needed in many instances.

Recently, I received a letter from a constituent who highlighted several circumstances where a driver's licence is extremely important, and I just want to read those circumstances. She states:

"Without a driver's licence, it is difficult to:

"—board an airplane for domestic travel;

"—obtain or update an Ontario health card ... ;

“—obtain and update a library card;
“—open and close a bank account, apply for a mortgage...;
“—act as executor of a will and power of attorney;
“—obtain a marriage licence;
“—register children at local schools;
“—register for courses at local community centres;
“—borrow special equipment at events for disabled patrons.”

These are some of the very key things in our daily lives that we need, and this particular legislation will allow those individuals who do not drive to get an enhanced photo ID card which then can be used, as we use our driver's licence, to ensure that they continue to lead and live a normal life. So I'm extremely excited that this particular piece of legislation is being introduced.

Once again, congratulations to the Minister of Transportation and his parliamentary assistant for taking this step. It is definitely going to help many individuals in my constituency of Ottawa Centre by giving them a proper piece of photo ID in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Ted Arnott: I'm pleased to have this opportunity to respond to the Minister of Transportation and his parliamentary assistant in their opening presentation on second reading of Bill 85. As we know, this bill was just introduced yesterday, so members have not had a great deal of opportunity to review its contents or consult with stakeholders. Our party has indicated support for this bill, and I'm sure that it's not going to have to receive extensive second and third reading debate, but there are important points that have to be raised.

When I got my Canadian passport a couple of years ago, my recollection is that I paid $75 for it, if I'm not mistaken, and it was for five years. I don't think the minister or the parliamentary assistant has indicated to the House this morning how much this new, enhanced photo card is going to cost. If it's going to be effective, it will have to be much less expensive than that. I wonder if it's going to be the same cost as a driver's licence. It's $60 or $70, if I'm not mistaken, for a three-year driver's licence and I expect that is based on the administration cost. So I think that is an important point that needs to be clarified in this debate.

I also want to put this in perspective in terms of the tourism industry, because the minister has made reference to how this will, in his mind, benefit tourism. The minister is a former Minister of Tourism, of course, and while Minister of Tourism he advocated for this, so he is obviously following through now that he is in a position to do so as Minister of Transportation. But the fact is, the western hemisphere travel initiative has been a challenge for our tourism industry in Ontario because the American tourists we hope to attract to Ontario need the passport to get back home. That's where the confusion lies, unfortunately, and, of course, if this bill were to pass and if the government does create this new, enhanced photo ID card for Ontario residents, it doesn't directly solve that problem that we have in tourism. To some degree, I suppose, we can encourage the American states to follow our lead, but let's keep this in perspective. This doesn't help tourism today as much as we would perhaps be led to believe by the government.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): A response? The member for Algoma-Manitoulin and parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I want to thank the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, the member for Timmins-James Bay, the member for Ottawa Centre and the member for Wellington-Halton Hills. I appreciate the constructive comments that have been made by the members.

As we move forward in this debate, I think it's extremely important and one that the government clearly hopes all members will be able to support at the end of the day. I recognize the concern about the cost that has been raised by at least two of the members, and I want to tell them that the government believes this to be in the $35 to $40 range for five years. A $35 or $40 charge to the consumer that would be, I guess, amortized over five years, so to speak, is hopefully something that can be absorbed by most Ontarians. I think that's a consideration. We should know, though, that for minors, that is, people under 16—I'm not sure of that number; I can check—there isn't a requirement that they have one of these anyway. The Americans have seen fit to allow young people travelling not to need this under certain circumstances. So, for young people, that shouldn't be a burden.

I think you have to recognize that we are working with other provincial jurisdictions, with American states and with the federal governments of both Canada and the US to find a document that is affordable, easily transportable—i.e., a driver's licence, so it's in your wallet anyway for most people—and that can be used to facilitate easy passage across the border.

I take your comments, though, under advisement and I appreciate the tone of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate?

Mr. Gilles Bisson: First of all, I want to thank the Conservative and Liberal Parties for allowing me to go a little bit out of rotation here. Tomorrow would have been my normal day for the lead speech for the New Democratic Party, but seeing that another bill is in committee and I have to be there at the same time, I appreciate the co-operation in the House.

I want to say up front, because I want people to understand clearly where we are at as a party, that we are going to support this legislation. I think it needs to go to committee. There are a few concerns that have to be addressed and we probably can do that at committee. But I want to say up front that the New Democratic Party will be supporting this.

I want to talk a little bit about the context, about how we got here. This is probably the only debate where I have had a chance to actually speak out on this since 9/11. Unfortunately, we had that tragic day where the people in the twin towers and the people on the plane in Pennsylvania and the people at the Pentagon were killed as a result of terrorist attacks. Clearly I am not saying for two seconds that was a good thing. It was a terrible thing, it was a tragedy. People shouldn't have to die in that way, specifically because people are unhappy about what's going on in the world, the current events and what's happening politically. You would hope that in this day and age we are civil enough that we can figure out more peaceful ways of dealing with a lot of these issues.

In fact, the American election is going to be about that to a certain degree because you have the view of Senator Obama, who is saying, "I think it's important that we talk to all people in order to open dialogue with other leaders about issues that may be sticky." For example, he talks about talking to North Korea. On the other hand, you have Mr. McCain, the presumptive nominee for the Republicans, who is saying, "No, you shouldn't do that." Clearly, the United States is going through this debate about it being better to throw bombs or talk to people. I think I'll leave the American people to decide which way they want to go, but I know, as a Canadian citizen, we have a long history in Canada, and certainly in Europe, of diplomacy always being a better way of approaching these things.

It relates to this bill, and this is why I want to talk about this. After the tragedy of 9/11, President Bush needed to do something to retaliate and to be seen as doing something against the tragedies of the twin towers, and I understand that. He's an American citizen, his citizens were murdered, and he is the President of the United States and had to be seen as doing something. One of the things that he did was create the homeland security organization, and some of the steps they have taken since then have gone counter to the essence of a democratic society.

We, in North America, have been quite lucky. We've talked for years about Canada and the United States sharing the longest undefended border in the world. It is nothing for a Canadian or an American to cross from one side of the border to the other and goods and services to move from one side of the border to the other. Even though we are two sovereign and independent nations, the United States and Canada, we understand we have shared goals. We have an economy that is part of the North American economy and we need to do business as each other. By and large, we don't see each other as enemies; we see each other as friends. Oh yes, there is always the rivalry between the hockey clubs and the baseball clubs and even some people's political views, vis-à-vis left and right, Canada being seen as a little bit more left and the United States being seen as probably far more right than we would like, as far as right-wing politics.

What this has done, in my view, this whole debate about needing to increase security in the United States to protect ourselves from a possible terrorist attack, is fly in the face of what democratic society is all about and to require that citizens of those democracies, in Canada and now the United States, go through some added layers of scrutiny as far as exercising our rights as citizens in a democratic society.

I remember, and some of you would remember when you were younger, watching the 1950s, early 1960s TV shows where they used to depict the Soviet Union as a country where everybody carries a gun. Remember that? They'd be at the airports, and you'd see the security guys carrying the guns at the Soviet airports or somewhere in one of the eastern nations. The police were very present and there seemed to be a sense that there was paranoia on the part of the state about people's ability to move freely within their society.

I remember thinking back then, "Boy, that's really an overreaction." As a kid, I thought, "That's silly. That's not the way things should be. We should be able to move and come and go as we please as citizens. We're not a threat to our society. We are the society." Right? I would look at these 1950ish, 1960ish Cold War type TV shows or movies, where they were really showing the paranoia of the Soviet Union and how restricted in moving freely citizens had become within their own state, because the eye of government was everywhere watching them. I thought, "Never are you going to see that in North America. Lord! We're a democratic society."

Well, I fear since 9/11 and since homeland security and the term of President Bush, we haven't gone maybe as far as the Soviets had, but certainly we're moving in the direction of the state having greater and greater control on the people's liberty to move within their own nation and the freedoms that they enjoy as far as expression etc. We've seen, for example, both in Canada and the United States, legislation that was introduced that limits a person's right to a trial. We have people who have been incarcerated in Canada for longer than would be normally allowed under the law, without any specific charges being laid, without any ability to defend themselves. Regarding the United States and what's happening in Guantanamo Bay—there may be legitimate terrorists there. I don't know. The point is that our society is built on the premise that everybody has a right to a trial, that you're innocent until proven guilty. That credo is especially true in the United States. What I've seen since 9/11 is that we've become much more restricting of the rights of individuals, and that troubles me greatly.

I don't for one second say that there aren't acts of terrorism happening in the world and that governments shouldn't do things to protect themselves and expose and try to deal with those acts of terrorism before they happen. Quite the contrary: I think the state has a responsibility. But when you take that responsibility and move to restrict your citizens, I think you might have crossed over the line.

I'm not accusing the Liberal government and the minister of having pandered to the Americans. We find ourselves living next to a very, very large neighbour. As Tommy Douglas said, the relationship between Canadians and Americans is akin to a mouse sleeping in bed with an elephant. The mouse always has one eye open because it's worried the elephant might turn over.

That's a bit where we're at between Canada and the United States. Homeland security has decided that Canadian citizens will not be allowed into their country unless we have some means of identifying that these people are true Canadians and don't pose a threat to the United States. We're standing there on the other side of the border, shaking our heads, saying, "Listen, we've been your neighbour since our countries were born"—the United States in 1776, and Canada in 1867. We don't have a long history of lobbing bombs at each other and harbouring terrorists. Those things happen within the United States, as they can happen outside of the United States.

I would propose, despite this legislation and most other things that homeland security has done, that the United States is no safer than it was pre-homeland security measures, because if you're a terrorist and you want to take an act of terrorism to the soil of the United States, it ain't going to be a photo ID from Ontario that's going to stop you. I don't like that, but that's the reality.

Again, I'm not speaking against this legislation. I'm just speaking to the point that we might have thrown the baby out with the bathwater, especially the Americans and our federal government to a degree. We're stepping into very dangerous waters when we start restricting people's rights within a democratic society to freely assemble and travel and to speak and to act out according to what they want, within the confines of our Constitution. Our Constitution says people have the right to assemble, our Constitution says people have the right to expression, and our Constitution says people have the right to a trial. Where are we since 9/11? Much of that, especially in the United States and to some degree in Canada, has been somewhat limited.

I just wanted to start the debate by speaking to that a little bit.

Again, I don't accuse the government of anything. They didn't cause this issue. This is an issue where the President of the United States created homeland security, and they had to find something to do. They felt that somehow or other terrorists were coming in from Canada and that we were some sort of a threat, so they had to shut down the borders in some way. But I really think this is an overreaction.

The issue is, if they want to deal with the issue of terrorism, maybe they should start changing their foreign policy. My, that would be refreshing. Rather than sending in bombs and aircraft carriers and the Fifth Fleet as a response to political problems in other parts of the world, maybe the United States should try some diplomatic approaches.

If we take a look at the history of Europe, Great Britain used to be much what the United States is today. Great Britain, prior to the First World War, was the superpower of the day, and those Brits learned something over the years. They learned that, yes, they had a large navy and, yes, they had a large military, but they suffered lots of losses as a result of wars that they had with various nations. The Brits learned after a while, especially after the First World War, that diplomatic mechanisms were better for resolving some of these things than trying to resolve things militarily. If you take a look at what happened after the First and Second World Wars, the Europeans took quite a different approach in the sense that they changed their foreign policy, not to make it reactionary but to try to be a little bit more proactive in dealing with some of these issues. Unfortunately, the Americans still need to learn that lesson. It's going to be interesting in this fall's presidential election because that debate should be prevalent, considering that Obama seems to have won the nomination for the Democrats and certainly Mr. McCain has for the Republicans, and they both represent a different view on this issue.

I just wanted to start off the debate by talking about how it's sad that we have to pass this kind of legislation. I don't fault the Ontario government for doing it. If I were in government, I would have to do it as well. So I'm not for one second saying that the McGuinty government is kowtowing to the George Bush administration. The reality is that we live next to the Americans and we've got to figure out how to work with them. They have laws that say that they want this. We need to figure out how to make it as non-intrusive as possible to our citizens, and that's what this legislation does: It tries to find a bit of a balance—where not everybody has got to run out for a passport—to having some means of identification that allows us to continue to travel to and from the United States with the least amount of trouble as possible. So, enough said about that. I just wanted to put that on the record because I think how we got here needs to be said.

As for the legislation—oh boy, where do I start? Probably the best place to start is to talk a little bit about what the legislation does, for those members who may not have had a chance to read the act—I did so last night—and the people who might be watching. The legislation is not a bad piece of legislation. I think there are a few things that we're going to need to take a look at at committee. Basically, what we're doing is we're creating a photo ID type of identification, tied to a driver's licence or others, to give people easier access to crossing the borders.

There are three photo IDs that you're going to be able to get under this legislation. You're going to have the basic identification, which is where a person aged 12 and over can walk into a Ministry of Transportation office and say, "I want photo ID." Currently, there are not a lot of ways of getting photo ID other than a health card, and a health card is not always accepted everywhere. So if you don't have a driver's licence and you need photo ID to do some of the things such as were talked about by the member from Ottawa—and you need photo ID for applications for everything nowadays, for credit etc.—this will be a way for people to get that.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: The LCBO.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: The LCBO is a good example. You need photo ID when you're 19 years of age.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: They card you all the time.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I got carded at the airport one day, and I thought it was ridiculous. A 50-year-old guy goes to the airport to buy a beer and he gets carded. I thought, boy, this is wonderful. I said to the guy, "Do I look that young?" He said, "No. We card everybody." Anyway, that's a whole other story. I thought it was a compliment; it turns out he was carding everybody who came in.

Anyway, my point is that Michael Prue, our member from Beaches–East York, has raised this issue a number of times. I know he had sent letters to the Minister of Transportation on this particular issue and advocated, along with other members in this House, to basically create a photo ID through the Ministry of Transportation so that people who do not have driver's licences would have an ability to apply for a photo ID that they can use for identification. That's the first part that this bill does: It creates a basic photo ID card that has your picture, says where you live, who you are and identifies you. So if you need to apply for a library card or buy a bottle of scotch or whatever it might be, you've got a photo ID in the event that you need one for application for whatever.

The second piece of information, the second type of ID coming out, is what's called the enhanced ID. That is for Canadian citizens who don't have a driver's licence or don't want a driver's licence and want to have a photo ID with their citizenship within the card. I believe that that card would not only allow them to use the ID within Canada, as far as the regular stuff—you know, going into the LCBO etc.—but it would also allow them to cross the border. In other words, I am the passenger in the car, I'm the passenger on the tour bus or I'm flying from city A to city B, from Canada to the United States. I would be able to use that, even though I don't have a driver's licence.

I think that's well thought through, because we need to recognize that it's not just people who drive cars who have the need to travel into the United States. On this point—having the enhanced card—I give the ministry credit for having thought that one through, because that was one of the things that concerned me at the beginning. I had some discussions with people about it. As Mr. Bradley said, I'm not going to take credit for it. I'm sure other people thought about this before me, but good. We've said it's not just drivers who need to travel into the United States, it's also citizens who don't have driver's licences.

The other thing is the combined card, which is basically that the person who does have a valid driver's permit will get photo ID and citizenship information on the card and get their driver's licence all in one, so that you can cross into the United States using your driver's licence. Rather than having a passport, a driver's licence, a health card and whatever else, you can just use your enhanced driver's licence, I guess I would call it.

I want to say that the reason we're doing this is because the government understands, as the opposition does, that the Americans have made a decision by way of homeland security, and we need to move towards trying to find some way to make it easier for the citizens of Ontario to travel to and from the United States without having to go through the bother and the pain of applying for a passport. Hopefully this legislation, once passed, if passed, will give Ontario citizens that right. That's still to be determined to a certain extent, because the United States, being who they are and the way they operate, have not completely endorsed this, but at least we're moving forward with a few of the American states on this particular issue.

That brings me to a couple of concerns I have about the logistics of all of this. The first thing, and the parliamentary assistant spoke to it a little bit, is the issue of cost. Many people need to apply for the photo ID because it's the only means they have to identify themselves. The question I asked earlier of the parliamentary assistant was, "How much is this going to cost the individual?" I think the parliamentary assistant said it was between $35 and $40. For most people, that's probably not a big thing. For some more than others, it will be, especially if you're a younger person who is still at school. You have a number of high school students who are over 16 who may have need of this card. For example, they may travel with their parents into the United States. I suppose mom and dad can pay, but it's still an issue of cost to a certain degree. The only point I would make is that I'll be interested in hearing at committee from the people who come to present on this issue. Do they think that's a reasonable number? On the surface it might be, but is it? The question becomes, once we get to committee, should there be a sliding scale for rates with regard to how much you pay for these cards? For example, if you're a student, should you have to pay the same rate as an adult? There needs to be recognition that the person doesn't only have substantial expenses as a student—especially if they're in college or university, as far as loans they may need to get to school—but they don't have the income. So should we have a bit of a sliding scale on the fees you have to pay in order to get this card, this photo ID, or the enhanced ID or the combined ID? Should we have a different rate?

What about children under the age of 16? Yes, they don't need to have this enhanced ID to travel into the United States, because they're going to exempt kids under the age of 16, but there are a lot of people—13, 14, 12, whatever it might be—who are going to need this type of ID for very basic things that we do within our own communities. Again, is $35 to $40 reasonable to them? I ask the pages: You guys are in grade 7 or 8. How easy is it to come up with 40 bucks? Pretty tough. You had better hope mom and dad have the money. Again, I want to hear at committee, do we need to have a different rate for children under the age of 16? They are citizens as well. Just because they happen to be under voting age and under 16 years of age, they have to interact within our society. Many of them need ID for all kinds of different reasons; not necessarily for travel into the United States, but for basic applications for things they may need themselves, such as a library card, or identification to get into some events. Often photo ID is required. So should we have a different rate for kids under the age of 16?

When this bill goes to committee, I want to see if we're actually going to have those concerns raised: cost of the card for kids under the age of 16 and cost of the card for young people, especially if they're students. Should there be a different rate, and is the rate of $35 to $40 reasonable? I imagine it's going to be more for the driver's licence, I take it. I just assume that, because—

Interjection.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: The member from the government side is saying it's going to be the same for a driver's licence. I take it what that means is I will be able to renew my licence every five years. Well, that's not a bad thing, then. For me, I'm okay with that. It saves me the bother of having to do it every, I think, two years.

1010

Mr. Michael A. Brown: Five.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Is it five? Okay, I thought it was every two. What do I know? It goes to show you can be in this place a long time and sometimes get it wrong.

For myself as a person who makes a very good salary, $35 to $40 is not an issue, but it might be for others.

The other issue in regards to the logistics of this thing is the whole issue of access, to be able to get the card. I didn't hear a response from the parliamentary assistant to the minister on that issue. The question is this: As I understand it, the minister was telling me that as we move toward this, should this legislation pass, there are going to be areas where these cards will be issued fairly soon. You need to put a whole mechanism in place in order to be able to do this. You have to have access to the federal database so that you can identify the person as a citizen. Obviously, you need some sort of change to the computer systems that we have at the Ministry of Transportation of some type; I don't know.

Second of all, you're going to need the ability to have the photo taken. I understand there's also in this legislation, as I read through it—I forget which section; if I had my glasses, I would know, because I marked it off here—section 6, photo comparison technology. This is actually a good thing, and I'll talk about that a little bit later, where a picture is taken of the individual who does the application.

It is not only put just on the driver's licence or the basic card, but it's also utilized in order to identify the person in the future. If the person comes back for re-application of a licence under another name, for example, they would compare the photos and they would know that this face belongs to Gilles Bisson. So I can't go in and apply for a driver's licence as John Doe and use that other ID for fraudulent reasons. I'll come to that a little bit later.

But my point is, does the ministry currently have the capacity to absorb the applications that are going to come forward from citizens in Ontario wanting to get this card? For example, where I come from in Timmins, as everywhere else, we have people who travel into the United States on a regular basis. Some of them are going to want to get this particular card, this combined driver's licence. So the question becomes, will I be able to apply at an MTO office anywhere in Ontario to get one of these cards, and will I be able to get it reasonably quick?

I understand that they're going to be doing this in regions closer to the border first. That's how it's going to basically unfold. So if these cards are available, one of the things that I think we need to talk about and look at in committee again is, does the ministry have the capacity to roll this out? Do we have the capacity staff-wise? Do we have the capacity technology-wise to roll this out?

I see the parliamentary assistant is nodding yes. I would remind you, though, and you're going to know what I'm talking about—

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Oh, you're agreeing. I thought you were saying, "Yes." Okay, I hear you.

But all of us know because we've gone through this fiasco for about a year over passports. When homeland security and the American administration changed the rules so that you needed a passport to enter the United States, our offices were swamped with passport applications. I happen to be in a joint office with my federal member, Charlie Angus, so we got them all. We got the ones who went to the provincial member and the ones that went to the federal member wanting to get passports.

Interjection.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Well, there were the birth certificates but I'm not going to get there.

Mr. Mike Colle: And the birth certificates.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Yeah, I know; I understand that.

But my point was that the federal government did not have the capacity to deal with the onslaught of passport applications. So people were coming into our offices, applying for passports and having to wait, in some cases, three and four months to get their passport, when they had planned a trip two months ahead. People were jumping this high as they were coming into our offices and saying, "What gives here? I've got a trip to Aruba in January. I applied for my passport in October. I should have got it by now. I don't have anything back. I will not be able to travel."

Our offices—I'd imagine it was the same with your offices—had to intercede with the post office, with the people who do the courier services, with the passport office. Their MP liaison in Ottawa—my God, their offices were swamped with calls, all because, when the federal government in the United States said, "You have to have a passport to come into the United States," the Canadian government, being Stephen Harper, did like that little bobble in the back of the car and said, "Yes, Mr. Bush. Everything you say, I will do." Anyway, that's my making fun of Stephen Harper. I'm obviously not a big fan.

Interjection.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: No, I'm a big fan of Jack Layton. You've got that right. Jack Layton should be the Prime Minister of Canada. I think he'd make a great Prime Minister. I'll tell you: We'd be far better off under a New Democratic government federally. I agree with the Liberal member for Oriole—whatever the riding is. Is it Oriole?

Hon. David Caplan: Don Valley East.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: It used to be Oriole.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: See—I go back a ways.

Anyway, I only say that the federal government did not have the capacity to deal with the increased applications for passports. As a result, Canadian citizens were put off because they couldn't get their passports in time. I'll tell you, we worked hard in our offices—Charlie Angus and myself, and our staff especially—at tracking people's passports. I remember instances of having to call the post office on a Sunday to get them to open, because we figured out by the tracking number that the darned passport had arrived on Saturday night and was sitting in the post office, and people were travelling at 6 o'clock in the morning on Monday. So it was like a horror story, all because the federal government did not have the capacity to deal with the increased applications.

All I'm saying is: If this legislation passes at third reading and gets royal assent and Ontario citizens know that they can get these photo ID cards, I could well imagine that there is going to be an onslaught of applications. There are many people in Ontario who travel to the United States, and they're going to say, "Okay, let me see if I've got this figured out. Forty bucks for a combined driver's licence"—how much is it for a passport now?

Mr. Khalil Ramal: It's $75.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I thought it was more than that. It's over $100, I thought. But even if it's $75, my point is that the citizen is going to say, "Apply for a passport to travel to the United States at $75 or get my enhanced or combined driver's licence for forty bucks." The choice is going to be pretty simple.

I'm saying here today in the House—and remember: This is recorded in Hansard—the ministry had better have the capacity to deal with the onslaught of applications, because we will end up where the federal government ended up when it came to the passports. So on the issue of capacity, we need to do that.

The second issue is that we need to make sure that every MTO office that issues drivers' licences across this province has the capacity to deliver. I don't pretend for one second to believe I understand everything that has to happen logistically to make this happen, but they're going to need more staff. They're going to need the ability to take these enhanced photos that—what do they call it again? I always have to look at what it's called. It's called photo comparison technology. We're going to need equipment to make that happen. We're going to have to have our databases changed in some way etc. I hope we don't end up in a situation where border communities have it available today and everybody else has to wait till later, because I can tell you that people in Barrie, Timmins, Sudbury and other places aren't going to be too happy, as the member for Algoma-Manitoulin well knows, and being an advocate for people in northern Ontario, he has some sympathy for what I have to say. So we need to make sure we have the capacity to issue.

The other thing I want to talk about before I get into a few other things is that I have been raising in this House the issue of the individual in Kingston who, unfortunately, drove a vehicle when he was impaired and, as a result of that, four people were killed. The man was charged with manslaughter and went to jail for a period of time. The sad story is that once the person was released from jail, he walked into a Ministry of Transportation office and, depending on the version, either because the ministry or the court made a mistake or the guy fraudulently changed his date of birth—God knows which one it is; everybody has a different version—the person was issued a brand new driver's licence and went back behind the wheel and started to drive. The problem we have is that the person was caught solely because he was pulled over for a driving infraction, for an offence of some type. When the police ran his licence number through the CPIC database, which is the federal RCMP database that's tied to everything, they caught this guy as a suspended driver, because he had been impaired and had a lifetime ban. Here's the interesting part: The same person walked into a Ministry of Transportation office, and that wasn't flagged.

That's pretty scary. It's pretty scary that you can walk into a Ministry of Transportation office, and either because of an error by them or because you fraudulently changed your first name—and that's easy to do. All you've got to do is go to the ORG, apply for a name change, have your name changed from John Doe to George Doe and you're a new person because the ministry database looks at the person's first and last names as the criteria when they do the search string.

One of the issues I've been raising in this House is that we need to enhance the way the Ontario database works so that those fraudulent applications for drivers' licences by people who either (a) were suspended or (b) are trying to get a driver's licence illegally can be caught. This legislation might give us an opportunity to deal with some of that. For example, this whole photo comparison technology I think is something that would have caught this particular case because a picture would have been taken of this individual in Kingston, whose picture would have been on file, and if he went in and applied as John Doe versus Randy Smith, he would have been caught because the identification would have been done through the picture.

The other thing we need to look at in the MTO database—there has to be some discussion. Listen, parliamentary assistant to the minister, this is simple. All right? You guys at MTO need to pick up the phone and call the RCMP. That's the federal police. You need to talk about how you're able to put a flag between your two databases because what happens is, if there's an offence that you're charged with and you lose your driver's licence—because it's a charge—it ends up in the CPIC database.

Because it's either a provincial offence or it's a criminal offence, it ends in the CPIC database. Any time you're charged with a provincial offence or a criminal offence, it ends up in the CPIC database, and all we need is a flag between those two databases. The MTO database has to flag the RCMP CPIC database to say, "This person's in the CPIC database," and that should then provoke a manual search on the part of the agent who is issuing the licence to find out why that is.

Now, we don't want to merge those two databases together because of privacy issues. There's far more information in the RCMP CPIC database than I want the MTO getting their hands on. Quite frankly, those are issues of privacy. But certainly, you have to have a flag, and if we had a flag between the RCMP CPIC database and the MTO database, if a person goes in who has been charged criminally or under a provincial offence and applies for a driver's licence, that would be automatically flagged by the MTO office. If there was a ban on the driver's licence, we would know right away because the clerk would say, "Hold it a second. I've got to find out what's going on." They would make an inquiry in regard to why it is that person has been flagged. The question would be, "Has this person's licence been revoked, yes or no?" That's all we need to know. I don't know what the person needs to be charged with. It might be a criminal offence; that's none of my business. But the CPIC people can say, "No, the person does not have a revoked driver's licence." "Fine, we can reissue." End of story.

It would be a very simple thing to do. So I really encourage the provincial government, under the leadership of Mr. Bradley and Mr. Brown, to contact their federal counterparts to talk about how we're able to flag the CPIC database back to the provincial MTO database. That would catch it and we would know for sure at that point between what's in this bill and what could be put into this bill when it comes to security and what happens with the CPIC database. We know that we would not have a repeat of what happened in Kingston.

I end this particular issue by just saying this: The minister, the other day, in response to my question, said, "Oh, well, you know, this was like a one-off. This was a one-in-a-million kind of thing." I'm sorry. There are a lot of people out there who have drivers' licences who shouldn't have them. Let's not kid ourselves.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Don't mention my name.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: No, I will not mention the member's name.

It is not that hard to go out and get another driver's licence. We know, for example, that there are people who get drivers' licences illegally, and we've seen it through some of these issuing offices that we have out there now that have been privatized. Basically, for a fee, you can bypass the process and get yourself a driver's licence. That person may not be a safe driver. We have a system in Ontario where we want people to go through a process to make sure they're safe behind the wheel. In the case of persons being banned or having their drivers' licences revoked for whatever reason, it's not all that difficult to get another one, as we learned through this case in Kingston. All it took was a different year of birth on the person's application, and so be it. I just say we need to make sure that we fix this, and there are two ways of doing: part of it in this legislation and the other part of it in the flag between the CPIC database and this one.

I want to talk about a few of the privacy issues. It comes back to what I was talking about earlier in regard to our friend Mr. Bush, the President of the United States for the next seven or eight months. I said earlier it's unfortunate that the United States has become much more restrictive when it comes to what its citizens can and can't do since 9/11. We understand the tragedy of 9/11, and I don't diminish that for one second. That was a tragedy. It was clearly an act of terrorism and should not be condoned. That's not my point. But as a reaction to it, we have limited people's rights within the United States, and in Canada to a certain degree.

One of the problems with this legislation is this whole radio frequency identification technology. I understand why they want to put it on the enhanced card or the combined card so that when you're driving up to the border you would be able to go through a little bit quicker. The problem is that this stuff doesn't turn off. It has a range of probably hundreds of feet, but the signal that comes off the card is always on. You cannot turn it off. What happens if a store or individuals are able to figure out how to tap into that frequency? There's a legitimate privacy concern. I'm not saying this is going to happen, but let's put forward a couple of scenarios. Wal-Mart decides that they've figured out how to track people by tapping into this frequency. That's a lot of information: "How many times do people come back into our stores? What time are they coming in?"—all of that kind of information. I'm not saying Wal-Mart would do it, but I'm using them because they're the biggest target. They're the biggest general store, so why not pick on them? I'm not going to pick on ma and pa in downtown Timmins, right? That wouldn't be fair. My point is, you could end up in a situation where somebody figures out how to tap into these frequencies and is able to track what individual citizens are doing in all kinds of ways that we don't want to have happen.

I think when we go to committee—and I don't want this bill to rush through committee. We need to have this bill in committee this summer, to give some people a chance to think about this so that we're able to look at this issue as to how we can make sure that if this RFID technology is used, which is these signals within the cards—the idea is that you would have a driver's licence that would have a chip in it and then the chip would basically alert the border patrol that you're coming and let you through a little bit quicker. But can that technology be used by others for what it was not intended to do?

We can all stand here in the House and say that will never happen, but we know there are all kinds of unscrupulous people in our society. Certainly to God, I'm not for utilizing that technology for bad reasons, and I don't think anybody in this House is. So I say we need to make sure that we are able to look at that issue a little bit closer at committee. I look forward to having experts come before us and talk about that particular part of it.

The other thing is the information that MTO will be collecting, because they're not just going to be doing what they do now. When I go to the MTO office and apply for my driver's licence, they get my name, my middle name, my last name, my date of birth and my address. There is going to be a little bit more information than that on the cards, obviously citizenship information. We need to make sure that the databases are secure. Again, I don't know if they will or will not be. I'm not saying they're not, but I think we need to ask the question. It's a very legitimate question to ask the ministry as it comes before a committee: "What steps have you taken to make sure that the additional information we're now going to be getting is made secure?" We remember what happened in the FRO under the Conservatives. Do you remember that one, where they closed the Family Responsibility Office in Sudbury and everybody else's regional offices, and they took all that information and put it in boxes inside a building in Downsview? There was a lot of information that was unsecured. This stuff was out there for people to see: court records as far as how much a person had to pay, what the conditions of visitation were. All that information was there. Anybody could have grabbed that.

I want to make sure when we're in committee that we ask the ministry, "What steps are you taking to make sure that the information you currently have and the information you will be getting is made secure so that within the ministry there are proper safeguards for this information not to be leaked or not to be viewed by other people who shouldn't be seeing it?" Clearly, we need to do that.

On the last part of the security—I just stopped there because I remembered—it would be good to get the privacy commissioner to come before our committee. We should be asking the privacy commissioner, quite frankly, to look at this legislation—we should be making that request through the committee—and for her to come back and to tell us what she thinks. That's what the privacy commissioner does, and she has the staff to be able to do that.

If we're going to be providing this type of card and technology to the province, I think we as legislators need to do everything we can to make sure that we protect the privacy of individuals. I see the parliamentary assistant is agreeing with me.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I am.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Yes, I see you're agreeing, and other members. I look forward to that happening, and we need to make sure that we hear from the privacy commissioner in order to make that happen.

I just want to end on this particular point, and that's the role of committee. Sometimes—and we don't do this for the wrong reasons—we think we understand our legislation far more than we do, if you know what I mean, as parliamentary assistant, critic or minister. I read the legislation, as the member did, and I think I somewhat understood it. But who knows, right? There may be something I misread. Often what happens is that we hurry the stuff through the committee process.

For example, we got Bill 41, the speed limiters legislation, going to committee tomorrow. You will know, as parliamentary assistant—you're getting the same e-mails as me: "How come I didn't get a chance to present? The cut-off date was Tuesday for presentations" etc. So often what ends up happening is that by the time the public hears a bill is coming, and they decide to apply to committee to come and have their say, they end up being barred out because the process has been truncated and sped up.

All I'm saying to the minister and the parliamentary assistant in this case is that this is legislation that I don't think we should be hurrying up too much. I don't have a problem with passing it. It'll be fine to get second reading this spring and get it into committee for the summer. We may or may not need a lot of committee time, but what we do need is an adequate amount of time to let Ontarians know that this legislation is coming, to reach out to people who know more about security and privacy issues than we do, so that they're able to come before our committee and give us their best advice about how we make this bill work in the way we intend it to.

I tell you now, as a member of the New Democratic Party and the critic for transportation, we're not going to hold this up at third reading; we don't have any intention of doing that. And we have no intention of holding this up in committee. But we need sufficient time to give people notice. We may only need one or two days of committee time. I don't know; it'll depend on the requests. But I don't want to be in a position, as we were with the Bill 41, the speed limiters bill, where people feel that they didn't get enough time to make application to present to committee. So on this legislation, I think we need to be able to do that.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: That's some nerve on your part.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: The reality is, I wasn't available Friday for the subcommittee meeting. I understand that.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: What about the other times?

Mr. Gilles Bisson: The first request I had was last Friday, just so you know. That was the first request.

So the point—the regional deal on Bill 41, as I understood it as the whip—was that Bill 41 was actually going to travel in the summer. That was the original deal as I understood it, so this was not even on our radar screen. So a lot of people are feeling a little bit left out.

I'm just saying, let's not repeat that with this bill. I want to put it clearly on the record, as the critic for the New Democratic Party, that this bill should have adequate time for the public to be notified. People should get adequate time for notification for when this bill will be in committee. A day or a week is not going to be enough. We need to make sure that this thing is posted. We need to reach out to the privacy commissioner and others to let them know that we need them to come out and to give us some learned advice about what this bill can and can't do and what we should change, and then bring the bill back for third reading this spring.

With that, I want to thank you. That's all the time I need in this debate. I look forward to the questions and comments.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Questions and comments?

Mr. Lou Rinaldi: I'll just take a minute or so to make some comments on the statement by my neighbour here from James Bay.

I want to say up front that I think he's very sincere in his debate. I think the questions that he raises are, in part, legitimate. I'm delighted to see that, in general, we are in agreement that this has to be done. It's things like this that arise from time to time through a change in world conditions, I guess, if one must say.

I think both the minister and the parliamentary assistant have acknowledged that it's going to go to committee and there'll be that opportunity for the public to give that input. Not just on this particular issue, but on many other issues it's very important that information comes from the ground up, because those are the folks who are going to be lining up, whether it's at the liquor store or a border crossing, or even when they go to register for college or university and they don't have a driver's licence—some of the challenges that I know my office hears about sometimes regarding not having proper identification. Right now, even for those minor incidents where identification is needed when people go to those offices, they don't know if they have the right type of identification that could put them through, and normally that leaves a lot of frustration.

So I'm delighted we're moving forward on this. Is it going to fix all the problems? Probably not, but I think we're all heading in the right direction. I'm delighted to support the comments that were made and also to try to move this ahead as quickly as we can.

Mrs. Julia Munro: In the brief moment that I have, I just want to suggest that, to me, the issue is the balance of the issues around privacy and the challenges of security. I think that it's incumbent upon the government to use the best and the newest technology at their disposal to be able to provide a secure system, and that's why there's a general recognition of the need for the government to go forward in this. But I also would agree with the previous speaker about the importance of making sure we have it right, that we are not creating a system that puts people's privacy at risk. It is through the process of public comment and public hearings that we are able to understand some of the challenges that a bill such as this provides.

I think the most important thing to keep in mind is that at the end of the day this has to meet the test of confidence at the border. It has to be something that in fact does what it says it will do in a way that is cost-effective.

We recognize the importance of that balance of privacy, the security of our records and also the broader issue of security for our borders. I think that making sure those things are guaranteed by this legislation is really the essence of the debate here.

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde: Ça me fait plaisir de participer à ce projet de loi tellement attendu par les Ontariens et Ontariennes. Ce projet de loi permettra l'obtention de deux différentes cartes, tout d'abord le permis de conduire avec une photo ainsi que les renseignements nécessaires. Le gouvernement McGuinty propose la mise en circulation d'un permis de conduire spécial plastifié, sur lequel figureront des renseignements sur la citoyenneté. Ce permis de conduire spécial deviendra un document de voyage acceptable, un substitut de passeport, pour se rendre aux États-Unis par voie terrestre ou maritime. Oui, nous savons que, actuellement, selon l'information reçue, à compter du 1<sup>er</sup> juin 2009, toutes personnes n'ayant pas un passeport ou une carte telle que proposée par le gouvernement McGuinty ne pourront pas se rendre aux États-Unis par voie terrestre ou maritime. Actuellement, nous savons que par la voie des airs, il est obligatoire d'avoir un passeport. Cette carte sera vendue au coût de 40 $. Si une personne doit obtenir un passeport, le coût actuel régulier est de 85 $, et je crois qu'il y a une augmentation.

Mais l'important de ce projet de loi est l'obtention d'une carte d'identité pour une personne n'ayant pas de permis de conduire. Nous savons depuis longtemps que l'ombudsman de l'Ontario a fait des recommandations au ministère des Transports demandant à ce que le gouvernement McGuinty se penche sur cette demande faite par les aveugles, par exemple, et aussi par les étudiants et étudiantes de l'Ontario n'ayant pas de permis de conduire. Mais cette carte sera à la disposition de tous les Ontariens et Ontariennes qui n'ont pas de permis de conduire, et ils pourront l'obtenir afin de se rendre plus facilement aux États-Unis.

Mr. John O'Toole: I am very pleased to respond to the member from Timmins-James Bay. As has been indicated, I believe this side of the House, the opposition party, is in support of Bill 85.

That being said, you look at the bill here. A couple of points have been made. I just recently had to renew my driver's licence, and today's driver's licence was $74 for one year, $148 for two years. So I know that.

I'm wondering now, with this new ID attached to a driver's licence, how much it's going to be. I'm a little bit worried, without too much accountability and openness here. The Minister of Transportation and the Minister of Finance just love to get your hand in your pocket. Before we concede complete agreement on this—because it is the right thing to do—how much is it going to cost? Every time they do something over there, it costs more.

The economy right now is troubling. In fact, this doesn't solve, as the minister said, some of the problems of the transborder issues. Americans coming in here won't have one of these cards and they'll have to have a passport to get back, under the rules. So American tourism will not, as has been suggested, actually be improved. Tourism is extremely important as we enter this season.

Mr. Tory and our party came up with a plan, which was to remove the retail sales tax on Ontario hotels and attractions for the summer months. We have a plan here that would have stimulated tourism this summer. Perhaps it's separate from this Bill 85, which is a bill that really allows the Minister of Transportation and the McGuinty government to issue one of three types of identifications. We have no idea what it's going to cost to set it up, how much it's going to cost for the consumer to purchase. And is it really going to provide any real support for tourism?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): The member for Timmins–James Bay, you have two minutes to respond.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I appreciate the comments made by the various members who actually supported most of what I had to say. I will only repeat that I think the important part of this thing is that we need to make sure that privacy issues are dealt with so that the information that MTO has on these new driver's licences or photo IDs is not misused. I think we need to make sure that we have the privacy commissioner come before our committee in order to deal with this, so that we can have the expert advice of her office about how we make sure that we safeguard the information and how we utilize these new cards in the future.

I guess the last point is that we need to really make sure that we have time in committee to deal with this. Again, I want to be real clear to the minister and the parliamentary assistant. I'm not asking for extensive public hearings on this. What I'm saying is that we need to post it out there so that people can see it, so they have sufficient time to be able to figure out that this is coming, that we be somewhat proactive in our approach—that we reach out to some people as a committee who we think might be interested in this issue, and then basically allow them to decide if they want, or not, to present to committee.

We may in the end only need a day. We may only need two or three. I don't know. I just want to make sure that we get this right, as we move forward. As I said earlier, it's unfortunate that we need this type of identification in Ontario. The Americans have basically forced this on us, so we have no choice but to deal with it. Nonetheless, if we're going to do it, let's make sure, as humanly as we possibly can, that we get the legislation right and that we make sure that citizens' right to privacy is protected so that it's not misused in any way.

With that, I want to thank you for this time in debate and I look forward to the time we'll have on committee for this particular legislation.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for debate is adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd like to take this opportunity to welcome some guests here to the chamber today.

On behalf of the member from Lambton–Kent–Middlesex and on behalf of page Chris Jefferies: I'd like to welcome Andrew Jefferies, his father, Rosanna Jefferies, his mother, Daniel Jefferies, Alexandra Jefferies, Donnajean Jefferies, Jim Jefferies, Tony Basacco and Lena Basacco.

On behalf of page Ellen Tomaino: Sitting in the gallery today are her mother Julie, her father Mike, her sister Heike, brother Jay, brother Willi, grandmother Faith Tomaino, grandfather Peter Tomaino, her aunt Christine Walker, cousins Sarah Walker and Matt Walker and cousin David Petriw.

As well, on behalf of page Murray Fallis: His mother Wendy McQuaig and his grandmother Lois Fallis are in the west members' gallery.

On behalf of the member for Mississauga–Erindale, I'd like to welcome to the House today the grade 5 class from Edenrose Public School in Mississauga. They are visiting the Legislature today.

As well, a belated anniversary yesterday to the class of 1999, of which I am a member, elected nine years ago. To all those members who arrived nine years ago yesterday, congratulations.

MEMBER'S BIRTHDAY

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): On behalf of all members of the House, I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate the member for Burlington, Joyce Savoline, on her birthday today. Happy Birthday.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: My question is to the Premier. It has to do with what is clearly an economic crisis bearing down on our province. The first quarter of this year saw Canada's economy shrink, primarily because of the difficulties this province is facing. The massive job losses we've seen in the auto industry just in the last few weeks tell us that the situation is escalating. As a first step towards what we believe should be happening in terms of the tabling of a mini-budget before we rise for the summer, are you prepared to direct your House leader to work with opposition House leaders to schedule an emergency debate on the state of the economy at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: It would seem to me that every question period, every opportunity we have with the media and during the course of various debates in this Legislature, we have an opportunity and indeed a responibility to talk about the economy. I'm pleased to engage in this right now.

One of the things I want Ontarians to understand is that there is a profound difference in terms of our approach when it comes to growing this economy and their approach. They believe that for every complex problem there's a neat and tidy solution. That is not the case when it comes to the economy. You cannot simply cut taxes and expect that that's going to generate economic growth. They didn't close that GM car plant in Mexico yesterday because of high corporate taxes. They didn't close it because they thought that the labour costs were too high. The world is a little more complex, and it's high time that my Conservative friends come to grips with it. You need to do more than just cut corporate taxes.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: It's regrettable that the Premier continues to use this kind of platform for political rhetoric and to attack the opposition parties rather than try to find some way of approaching this in a united and constructive way. He stands up here day after day and attacks the opposition for raising very legitimate concerns. His rhetoric is small comfort to the families in Windsor and Oshawa and elsewhere throughout this province who are losing their jobs under his watch and under his policies. What we're suggesting here today is an opportunity to discuss this, give everyone in this place an opportunity to have input, move forward, bring in new policies, new approaches. We want to work with you in a constructive way to address the real challenges of this province. Why won't you do that?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: If that were so, then you would think that at the House leaders' meeting, which just concluded a few moments ago, the representative for the Conservative Party might have raised this very issue. That was not the case. Instead, they chose to do that within the context of a highly charged question period. I understand that's their right to do so, but I think it undermines their credibility in this particular regard.

Here's the real issue, and we need to expose this to the light of day: They want to cut taxes in the province of Ontario by $5 billion. That is not going to help businesses that are struggling today. They are not paying corporate taxes today because they are struggling—certain parts of the sector. Furthermore, they're not prepared to acknowledge that cutting $5 billion out of our revenues means cuts to our schools, cuts to our hospitals, cuts to the programs that protect the most vulnerable, and cuts to protections for our environment. They're not prepared to acknowledge that. I am, and I won't go there.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: This is another repeat performance, and a disappointing one, to say the least, especially for people who are losing jobs across this province and the communities and families who are being impacted by those job losses and plant closures.

The Premier tries to suggest that we're only approaching this from one perspective. My colleague from Oshawa, Mr. Ouellette, stood in this House yesterday and offered a number of positive alternatives to look at in terms of addressing the ongoing and long-term challenges in the auto sector in Ontario. Once again, you showed utter disdain for proposals and real opportunities to move forward here in a co-operative way.

We're asking you once again to involve this assembly. Show that it means something to you, that the people in this place have a role to play. Let us have input, and based on that input, bring in a mini-budget and we'll address these problems going into the future in Ontario.

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Here's another fundamental difference between our government and the opposition: We believe that one of the most important things we can do in this period of our economic history—while we can't guarantee jobs for all Ontarians that will be there in perpetuity, what we can do is work as hard as we can to guarantee the employability of our people. That's why we've lent such a strong focus to education. That's why, in our recent budget, we committed $1.5 billion to further enhancing training opportunities. That's why tomorrow, in fact, I'll be announcing some of the specific details about our second-career strategy.

We believe it's really important to help people who have lost their jobs to get long-term training opportunities, something that has not been available not just here in Ontario, but anywhere else in the country. They voted against that provision. Again, they would rather cut taxes and allow people to flounder on their own. We think we've got a responsibility to help and we will continue to do just that.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: As you can well imagine, families in Oshawa are devastated about how the closures are going to impact them. Workers are rightly out there demonstrating their displeasure with the agreements to try to make changes there. And it's not going to end there. I would let the members know that the internal documents I am in possession of talk about the St. Catharines powertrain plant and what's going to happen there.

Yesterday, Premier, the questioning was to try and find out the details of the funding agreements on the transfer of funds. It was supposedly based on employment. Is that employment based on internal employment or external employment? And how is it going to be in the plant or outside the plant? First, we heard it was a grant; then it was a loan; then it was a 50-year loan; then a 30-year loan; and then $100 million and $175 million. Premier, can you let us in on what the actual funding agreement is?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I will allow the Minister of Economic Development and Trade to speak to some of the details to this.

Let me just say this at the outset, and I know the member opposite understands this: We have been working hard with a variety of auto manufacturers. They have demanded of us—and we think this is perfectly reasonable from their perspective—that we treat the individual agreements with some commercial sensitivity. The folks at Toyota don't want their arrangement known to the folks at Ford, the folks at Ford don't want their arrangement known to the folks at GM, and then Honda as well. So we intend to respect that.

I can say, though—and this is the fundamental difference; I want to draw the line once again—that we believe it's important on the part of our government to sit down with CAW workers, auto workers and auto manufacturers in the province of Ontario, and to enter into a competition with the US to ensure that we land new investment. What we need to know on the part of the Conservatives is whether they continue to support our being in competition with the US, our working with the CAW and our working with our manufacturers to ensure that we land more new investment to create more new jobs for Ontario workers.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Supplementary?

Mrs. Christine Elliott: The General Motors truck plant closing is going to have a devastating effect on Oshawa, and in fact on all of the communities in Durham region. In addition to the workers who are going to be laid off, there's going to be a huge spin-off effect, which is going to relate to other businesses relating to the auto industry, as well as the hospitality industry. These are real people with families to feed and mortgages to pay.

But there is something that the Premier can do. There are going to be up to $35 million in penalties that are to be paid by General Motors pursuant to your agreement with them. Will you commit today to directly reinvesting those funds back into our communities?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it's important to note that the Premier reported yesterday that coming very soon is taking that step with our new skills development program. When that party that is asking a question today was asked to vote whether they were interested in assisting people who need to be retrained for new jobs, that party in opposition was opposed to that and voted against it.

What is really important today is that the community of Oshawa—they are hurting today. We are worried about those families and we want those families working. This government will continue to do everything it can to help GM succeed. We know that these are challenging times for GM today. We know that we want more investment in the future. For these members today, I ask them, will they stand up for GM? Because we will have opportunities again with this company. We want to be there for GM and we're going to count on—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. The member for Durham.

Mr. John O'Toole: My question is also to the Premier. Everyone in the region of Durham, in fact, those associated with the auto sector, know there's a serious challenge. There's a real challenge for you, Premier, a real opportunity for you, to show compassion and leadership. In fact, our opposition leader, Mr. Runciman, has said today that we should have a discussion on this. It's such an important question. Let's not just politicize it. What I'm asking you to do today is, do you have a plan to bring together the CAW, Chris Buckley, as well as the president of General Motors in Canada, and provide a forum and some leadership to find a solution, not just for General Motors but for the families, the employees, and for the province of Ontario? Do you have a plan to bring them together to find a solution, or is this just going to be more political finger-pointing?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think we do have to be clear that today we are thinking about the families in Oshawa that are affected by the General Motors announcement. Our first concern is for the workers on the line at the truck plant in Oshawa. When we call Buzz Hargrove and say, "What can we do?" Buzz Hargrove tells us that we have to help land new investments.

So when these members opposite stand to ask the question of us, I ask the question of them, will you be there to support General Motors when they need help the most? When we want to support those families through our new retraining programs for workers who are being laid off, will you support those initiatives? Those will be key.

Let me say too that there are challenges and there are successes: yesterday's Ford announcement and yesterday's Honda announcement. We—

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Premier: Yesterday's announcement that General Motors is permanently closing its truck plant in Oshawa is simply tragic. It's tragic because the workers there have won literally dozens of awards for productivity and for excellence. It's tragic because 2,600 of those workers are now being shown the street. It's tragic because the McGuinty government, with much boasting and chest-thumping, gave General Motors $235 million without getting any job guarantees for the workers.

My question is this: Why did the McGuinty government let down thousands of Oshawa workers when you gave General Motors $235 million and obviously didn't get any job guarantees?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I always appreciate the question. I think it's worth listening to what Buzz Hargrove had to say about this issue. He said:

"In contrast to the federal government's inaction, the Ontario government has been doing its best to support auto investment and employment.... Without provincial support (including its participation in GM's Beacon project), the situation facing the industry today would be far, far worse."

I can't tell from one day to the next where the NDP stands on this issue. They say they are in favour of supports for the auto sector, but when there is some kind of setback, when they closed a plant in Mexico, two in the US and one in Ontario, they say we should never have offered assistance in the first place.

We are not backing away from making difficult decisions to find new opportunities to support the auto workers in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The Premier is mistaken: It's the Premier who thinks you can give $235 million to General Motors and you don't have to worry about job guarantees for workers. I say if you're going to give $235 million to General Motors, you'd better get some job guarantees or it's a bad deal.

But it's not just that. The McGuinty government changes its story just about every day. When this deal was first announced, General Motors workers and other auto workers were told that it was going to guarantee their jobs across Ontario—thousands of jobs. What do we find now? No job guarantees. When it was first announced, we were told, "This is an investment. This is a grant." Now that it doesn't look so good, suddenly the Premier says, "Oh, it's only a loan."

Premier, here's the end question: Do you think it's a good deal that General Motors—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Premier?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: GM itself has admitted that it may very well just have put itself in breach of the agreement which we entered into. They have specifically acknowledged that.

I understand from my good friend opposite that he believes that the only thing we need to do is cut corporate taxes. He needs to get in touch with the Mexican workers at the plant in Mexico and speak to them about that, because they think they've got the lowest corporate taxes on this side of the world. He also thinks that the issue here is labour costs, that the people at CAW are getting paid too much. Again, he needs to get in touch with the Mexican workers to find out about their position on that particular score.

The fact of the matter is, we have entered into a number of agreements. There were some job guarantees associated with that. There are going to be some financial consequences that will flow from that. We will not become reluctant to continue to compete on behalf of the auto worker in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The Premier seems to spend a lot of time talking about what may or may not happen in Mexico. I think the Premier should get in touch with what's happening to workers here in Ontario who are losing their jobs by the thousands under the McGuinty government.

But I want to get an answer to the question. In my view, a deal that gives General Motors $235 million of the people's money and then allows General Motors to lay off thousands of workers is a bad deal. My simple question: Does the Premier still think it was a good deal for workers at General Motors and Ontario?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: If I've got to make a choice, I'm with the Canadian Auto Workers, I'm with Buzz

Hargrove and I'm with the families who are supported by those jobs.

My friend the leader of the NDP might not like to acknowledge this, but the competition out there is pretty tough. There was a US southern state that came to the table in connection with a potential Kia investment and put down $1 billion. At the end of the day, we cannot win if it comes down to money alone. Fortunately, we have quality and productivity on our side; we have public health care on our side; we have good infrastructure on our side; we have cultural, relentless innovation on our side; and we have, perhaps best of all, a government on the side of Canadian auto workers, their families and this industry in our province.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Premier: The Premier wants to pretend that he's on the side of workers, but General Motors not only has taken advantage of the McGuinty government and $235 million of public money, but they signed a collective agreement a couple of weeks ago saying they weren't going to do this. So if the Premier is on the side of the workers, what is the Premier going to do to force General Motors to live by the terms of the collective agreement they signed?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: The leader of the NDP well understands that there is a very important relationship to be found between the two parties to this agreement. I know they are going to pursue some difficult conversations at this point in time. But rather than insinuate myself into that process, what I want both sides to know, what I've told Buzz Hargrove, what I've told CAW workers individually, what I've told the president of GM North America, what I've told the presidents of Ford and Daimler, with my visit to Fiat, with Honda and Toyota—I've told them all we are prepared to sit down and work as hard as we can to land new investment in the province of Ontario. Rather than insinuate myself into a difficult situation between the CAW and GM at this time, what Ontario taxpayers need to know is that we're going to find a way to bring both sides together to ensure there is a bright and promising future for the auto sector and auto sector jobs in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: Premier, the workers in Oshawa have heard all those words before and they know all too well how empty those words are. They know what they heard only three years ago, that giving General Motors $235 million was going to guarantee their jobs and thousands of other GM jobs. It turns out that promise was completely false.

Premier, it comes down to this: General Motors has got $235 million of the public's money; workers are out the door. General Motors made a commitment to the auto workers that they were going to sustain jobs. They made that commitment just two weeks ago. The auto workers want to know what you are going to do about both of those things, or don't you care, really, about their jobs, when it comes right down to it?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: It's becoming more and more obvious to me that the leader of the NDP has not had real contact with any CAW workers of late, because when I've had that contact with them, one of the things they seek continual reassurance on is that we will continue to fight for the auto sector in Ontario, that we will continue to do everything we can to land new investment. Of course, we regret the fact that so many workers have lost jobs, but the fact of the matter is that we continue to do better than any other jurisdiction in North America.

Something that was overlooked yesterday was the announcement of a new product coming out of the Ford plant. Something that was overlooked yesterday was a new announcement for a Honda parts plant. Around the corner, we've got a new Toyota assembly plant that will begin work on a full-time basis. There is some room for some real optimism. I think the last thing we need to do right now is to somehow pull back and decide that we can't participate in these kinds of ventures, because what auto workers are looking for us to do is to show—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Premier. Final supplementary.

Mr. Howard Hampton: Premier, what workers across this province want is a government that's actually prepared to stand up to GM, rather than simply doling out the money and watching them lay off workers.

I was in Oshawa just a week and a half ago. I was at a workers' action centre talking with workers who have already lost their jobs, who are looking at the prospect of losing their homes, who don't have another job to go to. They know that the 2,600 jobs that are going to go at the truck plant will mean another 10,000 jobs in terms of parts. They hear all your promises. They see all your photo ops. They see all your empty announcements. What they want to know is, when is the Premier of Ontario going to stand up to General Motors and start standing up for workers who are losing their jobs?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: The fact of the matter is, we are clawing back money from GM. There's no dispute in that regard, none whatsoever.

What I should tell my colleague, as a matter of interest, is that at the Ford announcement yesterday they launched a new product in Ontario and took on 500 new workers in that regard. There was a reporter—

Mr. Howard Hampton: This would be the muscle car.

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Now my colleague says that he's against the new product. That's why I said at the outset, it's hard to figure out from one day to the next, from one question to the next—is he suggesting that we should pull that product off the assembly line and put those workers out of work?

I want auto workers to know, there's only one party in this Legislature which is firmly in their corner. We'll do everything we need to do to make sure that we land new investment with this party and this government.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

Mr. Norm Miller: My question is for the Premier. Premier, a few weeks ago, I asked if your government would honour your agreement with forestry partners to provide for a long-term regulation under the Endangered Species Act which would recognize forest management plans. You indicated that your government was turning its back on forestry partners and your previous commitment and would not honour its word. Since then, the Ontario Forestry Industry Association has been working on a new stewardship agreement, and they have had a legal opinion that indicates the act would allow such an agreement.

My question is this: Will you agree to negotiate a stewardship agreement in the interests of ensuring that northern communities don't become an endangered species?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Natural Resources.

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: I'm pleased to be able to respond. First and foremost, we must take credit for having the Endangered Species Act, which is in fact the most significant act in North America for the protection of species at risk.

The Premier was very clear in his letter to the forest industry that we would in fact integrate the Endangered Species Act into the forest management plans. I have said that repeatedly. So what we're able to do—we have 46 of those plans, soon to be 47—is sit down with the industry over the next year and do exactly that. We've been working with the industry. It's not difficult. They have a good track record. They already deal with 21 of those endangered species, and we look to build on what has already been an excellent track record. So we find that this is consistent with the approach we've been taking, and I'm looking forward to working with the forest industry.

Mr. Norm Miller: I guess that's why the Ontario Forestry Coalition has made the trek down here from northern Ontario to have a press conference today. They are so happy with the way things are going.

More than 230,000 jobs are at stake here. We just can't afford to lose these jobs. This province has attained a world-renowned platinum standard for excellence in forestry, and we've seen the results. Case studies prove that our current forestry practices co-exist with efforts to support endangered species. We've seen increases in caribou, red-shouldered hawks and bald eagles, yet you continue to work against the industry instead of with it.

Northern communities, First Nations, and working people need your commitment, your word that you will try to reach a compromise instead of handing out ultimatums. Will you promise to continue discussions and work for an agreement?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: Of course we'll continue discussions. I've already had them at the table a couple of times. I've encouraged them to come back to work with us to develop the policy and the regulations as we work through how to deal with this.

We have wonderful companies such as Tembec that are more than pleased with the opportunity to have a year with which to continue to work—

Mr. Gilles Bisson: They're pleased?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: They are pleased, and are prepared to publicly say they are pleased—this is the owner and president of Tembec. They are prepared and willing to work with us and come to the table over the next year.

I don't see why this is difficult. What we're saying is, we want to protect species at risk. We have companies that are prepared to do that. We have standards that we know they can meet, and we've got a year within which to do it.

I think, in fact, the fearmongering that's going on is not justified. The best way to solve a problem is to sit down, talk it out and deal with it.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. This government's auto job strategy is in shambles. The sector is being driven into the ground by poor government decisions, and the minister knows it. It's not just the Big Three that are hurting. In the minister's hometown, we're seeing the trickle-down effect: 30 jobs at Falcon Tool and Die—gone; and another 30 jobs at Peterson Spring of Canada. How many more auto and auto-related jobs have to leave this province before this minister and her government admit that they have failed and their auto job strategy is wrong?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it's important to note that our auto investment strategy has led companies to make investments for where cars and trucks, vehicles, are going to be in the next 20 years, allowing our companies to shift on a dime, changing with consumer changes. That really is the impetus of our funding to these companies.

We should use Ford Oakville as a very good example. Yesterday, they launched their new Flex. That is a new model that they could put in on a flex line made possible by the Ontario government and by support from the federal government. That is why we saw an ad for the hiring of 500 jobs at the Oakville plant. I'd like this member to stand up and say that that is a failure.

Mr. Paul Miller: This member would be glad to stand up. The minister talks and talks and talks, but there's no substance. I wonder if these are the same lines she's feeding the hard-working folks in Windsor. They deserve much better.

New Democrats have put forward numerous constructive proposals to stem the loss of jobs and to provide workers and their families a safety net when layoffs are unavoidable. This government, that minister, has rejected every one of them. Why is she turning her back on Ontarians and her own constituents?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it's fair to say that every single member in this House should be concerned about any job loss that occurs in our sector, in particular a challenging sector like the automotive sector. Every one of us should worry about the workers in Windsor, the workers in Hamilton and any community that is suffering job loss.

But that's why this government brings forward the kinds of policies that we do, like the area of skills training, like the second-career program that we're going to hear more about in detail this very week. We expect every member of the House to support initiatives that can move workers who are losing jobs on one plant floor into a whole new career where there are jobs available. We want members of the House to support those workers.

We want to see support from the Conservatives and the NDP. Alas, every time they've had an opportunity to support these budgets that have these initiatives, they voted against those proposals. That's what the people of Windsor—

FOREST FIREFIGHTING

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources. This spring, we have seen how natural occurrences, such as flooding, can have the effect of devastating property and displacing people from their homes. Similarly, the fire season in Ontario also has the potential of causing great damage.

With a rapid transition from winter to summer-like conditions, it is important to be prepared. Would the minister tell us what plans and resources her ministry has put in place to deal with the potential wildfires this spring and summer?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: I'd like to assure the member and the members of this House that we're well prepared for the fire season. As a matter of fact, this year we have just under 100 fires; it was about 350 this time last year. We have, without a doubt, within the MNR, one of the most world-renowned groups of people, who are constantly asked, as a matter of fact, to go out and share their expertise.

A good example of that was what happened during the flooding this year. The greatest strength that MNR has rests within the people it has. This year, we evacuated over 2,500 folks from Port Albany, Attawapiskat and Kashechewan. Now those folks are back home; the evacuees are back home. It gives me an opportunity to say thank you to Stratford, for example, a host community, but also to say thank you to the MNR folks for all of the work that they provided in ensuring that these people were safe during the flood season.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: It is important to be prepared to deal with potential wildfires, but we should do our best to prevent them from starting in the first place. Fluctuating weather patterns and lightning account for approximately 50% of wildfires. However, obviously, human activity is responsible for the other 50%. In other words, people are responsible for the fires.

This is an important issue for all Ontarians who live, work and play in rural areas. We should all be mindful of the potential hazards that could cause fires, particularly at this time of year. Can the minister elaborate on the types of things that people can do to prevent fires and protect their cottages and homes?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: The member is correct: Prevention is the first and foremost way to go. But I need to assure everyone that we have 700 professionally trained firefighters at MNR and over 160 private crews that we can bring on when we need them. We need to know that they have put together strategies that enable people to work within their needs for wildfires.

For example, we have two that we've put out: the FireSmart home assessment test and the FireSmart owners manual. We've also extended our physical bases. We've put in over 700 new satellite phones to ensure that our crews are very safe, and we've also extended our contracts so that the crews are coming in earlier and they're staying later to deal with forest fires. But the most important thing we can do is just think, because prevention is first and foremost when it comes to forest fires in this province.

ROAD SAFETY

Mr. Frank Klees: To the Minister of Transportation: Nauman Nusrat pleaded guilty to criminal negligence causing death by street racing. The death he caused was that of a 48-year-old husband and father, David Virgoe. His wife, Debbie, and two of his three children, son Brad and daughter Bobbi, were in court yesterday to hear that the man responsible for the death of their father and husband would serve two years less a day under house arrest and a lifetime driving ban. He can attend classes from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. during the week, he gets to go shopping for four hours on Saturday and do whatever he needs to do to practise his religion on Sunday.

After all the effort by this Legislature to put in place laws that are intended to carry serious consequences for the mindless and criminal act of street racing, does the minister agree that this sentence undermines his efforts and those of this Legislature to send a strong message that street racing will not be condoned in this province?

Hon. James J. Bradley: What I can say to the member is that, most certainly, all members of this House approved in this Legislature measures which are among the strongest you'll find in North America against street racing. I can say that it was our hope—I know it was your hope, it was the hope of members in the New Democratic Party and the hope of the government—that this would have a major deterrent effect on those who decided they were going to violate the laws of Ontario through street racing; that is, going 50 kilometres an hour or more over the limit and engaging in acts which endanger the public. That was the purpose of this legislation, and I think all of us were hopeful that that legislation would have an impact on all who saw that legislation and how it could be applied.

Mr. Frank Klees: We either believe that there should be serious consequences for those who take the lives of innocent people on our streets or we don't. We can continue to churn out legislation here, we can continue to make pronouncements regarding that legislation and we can continue to do our part as legislators to send that message, but if they're not supported by our justice system and if the consequences of that legislation are not supported by our judges and by the system, then we're wasting our time here.

I would ask this: Will the minister introduce legislation—if the courts are not prepared to do it—to supplement the legislation that we have passed here with minimum sentencing so that those consequences will in fact be realized by the people who are breaking the law and taking the lives of innocent people on our roads and highways?

Hon. James J. Bradley: I will allow the Attorney General to answer the second portion of the question.

Hon. Christopher Bentley: As the member opposite should know, the charge was prosecuted under the Criminal Code, which is federal legislation. Crown attorneys throughout the province take such acts very seriously and prosecute them to the full extent of the law, reflecting the will of this Legislature and the Parliament of Canada. The crown in this particular case asked for a sentence more stringent and different than the trial judge imposed.

The trial judge is an independent officer who makes an independent decision. This case is now within the appeal period. We're awaiting the report of the trial crown, and we will take a look at whether that trial report and the law support an appeal, but we will take these very seriously, as we did here and we do in all cases. We will continue to—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. The member from Parkdale–High Park.

AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: My question is for the Minister of Housing. Mr. Speaker, your report from Statistics Canada indicates that there is a housing affordability crisis in Toronto. Toronto residents now spend more of their income on housing than any other place in Canada. There are 70,000 households in Toronto waiting for affordable housing, yet today we read that over 1,400 affordable housing units sit empty in Toronto because of lack of funding support from the Ontario government for repairs. Minister, what action will your government take to address this unacceptable waste of housing resources?

Hon. Jim Watson: I too read the article, and I am obviously concerned when I see several housing units and apartments—upwards of perhaps 1,400—that are not inhabitable. It was one of the reasons the Premier announced a $100-million renovation and rehabilitation fund, for the simple reason that we recognize that the aging housing stock has caused difficulties with Toronto housing, with Ottawa housing, with housing providers across the province.

Toronto's share of that money is $36.5 million, and we're proud to partner with the city of Toronto. We ask them to ensure that that money goes to good use to ensure that those units that are uninhabitable now get fixed up so that families can move in.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: The Minister of Housing doesn't, of course, admit that not one new dollar in the budget was allocated for social housing new bills, and the $100 million that was allocated is for all of Ontario. Save Our Structures has demanded $300 million for Toronto alone.

So I'm going to ask again: When will this government stop the rhetoric and take serious action to reduce and eliminate the growing list of over 120,000 households waiting for affordable housing in this province?

Hon. Jim Watson: It's interesting that the member referenced Save Our Structures, because in the last election the leader of the NDP brought forward a platform and promised $30 million to repair the backlog of social housing. What did the McGuinty government deliver? Thirty-six million dollars to Toronto.

The second point is that the money is new. It was a new announcement, new dollars flowing to the municipal sector, and when we did announce $100 million for housing, what did the NDP housing critic call it? A "meagre" $100 million.

Maybe in the circles that that member travels, $100 million is meagre, but in my circles that's a lot of money. It's a record amount of money in housing rehabilitation. We're proud of the record. We call on the federal government to come to the table when their funding expires on March 31 of next year.

ROAD SAFETY

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: My question today is for the Minister of Transportation. Yesterday, in my own riding of Oakville, I attended an event to kick off Roadcheck 2008. I spent a few hours at the truck inspection station on the QEW, working with some extremely professional men and women from MTO. They were looking at brakes, tires, steering, frames—all the parts of a truck that should be inspected on a regular basis—all enabling them to ensure the safety of the travelling public on our highways.

I understand this is the 21st year of Roadcheck. It's the 20th year that Ontario has been a participant. I'm hoping the minister will share with this House the reason why the province participates in this year after year.

Hon. James J. Bradley: I want to thank the member for asking an excellent question. Roadcheck, as you would know, is an international, annual three-day truck and motor coach safety blitz involving Canada, the US and Mexico.

It allows us to monitor the effectiveness of ministry enforcement programs, increase awareness of commercial vehicle safety issues and remove unsafe vehicles from the highways. Ministry enforcement officers inspect the mechanical condition of the vehicles, driver qualifications and daily logs. Ontario inspects more vehicles than any other Canadian province and most US states. Ontario's 82% compliance rate in 2007 continues the trend of improvements since 1995, when only 57% of the vehicles inspected were deemed to be mechanically fit.

Today is the second day of Roadcheck 2008. I look forward to receiving those results when they are complete. They will assist us in any changes we have to make in terms of enforcement, regulation or legislation.

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: I'm sure we're all pleased to hear that Ontario is still a leader in the Roadcheck safety blitz. Obviously, we'd all encourage that to continue.

The minister mentioned an 81.9% compliance rate in 2007. That's an increase from a rate of only 57% compliance in 1995. That's a significant improvement. But I've also heard of blitzes where there have been much higher rates of non-compliance. That's a concern for my constituents and for all Ontarians who share the roads with commercial vehicles. I'm hoping that the Minister of Transportation can please explain to the House some of the findings of the more significant rates of non-compliance.

Hon. James J. Bradley: Ontario, as the member would know, is a leader in truck safety standards and enforcement. Each year, 140,000 commercial driver and vehicle inspections are conducted by MTO's team of highly trained enforcement officers. We will see varying compliance rates resulting from these blitzes, because there are different types of safety blitzes that take place throughout the province each year.

For example, Roadcheck 2008 has a random blitz, where MTO enforcement officers will pull over a random selection of commercial vehicles to inspect. The second type of safety blitz, as seen recently in York region, is a targeted blitz, where enforcement officers use their skills to identify vehicles they feel are of a safety concern. It is only these vehicles that are pulled over to be inspected, possibly leading to a higher non-compliance rate.

Ontario is a major transportation corridor for commercial vehicles and we will continue to conduct safety blitzes and raise the awareness of commercial vehicle—

SUBVENTIONS DESTINÉES À L'ÉDUCATION

EDUCATION FUNDING

M. Peter Shurman: J'ai une question pour la ministre des Affaires francophones. Il me semble que chaque fois que la ministre parle dans cette Chambre, elle est très claire et forte au sujet de la promotion de la langue française. Alors, c'était une surprise pour beaucoup d'Ontariens de découvrir que l'argent fédéral désigné spécifiquement pour cet effort serait éliminé pour les écoles privées, excepté plusieurs écoles secondaires. Est-ce que la ministre peut confirmer à la Législature qu'elle va maintenant renoncer à sa position forte concernant la langue française, ou est-ce qu'elle peut nous informer d'une nouvelle politique du gouvernement McGuinty créée pour détruire complètement ces écoles privées par n'importe quel moyen ?

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: I'll ask the Minister of Education to answer that question.

The issue is that this money for French-language education has been administered by the federal government up until now, and it has now been given to us to administer. The reality is that we believe that it is irresponsible of us to allocate money to schools that we do not inspect, over which we have no control, so the money is only going to schools in the private sector that we inspect. So in fact, there are secondary schools that will receive funding, because we do inspect those schools, but private schools that we do not inspect will not receive this funding.

Mr. Peter Shurman: I too will switch to English, because I think all members should get the full brunt of this. Perhaps the minister can confirm that the McGuinty government considers private schools to now be second-class following last fall's election. It's true that Ontarians voted not to fund private schools, but they did not vote to abandon them, either. And they did not vote, nor can they vote, to eliminate federal funds earmarked to teach Ontario's children the French language. This is money directly from Ottawa.

Can the minister assure this House that she will call for a review immediately with a view to reinstituting the former policy of funding the teaching of French to each and every pupil in Ontario, so long as Ottawa provides the funds to do so?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: On this side of the House, it is our intention to build the most vibrant publicly funded education system in the world. As a part of that, it is our responsibility to make sure that money that flows to the private system, if it is administered by our government, flows to schools where there is some possibility for accountability. In the private schools that we inspect, that issue Ontario secondary school diplomas and credits in our secondary system, then we flow the money to those schools. But where there is no accountability mechanism, then it would be irresponsible of us to flow that money. Our goal is to have the publicly funded education system the system of first choice for every family in this province.

YOUTH SERVICES

Ms. Andrea Horwath: My question is for the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Where is the minister's plan, and what is her timetable for a full public consultation with youth regarding changes she proposes for the Child and Family Services Act, as well as the Ontario youth justice system?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I have to tell you that the member opposite raises a very important issue, and that is the issue of consultation with youth. I have personally spent a considerable amount of my time talking to young people, particularly people who are involved with our child welfare system, about the changes they would like to see in our child welfare system. I am a passionate advocate of youth engagement, and I can assure the member opposite that as we proceed with any changes dealing with youth we will, of course, have a full engagement with them.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: I think everybody in this House knows that this minister has got a very poor record when it comes to public consultation generally, particularly on the poverty file.

But nonetheless, I would actually like to know from the minister some specifics. Exactly how much time is the minister allotting for consultations with youth over changes which are going to markedly affect them, when will notices about these meetings take place, and how long is going to be provided for the full consultation that the minister plans?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: What I can tell the member opposite is that we are committed to transforming the youth justice system to reduce the chances that youth who are in conflict with the law will reoffend. That has two big advantages: It makes our communities safer and it enables young people to move on and be productive, contributing members of our society.

Of course, I cannot speak to proposals that are not yet before this Legislature, but I can say that we are committed to helping our youth achieve their full potential. That is the objective in every initiative we take, be it poverty reduction, be it working with children in our care, be it youth in the justice system. We're also working very hard to prevent youth from becoming involved with the youth justice system, and our youth opportunity strategy, among other initiatives, is very much focused on that objective.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Bill Mauro: My question is for the Minister of Finance. Shortly after the election of 2003, our government made several moves to begin repairing what had been a very fractious relationship between the preceding provincial government and municipalities in Ontario. As a two-term municipal councillor in the city of Thunder Bay, I had direct, first-hand experience with that particular style of government. One of the first things we did to begin repairing that relationship was agree to a request from AMO, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, to which most organized municipalities in the province belong, to review the provincial land tax system for unorganized municipalities or unorganized areas in the province.

Minister, my constituents in Thunder Bay–Atikokan do not feel that they have had an appropriate ability to convey to our government and your ministry the unique circumstances that many people in northwestern Ontario find themselves in when it comes to PLT reform. Can you confirm if a consultation on PLT will be held in Thunder Bay, and if so, when?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: First, allow me to congratulate the member for Thunder Bay–Atikokan, who has been a strong advocate for his community on this issue.

The member will know that in the fall of 2004 we conducted a number of consultations throughout northern Ontario. We met with more than 350 individuals in places like Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, Fort Frances, Kenora, Dryden, North Bay and Thunder Bay.

But to the member's specific question, yes, we will do another round of consultations, thanks to your advocacy on that. We will indeed be in Thunder Bay to do that. We will focus on PLT rates, phase-in and new services. I look forward to the member's continuing input on the issue.

Mr. Bill Mauro: There is a significant misconception when it comes to tax rates of people living in unorganized territory within Thunder Bay–Atikokan and other unorganized areas within the province. Many of these people already pay a roads boards tax and/or an education tax. Furthermore, many of those who will be affected by PLT reform are seasonal residents who live full-time within organized municipalities and pay a full-time residential property tax for the services the municipalities provide. They receive, in most circumstances, very limited services for properties that in many cases are 30, 60 or 80 miles away from the nearest organized municipality.

I've been speaking publicly for close to two years on this issue, to at least 1,000 people who share my very serious concern on how PLT reform may affect the affordability of these residences. Minister, can you advise me and my constituents of Thunder Bay–Atikokan about how you envision PLT reform being rolled out and the impact on affordability it is likely to have?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: The member raises very valid concerns. PLT reform is about fairness, so that similar properties will pay similar taxes. We're attempting here to further modernize a property tax system that has not been updated since the 1940s. We hope to create one fair and consistent property assessment system across the province.

Again, in part due to the member's efforts, any tax changes will be phased in. There have been no final decisions made. That's why we're doing this round of consultations: to get that input. I would like to congratulate the member again on the outstanding contribution he has made in defending the interests of his constituents to ensure that they have fair representation in this process and that their legitimate concerns are taken into account.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Toby Barrett: I'll direct my question to the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): We don't talk about absences.

Mr. Toby Barrett: To the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs: Minister, as you know, there is talk in my riding of Haldimand–Norfolk about the $25-million relationship fund set up by your government to encourage greater coordination amongst government and aboriginal communities. In the Brantford courtroom on Friday were Marlys Edwardh, a high-profile Toronto lawyer who has been hired by HDI, and also their lawyer, Aaron Detlor. Minister, are some of the monies from this $25-million relationship fund budgeted to help pay for Toronto lawyers to fight local construction companies and home builders and to fight the city of Brantford?

Hon. Michael Bryant: No.

Mr. Toby Barrett: Thank you, Minister. Further to this, taxpayers in Haldimand–Norfolk would like to know where the money in this relationship fund will be going. I didn't hear that in your answer. Home builders like Mike Corrado in Cayuga, for example, are keen to know if the province will establish a relationship fund for them as well. They have tremendous legal fees and have been the victims of extortion. Minister, is there a plan in place to help compensate home builders like Mike Corrado?

Hon. Michael Bryant: I appreciate the member's question. I think it's very important that the member raises the new relationship fund, because it is in fact an opportunity to allow for the playing field to be levelled, to allow for greater economic development, to allow for the acceleration of land claims that require action from the federal government, so that First Nations and Metis leadership are in the position where we can move through these claims in particular, and these potential economic development projects, that much more quickly. What that will mean, of course, is less of the kind of activity that gave rise to what the member refers to. The root cause of this is a federal government policy of hesitation over acceleration. We call for the federal government to do so, and I am confident that the federal government is certainly listening. We're looking forward to some action.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

Mr. Gilles Bisson: My question is to the Premier. You'll know that mayors from across northern Ontario are coming here to Queen's Park today in protest of what's happening in the forestry industry generally, but specifically, how this new process that you've created under the Endangered Species Act will make them duplicate a process that they're already doing under the forest management plans that they have to do under the forest management act.

My question to you is simply this: What are you prepared to do as the Premier in order to make sure that you accept a premise that the work that's done within the forest management plans be the way that we basically protect endangered species, rather than having to duplicate a process and add costs to an industry that is already hurting?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Natural Resources.

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: I'm delighted to be able to respond, but I find it a fascinating question from the member for Timmins—James Bay, since he voted against the legislation for endangered species. Fascinating—suddenly he's become a strong advocate.

I have indicated quite clearly that the Premier's message to the forestry industry stated that we will integrate into the forest management plans the new Endangered Species Act, and we have a year with which to do it. We have asked them to come and sit with us. After we go through the Environmental Bill of Rights, we listen to everyone who has an opportunity to speak and state their case. Once that is done and the decision is made, certainly we will ask them to come to the table and work with us as we develop the plans in terms of integrating into the forest management plans.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Minister, I don't know what's happening in your ministry if they haven't already briefed you, but let me explain to you. When you have the forest management plan, there are forest planning manuals that you have to follow to develop the plan. The plan engages in making sure that we plan when it comes to cutting trees, that we take into consideration the habitat and the species which we'll be encountering when we go into the process of harvesting.

Those manuals, if you stacked them up on this desk today, would be somewhere around this high. What you're doing is forcing the industry to duplicate the process. What you're basically doing is saying that you're going to have to apply for permits above and beyond what we already have in the forest management plan.

The reason I voted against the legislation was that you never accepted our amendment that would have incorporated the good work that's been done under the sustainable forestry development act that could have been tied into this legislation. So I say again, will you accept the premise that the work done on the forest management plan be the work that makes sure that we're compliant with the Endangered Species Act?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: The member makes a great many assumptions. We have a whole year to sit down and work with the forestry industry in the forest management plans. We will do that. It's a commitment we have made. We will follow through with that commitment. I don't think there should be some huge assumptions made about what that might look like because, in fact, those decisions haven't been made. The commitment is that we can build on the standards there. They're superb standards with companies, as I indicated, such as Tembec, who have been working with the forest-dwelling woodland caribou, and we will continue to do that to ensure that we have the highest standards when it comes to our endangered species within the forest industry.

And we have the commitment of the industry—not all of them, at this point—to work with us. They will certainly be invited to the table as we find solutions.

PETITIONS

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Jim Wilson: I want to thank John Lawrence of Wasaga Beach for sending this petition to me.

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I agree with this petition and I will sign it.

LONG-TERM CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people of the city of Greater Sudbury.

"Whereas in Ontario there is no minimum standard of daily nursing and personal care for seniors living in long-term-care homes;

"Whereas Ontario seniors in long-term care are given only $5.57 per day for meals;

"Whereas our personal support workers, the front-line staff in long-term-care homes, are stretched to the limit trying to meet residents' basic needs;

"Whereas the McGuinty Liberals have broken their promises to increase overall per-resident funding by $6,000, to bring in a minimum of care for seniors, to hire an ombudsman to make long-term care fairer and more transparent, and to hire 2,000 new long-term-care workers, including 600 nurses; and

"Whereas Dalton McGuinty rewarded himself with a $40,000 pay raise;

"I petition the Ontario government to immediately fulfill the McGuinty Liberal promises for seniors."

I support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Murray.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Phil McNeely: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in this Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer recognizes the principles on which our province was founded and developed; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I will affix my signature to that.

ONTARIO SOCIETY
FOR THE PREVENTION
OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I am pleased to present a petition from 10-year-old Elyse Heubner. She came personally to Toronto.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas currently it is not a provincial offence to cause distress to an animal and places like puppy mills are dreadful and cruel, and all animals should be treated with love and kindness;

"We want the Ontario government to update the law so this madness will stop;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"It is essential to pass Bill 50 as soon as possible to help protect animals and punish anyone who is cruel to animals."

I have about 500 signatures, and I'm pleased to support Elyse and her friends.

PROTECTION FOR MINERS

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people of Sudbury.

"Whereas the current legislation contained in the Ontario health and safety act does not protect the lives of miners, we request revisions to the act;

"Lyle Everett Defoe"—a member of my riding—"and the scoop tram he was operating fell 150 feet down an open stope (July 23, 2007). Lyle was 25 years and 15 days old when he was killed at Xstrata Kidd Creek mine site, Timmins.

"Section R-60 (page 60 of Mining Regulations), paragraph 74 states that, 'A shaft, raise or other opening in an underground mine shall be securely fenced, covered or otherwise guarded. RRO 1990, Reg. 854s 75(1).' The stope where Lyle was killed was protected by a length of orange plastic snow fence and a rope with a warning sign. These barriers would not have been visible if the bucket of the scoop tram was raised. Lyle's body was recovered from behind the scoop tram.

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Concrete berms must be mandatory to protect all open stopes and raises;

"All miners and contractors working underground must have working communication devices and personal locators;

"All equipment involved in injuries and fatalities must be recovered and examined unless such recovery would endanger the lives of others; and

"The entire act must be reviewed and amended to better protect underground workers."

I support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Alie.

FIREARMS CONTROL

Mrs. Amrit Mangat: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the growing number of unlawful firearms in motor vehicles is threatening innocent citizens and our police officers;

"Whereas police officers, military personnel and lawfully licensed persons are the only people allowed to possess firearms; and

"Whereas a growing number of unlawful firearms are transported, smuggled and being found in motor vehicles; and

"Whereas impounding motor vehicles and suspending driver's licences of persons possessing unlawful firearms would aid the police in their efforts to make our streets safer;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 56, entitled the Unlawful Firearms in Vehicles Act, 2008, into law, so that we can reduce the number of crimes involving firearms in our communities."

I support this petition and affix my signature, and I ask Aaron to carry it for me.

HOME CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the members of SEIU and the residents of Peterborough.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario government has continued the practice of competitive bidding for home care services; and

"Whereas the competitive bidding process has increased the privatization of Ontario's health care delivery, in direct violation of the Commitment to the Future of Medicare Act, 2004; and

"Whereas competitive bidding for home care services has decreased both the continuity and quality of care available to home care clients; and

"Whereas home care workers do not enjoy the same employment rights, such as successor rights, as all other Ontario workers have, which deprives them of termination rights, seniority rights and the right to move with their work when their employer agency loses a contract;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We call on the government of Ontario:

"(1) to immediately stop the competitive bidding for home care services so home care clients can receive the continuity and quality of care they deserve; and

"(2) to extend successor rights under the Labour Relations Act to home care workers to ensure the home care sector is able to retain a workforce that is responsive to clients' needs."

I support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Chris.

COMMUNITY SAFETY

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas crack houses, brothels and other persistent problem properties undermine a neighbourhood by generating public disorder, fear and insecurity; and

"Whereas current solutions—enforcement measures based on current criminal, civil and bylaws—are slow, expensive, cumbersome and not always successful; and

"Whereas safer communities and neighbourhoods (SCAN) legislation is provincial, civil law which counters the negative impact on neighbourhoods of entrenched drug, prostitution or illegal liquor sales based out of homes and businesses and is being successfully utilized in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and the Yukon; and

"Whereas the following have endorsed SCAN legislation: city of Ottawa, city of Kingston, city of Hamilton, federation of Ontario municipalities, Ottawa Police Service, Ottawa Police Services Board, Ottawa Centre MPP Yasir Naqvi, Ottawa Neighbourhood Watch executive committee, Concerned Citizens for Safer Neighbourhoods, Eastern Ontario Landlord Organization, Friends and Tenants of Ottawa Community Housing, Hintonburg Community Association, Somerset Street Chinatown BIA, Boys and Girls Club of Ottawa and the Dalhousie Community Association;

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, urge the province of Ontario to enact safer communities and neighbourhood (SCAN) legislation in Ontario for the benefit of our neighbourhoods and communities."

I support this petition and affix my signature and send it your way by way of page Doaa.

LONG-TERM CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have this petition from the people of London and Waterloo.

"Whereas understaffing in Ontario's nursing homes is a serious problem resulting in inadequate care for residents and unsafe conditions for staff;

"Whereas after the Harris government removed the regulations providing minimum care levels in 1995, hours of care dropped below the previous 2.25 hour/day minimum;

"Whereas the recent improvements in hours of care are not adequate, vary widely and are not held to accountable standards;

"Whereas there is currently nothing in legislation to protect residents and staff from renewed cuts to care levels by future governments; and

"Whereas care needs have measurably increased with aging and the movement of people with more complex health needs from hospitals into long-term-care homes;"

They petition the assembly to:

"Immediately enact and fund an average care standard of 3.5 hours per resident per day in the regulations under the new Long-Term Care Homes Act."

I support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Dina.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan, subject to public meetings; and

"Whereas it is important to ensure that the new birthing unit at Centenary hospital, a $20-million expansion that will see 16 new labour, delivery, recovery and postpartum (LDRP) birthing rooms and an additional 21 postpartum rooms added by October 2008, will not cause any decline in the pediatric services currently provided at the Ajax-Pickering hospital; and

"Whereas, with the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government...; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for the Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding; and

"Whereas the parents of Ajax and Pickering deserve the right to have their children born in their own community, where they have chosen to live and work;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service; and

"That our Ajax-Pickering hospital now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain its full maternity unit."

I affix my signature to this and pass it to Chris.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Mike Colle: I have a petition here from the people of Eglinton-Lawrence in support of stronger protection for our animals in Ontario.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I fully support this and I give the petition to page Ellen.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Bob Delaney: I have a petition to the Ontario Legislative Assembly. It reads as follows:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative, intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre, located in western Mississauga, to serve the Mississauga-Halton area, and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I am pleased to sign and to support this petition and to ask page Christopher to carry it for me.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Mike Colle: I have more petitions here in support of stronger protection for animal welfare in Ontario. These people live in the Forest Hill area of Toronto and here's their petition.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I fully support this petition and I hand this petition over to Alie, who is from Timmins-James Bay, a fine page from that wonderful part of our province.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The time for petitions has ended. This House stands recessed until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1204 to 1500.

ONTARIO ASSOCIATION OF FORMER PARLIAMENTARIANS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I just wanted to remind the members that there are a number of former parliamentarians visiting today. It's the annual general meeting of the Ontario Association of Former Parliamentarians. There's going to be a reception later this afternoon, and I know the former members would love to meet you.

As well, we're going to be planting a tree on the grounds at 4 o'clock this afternoon in memory of former MPPs who have passed away in the past year. If any of you are interested, 4 p.m. on the front grounds.

CLOTHING ALLOWANCES

Mrs. Julia Munro: This government has made a lot of announcements about how its child benefit will benefit Ontario's children. What it fails to point out is that at the same time it is bringing in the benefit, it is abolishing the back-to-school and winter clothing allowance for children. The McGuinty government is giving with one hand and taking away with the other.

On May 15, York region council asked you to reinstate the clothing allowance for 2008. Thousands of families in Ontario depend on this payment, and they may not be able to put away money every month to make up for the cut to the allowance. In August and November, families would have received $245 per child for the two clothing allowances. By starting your program in July and cutting the clothing allowance, you will force families to save both payments from half a year's worth of benefits.

In 2007, families in York region received $591,000 to help pay for clothes for their children. The McGuinty Liberal government is cutting them off. You claim to care about poverty, so why are you axing this payment?

MEN'S HEALTH AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Joe Dickson: I'm pleased to bring to the attention of the House a very important issue. Recently, the region of Durham council proclaimed next week, June 9 to 15, Men's Health Awareness Week. In making this week, the region reminds us in their proclamation that "it is important for all males, regardless of age, to become more informed about issues impacting their health, and to take a more responsible attitude toward their health and well-being."

As New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson once wisely said, "Recognizing and preventing men's health problems is not just a man's issue. Because of its impact on wives, mothers, daughters and sisters, men's health is truly a family issue."

Men's Health Awareness Week is an international event involving many countries that promotes men's health and encourages men of all ages to seek regular medical advice. It increases awareness of the importance of early detection and treatment of diseases such as prostate cancer, which the McGuinty government will be funding as of January 1, 2009.

I would like to acknowledge the region of Durham council and Chair Anderson for taking a leadership role in promoting men's health. In particular, I'd like to thank a constituent of mine, Jim Duncan, whose energy and dedication to men's health awareness is an inspiration.

RURAL ONTARIO

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: The McGuinty Liberals and their so-called rural representative have once again rejected rural Ontario. Despite repeated requests by stakeholders and the PC caucus to hold public hearings on the pesticide bill outside of Toronto, and especially in rural Ontario, the McGuinty Liberals are shutting out democracy by holding public hearings only in Toronto. The McGuinty Liberals have said no to fairness for rural Ontario, and people in cities like Kingston, Ottawa, Thunder Bay and Sarnia.

On May 26, the Liberal member from Huron-Bruce said, "I look forward to the hearings, and they should come to rural Ontario, where they will be very graciously received by the McGuinty government." Instead, her McGuinty colleagues have flat out rejected rural Ontario and her request for even one single hearing on the pesticide bill in rural Ontario. This is despite the fact that rural municipalities have shown leadership on this front for years. The parliamentary assistant for the environment said that he has faith in the agriculture sector. I say, then why are you shutting them out?

Where is the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Affairs? She knows that hearings in Toronto won't allow many stakeholders from the forestry and agriculture sectors to have a say, especially at this busy time of year.

This is a three-page bill that affects every township, municipality and city in this province, but the McGuinty government isn't willing to talk to anyone outside the walls of Queen's Park. The Liberals are shutting out democracy and throwing in the towel for rural Ontario.

CLIMATE CHANGE

Mr. Peter Tabuns: This week a memorandum of understanding was signed between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to develop a cap-and-trade system for greenhouse gas emissions. It got an awful lot of coverage, far beyond its potential to actually deal with the problem.

Climate change is not like acid rain; it's not like phosphates; it's not like other pollution issues. It's a profound threat to the stability of our society and the future of our children. The scale of the looming crisis is at least as great as that of the Second World War. Charles Caccia, former Liberal MP, said it was a threat exceeded only by that of nuclear war.

Yet this province has no climate plan, no substantial allocation of funds for climate action and no commitment to building a new energy economy that would move us away from fossil fuels to a sustainable future. Both the United Nations and Lord Stern, in his report to the government of the UK, said that we needed to act fast, dramatically, within the next 10 years.

An absence of substantial action in the face of this dramatic threat is morally bankrupt, and on the issue of climate change, this government is morally bankrupt.

RIDEAU CANAL FESTIVAL

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: As Ontario celebrates National Tourism Week, I am pleased to be able to share with the members of this Legislature the wonderful activities taking place in my riding of Ottawa Centre. Last month, I had the pleasure of attending the launch of the Rideau Canal Festival at the Bytown Museum, along with our hometown Minister of Community and Social Services. Our government, through Celebrate Ontario 2008, is proud to contribute $300,000 as a partner in this important inaugural festival.

The Rideau Canal, built 175 years ago, is a unique tourism destination in Ontario, and this festival not only celebrates the importance of the Rideau Canal to our city but also to the world, as a United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, UNESCO, heritage site.

Taking place in August, the Rideau Canal Festival is committed to being the first zero-footprint festival ever staged in Canada, with special initiatives designed to help reduce greenhouse gas emissions produced during the festival to zero. I congratulate Michel Gauthier, president and CEO, and Henry Storgaard, chairman, along with all of the volunteers, for their hard work and dedication to ensuring that this historic national landmark does not go unnoticed.

I encourage all members of my community, this Legislature and beyond to visit Ottawa this summer and enjoy the wonderful activities taking place.

ALDRESHOT

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: I rise in the House today to recognize the 50th anniversary of the beautiful community of Aldershot. Named after an English borough in Hampshire, Aldershot is a product of the unprecedented changes that happened in our towns and cities after World War II, a transportation hub steeped in natural beauty with a proud history of hosting nation builders.

Recently repatriated into the Burlington riding, I am pleased to be able to welcome back the citizens who are the lifeblood of this vibrant village, who have chosen to build their lives in Aldershot. I encourage all of our members to take the time out of their busy schedules and visit this very unique part of our province.

Home to the Royal Botanical Gardens, LaSalle Park and its wonderful marina, sports fields, trails, picnic areas and abounding natural heritage, and bordering Hamilton, Aldershot is the jewel of Burlington's western front, successfully maintaining its unique character throughout many boundary transitions.

I want to congratulate the residents and also the businesses of Aldershot on the occasion of their 50th anniversary, and I continue to wish them a prosperous and peaceful future.

ADVANCED CORONARY TREATMENT FOUNDATION OF CANADA

Mr. Jeff Leal: On May 30, I had the opportunity to attend the launch of the advanced coronary treatment program in Peterborough at Adam Scott secondary school. More than 4,300 grade 9 students from 23 high schools from both of the school boards in my riding will now be empowered to save lives. This is a significant contribution to safety in my community and beyond. Sixty physical education teachers have been trained as CPR instructors to train the students. The students will then take their life-saving skills to their current and future families and to the local community.

Eight in 10 out-of-hospital cardiac arrests occur at home. Research indicates that citizen CPR response can improve survival rates by almost fourfold. Empowering youth with CPR training as part of their high school education will increase citizen CPR response rates and save lives over the long term.

The ACT Foundation's goal is to expand the CPR program to every high school throughout Ontario. To help make this possible, ACT has secured a provincial commitment of $650,000 from the government of Ontario. The foundation has already established CPR programs in over 1,200 high schools across Canada, and over 900,000 youths have been trained.

The foundation and its core partners are winners of Imagine Canada's New Spirit of Community Partnership Award. I want to offer my congratulations to the creators of the ACT program.

ELDER ABUSE

Mr. Bill Mauro: June is Seniors' Month, and I want to highlight Ontario's strategy to combat elder abuse, which is the first of its kind in Canada.

Elder abuse is often defined as any act or omission that harms a senior or jeopardizes his or her health or welfare. Elder abuse can take place in the home, in other residential settings, or in the community.

The Ontario Seniors' Secretariat developed Ontario's strategy to combat elder abuse and is partnering with the Ontario Network for the Prevention of Elder Abuse. Elder abuse regional consultants are in place province-wide to help promote and support efforts in addressing and preventing elder abuse. There are 55 elder abuse committees in Ontario, with eight in northwestern Ontario.

Overall, the Ontario Seniors' Secretariat, through the leadership of the minister responsible for seniors, the Honourable Aileen Carroll, has invested $1.6 million in Ontario's strategy to combat elder abuse. In May 2008, another $209,000 was given to the Ontario Network for local groups such as the Community Elder Abuse Prevention Committee, run through the Lakehead Social Planning Council, in Thunder Bay.

The elder abuse regional consultant in northwestern Ontario is Ms. Lee Stones. Ms. Stones is coordinating the Thunder Bay elder abuse committee. Seniors who need immediate assistance can also telephone 211, which is staffed 24/7.

World Elder Abuse Awareness Day is on June 15 this year. In Thunder Bay, the event will be observed at the Intercity mall on June 14 from 10 to 4.

Ontario's seniors deserve to live safely and with dignity. I am proud to acknowledge that our provincial government is a Canadian leader on the elder abuse initiative.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. David Oraziatti: I'm continually amazed by the incompetence of the official opposition.

On Monday, the Conservatives put out a release calling on me to stop the possible closure of several aging schools in Sault Ste. Marie. The member from Burlington and her party showed they are just as out of touch with my riding as they are with the rest of Ontario. If the Conservatives had done their homework, they'd know that the McGuinty government is providing $44.8 million to replace these schools, something their government refused to do over eight years.

Here's what Algoma District School Board chair Wanda McQueen had to say in response to the Tory motion on rural schools: Parents "want the process sped up; they don't want it slowed down (and) they certainly don't want a moratorium."

Here's what Mario Turco, the director of education, said: "Parents in this community would be against us closing schools if they didn't have something to look forward to, like a brand new school."

Students in the Soo have benefited from a 37% increase in funding, in sharp contrast to the unrest, chaos and mismanagement prevalent during their time in office. They closed 506 public schools, cut $1 billion out of education, and students lost 26 million learning days. Ontarians know the Conservatives have absolutely no interest in supporting public education.

Yesterday, in another release sent to my riding, the Conservatives said that I skipped the vote. The fact is, I was right here and voted on the motion, unlike their own members. Only 14 of 26 Conservative members showed up to vote on their own motion.

Get a leader in the Legislature, get organized, and get your facts straight.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

TOWING INDUSTRY ACT, 2008 LOI DE 2008 SUR L'INDUSTRIE DU REMORQUAGE

Mr. Zimmer moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 87, An Act to regulate the motor vehicle towing industry in Ontario / Projet de loi 87, Loi réglementant l'industrie du remorquage de véhicules automobiles en Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Mr. David Zimmer: The bill provides for the self-regulation of the towing industry in Ontario in the public interest. The Towing Industry Council of Ontario is established. The council, which is managed by a board of directors, is made up of operators of towing businesses and tow truck drivers who must register with the council in order to carry on a towing business or operate a tow truck. At least 40% of directors are appointed from outside the industry to ensure that the public interest is represented.

The activities of the council are funded through fees established by bylaw of the board and paid by registered persons and applicants for registration.

A complaints and discipline procedure is provided to ensure that registered persons are held accountable for the way in which they provide towing services. Registrations may be suspended or revoked, if necessary.

The board of the council is provided with regulation-making powers that are subject to the approval of the Minister of Government and Consumer Services.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you.

Mr. David Zimmer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. We know there's an appropriate time for guests, and we welcome all of our guests to the chamber today.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

SENIORS' MONTH

MOIS DES PERSONNES ÂGÉES

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: I'm pleased to rise before this House today to recognize June as Seniors' Month. For the 24th year, this House has recognized June as a time to celebrate the contributions that seniors have made and continue to make to their families, to their communities and to the province. This year our Seniors' Month theme is "Discover the Possibilities," and it was my pleasure to launch this special month in the Niagara-on-the-Lake public library, surfing the Web.

Le thème du Mois des personnes âgées de cette année est Explorez les possibilités, et j'ai eu le grand plaisir de lancer ce mois spécial à la bibliothèque publique de Niagara-on-the-Lake en naviguant sur Internet.

At the Niagara library, we were connected to people in Addington Highlands, Gravenhurst, Leamington, Montague, Powassan and Wasaga Beach via the Internet. We were joined by these communities to launch seven new locations to our Collaborative Seniors Portal Network at seniorsinfo.ca. This network of 29 Ontario communities provides easy one-stop access to information about programs and services offered to seniors by all orders of government and local community organizations. It's an award-winning example of all three orders of government working in a collaborative way for Ontario's seniors.

Ce réseau est un très bel exemple de la collaboration des trois paliers de gouvernement visant les personnes âgées de l'Ontario.

There are 1.6 million seniors in Ontario today and that number is expected to double to 3.2 million in the next 20 years. At the same time, more of our seniors are leading healthy, active, independent lives, discovering those possibilities every day.

The McGuinty government is committed to encouraging active and healthy aging and we do so through initiatives like seniorsinfo.ca and our seniors information fairs that are organized through our partners, the Older Adult Centres' Association of Ontario et la Fédération des aînés et des retraités francophones de l'Ontario.

We are committed to helping seniors keep their independence for as long as possible. That is why we've invested $700 million in our aging-at-home strategy, to match the needs of local seniors with appropriate support services. That is why in our 2008 budget we introduced a new $1-billion seniors' property tax grant to help low- and moderate-income senior homeowners stay in their homes.

The McGuinty government believes in honouring the service and sacrifice of Ontario veterans. Our Veteran Appreciation Days, a partnership with the Dominion Institute, recognizes the contributions of our veterans in 10 communities this year.

Le gouvernement McGuinty croit qu'il est important de rendre hommage aux services qu'ont rendus les anciens combattants de l'Ontario et à leurs sacrifices. Cette année, nos journées d'appréciation des anciens combattants, en partenariat avec l'Institut du Dominion, reconnaissent les contributions de nos anciens combattants dans 10 collectivités de l'Ontario.

Our government is also committed to keeping our seniors safe. That's why we've invested $2.77 million over the past three years to combat elder abuse. On June 15, Ontario will be joining the rest of Canada—and the rest of the world—in marking World Elder Abuse Awareness Day.

Every day of every month, our government is committed to helping seniors live the best possible life they can. We celebrate seniors in many ways, but especially in June, when we shine the spotlight on our seniors to celebrate their contributions.

I am pleased that communities across the province will be hosting award ceremonies, information fairs, seminars and social events to honour Ontario's seniors, a group that all of you will soon, or not too far away, be joining. That is our way of saying thank you for helping to build a strong Ontario.

Je suis heureuse que les collectivités de toute la province organisent des cérémonies de remise de prix, des foires d'information, des séminaires et des activités sociales pour rendre hommage aux personnes âgées de l'Ontario. C'est notre façon de vous remercier de nous aider à bâtir une province solide.

I encourage all of my colleagues in this House and Ontarians everywhere to go out into their communities and join in the celebration.

TOURISM WEEK

Hon. Peter Fonseca: Ontario is celebrating National Tourism Week, which started on Monday and runs through to June 8. The theme this year is "Potential Worth Exploring." This is exactly what we are doing to build a brighter future for our tourism industry. After all, tourism is a major economic driver and community builder across Ontario. It's a $22.8-billion industry that supports more than 300,000 jobs. It's the largest seasonal employer of youth in our province.

While we have a lot of potential worth exploring, we also have some great success stories. We have an internationally acclaimed wine and culinary tourism sector that is getting better and better every year. Last year, we got our first UNESCO world heritage site, our very own Fort Henry in Kingston. We have an outstanding range of festivals and events that make Ontario an exciting place to visit year-round. It's not surprising that we want more tourists and investors to see what we see: "There's no place like this."

But there's a world of possibilities and competition out there. Global tourism is experiencing unprecedented growth. International rivals are expected to more than double by the year 2020. Ontario has been working hard to attract visitors from many overseas markets, including China, India and Brazil.

We want more travellers to come here and choose Ontario, but we have to be able to offer them something different. We need to ensure that we can meet the demand for new experiences and new trends in travel. Cultural tourism, eco-tourism and the cruising sector are just a few of the specialty areas that we're developing from Niagara Falls to the far north. The competition is fierce and we need to make sure that we're up to the challenge and at the top of our game. So we're taking a long, hard look at how we can ensure the long-term viability of the tourism sector. We have to think big, bold and out of the box to make Ontario the destination of choice for travellers from around the world.

What are we doing to make this happen? We're undertaking a competitiveness study that will get Ontario talking about the future of tourism, raise the profile of the industry, and deliver an agenda to support the growth of tourism as an important part of our economic development. My colleague the MPP for Vaughan, Greg Sorbara, is chairing the study. He's as passionate about being a champion for Ontario tourism as I am.

I'm pleased to announce that today we have released a discussion paper called Mapping Ontario's Tourism Future. It's a call for input, not just from industry participants but from all Ontarians. We're asking the industry, our business leaders and the community at large to give us their thoughts on how we can build a stronger, more competitive tourism industry.

Let me be clear: Government alone cannot build a thriving tourism sector. It requires all of us, working in partnership and in new ways, to realize the potential that tourism has to offer. The resulting action plan, to be released in 2009, will provide recommendations to position Ontario as a leading global tourism destination.

In the meantime, I'd like to call on all my colleagues to celebrate the outstanding achievements and the hard work of our tourism industry during Tourism Week. Tourism has a tremendous impact on every region in our province and in every community. It's the single largest employer of our youth in Ontario. Get people talking about tourism in your communities and the important role it plays in generating civic pride and creating memorable experiences for family and friends.

Tell them to take advantage of our 2008 fun pass. Yesterday, I went to Huronia Historical Parks in Midland to announce the fun pass, which provides one free child's admission with the purchase of an adult or senior admission to 15 provincial attractions. We've distributed 1.4 million passes to school children across this province.

The fun pass gives families across Ontario 15 affordable ways to have fun and explore our beautiful province this summer. It will be valid from Canada Day until Labour Day. That's two months' worth of fun and quality time together for families across the province.

The fun pass is just one of the many ways that our government is supporting the tourism industry and boosting Ontario's industry. We're investing more than $50 million over the next four years in tourism marketing, in festivals and events.

We have already seen some impressive results from our current advertising campaign, which is called There's No Place Like This. The campaign encourages Ontarians to discover the wonderful things that our province has to offer. And it seems our efforts have paid off: Domestic tourism is up. More Ontarians are enjoying the unique experiences—the festivals and events—that take place year-round in our province.

For that, we can thank the energetic people who work in our tourism industry. They are passionate ambassadors for Ontario, and as their champion, I'm proud of the work that they do. I'm glad that Tourism Week gives us a chance to honour their leadership, their creativity and the excellent service that they provide. What better way to do that than by taking time to explore Ontario? Visit our attractions and our parks and say "thank you" to our ambassadors.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Responses?

SENIORS' MONTH

Mr. Peter Shurman: I am responding to the statement by the minister responsible for seniors in the province of Ontario. How dare this minister, or any other member of the McGuinty government, claim to be doing anything positive for seniors in this province?

Seniors' Month is more than words. It's more than photo ops, hollow speeches, empty rhetoric. I fear this point is lost on members of the government benches.

The minister supposedly responsible for seniors claims she cares about this key segment of our population. If the minister truly did care, why was she absent from last Thursday's vote on Bill 78, a bill that would have provided real property tax relief for low-income seniors and disabled persons? Come to think of it, a number of Liberal members from ridings with large seniors' populations were noticeably absent from the debate and the vote last Thursday. For example, the members for Ottawa-Vanier, Kingston and the Islands, Nipissing, Niagara Falls and St. Catharines, to name but a few, were all absent.

Hon. James J. Bradley: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I think it's against the rule of the Legislature to make reference to any absences in this House; otherwise, I could make some interesting references right now.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I will remind members on both sides, because the honourable member made reference to a minister being absent. There was a statement earlier from the member for Sault Ste. Marie in which he made reference to his own absence. So we'll remind all members of that.

Mr. Peter Shurman: Point taken.

I guess it's easier to talk the talk than walk the walk. Say one thing when it's politically expedient; do otherwise. It's the McGuinty Liberal way.

The reality is that today's draconian property tax laws punish seniors and push them to the brink of poverty, instead of reflecting the gratitude that the minister says we should display for the important contributions they've made to this province. I guess displaying gratitude for seniors is okay, but when it comes to helping seniors, the McGuinty Liberals are prepared to cripple them financially.

An opportunity for innovative legislation and leadership to help our greying population was lost on Thursday when the McGuinty Liberals decided to vote en masse against Bill 78, which would have created a province-wide, provincially administered property tax deferral system for low-income seniors and low-income disabled persons. For many of us, the most significant investment we will ever make is the purchase of a home. However, every year across this province, ever-increasing property assessment and tax rates threaten that investment.

Seniors want to stay in their homes. They want financial independence. The McGuinty government, however, wants to rob them of their dignity. As demonstrated by last week's vote, Dalton McGuinty's Liberals believe it is quite acceptable to continue with a patchwork quilt of ineffective municipal property tax deferral programs.

What's the real McGuinty Liberal message to Ontario's elderly population this month? "Happy Seniors' Month. Thanks for nothing."

TOURISM WEEK

Mr. Ted Arnott: We in the PC caucus were wondering when the Minister of Tourism would finally get around to doing a ministry statement in the House, this being National Tourism Week, for we on this side of the House understand the extraordinary challenges the industry is facing, in part because of this government's neglect. That's why John Tory announced his plan to eliminate the retail sales tax on accommodations and attractions this summer.

This would actually do something tangible and immediate for Ontario's tourism. At the same time, it would help attract American visitors back to Ontario and would give our own families a tax break, and allow them to keep more of their own hard-earned money and enjoy their holidays here in Ontario.

In a knee-jerk response, the Minister of Tourism dismissed our idea as a band-aid solution, which shows how out of touch he is. In contrast, listen to how the industry responded. Troy Young, executive director of Attractions Ontario, had this to say: "Anything that can be done to get people moving and enjoying our province's great attractions is a good thing for the industry."

Michael Von Teichman, from the Walper Terrace Hotel in Kitchener, said this: "As we enter into a summer of economic uncertainty, rising fuel costs and a strong Canadian dollar, I believe that removing the RST from hotels and attractions over the summer months will make a big difference to the tourism industry in Ontario. These are the kind of initiatives governments should be taking to support businesses and communities throughout the province."

Now we know that the member for Vaughan, the former Minister of Finance and the chair of the Liberal Party's 2003 and 2007 election campaigns, has been assigned the task of doing an $8-million tourism competitiveness study. As the PC critic for tourism, I sincerely hope that this study makes a difference. But we need action now, not two years from now, as the study's time frame was initially indicated in this year's provincial budget. Today, we learn that they're speeding it up to release the final report early next year. But I submit that this study could and should have been completed within 90 days.

We still have not seen a line-by-line accounting of how these $8 million will be spent. What are they trying to hide? Is it Mr. Sorbara's expenses while he travels the province and even around the world, purportedly claiming to look for best practices while enjoying a farewell tour on the taxpayer's dime? Is it that they plan to reward key Liberal campaign—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time has expired.

MOIS DES PERSONNES ÂGÉES

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: On behalf of New Democrats, I'm really pleased to rise to recognize this month, the month of June, as Seniors' Month. I'm happy to have this opportunity to honour the contribution made by Ontario seniors in building this province in all aspects: economically, socially, culturally and creatively. Indeed, we are indebted to the energy, the commitment and, yes, the sacrifices of those who have given so much in order for us to explore today's possibilities.

The theme for this year's Seniors' Month is "Discover the Possibilities." This is a theme that attempts to encourage seniors to live life to its fullest. It is incumbent upon us to help seniors realize that goal. There are key actions this government can take to ensure that our seniors age with dignity and respect.

For seniors to live in their own homes, we must ensure that we have a robust not-for-profit home care system that provides a higher standard of care delivered by the right providers.

Il me fait plaisir de me lever aujourd'hui pour reconnaître le mois de juin comme Mois des personnes âgées. Il me fait extrêmement plaisir d'honorer la contribution des personnes âgées de l'Ontario dans le développement de tous les aspects de notre province. On parle ici du développement économique, de développement social, culturel et créatif. Nous leur devons beaucoup d'avoir investi leur énergie et leurs sacrifices pour nous. Pour leur donner toutes ces possibilités, le thème du mois de juin et des personnes âgées de cette année est, découvrez les possibilités, un thème qui encourage les personnes âgées à vivre leur vie au maximum. Nous leur devons également, chacun de nous, la responsabilité de les aider à atteindre cet objectif.

Il y a, bien entendu, des actions concrètes que le gouvernement peut faire pour les aider à atteindre cet objectif, et pour aider nos personnes âgées à vieillir avec le respect et la dignité qu'on leur doit. Pour les personnes âgées qui désirent vivre à la maison, nous avons besoin d'un système de soins à domicile robuste, à but non-lucratif et qui offre un service de grande qualité.

As well, we must ensure that seniors aren't forced out of their homes by skyrocketing property taxes. We should implement a freeze-until-sale model, as the NDP has advocated, which would freeze the asset value of their home at its purchase price for as long as they own their home. Also, the Assessment Act should be changed to protect low-income seniors who live in granny flats.

I also hope the government listens to seniors who have concerns about the possible limitations to accessing blister packs for their medication. We're receiving a lot of e-mails about that. These packs help many seniors to remain independent in their homes and manage their medication themselves.

For seniors in retirement homes, it would be great to see how the government plans to better regulate retirement homes. From January to March 2007, well over a year ago, the government held 13 consultations across the province regarding the regulation of retirement homes. Unfortunately, we have seen no movement from the government on this front.

I know seniors are asking for improvements.

Finally, seniors in long-term-care homes deserve a minimum daily standard of 3.5 hours of hands-on care.

As important as this month is, we know that a mere month is not enough to express admiration for the value of our seniors. We must show our commitment through action all year long. New Democrats call on the government to itself discover the possibility of going beyond mere platitudes when it comes to our seniors, who have committed so much to developing this province and have much more to offer yet.

I want to finish by reiterating that New Democrats have always stood, and will always continue to stand, alongside those who worked to build this province and to be their advocates in fighting for the rights, equity, dignity and respect that they deserve. It is our hope that we can work together to do them justice for today and for future generations.

C'était intéressant de voir que le nouveau site Web, www.seniorsinfo.ca, est également disponible aux aînés francophones, mais seulement sous un nom en anglais. Si on est sérieux et qu'on veut que les aînés francophones y participent, il faudrait peut-être penser à le faire en français.

SHEELA BASRUR

Hon. David Caplan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I believe we have unanimous consent for a member of each party to speak for up to five minutes regarding the passing of Dr. Sheela Basrur.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Thank you for this opportunity. I want to take a moment on behalf of Ontarians to celebrate the life, honour the memory and pay tribute to the contribution of a truly remarkable woman, Dr. Sheela Basrur.

Au fil des ans, je me compte parmi les privilégiés qui ont eu l'occasion de travailler avec elle, mais par-dessus tout, j'ai toujours chéri notre amitié. Elle était l'une des femmes les plus fortes que j'ai eu le plaisir de rencontrer.

Over the years I have counted myself blessed to have had the opportunity to work with Sheela, but above all, I will always treasure our friendship. From time to time I would see Sheela in her capacity as our chief medical officer of health, and she was always so keen, so eager, so bursting with energy and enthusiasm. She wanted to tell me about the recent work she had done, and I'd always stop her and say, "Sheela, let's first talk about the important things. Tell me, how is your daughter doing?" And she would smile a smile that would light up this chamber.

I think we reveal ourselves in our unguarded moments, when we talk about those who are closest to us. Sheela always revealed herself to be such a warm, caring and loving mother and person. She brought all of that and then some to her responsibilities. She was also one of the strongest women I've ever had the privilege to meet. She exemplified sound leadership and always carried herself in a way that inspired confidence among the people around her. She was cool, calm, collected, informed, compassionate and reassuring. She met every challenge with the same no-nonsense, calm approach.

When you saw Sheela in action on TV or at a press conference, you knew she was committed to helping you. You knew you could count on her, and you could relax a little because you knew Sheela was on it. Whether it was guiding Toronto through the SARS outbreak, leading the revival of Ontario's public health, answering the call to public service or devoting herself to her family, and her daughter especially, Sheela was on it through everything she touched.

Je sais que son exemple servira de guide à tous ceux et celles qui lui succéderont. C'est sa passion pour le service public qui lui a permis d'avoir une influence aussi extraordinaire sur tous ceux et celles qui ont eu la chance de travailler avec elle et de la connaître.

I know that Sheela's example will guide each of those who come after her. It was her passion for public service that made such an extraordinary impact on all those privileged to have worked with her. Sheela was a true public servant. She believed, and profoundly understood, that the ultimate reward of public service is always to be found in the service itself.

Sheela made a deep impression first as Toronto's medical officer of health and then Ontario's. In the face of SARS and challenges we hadn't seen before, she raised the bar. And because of her poise and stamina, that position is forever elevated in the eyes of Ontarians. We have Sheela to thank for the new heights that public health has reached in Ontario and we will always be moved by all she has done and all that her memory will inspire in the future. So no matter what, even still, Sheela is on it. Her mark and her legacy are now part of the city and our province. She has shown us how to stand firm with grace and good humour, how to make tough calls with calm and how to give the best advice with courage, no matter what.

We are grateful for Sheela's example of devotion to public service, love of family and the warmth of her friendship. She leaves behind a beautiful daughter, Simone, who I know will do well in whatever she pursues. She leaves behind a dear sister and proud parents. I want to take this opportunity to thank the family for the love and support they gave Sheela, and for sharing her with us. I want to assure them that Sheela will live on in the hearts of all those she touched, guided, inspired and cared for. Dr. Sheela Basrur, our Sheela, has made Ontario a better place. We will miss her, but we will never forget her.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of John Tory, the leader of the Progressive Conservative caucus, and the members of my caucus to pay tribute to, and celebrate the life of, Dr. Sheela Basrur. Like all of you, it was with great sadness that we learned of her passing.

I had seen her most recently at what would be one of her final public appearances, the April Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario meeting, where she was recognized with a standing ovation for her outstanding public and personal achievements by a most adoring and appreciative nursing audience. It was obvious that she was a most beloved public servant.

She was there with her daughter, Simone, her parents, her sister and other family members at her side. She was still, that evening, determined to beat her cancer. She was, as always, to all of us, an inspiring example of courage and good humour in the face of her illness. But that night also she was a proud mother and daughter. She was someone who showed us that evening how deeply she cared for her family.

I first had the privilege of meeting Sheela when I was Minister of Health and she was serving as the medical officer of health for the city of Toronto. I soon learned she was one of the most sincere, hard-working, energetic and dedicated health professionals that I have ever had the privilege to meet. She was truly passionate about public health.

She was dedicated to the cause of health promotion. I was pleased to be involved with her when we introduced our anti-tobacco strategy and heart health program.

One characteristic that always impressed me about Sheela, and my staff noticed it too, was that when she decided to undertake a task and focus on that task, she had the ability to motivate and inspire everyone around her. In fact, the entire community came on board to work with her to get the job done.

She was able, during her time, to recruit and retain many qualified and talented health professionals. Her consensus building, her commitment and her passion for public health in Ontario were exemplary. During an impressive career that saw her do all she could to safeguard public health, her efforts in so many fields saved many lives. Foremost was her work on tobacco control, which included the groundbreaking smoke-free Ontario legislation in 2006.

However, one of Sheela's greatest accomplishments and achievements, for which the public will always remember her, was her strong performance during the 2003 SARS crisis. She earned the trust, respect and admiration of all Ontarians for the extraordinary leadership and quiet confidence she exhibited during this challenging time. She was the calm, reassuring voice of reason. Her grace in the face of tremendous pressure will never be forgotten, as each day she calmed the public fears with her briefings. It was her tireless efforts during the SARS crisis that led her to the position of Ontario's chief medical officer of health in 2004.

Throughout her career, she inspired all those who worked with her. Her colleagues have told me that she was a remarkable mentor and a role model for young women entering the field of public health. And lo and behold, today, when I was reading the Globe and Mail, there was a letter to the editor from a young woman, Liane MacDonald of Toronto, who had not met Sheela but had written to her, and she says, "Today, I'm in the midst of my training in community medicine, thanks in no small part to having an extraordinary role model in Dr. Basrur."

Her colleagues say she commanded respect and got the job done. She had a sharp intellect, was cool under fire, and was an extremely compassionate and gifted communicator. Although her loss is enormous, her inspiring leadership and her commitment and enthusiasm for public health live on in her many achievements. She is a public servant who truly earned the respect and gratitude of all Ontarians.

In recent months, she also earned the respect of, and served as an inspiration to, those whose lives have been touched with cancer as she shared her personal experiences. Sheela leaves behind a legacy. She was, and is, a remarkable, honest and courageous woman, daughter and mother.

On behalf of John Tory and our caucus, I want to extend our deepest and sincere sympathy to her daughter, Simone, and her parents, her sister, her family and her friends. Our thoughts and our prayers are with all of them at this time.

Mr. Michael Prue: It is my honour and my privilege to say a few words about Sheela today. People in the public knew her as a courageous doctor, mostly around the SARS crisis. Politicians, including all of us, and the press knew her as a champion of public health. We knew her for her many, many accomplishments. We knew her for the smoking bans in restaurants and in public spaces. We knew her as being a leader in the banning of pesticides and in the DineSafe legislation in Toronto, which was the first in Canada. We knew her for her discussions of childhood obesity and for Smoke-Free Ontario.

But I was one who knew her, I think, much better than that. I've known her for 20 years. I knew her as a friend and as a colleague. I remember our first introduction. That day I was a rookie councillor in the borough of East York, in my first stint on the board of health, and she was introduced as the new associate medical officer of health who was brought in for her first stint, her first public job. She had finished university and come to work in the board of health.

I looked at her and you can imagine how young she looked 20 years ago, and even what she looked like until the time of her death. I remember seeing her, and although she was at that time probably in her very early 30s, she looked to me to be not much more than a teenager, a very slight, small woman, but a woman of intense and immense promise.

She was introduced and all of us went to work with her. Right away, at that first meeting, we voted for her to be the associate medical officer of health, not because we knew her but upon the advice of the medical officer of health. It was over a length of time that passed that we got to know her so much more.

We first worked with her on the first ban of smoking in restaurants, which took place in East York. Other cities were doing that too, but Sheela was that gifted and that smart that she was able to look at the smoking bans that were surrounding us in other places like Toronto and North York and advise the board of health and the council not to do it that way. In fact, as theirs were struck down in the courts, ours continued and was extant throughout the entire period. She was that good and that intelligent, even in terms of the law, that she knew where to go.

In 1990 she gave birth to a daughter, and of course you can imagine that around the borough of East York the medical officer of health was there and was very much pregnant. She continued in her job. She went away to give birth to Simone and came back very quickly thereafter. It was amazing over the years, as a councillor and as mayor, not only to see Sheela constantly, but to see Simone grow up before my very eyes, to watch her inside the borough of East York office, running up and down the halls as children are wont to do, or obeying her mother, which children are often not wont to do. Sheela had very firm and very careful control of her daughter, and her daughter was very much attached, even in those young times.

Sheela went on to be confirmed as the medical officer of health for the borough of East York and she did wonderful things. We became a teaching health unit, which was a real coup for the smallest municipality in what was then Metropolitan Toronto. She came out with a pesticide ban, and we were all very proud of the dandelions that grew on our front lawn; they were Sheela's dandelions, because she convinced us that they too were beautiful.

She was at innumerable public meetings at night. She would always leave as soon as we were finished to go home to her family, but she was there offering sage and wise counsel to politicians who were often reluctant to take it, whether it be the banning of pesticides or smoking in restaurants, because we had constituents who didn't want to go there.

After amalgamation, she was chosen as the medical officer of health for the new city of Toronto, and I was proud to be there as well. We had many candidates that we interviewed but she was clearly the best, and by unanimous consent of the city of Toronto, she became our new medical officer of health. I can remember all of the fights, all of the conflicts that she had with some members who just didn't see it right. But she persevered when people wanted to allow smoking in restaurants and various rooms with smoke eaters, convincing all of us that that wasn't the way to go. I remember her passionate arguments about the restaurant guides which we now see in every restaurant in Toronto: the green, the yellow and the red. You don't want to eat in the red ones. She told us, "Don't eat in the red ones," and it was very good advice from her as well. Today we take all of those things for granted. They were her initiatives.

She also, as the medical officer of health, did something that I never saw any other public employee able to accomplish in the new megacity of Toronto: In every single budget, from the time of amalgamation until she left, there were increases for the board of health and for public health initiatives. You couldn't say that in works, in parks and recreation and in all the myriad other duties, but in public health she was able to convince our council and the mayor to go that route.

Of course, she's best known for SARS, and we still think of her, as one child described her, as the SARS lady. She was seen around the world and gained great prominence.

She won innumerable awards. We all know about most of them—the Amethyst Award, the Order of Ontario, the honorary doctorates—but the people of East York had one last award to give. There was a reunion on April 5 of this year. We found some little statues that we gave out to East York's finest called the Bulldog Award. Three of these were found after amalgamation and we kept them for 10 years and wondered who to give them to. We had a large contest for the East Yorker who had made the greatest contribution to our community in those 10 years since amalgamation. One of those recipients was Sheela. We sent the Bulldog to her in the hospital through the former commissioner of parks and recreation of the borough of East York, and we note that she received it in the same way and with the same gratitude as she received what some might have considered more prestigious awards.

We recognize her for everything she was to us. In her obituary in the paper in the last couple of days there are words that say she "died as she had lived: with honesty and courage," and I think that's true. We send our heartfelt sympathies to Simone, to Sheela's parents, to her sister, to her family and to all of those who loved her.

Sheela loved words and she loved poetry, so I'd like, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, to quote a couple of lines from the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, which I know she appreciated. It reads as follows:

For some we loved, the loveliest and the best
That from his Vintage rolling Time hath prest,
Have drunk their Cup a Round or two before,
And one by one crept silently to rest.

Godspeed, Sheela. We will miss you and we will forever remember how you changed our lives. Thank you.

1600

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd ask the members to please rise and join me in a moment of silence in tribute to the life and the career of Dr. Sheela Basrur.

The House observed a moment's silence.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. I will see that copies of the Hansard of all three deliveries are sent to the family in tribute to her career.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS

Hon. David Caplan: I move that a Select Committee on Elections be appointed to consider the current effectiveness of the Election Act, the Election Finances Act and the Representation Act in the preparation, administration and delivery of elections in Ontario, and to report to the House its opinions, observations and recommendations concerning amendments to these acts; and

That the committee may present or, if the House is not sitting, may release by depositing with the Clerk of the House, interim reports; and

That the committee shall present or, if the House is not sitting, shall release by depositing with the Clerk of the House, its final report to the assembly no later than the last day of the spring session of 2009; and

That the committee have authority to meet at the call of the Chair; to call for persons, papers and things; to employ counsel and staff; and, as the committee deems relevant to its terms of reference, to commission reports and adjourn from place to place; and

That in the event of, and notwithstanding, any prorogation of the House before the presentation of the committee's final report, the committee shall be deemed to be continued to the subsequent session or sessions and may continue to meet during any such prorogation; and

That the committee may examine any other matter it deems relevant to its terms of reference; and

That the committee shall be composed of two government members, one member of the official opposition, and one member of the third party. It shall be chaired by a member of the government. The membership of the committee, including the identification of the Chair, shall be filed with the Clerk of the Assembly by the whips of the recognized parties no later than Thursday June 26, 2008.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Mr. Caplan has moved government notice of motion number 84. Debate?

Mr. David Zimmer: I'm just going to speak for a few minutes, but I think, just to lay the groundwork, that about the best thing I can do in this debate is read into the record a letter from the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer of Ontario, John Hollins. It's dated June 4, 2008, and it's addressed to Premier McGuinty.

"Dear Premier:

"The Election Act, the Election Finances Act and the Representation Act, 2005, define how provincial elections work. The existing statutes, which have been amended in an incremental manner over the last 30 years, need to be comprehensively reviewed. The electors of Ontario need to be served by a coordinated and modern legislation, with consistent language, that upholds the principles of access, integrity, and modern electoral management.

"I am therefore writing to the leaders of all parties represented in the House, following the 2007 general election, to highlight some of the changes that I recommend as necessary for the future administration of elections in Ontario.

"Outdated and overly prescriptive legislative requirements governing how people obtain and cast their ballots are a cause of frustration for electors and poll officials alike.

"Voter turnout continues to grow at advance polls. Electors would be best served by provisions that would allow for greater flexibility in opening advance polls at more convenient times and places.

"Ontarians can vote in federal elections using a special ballot but they do not have this opportunity in provincial elections. Such a measure would ensure greater accessibility for all electors.

"Now is the time to review, design and implement a staffing model and voting process that better serves electors—whether they are in isolated northern communities or major urban centres.

"These are" but "three examples of improvements that require legislative change.

"I encourage the establishment of a committee to review Ontario's election laws with a view to modernizing the administration of elections.

"I thank all of you for your consideration of these recommendations."

It's signed John Hollins, Chief Electoral Officer, Ontario.

That last sentence, "Now is the time to review, design and implement a staffing model ... that better serves electors": These are but three of the examples of improvement that require legislative change. I encourage the establishment of the committee to review this.

That's exactly what the notice of motion that is before us today deals with. It sets up a committee. The committee, as you've heard, will be composed of four members: two government members, a member from the official opposition and a member from the third party. The committee will be charged with the responsibility of delivering its report in June 2009, and the terms of reference are set out in the motion.

I've been through two elections now, 2003 and 2007. Many of my colleagues here have been through elections for the last 30 years. With the experience of two elections under my belt in a busy urban riding, I have seen, as a newcomer, just in my mind, things that I think should be addressed, should be changed and should be fine-tuned so that the electors, if you will, enjoy the process of getting out to vote, are encouraged by the process of getting out to vote and can be assured that their votes that are cast are going to be quickly and accurately counted, that the voters lists are accurately maintained and that we take advantage of all the advances in technology, management and other tools that are available to us in the year 2008 that perhaps weren't available in 1969, which was the last time the Election Act was looked at.

So on the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer, this motion has been brought before us. I understand, without presuming the intent of this chamber, that my colleagues in the other parties are also looking forward to this process of reviewing, updating, refining, finding best practices and so on. For those reasons I urge all of my colleagues in this chamber to support this motion.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate?

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: I think we have agreed there are no questions and comments with regard to the remarks this afternoon. I will be somewhat brief.

I want to say, and I hesitated ever saying, that I think that this is a proper and correct step to take with regard to refining or changing our laws with regard to elections. I'm talking about the composition of the committee and the procedure we are going to go through in order to do this. I think it's proper that the committee not be dominated, as all other committees in our Legislature at the present are, by the government members. This committee will have four members, and it will have an equal number of opposition members and government members.

I look forward to working with this committee, perhaps as the nominee for the opposition party on the committee. What I think should take place here is a meeting of the minds of the various different parties as to the terms of reference of this particular committee. I know the member for Willowdale has pointed out the letter that the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. John Hollins, who is retiring and leaving that position, has written to the Premier on June 4. He sent a copy of that letter to the opposition leader as well—and, I think, correctly.

You know that we had some changes to our election laws not long ago, two or three years ago, and we have now experienced an election under those new rules. I believe that new experiences were gained in the 2007 election as a result of those changes in those laws. Some of those changes that occurred, in the opinion of those of us in the Legislature, were good, and some we didn't think were so good. We'll have an opportunity to review those particular rules as we go forward.

One of the things that I think this committee should do is that we should, first of all, offer each and every member of this Legislative Assembly the opportunity to come in front of the committee and relate to the committee their personal experiences around different subject matters. Whether it's advance polls, whether it's the production of identification in order to get your ballot, whether it's the location of the polls, whether we should be having the election on a weekday or on the weekend, as the returning officer for my particular area, Carleton-Mississippi Mills, held out—he thinks, and I think it's a good suggestion, that we should talk about whether we should have the election on a Saturday, rather than on a weekday. This is particularly important, as pointed out by him, because we have so many polls now in schools, and there's a danger to the schoolchildren as cars pull in and out of those schools. There's great concern by the school officials, the principals, that some of these children might be hurt. It also would allow, I think, many more people to participate in the election on Saturday, as most people in our society, at the present time, do not work on those dates, although there are some who do.

I think suggestions like that by individual members of the Legislature in the right context would give good direction to the committee, going forward, as to how we might run better elections and offer more people the opportunity to vote.

I do want to say one caution here. It's been my experience, having had a long time in this Legislature—I think the member from Willowdale said that many of his colleagues have been here for 30 years, and I just want to straighten out that there are only two of us who have been here for 30 years: the member for St. Catharines and me. I don't want to share that with everybody. But in reading literature about elections and how elections are performed, not only in this jurisdiction but in other jurisdictions, I guess I would tread carefully when going to new mechanisms—and I don't like the word “modernization” of our electoral process. I look at the historical context of this and, over time, we have learned a lot about the election process and election days. I know in some states in the United States where they've gone to voting machines, they are now going back to paper ballots because of the ability of—

Mr. Michael Prue: They ended up with George Bush.

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: Well, they ended up, in some cases, with what some people thought was an inconclusive result and it was impossible for them—I'm trying to keep this non-partisan, Mr. Speaker. I do hope the member from York East won't be a member of the committee because he's already expressed some political bias in this debate.

Mr. Michael Prue: No, no.

I look at this a little bit like the development of our laws in the common law system, where we sort of developed an area of law over a long period of time, and we should not be ready to abandon quickly what has worked in the past. We should think clearly about the fact that a lot of people in our society, a lot of our elderly people, are still not familiar with the computer age, and that their understanding of the process is as important as “modernizing the process.” But we will be discussing all of that as we go forward.

The motion clearly gives the committee the ability to have a wide scope of interpretation as to what they may look into or not look into. But in the final analysis, if the committee does not get along and come to almost a unanimous decision with regard to where they're going, it will be very unlikely that we will see legislation that will change things in here. If we have people trying to stretch the mandate of the committee too far, or if we get ourselves involved in issues where there is great reluctance on the part of one of the political parties, it's unlikely that legislation will change so that that will be accommodated. I think that the members of the committee must work together jointly to try to find common ground to improve the process that we have.

I look forward as well to talking not only to members of the Legislature but talking, if I am a member of the committee, to the chief financial officers of campaigns, to people who are actually on the ground and volunteering to work on the campaigns that we have at the provincial level.

We have seen some innovation across our country, and I look forward to talking with some of those people in the other jurisdictions of our country in order to determine and take the best that they have experienced from their elections as well.

I think this is a good first step towards reform. I look forward, if I should be appointed to the committee, to working with other members to find common ground, but the bottom line of our position and my position might be or would be that it's got to be there for the elector. We want to encourage more people to get involved in the election. We want to have a more open process. We would like to offer more opportunities for people to be able to vote, but we are also insistent that there be integrity in the elections as well.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate?

Mr. Michael Prue: A bit of a difficult bill here, or a difficult motion. We've only been apprised of it for the last day or two in order to start to prepare to think what we may want to do. Although New Democrats welcome the opportunity to study the Elections Act, the finance act and everything that goes around elections in Ontario, we think the bill may be somewhat circumscribed. It may be too narrow in its scope. But I am given some hope in reading the last paragraph or two, saying that the committee itself has the authority to expand the scope. I trust that is the intent of this particular motion, because if we are simply going to look at the rules and procedures of election day and a couple of other minor things, the all-party committee may be somewhat overblown. But if we're going to start looking at what is really the problem or the potential problem here in Ontario, then I think we have to look at a great many other things.

The first one I want to talk about is election financing. Ontario is lagging behind the other provinces in terms of election financing and is certainly lagging behind the Canadian experience. The government of Canada in its wisdom some number of years ago set about a radical change to election finances in Canada. By and large, I would suggest, they have done a very good job in taking away the influence of big money and corporations and big unions from the democratic process. I'm going to deal with that a little bit more in just a minute. Other provinces have come on board and have done similar things. The governments of Manitoba and Quebec have passed similar legislation to allow ordinary citizenry to shape the way in which their governments operate, to ensure that election finances are the property of the people and not of the moneyed interests, are the property of ordinary citizens and not the property of wealthy corporations or wealthy unions who are able to influence unduly the final outcome.

It seems to me that they have taken this major step with very few deleterious effects—very few whatsoever. I am unaware of a single negative comment emanating from either of those provinces or from the people who live in those provinces that those rules have done anything except help the democratic process. I think this committee has an obligation to look in that same direction. Can we change the Election Finances Act to actually make for fairer, better and more democratic elections in Ontario? I think we can, and I hope this is included once the committee is structured and has its first couple of meetings.

Second is the whole idea around corporations and their influence in Ontario. We know what the influence was in Canada prior to the changes to their election finances act federally. We know that they were untoward in terms of where the monies came from. I only have to look back to the last election here in Ontario to see exactly where the money was flowing from—excuse me, not the last election, but the one before that. I don't have all of the details from the last one; it's too new.

We know that money from corporations and unions made up 40% of all contributions flowing into the three major political parties. That's where the money came from. So 60% came from ordinary citizens, but 40% came from a very select group of people who had the money and, through their money, were able to influence the democratic process.

We also know that in particular for the two larger or older parties, those being the Liberals and Conservatives, that was even more elevated. Liberals took in some 45% of their funding from corporate interests and the Progressive Conservatives took in over half from corporate interests. Now some may say, "What difference does this make?" Some may wonder, "Who cares whether the CEOs of the Bank of Montreal and General Motors and all these other large corporations are handing out money to political parties? It's harmless. It's safe. It's okay."

I only have to give one very famous quote about corporate donors. This was a fundraiser/developer by the name of Silvio DeGasperi. I think some of the Liberals may know him kind of well. He went to a $10,000-a-plate Liberal fundraiser and he was asked by the press why he had attended. Why was he there? Why was he giving $10,000? His answer was very blunt. He said, "I wanted to speak to Dalton about my development issue in Pickering. I knew the reason I was there." So for $10,000 in a fundraiser, you can get the ear of the Premier of Ontario.

I don't say that the Liberals spent the money in any way untoward other than to buy television advertising or whatever else they wanted with the money, which is allowed under the law, but it's very clear how the money was obtained.

We believe, in the New Democratic Party, that the time has come to do away with both corporate and—I underline the "and"—union donations. We think it's time that ordinary citizens funded the political parties, ordinary citizens with small amounts of money, limited to $1,000 or less if we can do that. Fund the political party so that the level of interference, the level of expectation is reduced, so that politicians are not beholden to people who pay $10,000 to have dinner with the Premier or a cabinet minister or a member of the opposition. Certainly, that is an idea whose time has come.

We also think it's fair for a second reason. That is because if you are a member, a shareholder or a controller of a large corporation or a union, you often are able to make two donations—one through your corporation or your union, and a second one individually. We know from looking at a lot of the records, going back in the periods prior to the last election, that is precisely what has happened in Ontario. We have seen people make a large donation from their particular organization, then we have seen those selfsame people and members of the executive or members of the boards of directors make a comparable donation. So not only can you make one through your body, but you can make a second one individually, the body having paid you to make that donation. We think it's a loophole, a lacuna in the law that needs to be closed. We hope the committee will talk about this, because the election finances are probably the chief thing that needs to be talked about.

We know from examples, public financing, what those examples are. Just to be absolutely clear, federally, each party receives 50% of the expenses incurred if it obtains 2% of the valid votes overall or 5% of valid votes in electoral districts where it ran a candidate. So it's a fairly low margin, and you start to get money back. So even though the same amounts of money cannot be collected because corporations and unions may be shut out, the federal government reimburses candidates who are serious candidates in the electoral process to make sure that the system can function.

In Quebec, they do something similar. In Quebec, if a party receives 1% of the votes, the party receives 50% of incurred expenses, to a maximum of 60 cents per elector, for all electoral divisions in which it ran candidates. This would be very beneficial, I think, to some small parties in Ontario, but it also is extremely and eminently fair. It has a fairly low threshold in the province of Quebec.

In Manitoba, if a party receives 10% of the valid votes, it receives the lesser of 50% of the expenses limit and 50% of the actual expenses. So they're a little bit less generous, but still, there is something in place that allows this to happen.

Last, but not least, in Saskatchewan, if a party obtains 15% of the valid votes, it receives 50% of incurred expenses for all electoral divisions in which it ran candidates.

As I said, contrast this with Ontario, where it is pretty much a free-for-all. You can raise enormous amounts of money, $7,500 per corporation. You can raise monies from unions, you can raise monies—and you can expect those same people to have some control in the future electoral process. Even though politicians by and large will deny it, and even though, by and large, I trust them all to be honourable members and not to seek that kind of influence, the influence is nonetheless expected.

The second issue I want to deal with is real-time disclosure. Right now, we have a law in the province of Ontario that mandates that within 10 days of a party receiving money over $100 and depositing the money, the information must be on Election Ontario's website of the contribution being reported. But here again, there is a huge lacuna in the law. Of course, if the money is received centrally within 10 days, there is an expectation that that will show up on the books within 10 days. But parties get around this in the province of Ontario, and they ought not to be allowed to do so, simply by having people donate money to the local riding association. The local riding association, in turn, delivers the money to the central office if they are wont to do so. That does not have to be, and is not, reported within 10 days.

So it is very eminently possible for a person to hold a fundraiser in the province of Ontario to collect huge amounts of money and have that not reported on the government website. It's not reported because it is done through the local riding association, and the local riding association only has to report that once a year. I would suggest that if monies are collected, it makes no difference to the taxpayers and no difference to the fairness of how this happens whether it is done centrally or in the riding association.

We have the technology available that that can be put online in a matter of days, whether it is taken locally or centrally. It ought to be part of the law. I am hoping that, when the committee meets, this is discussed.

Thirdly, we believe the rules enabling citizens' assemblies and citizen juries have to be changed. We just went through a process in the province of Ontario, the first one in many years. I want to take my hat off to all the citizens who volunteered, who were part of the citizens' committee. They came literally from every single riding in this province, all 107 of them plus a chair. They came together in order to discuss ways to change the way we vote for politicians in Ontario.

Their ultimate recommendation was not successful. It passed in only five of the ridings out of the 107 and was refused in the others. That does not, for even a moment, take away what their accomplishments were: the many hours, the many weeks, the many months that they sat there, studying the proposals to try to come up with a better system than the one we have here now. But, ultimately, the whole exercise was bound to fail. It was bound to fail because this Legislature set a goal that was impossible for any realistic change to actually accede. They put a goal that there had to be a vote of at least 60% in favour, and a second condition of a yes vote in more than 50% of the valid referendum ballots cast in 60% of the ridings, at least 64 electoral districts.

I am unaware of any place in this country, other than British Columbia in one vote, that put forward such a requirement. It was nearly impossible to meet. Fair Vote Canada put out a statement on this that I think needs to be read into the record, because they're absolutely right. I quote Fair Vote—actually, it was Fair Vote Ontario; excuse me.

"No government raises the bar for its own legislation, which often has far-reaching effect on the lives of Canadians.

"No politician has ever refused to accept a seat" in Parliament or a provincial Legislature "due to failure to win 60% of the votes. Many gladly take their seats, despite winning less than 50% or even less than 40% of the votes in their ridings.

"In fact, thanks to the current voting system, most 'majority' governments in Canada gain power without winning a majority of votes."

They are absolutely right. But when we set up a new experiment with citizens' juries, when we ask people to give of their expertise and their time—and, in the end, they are ultimately frustrated before the vote is even taken because of the impossibly high bar. If this committee is going to meet, I am asking this committee to also look at the impossibly high bar that was set by this Legislature prior to the last referendum. If we are serious about involving ordinary citizens and if we are serious in our desire to make democracy work, then we have to make democracy work in the only way it has ever been shown to truly work in this country, and that is to have a majority prevail. You cannot ask for a supermajority and a double supermajority to make change. If that is the case, then change would be nearly impossible to make. If we are to hold future referendums—and I would suggest the idea has some currency, and there may be others perhaps on different matters in the coming years—then we have to make it so that ordinary citizens can effect the change and they are not frustrated in the end by a 60% double majority rule.

I also think what happened in the last election was a bit of a shame. Notwithstanding the citizens' recommendation, it was very poorly conveyed to the electorate. I know that people were coming into my campaign office in the days leading up to the election asking what the referendum was all about. They didn't understand it. It wasn't explained. And trying to tell them the reality—that the citizens were recommending that there be two votes, one for the candidate of your choice and one for the party of your choice—seemed not to be well understood. It was a very simple concept, but the way it was conveyed by the Chief Electoral Officer—and I cast no aspersions on him—was highly technical and was very difficult for them to understand. If we are to put questions before the people of Ontario, we need to spend much more on the education process. We need to put it in much simpler terms and we need to make sure that the electorate, who ultimately vote, are informed.

Fourth, I want to talk about enumeration. This is an old bugaboo of mine. I will continue to say that we need to have a proper enumeration system in this province. Other provinces have a proper enumeration system. They pay people to go around to check the electoral rolls. We have a very sophisticated system through income tax, we have a very sophisticated system if a house or property is sold, but very often people are left out. The people who are left out most often are the young, if they change and turn 18 years of age from the time of the last vote that preceded it. If they are new immigrants who have become Canadian citizens, they are unlikely to be on the electoral roll. That affects places like big cities, particularly Toronto, but certainly small towns and places all across Ontario, as we are a country and a province of immigrants. They tend to be left out. And last but not least, and perhaps most importantly, we have tenants who move from one building to another. The average tenancy is only about two and a half years—as a tenant in an apartment in Ontario—and then they move. So it is highly likely that the majority of tenants who were in a building are not in that same building four years later when the next Ontario election takes place. The majority of them are not there.

I would suggest we have an obligation to put down an enumeration process. It need not be as difficult as it was when I was much younger and was an enumerator for a couple of elections, where you literally went out door to door. It could be that you have a list and you simply read off the list and say, "This is who we had here the last time," if you don't find them, or, "Can you confirm that these are the same two voters?" You don't have to fill anything out but it still needs to be done.

I will tell you the difficulty of enumeration as it has personally affected me, as a politician of some 20 years. When I was first a candidate for this Legislature, in the by-election in 2001, I went down to register my name as a candidate for the New Democratic Party only to find to my chagrin that I was not on the voters list. I thought this was rather strange, since I had lived in the same house for some 25 years before that.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Hell, you were the mayor.

Mr. Michael Prue: I was the mayor, and there I was, but I wasn't on the voters list. So I had myself listed on the voters list. I thought this was very strange. I checked the income tax records, and of course I was up to date on my income tax, and they had conveyed that the box was ticked off. I wondered why I wasn't on the voters list. So I registered, and that was fine in that election. Then when I went back to vote in the next federal election, I found that my name was not on the voters list. So I went into the self-same office, although it was now federal and not provincial, and I had my name registered on the voters list. I had neither moved nor changed occupations. People still knew me as the mayor, they knew me as the local MPP, but I was not on the list. So I had myself registered again and I voted in that election. The next election, I went back to find out whether I was on the voters list and I was not on the voters list. I had to put my name down again on the voter's list, to live in the same house, to be the same person. And in this last election, for the last time, I had to go and put my name on the voters list again.

Mr. Jeff Leal: You're kidding.

Mr. Michael Prue: No, and the reason was that somebody had taken the opportunity for fraud—you know, people are smart. One person had sent in a letter to the post office that said that I had moved, in order to have my mail transferred and in order to take advantage of the banks. One person, once. That caused that kind of grief to an individual who has been in the same house and lived on the same street for 20-some years. That's because no enumeration took place.

If that could happen to me, think about ordinary citizens out there. Think about ordinary citizens and the difficulty they have not being on the voters list. Think about some of the older people who come into the campaign offices—you probably have all had them—on the days leading up to election day, and they're not on the voters list. You have to take them up there, they have to swear oaths and they have to take two pieces of identification. They get extremely frustrated. They go from polling station to polling station because they don't actually know which one they're supposed to go to because they didn't get a card either. It is extremely frustrating.

If you want to know why the numbers keep dropping off, I would swear that at least 1% to 2% of the drop-off in every election is people who are not on the list, who are frustrated getting on the list, and finally give up on election day after having gone from polling station to polling station and finding out (a) they don't have two pieces of identification; (b) somebody has already voted in their name, because the fraud is still possible; and (c) it's just that the stuff hasn't been done.

I think we need to look at this. Will it cost some money? Yeah, it will cost some money. But will it be fairer in the end? Will the tenants, will the young people, will the new citizens all be counted? Will people have the right to have their name on there and be able to see it, and not have it changed simply by someone sending a letter into the post office because they want to make you the subject of some kind of mail fraud? These are important things that we need to talk about, and we need to do it.

Some provinces, including, I think, Prince Edward Island, still do a 100% enumeration. If we don't want to go down that route, I still think the committee should talk about having an enumeration in places where there is a need and where they do not have a list that the Chief Electoral Officer in each of the locations thinks is good enough. We need to inform people and households where there does not appear to be a name on the list, to ensure that it has not been taken off inaccurately.

This committee is going to talk about a number of things. One of them is one of the key issues in legislative reform, and it's not really covered in the motion: that is, question period. I don't have to tell the members who are here, even the Liberal members, that moving question period to the morning has been an unqualified disaster. I have heard so many people in the Liberal Party outside of here who don't want—

Hon. David Caplan: Oh, come on. Name names.

Mr. Michael Prue: No, I'm not naming names. They come to me in confidence, and they say that this is not to their liking. They say it's not working.

Hon. David Caplan: Name names.

Mr. Michael Prue: Probably you, then, okay? I would think that the cabinet ministers have a reason to like this because it largely frees up their afternoons; that's what I think.

But I'm not sure that the ordinary backbenchers, some of whom have come to me and said, "It's not working"—I think we should talk about it, because I don't believe it is working. I don't believe it's democratic and I don't believe it's fair. Certainly the press is opposed to it, and the only expert who came before the committee to talk about this said that the idea was a really bad one. Governments are full of bad ideas, and this is one of them. I'd like to quote that expert because he said it very well. Graham White, in his letter, said it very well:

"I cannot imagine that any neutral observer could disagree that moving question period into the morning would very seriously detract from the strongest accountability mechanism available to the opposition. Particularly since majority government is the norm in Ontario, it is vitally important for the people's elected representatives to be able to hold the government to account for its policy and administration. To be sure, question period can, on occasion, descend into bickering, grandstanding and silliness, but it remains by far the most effective mechanism for fostering government accountability and, by extension, for keeping the people of Ontario aware of their government's successes and failures. It is most certainly the only legislative proceeding to which the media pays regular attention."

We believe that if we're going to sit down and talk, there has to be some meaningful discussion, not a government bent and determined on changing the rules of this Legislature because they have a majority to do so against the will of the combined opposition. Sure you have 70 members, but what you did was not right, and what you did is having repercussions against some of your own members.

Hon. David Caplan: Speaker, I don't believe him. I think he's making it up.

Mr. Michael Prue: You can believe anything you want, but if you don't believe the truth when it comes out of my mouth, what can I do?

We also think that another thing needs to be examined, and that is the committee structure and how it does or does not work within the Legislature. We have seen, unfortunately, under this government, a couple of committees be hamstrung on what the committees can and cannot hear, what they can and cannot consider and what they can and cannot vote upon. I think the most glaring example is that the Liberal majority is blocking consideration with the excuse that their House leader hasn't directed them to consider private members' bills. I know that my own colleague from Hamilton East-Stoney Creek's private member's bill—I believe it's Bill 6—was frustrated. It's not that his bill was turned down but that the Liberal majority refused to even hear it in committee, although it was properly before the committee. They voted—all of the Liberal members—not to hear it, with the excuse that their government House leader had not granted them that permission.

With the greatest of respect, if we believe in the committee process in this House, if we believe that once the bill leaves this legislative floor and goes to committee that we have to allow the legislative committee the option to exercise their discretion and to consider the bill, the committee should be able to call witnesses. The committee should be able to hear deputations. The committee should be able to make amendments to bills, and then they should send them back to the Legislature.

I have no doubt that when it comes back for third reading, it would be the prerogative of the government House leader whether or not to call it. But to stop the process from even hearing deputants, to stop the process from making amendments, to stop bills that have been approved by this Legislature for committee I think is reprehensible. The government ought to just consider what is happening. If the government members on the committee—and they have a majority in, I believe, every case, so although they don't have the Chair of every committee, they do have a majority on every committee within this Legislature—don't want to vote for the bill, they can vote "no." If they want to vote "yes" and send it back to this House and the government House leader doesn't want it to go to third reading, it won't go to third reading. But we have an obligation to every single member of this House who has a private member's bill to allow it to proceed. That includes Liberal backbenchers who have some very good bills before the House.

Mr. Michael Prue: David Zimmer's regulation of tow trucks is probably a fine example. I know that the other day, there was a bill put forward by the member from Brampton Centre, I believe, on fire sprinklers. It received the unanimous approval of this House. I do not want to see it stymied in committee and the committee not be allowed to hear it, the committee not be allowed to have deputants or make recommendations to the House. If it comes back to the House after the committee is finished and the government House leader doesn't want to deal with it, that's a matter for the Liberal caucus, but it is not, I would suggest, a matter of shutting it down in committee simply because the government House leader doesn't want it to proceed. I don't know what authority the government House leader has in the committee of which he is not a member. Perhaps the backbenchers should be asking themselves that and perhaps we should be dealing with this in the all-party committee.

A few other things, before I run out of time here, in terms of what other provinces do and what we need to look at. I have something here entitled the Addition of Votes, and it shows the deposits required of candidates in all of the provinces, and federally, in order to run. Members will know that the courts in Ontario have struck down the provision that candidates who receive less than 10% of the vote can't get their deposit back. You know that that has been deemed unconstitutional and unfair to people who run for smaller parties. Recently, all of the candidates—not from this past election but the one before that—were ordered to get their refund of $200 back. I know that many candidates who were not successful, who did not get 10% of the vote, have in fact applied—it may have been 15% in those days—to get their money back. But Ontario, on its books, still requires a $200 deposit.

I am not convinced that we ought to be requiring that deposit, in view of the fact that it now universally must be returned, notwithstanding people's failure to get 15% of the vote. So I think the committee needs to look at that. We are one of the only provinces that has stuck with that. Other provinces do charge various amounts of money, anywhere from $100 to $200 to $300, but the provision is now illegal in terms of keeping the money, as the province has done in the past. I would hope that the committee, in its wisdom, looks at that and does not confine itself to the narrow basis set out in the first couple of paragraphs of the motion.

There are other things that need to be looked at as well, and that is the whole issue of polling divisions, polling stations and polling day. Each province sets up a separate electoral period, Ontario's being 28. I believe 28 is, in fact, the absolute minimum. Some have polling days that have a minimum of 26 to a maximum of 32, but in Ontario it must be 28 days. It's set in statute; it's four weeks. I don't know why we have done that in the past. Maybe we need to look at that.

In any event, what is somewhat disturbing is Ontario's fixed date of the first Thursday in October, because the very first time that we ever set that fixed date, it fell into a religious holiday and had to be changed. So we certainly have no history. If there is a better mechanism of setting the date, then it should be set. If we are going to run into religious holidays, I would suggest that there are so many religions, and justifiably so, in Ontario, there are so many holidays from such disparate groups, that no matter how the date is set, this may happen. I would suggest that the all-party committee look at fixing a better date. If the first time it failed, obviously it's not set in stone, so let's look at fixing a better date.

Those are some of the things that I think need to be done. I am asking that when the all-party committee is struck, it not be limited to the couple of small items that are set out at the start of the preamble to this motion, but that it be allowed to completely explore all aspects of the election process, including financing, voting procedures, enumeration and everything else that I've touched upon today. If the committee is able to do that, then I believe it will serve a worthwhile purpose. If it is merely set up to discuss the arcane and picayune details that it seems to be bent on looking at, it will do very little service to this House or to the people of Ontario.

I ask the members opposite, in setting up the committee, to allow the committee full rein to discuss that which needs to be discussed, and to have the committee report back in the appropriate term of ways that we can make the electoral system in Ontario fairer than it is today.

Mr. Peter Kormos: I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion. I want to indicate that people should be very aware of what, in fact, they'll be voting for or against when this motion goes to a vote. There are a couple of things. One is that while the committee has its terms of reference provided for it in the motion, those terms of reference are meaningless because the committee has the power, by mere majority vote, to deem anything it wants to be relevant and then to include that, by the very process of deeming it to be relevant. In other words, it can turn an elephant into a lion; it can change blue to red; it can engage in all sorts of Orwellian exercises; it can make a fat person skinny, or a skinny person fat, just by saying so.

Let's make that very, very clear. The motion sets out terms of reference at the very onset: the "effectiveness of the Election Act, the Election Finances Act and the Representation Act in the preparation, administration and delivery of elections...." But the committee may examine any other matter it "deems relevant to its terms of reference...."

That means that its scope can be unlimited, literally unlimited. It has the power to look at standing orders. It has the power to look at the location of the Parliament. It can travel the world, looking for more attractive climates in which to build a Queen's Park building. It can do any of those things. Let's make that very, very clear.

The other issue is in terms of the final paragraph here. I was concerned about the language used in the final paragraph in terms of describing the makeup of the committee. The motion says, "That the committee shall be composed of two government members, one member of the official opposition"—that's the Conservative Party—"and one member of the third party"; that's the New Democratic Party.

As a matter of fact, the committee could recommend that we end this silliness of referring to New Democrats as "the third party" and simply say, "the other opposition party."

Mr. Michael Prue: The effective opposition party.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Mr. Prue notes.

I've sought the counsel of the Clerk's table, and I am reassured that the language—because it says, "two government members, one member of the official opposition, and one member of the third party," and then that a government member shall be the Chair of the committee. I was concerned that that meant there would be four members of the committee plus a Chair. I'm assured that that language means very clearly that there will be three members of the committee plus a Chair, the Chair has to be a member of the committee, and that the Chair will be one of the two government members.

I would find it very interesting to see this committee—should it be created, should this motion pass—internally decide on a process whereby they're going to arrive at any observations to be reported, or recommendations. Mr. Sterling, earlier this afternoon, made note of the fact that this, like so many other select committees over the three decades that he's been here—I've been here for two thirds of his parliamentary career. I'm very pleased.

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: You're a youngster.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Sterling notes that he's older than I am. He refers to me as but a youngster.

I would think it might be very important for the committee to decide at the onset how it's going to reach conclusions. It would be interesting if the committee were to agree internally that there has to be unanimity about any report or any recommendation. That would, in my view, make its recommendations far more potent and far more likely to result in legislative response, if in fact it's a legislative response that's necessary.

New Democrats agree that in this province there is a regrettably low level of enthusiasm for electoral politics in terms of electors, in terms of people voting. When I first received notice of the government's intention to produce not this very motion but a motion very similar to it, the people in the office next to me could hear my eyes rolling, because I recalled how badly the government fouled up the proportional representation issue. Remember when there was a democratic reform ministry? Remember when there was an interest in democratic reform, including a purported interest in somehow making electoral politics more attractive to electors? Its test was, of course, the referendum, which most people either won't recall or have purposely wiped off their memory hard drives because it was such a horrible fiasco—a process that was flaw after flaw after flaw.

I'll tell you this: Dollars to doughnuts, that MMP referendum did more to turn people off than it did to interest them in ever voting again. There will be a number of Ontarians who, because of that referendum, will never vote again because of the sloppy and incredibly and enthusiastically ineffective manner that it was pursued. Rotten garbage would be more palatable, in hindsight, than that referendum process was. The fact that the government allowed the question that was put to be put to electors with one of the less easily marketable PR schemes in and of itself destined not just the referendum to failure, but in fact appears almost to have been designed—you couldn't have worked harder, you couldn't have done better if you had tried to design a process that would put people in a position where they have no interest in electoral politics anymore, and that will result in a lower voter turnout than we already have.

It was an interesting day; it was exciting. I know Kim Craiton had a classroom of kids from his riding in Niagara Falls, and I had a group here of grade 5 students. Of course, grade 5 is the first year they study civics, politics, and next you get the big emphasis in grade 10. These kids were incredibly bright kids because they knew a whole lot about the politics of Ontario, political parties, their leaders, and the sorts of issues that are being dealt with here.

The other exciting thing, of course, was the attendance of one of our page's families during her service here as a page. Ellen Tomaino—you know her, Speaker. She's one of the group of bright young women and men who serve as pages and who work hard. What I found is that these young pages end up learning more procedure in three and four weeks—

Interjection.

Mr. Peter Kormos: It's true, Mr. Prue. These young pages learn more about the standing orders and parliamentary process than some of the members of this chamber who have slept through years of sittings. And I don't have to name names, Mr. Caplan. Mr. Caplan? Ahem, Mr. Caplan? Sorry, I didn't want to bother him. We should perhaps keep it down a little, Speaker. We don't want to wake anybody up, do we? It's only 5 o'clock. No wonder they didn't want evening sittings anymore.

I just want to say I was very pleased to be able to join them for lunch and show them a little bit of a tour of Queen's Park and take them through the library. I'm grateful to the library staff. We lost a couple of the younger ones for a few moments in the stacks, but we found them. I'm delighted that three generations of this family were able to come here today, knowing full well of course that we're debating this motion this afternoon. I saw the writing on the wall, or on the palm, so to speak.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Did you buy?

Mr. Michael Prue: Of course he did.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Mr. Prue notes one can't invite people to lunch and then stiff them with the bill. I'm too old for dine and dash. I'm just not fast enough anymore. Perhaps I'm too big for dine and dash.

But indeed we did talk at lunchtime about this motion being called this afternoon in the context of what sort of things make voting or participating in the electoral process more attractive.

I for one am not an advocate of making it easier to vote. I do not believe in things like Internet voting or telephone voting. Look, there's a whole lot of people in this world who don't have the right to vote, or when they do vote, it doesn't count for much. There are wars fought and revolutions taking place and people dying for the right to vote, for the right to elect their representatives.

I think, yes, people should have to make a conscious decision to get up off their butt and get out there and vote. And for the same reason, I don't believe in making it illegal—I believe some jurisdictions like Australia have made it illegal—to not vote. If you force people to vote, will they simply vote for the first name on the ballot? Will they spoil the ballot? How meaningful is it?

Having said that, look, we live in pretty sophisticated times and we come from communities across Ontario where people have pretty high levels of education, but I've still got folks who on a Sunday afternoon, if they see me loading up the pickup truck, say, "Are you heading off to Ottawa, Peter?" It's true. Mr. Sterling knows it. Or they say, "Boy, give that turncoat Dion hell because he won't bring down the Harper government." I'm not in the federal Parliament, I'm in the provincial Legislature. I think I'm reasonably well known in my community, but people are incredibly busy. People are working two or three jobs, when they've got jobs. When you canvass during election time, at 7:30 in the morning folks aren't home and at 7:30 at night they're not home. People are working hard, taking kids to hockey practice and soccer—down where I come from, soccer's really big. We don't have cricket clubs where I come from. We've got a few folks down there who wish we did, after that million-dollar payout last year, but soccer's big down in Welland. Soccer, hockey—swimming is big. Folks are incredibly busy. Seniors are out at the seniors' centre. They're out volunteering. They're out with their grandkids or they're out working, because they can't afford to stay in their homes if they aren't working at McDonald's or Wal-Mart.

So when I say I don't think we should make it easier to vote, I'm not saying we shouldn't accommodate people. I think it's very important to have accessibility. I understand the letter that Mr. Hollins wrote. Good God, he was the electoral officer in charge of the last election, where some of the most boneheaded decisions you could ever imagine were being made. Like our apartment building down there in Thorold, the seniors' centre apartment building, which historically always had a voting area in it, only this year some bonehead decided to move it half-way across town. That was just plain dumb. You don't need legislation or a committee to address that. This Legislature, I suppose, spends an incredible amount of its time regulating moronic behaviour. Come on, it's like telling people it's against the law: "You shouldn't smoke in cars with your kids there." Quite frankly, a person who's stupid enough to do that has little likelihood of abiding by the law, right? They'll get out of the car and they'll smoke in the house with their kids there. That's regulating moronic behaviour.

The partisanship of the appointment of local returning officers—and I understand partisanship. Partisanship is a reality of political life. But, good God, at least join it with merit, because you've got some returning officers who are outstanding, excellent. You've got some, though, who are dogs. You can hear them barking miles away. They should be on leashes. They are, and you know some of the ones I'm talking about, who couldn't exercise good judgment if their lives depended on it. Again, that's nothing to do with this committee. Is this committee going to report back that stupid people should not be appointed as returning officers? We don't need to strike a committee to reach that conclusion. Stupid people shouldn't be appointed as returning officers, and while many returning officers are outstanding—

Ms. Andrea Horwath: I second that emotion. I've got my own examples.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Ms. Horwath has her own examples. We don't need a committee to tell us this. Again, with all due respect to the Chief Electoral Officer, whom I don't know—never met. Some of my colleagues take great pleasure in reporting back that they met with him, sat down with him and talked to him. I know he's retiring, but I find it passing strange that he would write this letter while having conducted this last provincial election, which was pretty sloppy, wasn't it, Speaker? Huh, Mr. Sterling? Some pretty shabby stuff. Some pretty shabby stuff, and fraught with problems. So when I say you shouldn't invite people to vote by merely picking up a telephone, it doesn't mean you should make them climb Mount Everest before they can cast their ballot. You shouldn't be tackling them and knocking them down on their way to the ballot box. Get rid of the dozen Dobermans surrounding the box so that people are afraid to go near it to put their ballot in. But I think Ontarians have to be encouraged to be excited about the prospect of voting in an election. Maybe it has to do with candidates, the kinds of people who run for office. Political parties have a responsibility as well.

I know that other New Democrats are going to be speaking to this motion. I'm pleased because it isn't etched in stone because, if the motion passes, I'm told that Mr. Zimmer will be the Liberal member. I suspect that if the motion passes, the New Democrats will want Mr. Prue to sit on the committee, and I suspect that the Conservatives might impose on Mr. Sterling, who has a full agenda in his own right, a full dance card. But if you want something done, ask a busy person. Look, it's going to take a fair amount of time. I suspect that the Conservatives will ask Mr. Sterling to represent them. I think that's a pretty impressive team of people. You know I'm a fan of Mr. Zimmer's. The people of Willowdale are pretty lucky and pretty smart. Mr. Prue, of course, while perhaps not the longest-serving yet, has a whole lot of political experience under his belt. Mr. Sterling knows darned near everything and he'll tell you so. He's a smart guy. He'll tell you that too if you ask, and sometimes if you don't. But Mr. Sterling is a lawyer and an engineer. I think that's an impressive trio. Mr. Sorbara is an experienced, capable politician who understands politics both as an elected member and from the organizational end of partisan politics, being actively involved in the Liberal Party.

I'm looking forward to hearing comments from other members of this chamber.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: It's my pleasure to spend a little bit of time on the motion before us this afternoon. I know that my colleagues from Beaches–East York and Welland have set out a number of the technical issues, if you will, or the specific issues that arise which we think need to be addressed and that this committee needs to put its mind to. So we've already laid out a number of those things very clearly.

What I wanted to focus a little bit on are some of the issues following from, in particular, my colleague from Welland in his remarks. We went through an election not so very long ago, and it was the stated purpose of the Chief Electoral Officer of the day, during the preparation for that election campaign, to actually increase the number of people voting in the province. I've got to tell you that if that was the stated goal, it was an absolute, utter failure. We didn't see increased numbers of people voting in the province of Ontario, and in fact that effort was obviously not great enough to make that happen.

I wanted to reflect on a couple of the things that occurred in my own riding and then, subsequently, other people who ran in the last election and some of the concerns that they raised in their particular ridings. Interestingly, they're not all the same. The only thing, in fact, that's in common is that most of these electoral districts were fraught with problems. Not only were they fraught with problems, but they were fraught with problems that could not be resolved by the very people who were hired to undertake the procedures of the election. So we had significant concerns in my riding about a number of different issues, but I think the overarching problem was that, notwithstanding the fact that we had a fixed election date—everybody knew it was coming, right? We had a fixed election date, and yet not only was the voters list a mess, and not only did people who weren't eligible to vote get a voter's card, but those who had voted in election upon election and had never moved weren't getting their voter's card. As the member from Welland already mentioned, people who had been—year after year, campaign after campaign, election after election—voting in the same location, in many cases in their own building, this time weren't able to vote there for some reason.

It was a comedy of errors, and the only thing about it is that it wasn't funny. It was funny because so many people in the province of Ontario, just last year, ended up disenfranchised. People actually wanted to vote and had to jump through hoops to try to make that happen. That is absolutely counterintuitive to what the Chief Electoral Officer brought forward as his stated goal. I've got to tell you, something went terribly wrong. So I, for one, am rather pleased to see that a committee is going to be set up to review some of the procedures and some of the ways of doing things, if you will, around elections in the province of Ontario.

In Hamilton Centre, we firmly believed, at the end of the campaign, after we got together and talked about our experiences as a campaign team—all of my volunteers, myself, my campaign manager and others—our first and most basic conclusion, and I certainly hope that the committee is prepared to take this one on, is that we really do need to get back to enumeration in Ontario. The bottom line is that we need to have enumeration. That way, we know who is where, who is who and whether they can vote. Because we haven't had that in quite some time, a full enumeration in the province of Ontario, we have voters lists that have people who have passed away. We have people who have moved, many times. We sometimes have a third or fourth tenant since the one that's on the voters list there. So I ask, "Are you so and so?" "Well, no." "Have you ever heard of so and so?" "Well, somebody told me when I moved here that that was the tenant who lived here not last time but the time before that. So before the last tenant and the one before that, that's when that person lived here." Give me a break.

That's why enumeration is so important: It updates the voters lists and makes them more current. Is it perfect? No, it's not perfect, but I can tell you that what we went through just this past fall was a dog's breakfast. It was an absolute nightmare to try to figure out whether the person on the voters list was even alive, and never mind the person who was living in the particular place where you were knocking on the door.

Another issue we faced was the whole issue of the increased number of polling stations, again a good kind of theory, certainly, but the reality is that the combination of having these greater numbers of polling stations with making all the apartments a separate polling station, depending on the number of people living there, was problematic because of the point that I just raised. So now you have outdated voting lists, where we haven't had an enumeration in much time. Then, exacerbating that, all of a sudden you have all these apartment buildings that suddenly are now going to be voting stations. Well, you put those two things together and you get quite a mess.

That certainly was what our experience was in my riding of Hamilton Centre. I'm going to tell you it was frustrating. It wasn't just frustrating for me; it was frustrating for the tenants in those buildings. They went down to vote in their polling station. Many times they went out of their apartment and thought, "This is so convenient; I can vote on my way to work." So they would be excited, they'd go to vote on their way to work, and guess what? They're in a rush. They just want to grab their ballot, mark their ballot and walk out the door and get to work. But they were told, "If you don't have a voter's card, you can't vote." "What do you mean, a voter's card?" "You should have had a voter's card delivered." "We didn't get a voter's card." "Well, then you have to go through the process of getting yourself on the voters list."

Initially—of course this always happens to some extent—nobody really knew what to do when somebody got there and wasn't on the voters list. So it takes a while to get the warm-up happening at the polling station.

Nonetheless, many tenants became frustrated and angry with the fact that they were being held up and denied the opportunity to vote. They didn't have their ID on them. In the downtown there are many, many apartment buildings. People live in the downtown and they work in the downtown and they walk to work, so they don't have to bring their driver's licence with them or anything else like that. They simply run out the door, down the hall, into the elevator, and away they go. Stop to vote: "Oh, lo and behold, no identification, not on the voters list. You're going to have to go back upstairs to your apartment." "Sorry, it's five to nine. I've got to get to work. Forget about it. I'm not even going to bother."

I believe that this last election resulted in the disenfranchisement of many tenants in my riding and I would suspect in other ridings as well. The other thing is, it's interesting that all of a sudden, where we'd regularly had some 200-odd polls in my riding in previous elections—and, granted, it was a new boundary—this time around, in this most recent election, we had well over 300 polls.

Again, we figured out ourselves how to make that happen organizationally, but I can tell you I didn't get the sense that the returning office figured it out very well. They did not have the ability to staff up all of those polling stations on election day. They had a very difficult time, just during advance polls, for example, to try to figure out how to make all of that happen.

Again, I got a number of complaints during the advance polling process that the DROs—the returning office where you had to go to make your advance vote happen—or some of the other locations were totally unaware of the process and the procedure. So the training of staff was dismal; it was abysmal. As a result, people didn't know what they were doing. People didn't know how to make sure that the people who were arriving to vote would eventually get their ballot in the ballot box. It was extremely frustrating for people: Never mind if you happen to attend and have a language barrier; try to go through that painful process of getting someone who has difficulty with the English language to read the oath. It was a nightmare. We had many, many complaints about that.

Again, not to say it's not appropriate or the right thing to do, to make sure that people are eligible to vote and make sure they have the proper process in place, but, holy smokes, I think it's really incumbent upon the Chief Electoral Officer to make sure the returning officers not only are competent and can answer all the questions—as my friend for the riding of Welland has already indicated—but also that the people they hire are properly trained and understand what their job is, what the process is. That certainly wasn't in many cases—not all—the situation in Hamilton Centre at the very least, which I can speak to directly.

Do you know what? We had another situation where we had a whole building of people, as well as a couple of houses around that building, a high-rise, and they received their voters' cards with their street address on it—they lived on Wellington Street—but the community in which they were told to go and vote was the community of Dundas. My friend—oh, I'm not allowed to say that my friend from Ancaster—Dundas—Flamborough—Westdale would agree with me. My friend would agree with me that Wellington Street is in downtown Hamilton. It's not in Dundas. So people were coming to my campaign office and saying, "I can't vote in Dundas. I don't have a car. I don't know how to get the bus out to Dundas. I shouldn't have to go all the way to Dundas just to vote."

We had other people getting voter cards saying they had to go to Brantford. People were outraged. We were very clear with them that, no, they didn't have to go to Brantford and they didn't have to go to Dundas, but I wonder how many of those people simply threw out their cards and said, "To heck with that. I'm not going to bother to go to Wellington Street in Dundas," or "I'm not going to Brantford to vote. You can forget it." Into the garbage it goes, and that's the end of the election for them.

So, again, disenfranchisement of tenants was something that I think was a big, big problem in my riding. It was very obvious that they didn't know what they were doing. And do you know what? The thing that made it worse for us was that when we raised this very specific problem with our returning office, we got some blow-back. We were actually told that they were not going to mail out replacement voter cards to these people, that they weren't going to do anything to rectify the situation, and if people called them, they would set them straight. They weren't going to be proactive in the way that they responded. That, from my perspective, was an absolutely inappropriate and inadequate response.

I mentioned a little bit earlier the whole issue of the training of staff in the returning office. We had some of the most bizarre things happen this time. I keep thinking to myself that during an election year—and I'm sure other members have this happen—people who historically have volunteered or have been paid staff on campaigns for the DROs or for the returning office and have been paid staff in the election, hired by Elections Ontario to do basic pieces of work during the election period, are the same people. They come back every time there's an election and they want to make sure they get their 20 to 60 hours of work in over several weeks and get a little bit of employment happening.

That's all fine and good. It's not unusual that people come to your office and say, "Okay, can you make sure that my name is in, and put my name in with Elections Ontario?" It's quite surprising, then, when at the end of the day, as the campaign gets up and running and we're starting off and we want our poll keys, we go to the returning office wanting the poll keys—we call up first, "Are the poll keys ready?"—they weren't ready in any timely fashion. That was the first thing. The second thing was, they didn't know what a poll key is. They didn't know at the returning office what a poll key is. They had no idea. We were stunned. We were shocked. How can you not know what a poll key is if you're running the election campaign, if you're running the election process in this riding and you cannot provide the poll key, not because you can't find it, not because it was filed under Q instead of P, but because you don't even know what a poll key is?

We also had significant problems with our access to maps and with the detailing on the maps. We would get maps of a particular poll and all you could see, the only detail on the map—there wouldn't be any streets—would be the railway track that runs through the middle of the poll, and the poll number. Then, if you go to the poll key and you get the description of where the poll is, all of that is fine, but the maps were a mess.

How can you have a fixed election date, know that it's coming a mile away and still botch it so badly, the way this election was botched? I really don't know—not only botch it, but botch it, all the while claiming that your goal is to increase the voter turnout in the province of Ontario. It's really not much more than a joke, but it's a sad joke. I think the sad joke is reflected in the results of the election, but that's another story.

Nonetheless, those were just a few of the issues that we experienced in my riding. One that I think is the most egregious and one that I think should never ever, ever happen again in the province of Ontario and should never have happened this past election—it's shameful that it did happen, and I think it's particularly shameful that it happened when we have a government in place that indicates its commitment to issues for people with disabilities. They have an Ontarians with Disabilities Act. We just went through the process of reflecting upon people with disabilities in the last couple of days once again. I have to tell you I was ashamed, myself—and I have nothing to do with it—to be getting calls from people who went to vote in their power chair or with their scooter, and the polling station was just not accessible.

Currently, the way it works is, every effort will be made to have accessible polling stations. Well, every effort may have been made, but I'm telling you that's not good enough in this day and age in the province of Ontario. We need to make sure and we need to make a firm commitment that every single polling station is accessible to people with disabilities—period, end of story.

We had situations of people who called us afterwards and said they tipped their power chair, their wheelchair or their scooter as far as they could get it into the polling station to wherever the barrier existed that they couldn't get past, because it wasn't barrier-free. They would get up to the barrier and they would be telling somebody else who was going in to vote, "Can you get somebody? I need to vote and I can't get my power chair to where I need to go." Then one of the staff would come from the polling station, get the person's name, go back through whatever maze of hallways, rooms, stairs and whatever else, make sure that person was eligible, and bring back the ballot. And they would have to vote at whatever barrier it was that was preventing them from going into the regular process of voting, into the polling station behind their private place to vote like every other Ontarian gets to do if they don't have a physical barrier that prevents them from getting there.

Give me a break. What the heck is that all about? I have to say that if there's one thing this committee needs to do, it's got to be to make sure that every single Ontarian who has the right to vote is given the opportunity to vote in a barrier-free environment. It's extremely important, and it's something that is long past due. I was shocked to hear the way these people were treated in my own riding. It was absolutely unacceptable. It's not good enough that you set out the boundaries of where your polls are going to be, and then try to find a place that you might be able to pinpoint that might be barrier-free for people. That's not good enough. That's the opposite way of doing things. It should be done, first and foremost, to make sure it's accessible to all the people of Ontario.

I heard that there were some significant problems as well in the riding of Scarborough-Guildwood. Apparently, entire apartment buildings received duplicate voter cards in error in the revisions process. One of the candidates whom I know very well was there personally. At that time, she went to check out the situation and in fact found that it was true, the complaint that came in—total duplicates. An American citizen was there who actually received a voting card—an American citizen, not a Canadian citizen, not dual citizenship; an American citizen received a voting card.

There were of course also people who were receiving voter cards from former tenants, and they used those voters cards to vote. But the reality was, people were so ticked off with the poor implementation of the voting card mailout and the process of receiving these voting cards that had nothing to do with them—if you looked in the garbage in the mailroom, it was packed with discarded voting cards, just thrown to the side. Anybody could pick them up. If people weren't having their ID checked, they would end up being able to vote.

Advance polls in this riding were extremely slow and frustrated people. In some cases, it took people 20 minutes, half an hour to vote. People got ticked off over the delays, gave up, turned tail and left and decided not to vote.

Apparently, the oath wasn't available in other languages so that people could have an easier way of taking that oath and not be humiliated in trying to stutter through the English language. That oath has some very long words in it that are difficult for many people.

The bottom line is, this committee has a lot of work to do. I look forward to some good results from their work.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Boy, do I have a lot to say about this particular work the committee's going to have to do in looking at the Election Act and what needs to be done in order to modernize it. I listened intently to the comments made the speaker, the member for Hamilton Centre, who basically talked about the litany of problems within her riding. I'm sitting here chuckling to myself because I thought they only did that in my riding. I'm finding out they've done it in a number of other ridings.

Let me, first of all, set out what some of the key issues are that this committee has to look at. I think the first thing is the election list itself. The electoral list is far from being as accurate as it needs to be. We don't do physical enumeration anymore. Enumeration is done as far as revisions only, so we're relying on databases that the province has in order to build election lists.

That's the first problem: We don't do a very good job of identifying the voter. One of the things that this committee's going to have to look at is, do we need to go back to physical enumeration, knocking on doors and finding out who lives in the apartment that's being rented during the period of the election, who lives at that address? We did that for a long time in this province. It worked well and the election list used to be pretty accurate. But nowadays, my God, I'm telling you, you would look at the election list and you would find as high as 20%, in some urban centres within my riding, where the election list was totally wrong. So that's the first thing.

Then, when they went out and did the revisions, they got that wrong. They would take the person who lived on the corner of street X and Y, where the polling station is normally right across the street at the school, church or community centre, where they've been voting for years, and they'd put them, sometimes, in other towns. The person would have to drive 20, 30 kilometres away to go vote in another polling station that had nothing to do with where the person lived—all because the revision basically messed up.

A big part of the problem is people who live in rural route addresses. There's no physical address within the database to correlate where the person lives, to put him in a polling station. So one of the issues we have—for example, I had tons of voters; this would be the typical story. A person lives in, let's say, Moonbeam, has been voting in Moonbeam all her life in federal, provincial and municipal elections, but had to go vote in Fauquier, Kapuskasing or Smooth Rock Falls, which is a half-hour drive, depending on which way you have to go, or even up to an hour on a highway.

I'll tell you what people did on election day: A lot of people didn't vote. That affected my vote, as the incumbent. It also, quite frankly, affected the Liberal and the Conservative vote. I know that in that part of the riding our provincial Liberal candidate, Mr. Boucher, had some complaints about that. A lot of people he had identified—and I guess I can say thank God for me that they didn't go and vote—had a hard time trying to find a polling station.

So I guess it kind of equalled out the results in the end, but the point is, people really got frustrated on election day. All they know is, "I've been voting at the KC hall for years." That's where you normally go vote, and all of a sudden they've got you voting in another town somewhere else.

The member for Hamilton Centre raises the issue of polling stations. Boy, what a problem. Wheelchair accessibility in some of them is not even available. Basically, people are turned away, not able to go vote.

In the case of Hearst, which I thought was really silly, we have les Chevaliers de Colomb, the KC hall. Basically all of the polling stations for the 10 or 11 polls in the community of Hearst are within that one central place where people go and vote. There's plenty of parking, it's wheelchair accessible, there's lots of room; it works well. We've been doing it for years.

What they went and did this time is, they moved it out of the KC hall and they put it in a couple of different locations, one of them being a school. The problem is, during the time that the voting was going on, wasn't that the time that the buses come and pick the kids up and drop the kids off? You should have seen the melee that was going on during the busing times, where we're picking up kids at the school and dropping them off. People were trying to find places to park. There were traffic jams with the buses. It was unsafe for the kids. The kids are not used to seeing that amount of cars around the school. It was a day that was raining so we had puddles of water and mud everywhere. It was more complaints, so people just didn't go and vote. People said, "I'm not going."

One of the issues that was raised by one of the teachers—and I think this is a legitimate issue—the way they had the polling stations set up, people had free access to the school. Do you want any voter just walking into a primary school and having open access? Hello? I'm not saying anything happened—people in Hearst are pretty decent people—but I'm telling you, that's open for problems. I've just got to say that we need to get that under control.

One of the key problems is that we need to replace the way that we appoint returning officers. They should not be appointed by the government in power. They should be appointed by the Chief Electoral Officer. Here's the problem: The RO doesn't work for the Chief Electoral Officer; the RO responds to the government. So when a member—or a candidate in this case, because we are all candidates at the point of the election—goes and makes a complaint about a polling station or an advanced poll or whatever it might be, they can complain until the cows come home. At the end of the day the RO will make the decision even though the Chief Electoral Officer agrees with you.

Let me give you an example. In my riding there are communities that don't have roads. The only way you can get into them is to fly in by plane. So they decided that there would be no advance polls in any of the First Nations communities. The only place you had an advance poll was in Moosonee, at the Northern Store or at the college; I forget exactly where it was. The first problem is, who can afford to pay an airplane ticket to fly from Attawapiskat or Peawanuck to an advance poll because they will not be available on October 10? Why? Because the First Nations people go hunting at that time. That's how they get their food. A third to half of the community is out of the community during the period of the election on October 10. They've got no advance polls, so they can't mark their ballot ahead of time because they cannot afford to get on Air Quebec to fly, at $1,000 a pop, to Moosonee to vote and go back. And that's for each family member.

I called and went and saw our returning officer in Timmins, and she didn't want to do anything about it. She was not going to waste taxpayers' money to give those people the right to go and vote in advance polls. Can you imagine? Imagine those people not having that right. They're the First Nations people of our country. They're citizens of Ontario. You'd think we wouldn't have a problem with this.

So I called John Hollins, the Chief Electoral Officer for Ontario. He agreed it was a problem. I give John Hollins and his staff full credit. He tried to fix the problem. The problem was that the returning officer went, "Nyeeah," and basically there was nothing he could do. Pardon me, I've never done that before in the House, but that's basically what our returning officer did. As a result, because the CEO didn't have the authority over her to fire her, she just did what she wanted to do because of incompetence or unwillingness or whatever—

Mr. Gilles Bisson: —or political agendas—and it didn't get changed.

So I think one of the things we have to do is say, "Returning officers for each riding are hired by the Chief Electoral Officer and are answerable to him or her." In that way the Chief Electoral Officer, who is a non-partisan appointment, because we in the House here appoint him in a tripartite process, has those returning officers answer to him or her and has the authority to deal with problems as they arise. One of the things I want to see is a change to the Election Act that deals with that.

The other thing I want to deal with, and unfortunately I don't have a lot of time because we're going to be wrapping up here in two or three minutes, is the whole issue of—I did the First Nations. The other thing is the whole issue of when people show up to vote in the wrong polling station. People were basically being turned away, and you know as well as I do that that shouldn't be the case. Unfortunately, the people who are the poll clerks and the people who are the DROs, the district returning officers, don't understand the Election Act. We spent a good part of the day having to work with our DROs and our poll clerks to get them to understand what they could and couldn't do under the Election Act. So here are campaigners having to train the poll clerks and the DROs in what the Election Act allows on election day. That shouldn't be the case. That should be the job of the RO. I just say again that it goes back to the Chief Electoral Officer's having the ability to appoint the returning officers for each and every riding.

I don't have enough time, but the other thing I would talk about is the need for election finance reform. I think we need to look at what the federal government has done vis-à-vis having elections paid by the state, because we pay them anyway. If I give $750 to your campaign, I am going to get 75% of it back by the province anyway. So we're paying for all the contributions that are given by way of donations to our campaign up to $750, I think it is—$750 and you get 75%, and everything after that is a percentage, up to a maximum of $1,140 or $1,125, whatever the number is. The point is, we're paying for it now, so we should make this system clear and transparent so it's not big business or big labour that does the contributions to campaigns, as people would see it, but that we have real election reform so we can have transparency in the system.

Mr. Speaker, I see we are close to 5:45, so I would just adjourn the debate for now and pick up where we left off next time.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): You're right.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): It being 5:45 of the clock and our guests from the Council of State Governments being here for dinner, this House is adjourned until 9 of the clock, Thursday, June 5.

The House adjourned at 1745.

Resuming the debate adjourned on June 4, 2008, on the motion for second reading of Bill 85, An Act to permit the issuance of photo cards to residents of Ontario and to make complementary amendments to the Highway Traffic Act/ Projet de loi 85, Loi permettant la délivrance de cartes-photo aux résidents de l'Ontario et apportant des modifications complémentaires au Code de la route.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Further debate?

Mr. Ted Arnott: I'm pleased to have this opportunity to rise this morning in the Legislature to speak to second reading of Bill 85. I believe that—

Interjection.

Mr. Ted Arnott: Yes, of course; I appreciate that.

I have to initially seek the unanimous consent of the House to stand down the lead speech by our critic, the member for Newmarket–Aurora.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Mr. Ted Arnott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak in the House this morning on Bill 85. This bill was introduced in the Ontario Legislature just a couple days ago, so the reality is that we haven't had a lot of opportunity for consultation with our constituents or input on this issue. But we have commenced debate on this bill nonetheless, and we have this opportunity to talk about the new Photo Card Act, the long title being An Act to permit the issuance of photo cards to residents of Ontario and to make complementary amendments to the Highway Traffic Act.

I first of all want to note the presence in the Legislature this morning of the Minister of Transportation, the member for St. Catharines. I've always enjoyed working with this particular member in his capacity now as Minister of Transportation. The member for St. Catharines is now in his 31st year of service in this Legislature, which is hard to believe. He deserves a great deal of credit for his longevity, his commitment and his steady dedication to this place. Certainly his presence here at 9 o'clock this morning on second reading of this bill indicates his understanding of the parliamentary system and the respect that he shows for the opposition when he comes in to be part of this debate, to be present for this debate. It is something that is very much appreciated by all of us. We would hope that it would become a little more contagious with some of his colleagues, but certainly he provides a good example that they should emulate.

The member has been elected by his constituents I think nine times, which again is something that is a good example for all of us. The work that he does is something that is very much appreciated by his constituents and by all of us in this House.

I want to begin by saying a word of thanks as well to the good staff who work at the MTO licence-issuing offices in the province. There is an licence-issuing office in Fergus which is actually located just a few feet away from my constituency office. I've had the chance to get to know some of the staff over there. Because we're so conveniently located to each other, occasionally, when there's a disagreement with the issuing office by a constituent who has a policy issue with the government, the staff are able to send them over to our office so we get to hear about it at first hand. We certainly appreciate that.

There are a number of other licence-issuing offices throughout Wellington–Halton Hills, in Waterloo–Wellington and in my old riding of Wellington, obviously. I think that all of the staff who work at those licence-issuing offices do good work. They are courteous and professional and deserve a lot of credit. I think they work very hard for the wages that they earn. I think that's something that the minister perhaps has to look at too. I've heard over a number of years that the compensation for those particular staff has not really kept up with the rate of inflation. I think they're an important part of the licence-issuing network, and with this bill they're probably going to have added responsibilities. I think that has to be taken into consideration with respect to their compensation.

I believe that transportation is one of the most important responsibilities of the provincial government. I was pleased, when I was first elected to this place in 1990, to be named by Mike Harris, our party leader at the time, as our critic for transportation. Actually, the very first words that I uttered in this Legislature were words exhorting and calling upon the New Democratic Party government of the day to make improvements to Highway 6, which bisected my riding of Wellington in those days. It still goes through Wellington county, north-south. I'm pleased to see that over the years there have been some improvements to Highway 6, I hope as a result of some of the interventions that I've offered in this place, certainly strongly supported by the county of Wellington and by the staff at the Ministry of Transportation in London, the regional office.

I've made it a point to go and visit the staff at the MTO office in recent years. The MTO staff that I've met with for years—usually once or twice a year, making a special trip down to London to talk to them and express my ideas and concerns about the projects that need to be expedited in my riding—are very good staff as well. I know the minister appreciates their contribution.

I remember in the early 1990s, as the critic for transportation, calling upon the New Democratic Party government to proceed with the Red Hill Creek Expressway in Hamilton, something that the member for Welland understands and remembers well.

As well, I was an early convert to the need for graduated drivers' licences. When I was the critic for transportation that was an issue that I was working on. Of course, that was adopted by the government of the day and has now become a fact of life in the province of Ontario. I think most people would agree that the graduated driver's licence has been a very positive reform in terms of highway safety, especially for our young drivers. Our roads are safer. I think it's fair to say that lives have been saved because of that positive development that emanated from this place.

Bill 85, according to the minister in his presentation in this House when he introduced the bill, as well as his speech with respect to second reading of this bill—he talked about the tourism aspects of this issue. We all know and remember well the terrorist attacks that took place on North America on September 11, 2001. I recall the outstanding oratory that took place in this Legislature following those terrorist attacks. We had a day of debate in which we came together to condemn the attacks and to call upon the western world to come together and respond to them in the appropriate way. I recall that day: We were all asked to speak for about two minutes, but it was probably the most outstanding day of oratory that I've experienced in my time in the Legislature. All of the speeches were excellent, from the heart, and responded to the need that we felt at that time.

Of course, in the United States, the direct subject of the attacks, there was a new cabinet responsibility created, the Department of Homeland Security. From the Department of Homeland Security there have been a significant number of initiatives to try to make United States citizens feel safer, one of them being the western hemisphere travel initiative, which has been talked about in this Legislature many, many times. The Americans feel they have to make their border more secure relative to Canada. We recognize the sovereignty of the United States, and as much as we would like to ensure that our citizens have easy access to the United States, we have to recognize the sovereignty of the United States. They have the right to make their decisions as to how they're going to manage their side of the border. We have the right to make the decisions as to how we're going to manage our side of the border.

Given the fact that tourism has experienced considerable difficulty—in part because of the confusion, I would argue, at the border, where American tourists who in many cases might otherwise have come across to visit us here in Ontario and Canada already believe that they are going to have problems at the border. Some, I'm sure, believe that they have to have a passport now and don't understand that they can make a land crossing right now and get back home to the United States without a passport at this time. I'm sure there's a great deal of confusion in the minds of a lot of them, and that's why we've called upon the provincial government to make that a focus of a marketing campaign, so as to clarify that issue for our American friends and invite them to come across. Of course we know that the deadline for the application of the western hemisphere travel initiative has changed on a number of occasions, but right now, if you're going to travel into the United States by air, you've got to have a valid passport. As of next year apparently—unless the deadline changes again—June 1, 2009, there will be a requirement for some acceptable photo ID in order for people to get into the United States from across the Canadian border and of course for Americans who want to get home again.

This, I understand, is the impetus for this legislation, and the Minister of Transportation, who used to be the Minister of Tourism, understands this issue well. Certainly he was one of the leaders in Canada in pushing for the establishment of the allowance of another commonly used document. The suggestion was that we could ensure that the citizenship of an individual would be put on the driver's licence; I think he used the words "commonly used photo identification." I think he deserves a lot of credit for this, for moving forward in this regard.

For my part, as the critic for tourism, I certainly was participating in this debate and I've met with a number, actually three or four, of successive US consuls general, the US consulate being just down the street on University Avenue. I've had the opportunity on a number of occasions to meet with them, talking about BSE, the issue that has affected our beef farmers, as well as this issue of the passport, and tried to do what I can, not having the travel budget of a minister being in a position to fly to Washington, DC, or to visit some of the adjacent state capitals. But I did have the chance this March, actually, to travel to Washington, DC, with my family—I would add, at my own expense—for March break, so as to experience all that there is in Washington, DC. I also had the chance to tour the US Capitol and to meet with one of the congressmen, Representative Bart Stupak, a Democratic representative of the first congressional district in the state of Michigan, and we had the opportunity to discuss this issue. I think all of us who have associations and opportunities to meet American lawmakers should be continuing to express the need for this sort of thing, and I know the Minister of Transportation would encourage this as well.

We know that this bill will allow the government to issue three new cards: (1) the combined photo card, (2) the basic photo card and (3) the enhanced photo card. The combined photo card will meet the applicable rules set out by the United States western hemisphere travel initiative, and these rules are expected to severely limit the types of documentation that would be acceptable for entry into the United States. We know that the combined photo card would be used exactly as one would use a regular driver's licence. However, the card will also display certain information about the holder, such as that person's citizenship, and will be equipped with certain machine-readable features. The features would allow the holders to access the US by land and by water and, as we know and as I said earlier, air travel will still require a passport.

The legislation, I understand, authorizes the use of new fraud prevention methods by MTO when operating the combined photo card. These include photo comparison technology, to reduce the risk of any one individual obtaining multiple driver's licences or photo cards, and the sharing of information between Canadian government entities.

Our party's critic for transportation, the member for Newmarket-Aurora, on the day that the bill was introduced earlier this week, talked about the concerns that he has with respect to privacy. The Information and Privacy Commissioner apparently has expressed some concerns about how the information is going to be kept private for individuals. I hope the Minister of Transportation pays heed to those concerns, so as to ensure that the privacy commissioner is satisfied in this respect.

I'm glad the minister is here, because I want to bring to his attention another issue with respect to his responsibility as Minister of Transportation. It concerns another important issue with respect to transportation in my riding. The proposed Highway 24, between Brantford and Cambridge, has become a controversial issue, especially in Puslinch township, Puslinch township being the rural community just south of and adjacent to the city of Guelph.

Apparently, the Minister of Transportation had the opportunity to meet with the mayors of Brantford and Cambridge some time ago—it was on February 19, from what I understand—to discuss this issue. Of course, both of these mayors are strongly advocating for the new Highway 24 through a study process. The township of Puslinch is very concerned about it, because it goes through their area, and they have serious environmental concerns with respect to this issue.

This meeting was held on February 19, and when the township council became aware of the fact that the meeting had taken place, they were disappointed that they hadn't been involved in the meeting and expressed concern that they had been snubbed. Interestingly, this article appeared in the Wellington Advertiser on April 18, and actually a couple of weeks later, on May 2, there was a letter to the editor which, to some degree, had privileged information in it that I would suggest no one would know about perhaps except the minister's office, addressing the concern expressed by the township. At the same time, I would suggest that it was a rebuttal of the township of Puslinch's concerns.

It was a letter of some length, three columns long, and interestingly, it was signed by the president of the Liberal provincial riding association of Wellington-Halton Hills. His name is Murray Gold. I think that what may have happened here is that someone in the minister's office was monitoring the media in the Wellington Advertiser, and, noticing that the ministry had been not overly criticized but mildly chastised for not involving the township of Puslinch in the meeting, fed privileged information to the president of the local riding association in order to rebut the concern.

I'm not sure how privileged this information was, but certainly I'm willing to share these letters with the minister. I know he would be concerned about it if anything untoward was happening in his office with respect to partisanship in this regard. I'm certainly concerned about it. I wouldn't be surprised if I was criticized in this way through letters to the editor—perhaps that might happen from time to time—but I do take umbrage to a duly elected township council in our riding being criticized by the local Liberal riding association president, having received privileged information through the minister's office. I think the minister should be concerned, and I would ask that he investigate this.

I also want to talk about the roads and bridges funding that was announced just before the end of the fiscal year, the last week of March, before the provincial budget this year. We received feedback from a number of our municipalities, most notably the town of Erin, which was very concerned about how their number was calculated. I was told by the minister and other ministry officials that a formula was applied that was ostensibly supposed to be fair and not supposed to be partisan. Every riding was supposed to be treated equally, not the government members being shown preference vis-à-vis the opposition members.

However, the town of Erin was very concerned about the formula, because they felt that it had not been appropriate to meet their needs. They have a significant number of gravel roads, and I'm told that the gravel roads were given less than full weight in terms of the formula. The reason was that the ministry felt it was less expensive to maintain the gravel roads than the paved roads.

The town of Puslinch would argue with that and counter that with its own comments. I would encourage the minister to meet with representatives of the town of Erin, or at the very least have his staff contact them to listen to their concerns, to see if there's an opportunity in the future to ensure that communities like the town of Erin have their needs recognized if indeed new roads and bridges funding is forthcoming.

We also remember the grant program—I forget the official name—I think it was MIII. I'm glad the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal is here. I think it was called the municipal infrastructure investment initiative. I appreciated the support that came to my riding of Wellington-Halton Hills, to some of the municipalities at least, but again there were two that missed out. I've brought that to the attention of the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal. The township of Puslinch as well as the town of Erin unfortunately were not successful in terms of that particular program. I would encourage the minister to ensure that there is an adequate mechanism to review the concerns of municipalities which feel that they've been excluded, to have a debriefing exercise so that they can be informed of whatever they could have done differently in their application so that next time they have a better opportunity to meet with success.

I'm glad to have this opportunity—because this is a transportation bill—to talk about some of the other transportation issues in my riding. It has been a very important issue that I've worked on for years. I continue to believe that transportation issues are ones that the government must make high priorities, because it's important for our economy and it's important for everyone who uses our roads.

This particular bill, Bill 85, while an important step forward in terms of the government's policy agenda right now, I think is also important to put in perspective. I said this earlier in the debate when I had a chance for a two-minute response. While we recognize that we need to do everything we can to try to encourage tourism in the province of Ontario, this photo ID card won't necessarily solve in one step the issue with respect to the American tourists who might otherwise want to come here but are going to have trouble getting back home if they don't have a passport.

I know that the Minister of Transportation is sincere when he suggests that if we take this step with Bill 85 to create this new photo identity card, it puts us on a stronger footing if we approach the other neighbouring American states like New York state, which I understand is looking at this as well. But we should be approaching Michigan, Ohio and some of the other neighbouring states to ensure that we can show them that this leadership is something that they can emulate too and that it's in their best interests if they proceed with this sort of initiative as well.

I did ask the government how much the card will cost for Ontario residents. That is not clear in the bill. I think we were told by the parliamentary assistant that it was going to be in the range of $30 to $35. I hope that the government will answer that question definitively before the end of this second reading debate, because I think that's obviously an important question. I'd like to know how long this card will be good for. Is it going to be five years? Is the cost going to be based on cost recovery or is it going to be seen by the government as an opportunity to enhance its revenue, perhaps yet another tax? These are issues that I think are very important to be addressed by the government during the course of this second reading debate.

The last time I bought a passport I believe it was $75 to get the passport for five years. I would suggest that if this is going to be effective and something that people will want to buy, this new card would have to be considerably less in cost than the cost of a new Canadian passport.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Questions or comments?

Hon. James J. Bradley: I want to thank Mr. Arnott for his contribution to the debate today. As always, his contribution is very constructive and well informed. I think he raised a number of significant issues, and as the debate goes on we will want to ensure that the questions that he has asked are addressed appropriately.

He utilized a device that I'm told members have used from time to time to deviate a little bit from the debate, but at least—I must say this—it was about transportation. I want to assure him that all voices on the issue of Highway 24 are being heard equally and that the government of Ontario is very interested in these matters related to that highway, as are all of the local members. The government does not have a chosen position. We're looking at it in terms of the environmental consequences of any particular routing of the highway. I'm probably not even supposed to respond to something that's on the edge, but I want to give him every credit that there was about transportation. I'm glad he has a good relationship with the folks in the licence-issuing office in his area, and indeed that is a very significant service that people provide in those offices to the people of Ontario.

The member has raised a number of significant issues, and if I had a significant amount of time, I would address some of these matters. What you see in a bill and what subsequently is part of the whole passage of a bill are two different things. It's not that there's any deception in this regard, but I think the member legitimately asked some questions that during the debate we will ensure that we answer before the bill is given final consideration.

Mr. Norm Miller: I'm pleased to add some comments to the speech from the member from Wellington-Halton Hills on Bill 85, the Photo Card Act, 2008. He did raise a number of concerns to do with the bill. I think we're generally supportive of a new photo card. This bill would enable three new cards. One is a combined photo card, which would basically be your driver's licence, and it would be enhanced with more information, I guess the idea being to be recognized by the United States to make it easier to cross over the border. Then there'd be two other cards: a basic photo card for those who don't have a driver's licence, and an enhanced photo card which has more information on that basic card. I do have questions about why you need three. Why wouldn't it just be two cards, and why aren't they all enhanced?

I note also that the privacy commissioners have concerns to do with this and I think that their concerns need to be addressed. But obviously it's important that we make it as easy as possible to cross the US border for the sake of our economy and for the sake of tourism in this province. It's my feeling that this year is going to be a very challenging year for tourism in the province of Ontario, with the combined effects of the high Canadian dollar, gas prices and the slowing US economy. Those things are all combining to make for what I think is going to be an extremely challenging year in tourism, which is why I think the government might want to pick up on the opposition's idea of removing the sales tax over the course of the summertime. I think that idea can be a real shot in the arm for tourism in the province of Ontario this year through the summertime, which is prime tourism season in Ontario, and right at a time of the business cycle when it's really needed. I hope the government will give serious consideration to removing the PST—John Tory's idea—and take that idea and run with it. It will make a difference to the economy this summer.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I'm honoured to get the chance to comment on the speech from the member for Wellington-Halton Hills. I think it's very important, and it's been mentioned many different times. He has asked many questions, and I guess he, as a member of the opposition, has a right to raise those questions because he has to answer to his constituents. But in general I think this bill is very important for all the people of Ontario and has been raised many different times, through him and his colleagues. It's good for the tourism industry because it will allow many different people to travel between the United States and Canada without any problems.

Hopefully, when I get the chance to speak, I'll explain myself more and show what's important in this bill—

Mr. Peter Kormos: You'll have that chance in five minutes. Then you can speak for 20 minutes.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I will have that chance, definitely. It's important to show my support of this bill because it's an important initiative to allow people from the United States or Canada to travel without any hesitation. As you know, sometimes when you go to apply for a passport, it takes forever, and sometimes people are uncomfortable carrying their passport.

The member from Wellington-Halton Hills mentioned the cost. I think that our intention as a government is not to profit from this initiative but just to make it easy and accessible for the people of Ontario. Hopefully it will be applied only to the cost—whatever the cost of the card—for the clients or the people who want to travel between Canada and the United States. So as I mentioned, hopefully I'll get the chance to speak in a few minutes and I'll speak in detail about the importance of this bill.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I want to commend my colleague, who made a great articulation about Bill 85, the Photo Card Act. He's our critic for tourism. He does a great job of that and has brought forward some suggestions to the Liberal government. We were hoping that they may take them in. I know he made another plug, and so did my colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka, about the relief this summer that some of our tourism operators need to try to get more tourists to the area.

This bill is the Photo Card Act, and we certainly support the intent, because what we're trying to do is keep our border traffic moving. Of course, Americans have a long history of coming across the border to Canada to holiday and to take in our great province, but unfortunately the number of American tourists who have been coming over of late has been diminishing. They feel they need the passport already. There's confusion. They don't want long lineups on the border, which they see on TV shows. That has been hampering their ability to come across the border and their desire to come across. We need to reinstate that we are welcoming the American tourists. How can we do that? Well, there are three new cards proposed here and the intent is certainly great to keep the border traffic moving. We have some concerns about this bill, but we certainly support it in principle.

I know the privacy commissioner has some comments. I want to speak too, for the few seconds I have left, about tourism. It certainly has been hurting the resorts in my riding of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock, which rely heavily on tourism. The Minister of Transportation is shaking his head. I'm glad he is aware of that. It's quite a soft market, they say, and we have lots of vacancies. So if anyone is planning a holiday, come up to Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The member for Wellington-Halton Hills has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr. Ted Arnott: I appreciate the invitation and I hope to spend some time in that beautiful part of the province this summer too.

I want to thank the Minister of Transportation, the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, the member for London-Fanshawe and the member for Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock for their response to my opportunity to speak here this morning, and especially to pick up on the point that was made by my colleagues to encourage the provincial government to give serious consideration to our proposal, which we brought forward in good faith, to encourage the government to suspend the retail sales tax on accommodations and attractions this summer.

I know the Minister of Transportation, as a former Minister of Tourism, would understand how this might benefit the tourism industry. I'm sorry that the current Minister of Tourism suggested that it was nothing more than a Band-Aid, that it wouldn't really do very much.

I had the chance to speak in the House about this yesterday and I quoted some of the industry response to our proposal. Clearly, the industry believes that this would be a positive benefit to them with respect to the challenges they are facing this summer.

My colleague mentioned the high Canadian dollar, the skyrocketing price of gasoline, the confusion at the border, an ineffective marketing campaign by the government of Ontario. All of these things are coming together at once, and the initial reaction of the tourism industry to the May 24 weekend was to let us know that they believe this summer they are going to be facing serious difficulties. Obviously, we have to do something.

This isn't something that hasn't been tried before. In fact, our government did this when we were in power after the SARS situation, to ensure that tourism was encouraged in Ontario, and at that time it worked. So I submit to the government that it would work again and it would be a positive development.

It's often suggested that the opposition parties are too negative. We have a role to oppose in the Legislature—and that's an historic role—but we also have an obligation to bring forward constructive suggestions. This is one of them that the government should listen to and heed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Mr. Khalil Ramal: Now I get the chance and the time to speak in detail about this bill, and also about the importance of this bill.

Bill 85, to enhance drivers' licences in the province of Ontario, I think is a very good initiative. I want to commend and congratulate the minister, who has been working very hard for a long time on this issue in order to find a solution for people crossing the border with the United States. I understand that after September 11 the Americans raised so many different issues about security, about people crossing from Canada to the United States or vice versa. I think it's important to them to see that the people who come to their nation are safe and secure and that they are not going to cause any trouble to the safety of the United States. I think it's an important request. That is why we, as a government, are taking an important step towards achieving this goal.

As you know, many people come from the United States to visit the province of Ontario. I'm not talking about thousands or hundreds of thousands; they come by millions on a yearly basis. I heard the statistics not long ago. Almost five million people come to visit Niagara Falls on a yearly basis, and some of them come from the United States. That's why it's important for our tourist industry in this province to create some kind of accessibility mechanism to allow people to travel back and forth without any problem and eliminate all the concerns of the United States, especially in terms of security and the people who go to visit the United States. This creates some kind of a comfort zone for the people and the government of the United States, because our government is taking an important step to make sure that all the people who have those cards are legitimate people, Canadian citizens—they're not criminals—and whatever the border states require. They will hopefully take those cards into consideration.

As you know, in Ontario we deal a great deal with the United States in terms of our economy. Our GDP with the United States is almost $600 billion a year. I learned not long ago that Highway 401 alone contributes almost $200 billion every year, through the trucking industry moving goods from the United States to Canada and from Canada to the United States on a regular basis. I got the chance last year, through our auto caucus, to meet with people from the manufacturing industry and the auto industry. You know what they told us? Most of the parts that go into our cars travel six times back and forth to the United States. It's important to create the accessibility.

That's why I think this bill has some kind of provision to create a special licence with a magnetic chip or computer chip that can detect and read more information about the drivers who are driving those trucks or cars, to make it easy and accessible to the United States. It's in our best interest to move goods from Canada to the United States faster and without any extra costs that will occur if the car or the truck stays longer on the highway. As you know, those huge trailers or trucks cost a lot of money for the drivers, for gas, and sometimes it affects the goods, especially if you are transporting animals like cows or pigs, or whatever product. Also, vegetables cannot tolerate the heat or cold weather. That's why I think it's very important to create innovative ideas in order to create accessibility to the United States, back and forth, without hurting our neighbours and without jeopardizing our industry in Ontario.

The most important thing is to create a comfort zone with the Americans, which I think they've asked for for a long time, because it's important to them. If they want to welcome people to the United States, it has to be safe, not criminals or terrorists. That's why our government has taken what I think is a very important and practical step to eliminate fear and to create a mechanism to allow people to access the United States without any problems, so that the Americans are comfortable with our strategy.

The most important thing is also to create a driver's licence and enhance the driver's licence. Of course, this enhanced driver's licence has a lot of personal information about the person: his or her citizenship and background information required for the security of the United States. That is why the citizens of Ontario, if they wish, can apply for this driver's licence. It's not mandatory; if you want it, you can apply for it. The cost, as has been mentioned many different times, is between $35 and $40. I heard from the minister and the parliamentary assistant that those costs are not to raise money as extra funds. The cost of this one here is only to cover the cost of the card. As you know, those technical cards cost money, cost employers to put the pieces together etc. So this costs only $35 to $40 per card.

But I think it's important for all of us. It's important because this card contains a lot of information. Also, when you go through the border, the border officer can swipe the card and know all the details about the person. It basically has more information, similar information to a passport.

A passport, as you know, is a little bit big. Not many people are comfortable carrying the passport back and forth. That's why the small magnetic card has all the information, similar information to that passport. You can put it in your wallet. It's easy to keep in your wallet all the time. It's like a credit card, like a Visa, like whatever. It's small like a driver's licence; it's driver's licence-sized but has more information in it. Also, the people who don't want to have this card can have a passport or a regular driver's licence.

But the most important thing is that our government is creating a way to allow people to be comfortable, to be able to access the United States, back and forth, without any hesitation and without any problem. As you know, sometimes it's very difficult to go to the passport office and apply for a passport. Sometimes you have to wait. Sometimes you don't know whether or not your passport has expired. There are so many different complications. This is an extra, alternative way to have accessibility to the United States.

Besides that, some people can use this photo ID for many different things. If you want to go to a bank, if you want to go to different government offices, you can present this ID because this ID has all the information needed for whatever reason. Also, if you are below age and you don't have the right to drive yet, there is another photo-ID-enhanced card for people who are below the eligible age to obtain a driver's licence. As this enhanced card has all the information about the person, they can access the United States the same way as with their driver's licence.

Many people talk on a daily basis about the importance of the tourism industry in this province. As you know, after SARS, after September 11, after the gas prices and after the high dollar, not many people like to travel as much as before. That's why our government has taken so many different good initiatives to attract people to come to Ontario. One of those initiatives creates an accessibility mechanism, a card, an enhanced driver's card, an enhanced photo ID card, to allow them to go back and forth more easily than before.

I'm proud to be a part of this province. In the province of Ontario we have a lot of tourist sites. It's beautiful; it's amazing. As parliamentarians, sometimes we get the chance to travel with committees across the province—

Mr. Peter Shurman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Quorum, please.

The Clerk-at-the-Table (Ms. Lisa Freedman): A quorum is present, Speaker.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: We are proud of our province. We're proud of our tourist sites in Ontario. So our job as a government is to create all the means, goods and ways to attract more visitors to come and visit the province. As I mentioned at the beginning, my friend the member for Niagara Falls told me that almost five million people visit Niagara Falls on a yearly basis. Most of those visitors come from the United States, whether to visit Niagara Falls or to enjoy the recreation facilities in Niagara Falls. Also there are many beautiful sites, whether in Ottawa, Chatham-Kent, Strathroy, London—many places—Orléans, Windsor and Toronto. This province has beautiful, natural sites that attract many people from across the globe to come to visit.

Many people are talking about the departure of manufacturing from Ontario and that we have to rely on different alternatives. We have to promote this province. That's why our Premier appointed the member for Vaughan, the Honourable Greg Sorbara, to commission a study to see how we can promote our tourism in the province of Ontario, how we can create some way to tell the people about this beautiful province, how we can tell them to come visit and be comfortable and be happy, and also to create some way to tell people about our natural resources, our natural sites, which we enjoy on a daily basis in the province of Ontario. But we have to promote it, not just nationally but also internationally, especially with our neighbouring country, the United States.

I was watching TV not long ago and I was seeing those movie stars, the Hollywood stars. They are coming to Ontario, they're coming to Toronto to shoot their films, because they think we have all the sites that give them the tools and the way to produce some of the best films in the world.

So that's why I think we have a lot of things to be proud of, we have a lot of places that we can be proud of, but the most important thing is how we can promote those sites, how we can tell the people of Canada, how we can tell the people of the United States and tell the people of the world about Ontario: about the parks we have, about the lakes we have, about the heritage buildings we have, about the theatres we have, about the movie theatres we have, about our environment, about our valleys and beautiful sites which we enjoy on a daily basis but don't pay much attention to. These places, I think, will be important to all the people to come and see.

That's why our Minister of Transportation wants to work hard to create a way to allow people to come and visit without any trouble and without any problems. Most of the time, we take things for granted, and sometimes, when we travel, we get lazy. If we think this place or that place or a certain location is going to cause us some kind of problem or difficulty or create extra work for us, we don't go visit it. But when we create accessible ways, I think we'll be attracting more people. This is the importance of the idea of an enhanced driver's licence, and it's important for us, as Ontarians, to increase the tourism industry, the commercial industry, the transportation industry, because we rely a lot on those areas. They support our economy big-time.

As I mentioned to you, when I was meeting with the transportation industry not a long time ago, they told me that they haul almost $200 billion on a yearly basis from Canada to the United States. So can you imagine if we delay that transportation industry? They pay for mileage, they pay per hour, and also some products are perishable products, or they sometimes haul animals through the border, like chickens, hogs, beef, and those animals cannot tolerate the heat; they cannot tolerate the cold.

So I think it's our responsibility to create an accessible mechanism. Enhancing licences by creating some kind of a magnetic or electronic chip can send a signal to the border officer, who can read all the information before the trucks reach the booth and then can allow them to access the United States fast and quick. I think it's a very important idea, because the whole idea for the accessibility to the United States is security. They want to know more information about the driver, about the truck, about the location and the company. When that chip sends a signal to the border officer, they can read all the information about the driver and all the information about the truck and the company. Then, if it's a legitimate company, a respectable company, and has no record of any criminal activities or harbouring terrorists or whatever, they can allow them access with no problem or troubles. It's easier for the border officers and easy for commuting back and forth. I think it's a very important step.

Also, the drivers' licences is a very innovative idea. I was, at one time, interviewed on the radio in London on AM 980 with John Wilson, as all the MPPs and MPs have the chance every month to go on the show and listen to the people of Ontario and answer questions. And the most important thing was that people were asking about those drivers' licences a long time ago. They were asking how come we cannot create, with the advanced technology we have today, some kind of card or tool to allow people to visit the United States fast and quick and to come back fast and quick.

Sometimes people are hesitant to travel to the United States because you may have to sit for five, six, seven hours at the border waiting for your turn to come, and especially in cold weather and hot weather it's very difficult. As you know, when are you driving in the summertime, the air conditioning does not work when the car is sitting. It doesn't work well. So it's difficult and inconvenient for many people.

I think by creating this tool, this card, we are helping people with fast and quick access to the United States and we are helping our economy continue to be prosperous. We wish the economy of the United States would get better. Our economy will be getting better. It's important for us to continue this good relationship with our friends in our neighbouring country, the United States.

I think it's important for all of us to support this initiative because it's important for all of us. It's important for our economy, it's important for our tourism, it's important for a good relationship with the United States and it's also good for the people of Ontario. I'm privileged and honoured to be a part of a government that is thinking about all these details, all the means and ways to help people have access, to live a good life and to travel without any problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Questions and comments?

Mr. Peter Shurman: Just a brief response. I'll speak at length to the bill itself in a couple of moments, but in response to my friend from London-Fanshawe who talked about a variety of issues that in one way or another interface with this bill, he made a comment concerning the possibility of equipping trucks that engage in trans-border commerce with chips that could be very easily encoded with the contents of the truck and all kinds of information that would facilitate border crossings. It might be of interest to this House and the member to know that this is done routinely by CN Rail when they put their trains together so that the assembly of trains—and I'm talking about huge trains with hundreds of cars in them—can be measured instantaneously, electronically, as they go by. I think he brings a good point forward which might well be worthy of consideration by the transportation ministry going forward because it would facilitate border crossings. I congratulate him on coming up with that.

In terms of his comments on tourism, again, I think on behalf of all sides of this House, it behooves us to consider the implications of anything we do, whether it be the enhanced cards that we're discussing today or any incentive that can bring people to move from their homes to some other place, whether they be Ontarians or whether they be people who are crossing our borders.

Contrary to statements issued yesterday in this House by the tourism minister, I think that going forward, we have some worries. Some of them may well lie with this government and others may not, but the fact of the matter is, everybody has to endure $1.30—probably soon $1.40, $1.50—gas. There are a lot of things that come into play here when we talk about moving vehicles from one jurisdiction to another.

I congratulate the member from London-Fanshawe on what he had to say and I think some of those comments are very worthy of consideration.

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: I also want to commend the member from London-Fanshawe on his thoughts in terms of the enhanced driver's licence. He talked about how some people are reluctant to carry a passport, and I agree. I know for myself, the worry of losing it or having it taken from you is certainly considerable. It is a little bulkier than the driver's licence, so you really want to make sure you hang on to it. You don't always have it with you when you need to have it with you, but a driver's licence is something you carry with you all the time.

One of the other advantages this proposal in this bill has is that it will also act as a photo ID card. One of the things that does happen for people who don't have a driver's licence—and there are many people who do not have drivers' licences—is that when they're asked for a photo ID, they have nothing. Or if they're asked for two pieces of photo ID, they may have their OHIP card but they have nothing else. So this gives them an opportunity to have one more piece of photo ID that has all the information they need to have inside that card, so that again becomes enhanced identification for those people.

I'm also very aware of the fact that many border states are considering like legislation. That's very important if you look at my riding of Lambton-Kent-Middlesex, where we have a large tourism component. When you're along the lakes—Lake St. Clair and Lake Huron—and you have communities like Grand Bend, which are renowned summer resort areas, the opportunity to have people flow into our province from the border states is very important. One of the issues for a lot of tourism in my communities is the fact that we rely very heavily on the American tourists; we want them to come to our communities, we want their dollars, we need them to be there, and this certainly will enhance that opportunity as well.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to follow the comments of the member from London–Fanshawe on Bill 85, the Photo Card Act. Certainly it's been spoken about quite a bit since 9/11, and the world has changed dramatically. People's identifications are drastically important in how we move around the world. We're kind of trying to get in line with what the US is going to require. I know that the member from Wellington–Halton Hills mentioned that the dates have changed several times for the identification requirements to go across the border. I think that, in a sense, is a good thing in that the Americans realize how vital it is to keep the flow going back and forth, and we certainly see this also. It's their requirement, to get back into their country, that proper identification and the passport qualifications be brought forward. It's nice, in a sense, to see the two countries working together in this respect. But, as I had mentioned in some previous comments, there already is a lot of misinformation on the American side that they need a passport to get back and forth now, so they're not coming up to take their weekend fishing tours, not coming up to our sporting events to watch the games, and it is impacting them. We see that the Buffalo Bills are going to come up and play—is it one game or more than one game up here?

Interjection.

Ms. Laurie Scott: Now I've got the guys on the other side awake. Now the gentlemen are awake. That's a sign of how critical it is that we go down to their sporting events. They're going to keep us interested in the NFL, especially up here, and we certainly welcome that. As you see, everyone woke up and the excitement is here; it's that way across the province. We want to keep that traffic flowing maybe as fast as possible. It's interesting to see this debate, and hopefully we'll accomplish that.

Mr. Norm Miller: It's my pleasure to add comments to the speech of the member from London–Fanshawe on Bill 85, the Photo Card Act, 2008. I think we all recognize that it's vitally important that we make it as easy as possible for Canadians to be able to travel to the States and back, for our goods and services to be able to travel across the border, and for Americans, just as importantly, to be able to come into Canada. This bill would create a new, enhanced photo card for your driver's licence and also, for those who don't have a driver's licence, either a basic or enhanced photo card that would—I assume the government's doing its homework—meet the requirements of the United States' western hemisphere travel initiative.

I think we do have questions about what this is going to cost both the general public and the taxpayers. I know last year there was a new driver's licence that was just brought out: Is that now redundant, I would ask? I think this is very important for tourism in this province.

This is going to be a challenging year for tourism. I think the government needs to do more to help the tourism economy in the province of Ontario. I wish they would pick up on the idea of the PC Party and take off the retail sales tax for this season, for the biggest part of the tourism year in the province of Ontario, the summer season. Take that idea: Take the retail sales tax off for attractions and accommodations. I think that would be a real stimulus for the tourism sector. I think you could add to that some enhanced marketing to keep people in Ontario in the province. Let them know about all the great things to do in Ontario, because this is a year that the tourism sector needs some assistance. I hope the government will work hard to provide some assistance for the tourism sector this year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The honourable member from London–Fanshawe has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I want to thank all the members who spoke and gave comments on my speech, especially the members from Thornhill, Lambton–Kent–Middlesex, Haliburton–Kawartha Lakes–Brock, and Parry Sound–Muskoka.

I want to go back to the member from Thornhill. It's an important issue for us to create accessibility, especially in terms of the transportation industry, because we generate a lot of money, almost $200 billion, through the 401 alone, and $600 billion on a yearly basis through our access road to the United States. Some of the parts travel six times before they finally go into being a part of a car.

The member from Lambton–Kent–Middlesex spoke about the tourism industry. She has beautiful Pinery Provincial Park in her riding. So many people come from across Ontario, from across Canada and the United States to visit and camp on that camping ground. The member from Haliburton–Kawartha Lakes also mentioned the tourism industry in this province. There's no doubt in my mind that she has beautiful sites in her riding too, and many people come.

Talking about sports, we have lots of sport facilities. We have the dome down the road here where the Blue Jays play on a regular basis. We have a lot of places that attract a lot of sports fans from the United States and many places. I think we have to be accessible in allowing them to come and enjoy our facilities here in Ontario.

I think this bill, with the support from both sides of the House, because it's a non-partisan bill, creates accessibility to the people who want to visit our beautiful province. All of us, from both sides of the House, have a great interest in attracting more people to come visit us and spend money in our beautiful province. We have a lot of things to offer: sport facilities, tourist facilities and beautiful, natural spots that they can enjoy when they come to Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Mr. Peter Shurman: It's interesting, his final comment. As I rise to briefly discuss Bill 85, the Photo Card

Act, 2008, the last comment I heard was rather interesting, about debating non-partisan bills. It seems to me, if I might be permitted a brief observation, that most of the bills we've debated in this session have been non-partisan bills, or you might easily describe them as that. In any event, I certainly support this one. So we're not going to get into any heated debate on that.

I hold in my hand my driver's licence, and I hope this will not be considered in any way more than an aide-mémoire; it's not a prop. I'm looking at it only because it is one of the new driver's licences that have been issued over the last five months or so. They were touted as a wonderful innovation by the transport minister when he introduced them because they contain a variety of security features, holographic signatures, photographs and so forth—a very beautiful driver's licence it is indeed.

But I understand that people have already figured out ways to duplicate them, and that's probably the primary issue that I'll want to raise this morning—the issue of security—although I could easily ask the question: Why did we bring out new driver's licences recently if we're going to bring out, yet again, new driver's licences, as indeed we are?

As was previously stated in the Legislature, Her Majesty's official opposition does support the government's intention to move forward with an enhanced driver's licence for Ontario's residents. This is a significant step forward for those residents of Ontario who, due to disability or for whatever reason, do not possess a traditional driver's licence. I have risen in this House to question this very issue previously myself.

In effect, as one of the three cards that are being discussed is a driver's licence without the right to drive, as it were, an identity card that contains some form of biometric information—and especially photo ID that allows somebody to identify themselves as indeed being themselves when presenting themselves to a bank or to another institution that requires some form of official identification—in that sense, I have to say that I support it.

The card itself does indeed rectify an imbalance in our identification system and it allows individuals access to ID that provides ready information for obtaining this host of various other instruments: credit cards, opening a bank account, proving age for seniors' discounts—like I now get sometimes, Mr. Speaker.

Trade between Canada and the United States is valued at a very large figure—I believe the member from London-Fanshawe mentioned something in the vicinity of $1.9 billion per day. And he's quite correct: Economics, especially now, dictate that we accommodate the expeditious transit of goods and people across our borders with our southern neighbour.

That raises some other issues which I'll discuss at greater length as we go forward, not least of which is the fact that although we are entertaining the concept of bringing in these new cards, and very particularly cards that contain information similar to that now contained on passports, we have no evidence with any degree of finality that our southern neighbour is ready to definitively accept these cards in the place of passports. That's one of the things that concerns me in looking at this bill.

Here in the GTA, we have access to the QEW and the 401. These are two critical arteries that link the economy of southern Ontario to the industrial dynamo of the American Midwest and the key markets of the eastern US. We can be stick-in-the-mud holdouts at our own economic peril, or we can, as the saying goes, get with the program. We in the PC Party agree with the latter: getting with the program. If we can negotiate a definitive agreement to accept this form of electronic transfer, good for us, and good for them, I think.

Each day the bottlenecks at the crossings in Windsor and Sarnia and Niagara are costing the economy, in and of themselves, billions of dollars in lost revenue. So is the inaction of this government, I have to say, but that's another story for another day, or maybe it's something for question period. But I digress.

It is due to the sensitive nature of the material being stored on these cards and due to the dependency that our economy has on timely access to US markets that I believe we only have one shot to get these cards right, and I mean really right, because we're talking about spending an awful lot of money; we're talking about incredible sensitivity of information that just cannot go further than the card itself in the hands of the individual holder of each and every one of those cards.

I got this fabulous new driver's licence recently that I mentioned—and, no, it wasn't a prop. I can see my signature on there from four different angles, so the security features in that are embedded and wonderful. But, as I've said, I'm betting that someone—and probably a number of someones—is already turning those out. I believe the last statistics that I saw on the issue of driver's licences in the province of Ontario said that they outstrip by hundreds of thousands the number of licensed drivers in the province of Ontario. So that speaks to the issue of whether identification cards of any sort, driver's licences or otherwise, beg duplication on the part of people who have nefarious ideas in mind.

I want to look back into my memory and recall for this House certain teenagers who shall remain nameless, early in the days of the original PCs—I'm talking 20 to 25 years ago—changing their marks in school by hacking into the school computer, breaking into the Pentagon's computers just for fun. And that was then, with a little thing called an IBM PC/XT that probably had a processor somewhat less powerful than the BlackBerry that I have on my belt here today.

Mr. Bob Delaney: Much less.

Mr. Peter Shurman: Right, much less.

Today, we all know about lost laptops with hard drives that contain incredible amounts of very sensitive information. We all know about discarded printouts of sensitive personal data files and misplaced bank databases or huge volumes of data on disks that nobody has disposed of, left in discarded premises from which somebody has moved. Read the newspaper, listen to the radio; you hear these stories every single day.

I owned and operated a call centre myself for about 15 years during the development and maturation of e-commerce. I personally had some familiarity with things like SQL databases, Oracle databases and a host of others, and trust me—because you can't trust anybody else; that's a bit of a tongue-in-cheek comment—when you're dealing with electronic files, once they get into the wrong hands an incredible amount of damage can be done. I am sure, without knowing for certain, that there are people in this House who have been affected personally by some form of identity theft. This has happened in my family, and I know it can wreak havoc; all this to say that my support is there for the new cards. My support is there, but these licences—or, if I may, data cards—must absolutely be tamperproof or they are as useless as no ID at all. I think that every single member of all parties in this House should bear that in mind as this bill makes its way through committee and back into this House and is passed, as it undoubtedly will be.

We already know that errors exist within the current MTO tracking system that have enabled drivers who have had their driving privileges suspended to be issued new licences. And we know that there are thousands, even tens of thousands—and I've said that I've heard figures as high as hundreds of thousands—more issued driver's licences than there are Ontario drivers. It's a staggering figure.

Can the minister assure the House and the people of Ontario that such mistakes do not happen under the proposed new regime? And will he provide these assurances, not by saying yes, but by having the supplier or suppliers demonstrate the absolute certainty of the system contemplated? I'm not being difficult. "You don't get a second chance to make a first impression," is a saying that I heard a long time ago and it certainly is applicable in this particular case.

There are a number of other questions that are raised by the bill and aspects of the bill that get down to what I'll call niceties, one of them being the fact that there are three cards envisioned: a combined photo card, a basic photo card and an enhanced photo card. I'm taking that to mean that the basic photo card would be a driver's licence without being a driver's licence, i.e., it looks like absolutely anybody else's driver's licence except you can't drive; the second card would be a combined photo card, and I'm taking that to mean it would be that plus a driver's licence; and then an enhanced photo card, which I will assume is the driver's licence, the basic ID, and all of the metrics that are now embedded in our Canadian passports would be embedded in these cards. That is the very issue that I focus on when I express the concerns that I have about security, because in the wrong hands and with the right machinery, an incredible amount of damage can be done.

I recognize as well that time is of the essence and that the people of Ontario cannot afford to have a solution to the issue of identification become stalled, in this House or anywhere else. We have economic problems in Ontario. We are discussing them from all parties' perspectives in this House during question period every day, in caucus rooms every day, and frankly at dinner tables all over the province every day, as we are on a slide. Different people have different views on why we are on that slide, but there is no question that we have to stop it. One way to stop it is to facilitate the transportation of people, goods and services from this province, outward and back in, and that's why I say that the rapid facilitation of the implementation of these cards or any other electronic measure that would lend itself to improved transportation of goods and people can only be positive. However, the people of Ontario can afford much less to have a system put together that is rife with errors or loopholes.

Earlier this year, the Ontario privacy commissioner, Ann Cavoukian, raised some extremely valid concerns that I am hoping the Minister of Transportation and his staff are taking into account as this project moves forward. The minister raised the issue of what is called radio frequency identification technology—the acronym is RFID—being implanted in the enhanced cards. This technology can be used to store all sorts of information with a simple swipe.

Some of the members here today may actually have cars that start without a key, you just turn a switch, because they carry on their keychain—one is held up for me now by a member opposite. No props in the House, please. You get into your car and turn a switch. Why does that switch work? Because that particular member or anybody else who has one of these cars carries an RFID tag on his keychain or somewhere else on his person. It's only by proximity that this works, and it works very well.

RFID's intended use is to speed up processing at border checkpoints. Cards could emit signals to receivers in customs booths and thus display the vital statistics required. Actually, the technology is, in the parlance of the day, pretty cool, and I happen to be a techno freak. But—and this is a very big "but"—RFID technology in the wrong hands can be used to track the location of individuals carrying enhanced driver's licences due to the radio signals that those cards will emit in response to the appropriate stimulus. That means to say, in plain language, that if you have the right machine, and you push the right button, and someone is nearby with one of these licences, you learn everything there is to know on that card on a screen or printed on a piece of paper. What can you do with that information? A heck of a lot, and by "a heck of a lot," we're talking about damage.

What kind of measures are MTO staff taking to address this concern? Can I pass a scanner that provides anything and everything about me to the wrong person in possession of such a device? The answer is yes. So how do we prevent that, my walking by that scanner and giving away that information? I know we can, but I ask on behalf of every one of us here, not as an opposition member being critical for criticism's sake, but as a responsible member of provincial Parliament. We need to know what protective measures we can rely on. We need to know this, and this is an urgent aspect of what we are discussing here today. RFID technology does not encrypt or otherwise protect the unique identifying number assigned to the holder of the so-called licence or card and would not protect any other personal information stored on the RFID.

Now, let me elaborate on this a little bit. It's not unlike every single cellphone. Every cellphone transmits a unique number called an electronic serial number. With the right receiver, criminals capture—and this happens all the time—and clone these numbers. Then they clone the phones, and then they ring up bills on the rightful phone owner's account. To extrapolate from that, my licence in the wrong hands gets a criminal across the border potentially, and American computers now have information saying I'm in Buffalo, when I'm not. The phone thing has happened to me. I've been called by my supplier at one time or another and I have been asked, "Were you in Dallas yesterday, Mr. Shurman? And by the way, did you fly from there to Miami?" The answer was, "No, I was in Toronto all day yesterday." "Well, that's interesting, because your telephone registers calls in both Dallas and Miami."

It sounds like I'm digressing; I am not. This is the same concern that I have. Once you transmit numerical information that is unique to an individual—in this case a cellphone; in the case of the bill, one of the new electronic cards—that information going through the air and captured on the right machine can have devastating consequences in the wrong hands, and it's the wrong hands that I worry about.

The combined photo card will meet the applicable rules set out by the United States' western hemisphere travel initiative. These rules are expected to severely limit the types of documentation that will be acceptable for entry into the United States. That's a salient aspect as well.

I happen to have a passport. I am willing to bet that 90%, maybe more, of members of this House have a passport, but it would be interesting to note that the majority of Canadians do not have passports. The majority of Canadians have no need for passports, or up to now have had no need for passports, and given the fact that in the next year there will be a requirement to have a passport or some acceptable documentation that has yet to be defined—maybe this card—but hasn't been accepted by the United States, you'll need a passport to get into the United States as of, I believe, June 2009. For most Canadians who don't have them, it would require them to go out and spend a significant sum of money, and even passports, as I understand it, are under review. So there are an awful lot of implications to just saying, "We're going to have an electronic card," not least of which is the fact that although the main individual involved with national security, Michael Chertoff—I believe his title is Secretary of the United States Department of Homeland Security—has said, "Yes, we think this is a good idea," and although this initiative has been test-marketed in British Columbia and is being looked at by a number of our neighbouring provinces, there is no protocol in place as yet that says, "Yes, we, the United States, will accept your card."

Another concern that I want to put on the record is that, unless and until the United States says, "We are prepared to accept the card in place of a passport," why would we want to spend millions and millions of dollars to create this new card? Let's make sure that we have our bases covered.

Finally, and I only have a short time left—less than a minute—I'd like to use this opportunity to address, because this is a transportation bill, the issue that has been raised in a number of other presentations by my fellow members, and that is the use of our roads for tourism. Tourism at this point is something we'll see sadly lacking this summer because people from outside and inside the province are facing the prospect of gas that may rise as high as $1.50 a litre.

We've presented an initiative from this side that would involve relieving people of sales tax payments at the tourism level—we're talking about hotels, shows and so forth—and I would hope that going forward, before we recess for the summer, the government considers either that or some variation on that theme.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Questions and/or comments?

Mr. Bob Delaney: It is a pleasure to follow a very thoughtful and informed commentary by my colleague from Thornhill, who held up his driver's licence and noted that it has just been changed and it will likely change again. I also noted that he ran a call centre. I hope it's not he who's been calling me every night at dinner-time. He also pointed out that he's worked with Oracle, SQL Server and probably through the evolution of several generations of operating systems on which those applications ran. He also says—and here's a little inconsistency that I'd like to address. He asks for absolute certainty and says—and I'll use his words—"We will only have one shot to get this right." Well, change will be a constant. The public, the police and the law will continue to wage war against those who would use your identity to steal your life and steal your savings so that they can steal more of your money and that of others.

We are going to have to cope with the evolution of standards, with the change in technology, with the increasing and sophisticated risk of fraud and with evolving security standards and changing practices in how we use ID documents. That means that regardless of what change and what card system we put into place, it, like the currency we carry in our wallets, will change.

As an example of change I'd like to use, in closing, the words of the late Gus Grissom, who said of space flight, just a short time before he burned to death in a pre-launch training accident in 1967, "There's always a chance for a catastrophic accident or a failure. It can happen on the first mission as well as the last. But you can't let that paralyze you. You get a good crew, you train them well and you go fly." I think that that is very much typical of the approach that this bill takes in a core piece of ID.

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: I want to commend my colleague from Thornhill for a great presentation on Bill 85. Obviously, it's quite evident that he understands the legislation: not only the need for it, but the things that are needed to make it work.

Bringing up a point that I think is maybe not part of the bill—in fact, it isn't in the bill—we have to make sure that at the end of the process the reason it was instituted will actually work. If we don't have the commitment of the jurisdictions around us—if you go to all this expense and you create this identification card, you need to know that it will be accepted as identification to travel across the border. I think we need to do whatever we can to make sure we can expediently cross the border, but if this legislation doesn't create that which is needed, then it's all to no avail.

He spoke about the different types of cards. I did have some requests from my local people not too long ago that suggested we should have something in place where you could actually go to the licence office and, if you didn't have a driver's licence, you could get the same identification that you could use. There are people in our province who don't drive and have no need for a driver's licence, but they would like to be able to have identification that way. But if you then include all the information that's required to get a passport to get that same identification card, then we're not solving the problem, because obviously they could go out and get the passport too. So if this isn't going to make it any easier to get than a passport, they might as well get a passport.

But having said that, if we have one that's a combined driver's licence with that information—and I think, even if we didn't need it, there's no reason why that type of information couldn't be on your driver's licence—why do we need a basic photo card, if we have an enhanced photo card? Why would you need two if one will do the job?

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I want to commend the member for Thornhill for speaking in detail and voicing his concern about many different aspects.

He spoke about security. I think security is very important to all of us. I don't think the passport is more secure than the card we're going to issue. I think it's very important to create some kind of security mechanism for all the people across the province of Ontario, and across North America, as a matter of fact.

He also spoke about cloning, taking the numbers of cellphones and using them from different parts of the world. It's a very legitimate concern. But, sir, whatever we do in this life, the criminal also has ways and access to technology. They can access it and clone everything. They cloned a human being this time. They can imitate us. They can clone me and clone anyone they want.

I think it's important to raise issues. He also raised the very important issue of talking to the United States about whether they are accepting this card or not. I think the minister and the government of Ontario are not going to issue a card that costs millions of dollars to the people of Ontario without consultation with our neighbouring states to see if they will accept that card or not. I think his concern is legitimate. Hopefully, when we go more in debate and also in the committee, we can figure out a way and all the possibilities to tighten this bill and make it perfect, because, as he mentioned, we cannot jeopardize our security.

Also, we have the first hit. If we don't make it on the first hit, I guess our image would be tarnished. I think it's very important to create a good first impression to all the people, to tell them, "Yes, we are concerned about this issue and we want to create something good for all the people and to a certain degree very secure," that's good for the people and also gives them the chance if they want it or they don't want it.

Mr. Robert Bailey: I'd also like to add my remarks today to the debate on Bill 85. It's important to my riding of Sarnia-Lambton, being a major tourist area and having a major border crossing there as well. There are a number of Sarnia-Lambton residents who cross the border to our neighbouring jurisdictions and vice versa. We have many tourist attractions there, and also international trade; thousands and thousands of vehicles every day cross that border. So anything we can do to make it easier for our residents of Ontario to do that, and to contribute to security since 9/11, will certainly also be important.

I'd like to commend the member for Thornhill on his remarks. I heard the bulk of it in my office before I came down here and I heard the rest of it as he concluded. I think he made a number of very erudite remarks and points about the legislation, about the security and access to information that will be available in these. I've got a passport as well, but I'm sure I don't have nearly as many stamps on mine as the honourable member from Thornhill. I know he's a world traveller and knows about such things as security and travelling because he's done a lot of travelling around the world, in many different jurisdictions.

I would like to just repeat some of the remarks that other members made on our side of the House and on the government side as well. I support it for all those reasons, with the provisions and issues of security and access to information that the honourable member from Thornhill expressed, as well as a number of other members from the government. At this time I would just like to say that we'll be supporting this bill at the time it comes to a vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The member from Thornhill has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr. Peter Shurman: Thank you to the various members from all sides of the House who have responded to what I had to say.

Let me make some specific comments. With regard to the points raised by the member from Mississauga—

Streetsville, just an admonition to my friend: Don't be so abject in accepting change as a constant. I know that change is the only constant in the world, but "Always do your best" is what I'd say. That being said, thank you for the support, because I think in essence we're on the same side of the security issue.

My friend the member from Oxford expressed concerns about the whole thing working and being accepted, which was a grand echo of my main points. There is a cost that is attached to the acquisition of a passport, and it is a significant cost for most Canadians. We have heard, although we don't know in great specifics, that there is a cost that will ultimately be attached to the obtaining of this licence. There's also a cost attached to the obtaining of a current driver's licence. So one way or another, we've got to figure out what it is in summary that Ontarians are going to pay to get some kind of card that gets us onto the roads and across borders.

To the member from London—Fanshawe: The security concerns raised were very similar to those raised by the member from Mississauga—Streetsville, and again I'm more in agreement than disagreement insofar as the use of chip technology and trying to be as secure as possible.

Finally, to my good friend on my left from Sarnia—Lambton, who talks passionately about the tourism and trade aspects that very much affect our commerce here in Ontario and notably in his riding, let me assure him that, no, I don't have that many stamps on my passport. With the cost of travel being what it is, it's hard to get around these days.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: I welcome the opportunity to stand and speak to Bill 85. I want to say right from the outset that I will be supporting Bill 85.

I'd like to set the record straight, as it were, that passage of this legislation will allow for the creation of a passport alternative. It says that in all things, when one starts a journey, one must take a first step towards the common goals. To me the common goals, certainly in my mind, are to allow for not only the free travel movement of the people of Ontario but also for goods moving around as well.

Many members in the House know how important tourism is to a riding like Huron—Bruce. Certainly agriculture and energy are the two economic drivers, but I can tell you that tourism follows closely on their heels. We also have what I would call a fully mature tourism industry within the riding of Huron—Bruce. We have seen a number of Americans who have chosen to make their summer homes in the riding of Huron—Bruce, along beautiful Lake Huron. I know the Speaker knows all about what I speak of.

I see this as something that the people of Ontario have certainly asked for. When we think about what happened on 9/11, we know that the world changed. How people think of their security and ensuring that they are secure—everyone's vision of that changed on that day. I can recall, as I know we all can, those who are old enough to remember, what we were doing on the day that it happened. I just wanted to share with the House my story. When 9/11 happened, I was warden of the county and we were sitting in committee and we had been for a number of hours. We received a call from one of our engineers that one of the planes had just hit the first building. So we decided to bring in a TV and watch. I don't think there will ever be a day in my life that I remember quite as clearly as that day—the horror that one felt seeing the devastation in New York City. Really, your sense of what you always thought to be secure—certainly we had a significant shift in our minds in how we perceived our security. You simply could not believe that it could happen. I know that in many countries that have experienced war on their own lands this is something they have experienced over the years, but in North America we had never had anything like that happen before. So we knew from that day going forward that things would change, and they certainly have changed.

But what we must always ensure is that we have, as in all things, a balance. We must ensure that our people have a sense of security while also not creating barriers for the movement of our goods and people, because then we have lost a sense of our economy as well.

One of the facets that I believe will meet the needs of the people of Ontario is that the MTO is proposing four separate products, the first product being a regular driver's licence, which is what we're used to, but with more enhanced security; also an enhanced driver's licence; and a photo card for non-drivers.

I have received over the years a number of letters and calls from my constituents specifically with this concern. The composition of my riding has more seniors, and this is something that has been of concern to them. They no longer have a valid driver's licence, but they know that in today's world you need some type of photo ID. When the driver's licence is gone from their personal belongings, they really don't have any photo ID left. It's my seniors and those in that 16-to-19 range as well, if they don't go with their driver's licence. Even travelling throughout Canada, and the United States as well, one often needs some type of photo ID that can be accepted, not only for banking.

I'm very pleased about this photo card for non-drivers. The Ministry of Transportation has recognized that as a concern of the people of Ontario and it is bringing it forward in these very comprehensive adjustments being made through Bill 85 that speak to that, and also an enhanced photo card for non-drivers.

I'm running out of time and I wanted to give other members the opportunity to speak. But I wanted to get on the record that there is a cost to implement this system. I understand that. But a system going forward that will allow four alternatives to passports I feel is a very significant movement. I want to get on the record as well that there is also a cost for doing nothing.

We recognize that in order to allow for movement, we must begin a much more enhanced program. This comprehensive Bill 85 recognizes that and it will also be addressing other concerns from our seniors and our young people in bringing forward photo cards for non-drivers. That is why I wanted to take this opportunity to stand in this House and speak to my support for Bill 85. I do thank you for the opportunity to speak and I look forward to the next member's opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Questions and/or comments?

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to join in comments once again this morning on Bill 85, the Photo Card Act. The many comments that we've received this morning from members—it's about this enhanced driver's licence card that would provide citizenship information.

Obviously, we understand that this is all coming from the occurrence of 9/11, the importance of having proper documentation, to protect—in this case, the US is demanding that they have proper identification that they would accept before entering their country.

It's a huge impact financially, we've heard, on our province and tourism. People go back and forth, but not as much as we'd like to. Some people don't have passports. Up to four million people don't have a valid driver's licence. That's the card that most people use when going across, with their birth certificate etc. I'm sure everyone's crossed the border at one point or another.

So we're happy that the government is bringing in the Photo Card Act. We're a little concerned about details and privacy. We just had the member from Thornhill tell us about the new driver's licence that was brought in just a year ago. So we've spent a lot of money bringing in this new driver's licence. Now it's changing again. The fact that this is going to be three new cards—the combined photo card, the basic photo card, the enhanced photo card—is a little confusing for some people. These are details that we need to flush out.

The important part of this legislation is that we need to keep and enhance that flow of cross-border traffic, whether it be tourism, business etc. I've mentioned many times that tourism is certainly critical in my area of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock. I hope the auto industry continues to be a critical part of our economic stimulus that we have in Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock, and that's part of this too.

Mr. Norm Miller: I'm pleased to add some comments to the member from Huron-Bruce's speech on Bill 85, the Photo Card Act, 2008. I might point out that our lead on this—our transportation critic, the member from Newmarket-Aurora—has yet to deliver his lead, which is the hour-long leadoff speech. We'll look forward to his speech because I'm sure he will have done a lot of research on it and may have thought of things that we haven't thought of.

Basically, our caucus is in general support of this bill. There are concerns to do with privacy that have been raised by privacy commissioners, but certainly the need to keep border traffic moving across the border is vitally important to our economy.

There have been some concerns raised, like why did the government just introduce a new enhanced driver's licence within the past year and now it's proposing this? Does that mean we just changed the whole driver's licence for a year or two? This is supposed to be implemented in June 2009, so I would question whether the money was well spent on the driver's licence which has just been announced.

I think there are some valid concerns about why we need three cards—the combined photo card, the basic photo card and an enhanced photo card. Could it not be done as one card? I would think, why would someone want to get a basic card which doesn't have the enhanced information? So then they go to cross the border and it's not sufficient; it doesn't meet the criteria of the United States western hemisphere travel initiative to actually be able to get across the border. I'd certainly like an explanation from the government as to why they're proposing that.

As I've stated before, we need to also address tourism concerns this summer to address what I think is going to be a very challenging year in tourism in Ontario.

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: I too want to commend the member from Huron-Bruce for an explanation on the bill. I would agree with her, when she started off first of all by saying that she was going to support the bill.

I think I can almost say the same thing. I do believe it's very important that we bring forward a plan to deal with the border crossing, because when the Americans decide that we have to have this information to get across and all of a sudden all the people in Ontario who don't have a passport can't get across, it's going to be quite detrimental to our tourist industry and so forth. So I support her on that.

I agree that we have to take the first step, but I think it's very important that we also have an idea that that step is going in the right direction. I understand from some of the notes that in fact we have some commitment from homeland security that they would accept something of this nature to get across the border, but I would hope that the government is working on making sure that what is being proposed will in fact be accepted. As with the driver's licence just having been implemented a year ago, it's somewhat concerning to think that we would go through all the cost and the implementation of something that at the end of the day will not be accepted. So it's really important that the government look at making sure that it will be accepted identification for homeland security before we go to all the expense of putting that in place.

But I would agree with the presentation and thank her for the information that was provided.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Questions and comments? The member for Huron-Bruce has two minutes to respond.

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: I do want to thank all of the members who responded to my comments. Certainly, what I'm hearing is that there is a great deal of support for this bill. We understand that there are some outstanding concerns, but quite frankly, we agree on the path forward; it's just what that path will look like.

I certainly know that the members from across the way have heard from their constituents about the photo ID as well. We know that will address the concerns of many of our constituents who do not have photo ID without a driver's licence.

I welcome quick passage of the bill, and I thank all the members for their comments. We certainly, from this side of the House, do appreciate all your support.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The time for debate has ended.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd like to take this opportunity to introduce a number of guests to the Legislature today.

On behalf of the member for Hamilton East–Stoney Creek, in the west members' gallery, Catherine Dunne.

On behalf of the member for Simcoe–Grey, in the west members' gallery, Aaron Hunt from Tottenham.

On behalf of the member from Whitby–Oshawa, on behalf of page Hisham Mohammad, in the west members' gallery, Fahmida Banu, his mother; Ilyas Mohammad, his father; Faizah Ilyas, his sister; and Ismath Unissa, his grandmother.

On behalf of page Rachelle Lassaline, in the west members' gallery, her mother, Darlene Lassaline; her father, Chuck; and her sister Ella.

On behalf of the member from Scarborough–Agin-court, the grade 5 class from Our Lady of the Rosary Catholic school in Concord and their teacher, Joe Bush.

On behalf of the member for Toronto–Danforth, seated in the Speaker's gallery, His Worship, the mayor of St. Thomas, Cliff Barwick; Catherine Naismith, president of the Architectural Conservancy of Ontario; Suzanne Van Bommel and Dawn Doty, on behalf of Alma College; and Grant Head and Brenda Head from Hamilton.

I'd like to welcome all of our guests to the chamber today.

APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: My question is to the Deputy Premier. The International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 793, received $5 million in grants from the McGuinty Liberals between June 2007 and January 2008. That's five million taxpayers' dollars in just seven months. According to Local 793, that $5 million was 10 times more than any other grant in the skills training infrastructure program. Deputy Premier, who in your government was responsible for giving Local 793 such a sweet deal?

Hon. John Milloy: I've been very proud of our government's initiatives when it comes to training apprentices here in this province. As members may be aware, there are a number of different training agencies and community colleges. We have employer training. We also have employer-union training operations in place.

A number of years ago there was a $25-million program announced by my predecessor, Minister Bentley. There was a request for proposals that went out to union training centres, union-employer training centres, employer training centres. This was an open and transparent process, and I'm very pleased that we were able to assist a number of these training centres in upgrading their equipment and allowing them to provide better training through a system of apprentices across this province. I'm very pleased that we have 50,000 more apprentices in this province and that we're doing our best to ensure that we see more registrants and more entrants into the skilled trades.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: There's nothing much open and transparent about any of this government's transactions. The minister doesn't explain why this one particular union local received 20% of the funding from this one skills training program. Could it be because Local 793 donated $150,000 to the Working Families Coalition?

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I ask the member to withdraw that comment. Imputing motives is not parliamentary.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: That's an unbelievable decision on your part. God, we can't even ask a legitimate question about where taxpayers' money is going? I am not withdrawing, Speaker.

Mr. Tim Hudak: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the time that you have spent in the chair. I think you'll recall as a member of the assembly on both sides of the House that this type of question is very typical here in the Ontario Legislative Assembly. All parties have asked this question in the past. I do believe that previous Speakers' rulings have found this question very much in order and I think a very valid point by the member for Leeds–Grenville about how campaign donations have been allocated in the province of Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I will take it under advisement.

The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I go back to the minister again. Could it be because Gary O'Neill, the business manager of Local 793, was one of the principals of Working Families? I go back to the minister: Why is it that Local 793 is so special that it gets $5 million and the remaining $20 million is divided up amongst more than 50 other grant recipients?

Hon. John Milloy: This is quite frankly outrageous. If the honourable member has some proof that he wants to put forward, he should bring it forward. We announced the program. We had a competitive call for bids. It was an open and transparent process which was administered by the public service. There were set criteria that I would be happy to share with the member. Decisions were made based on that by the public service. You cannot stand in this House and impugn the reputation of any individual or organization without facts the way he just has. The member should apologize; if not, the member should produce some proof. Say it outside the House.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: Given this government's record of responsibility with taxpayers' dollars, I think we have every legitimate right to raise these issues. Five million dollars in seven short months—one could suggest that's a pretty good return on a $150,000 investment. Gerry Hughes, who's the executive director of Local 793, puts it even better. This is from Local 793's newsletter. He says, "Incredible! We must be doing something right."

"We all owe huge thanks to business manager Mike Gallagher and his team for their successful lobbying work with the provincial government. Their effort paid off in spades and the 'return on investment' has been phenomenal, something like 5,000%." He's a little off; it's more like 3,333%. Minister, who else got such a great return on their investment, or was it just open to the donors behind Working Families?

Hon. John Milloy: I find it outrageous, coming from a party which did nothing to train apprentices, that they would stand up here and knock a system which has produced 50,000 more apprentices in our province.

The honourable member says, "Who else benefited from it?" Maybe he should look around at his fellow caucus members: How about the member from Kitchener-Waterloo, who received money for the Waterloo training centre to expand their ability to train brick and stone masons; the member from Burlington—$627,000 to train construction boilermakers and millwrights; the member from Oshawa, whose riding received money for the Oshawa training centre; and the member from Sarnia—$100,000 to expand the ability to train carpenters?

We need more skilled trades in this province. We have a system of union, union-employer and employer training centres, and I am proud that our government was able to support them in their important work through this fund.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr. Tim Hudak: A question to the Minister of Finance: To the best of your knowledge, is Ontario now in a recession?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: The consensus estimate among the 12 economists whom we routinely consult with says that in spite of the challenges in our economy, the rate of growth today is about 0.9%; it's a very modest rate of growth.

What we need is a federal government that wakes up and understands the importance of the Ontario economy.

We finally heard the federal Minister of Finance yesterday saying that they ought to help the automotive industry. You ought to talk to them and ask why they trashed this province, why Jim Flaherty would run Ontario into the ground.

This government's invested $1.5 billion in training, which they voted against. In spite of the challenges in the economy, we believe that there will be growth in the economy this year. It will be modest, as we've indicated, and we will continue to monitor it very carefully and make the kinds of investments that that member and—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Tim Hudak: I find it passing strange that the finance minister refuses to answer directly a "yes" or "no" question—whether Ontario is currently in a state of recession. I think the finance minister has information at his hand as he prepares his upcoming reports. I'd ask him to share that data immediately with the Legislature.

Those who know that there's a Dalton McGuinty recession in the province of Ontario are the 2,600 GM workers who have permanently lost their jobs in Oshawa; it is the 200 workers at Hallmark in Toronto who just found that they've permanently lost their jobs; it is half the workforce at Lafarge in Oxford county who've just found out they've lost their jobs in Dalton McGuinty's Ontario as part of the Dalton McGuinty recession.

I know the finance minister is anxious to recess this Legislature for the summer because he knows that bad news keeps coming about Dalton McGuinty's mismanagement of the economy. Before we recess, Finance Minister, will you table a mini-budget to state the updated finances of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: Whenever an Ontarian loses a job, this government is concerned. That's why we invested in GM—and you voted against it; that member voted against it. That's why this government has worked with the CAW and with all companies across Ontario to help ensure that we can overcome the challenge of a dollar that's above par, of oil that's in the vicinity of $120, of the state of the US economy—all factors that all economists have cited.

There are challenges, no question, but there's also news the member didn't talk about. He didn't talk about 100,000 net new high-paying jobs in Ontario in the last year. He didn't talk about the fact that unemployment this year is lower than it was at this time last year. He didn't talk about the fact that when he left office the unemployment rate was 7%; today, it's 6.3%. We'll be there for the unemployed in this province, unlike—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Final supplementary?

Mr. Tim Hudak: No doubt the 200,000 families who are now without well-paying manufacturing jobs are deeply grateful that the finance minister is concerned. Do you know what they want, Finance Minister? They want to see some action. They want to see a plan. They want to see you turn this economy around and get us out of the Dalton McGuinty recession.

In your own budget you predicted GDP growth of 1.1%; Toronto Dominion says that it is barely half that, crawling at 0.5% at best. You predicted in your budget that oil would be $85 a barrel; today it hovers around $125 a barrel. You projected a retail sales rate of 3.4%; TD says that it is barely half that.

Finance Minister, your projections have as much bearing in reality as your campaign promises do. I ask you one last time, given the ongoing layoffs in the province of Ontario, given the impacts of the Dalton McGuinty recession on working families, will you rise in your place before we recess for the summer—

Hon. Dwight Duncan: There's no doubt that there are challenges, but the member forgets some other statistics that are actually performing better than they were: retail sales up 5.5% ahead of what we projected; wages up 5.1%; housing starts up 18.9%.

This government and this party are standing behind those people who are facing the challenges of this economy. This government has stood up and done that.

One thing we do need is fairness in employment insurance. One of those GM workers in Oshawa will get $4,000 a year less in employment insurance benefits than a worker in other parts of the country.

As long as there are challenges in the economy, this government will continue to stand up with those families and communities that are suffering. We only wish that party and the federal government would stand with those people and with this government.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: My question is for the Deputy Premier. About two and a half years ago, with much fanfare, the McGuinty government announced a $235-million investment in General Motors in Oshawa. In February of this year, General Motors unveiled their new fuel-efficient hybrid-powered Sierra pickup truck and announced it would go into production this fall. This is exactly the kind of next-generation, fuel-efficient, hybrid-powered pickup truck that should be built in Ontario by Ontario workers, but it's not going to be.

My question is this: How could the McGuinty government give General Motors $235 million of the people's money and not get a guarantee that this vehicle would be built in Oshawa by workers from Oshawa?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: There is no question that what Ontario is looking for are companies to invest in the future products that the whole world will want. Yes, that does include hybrid trucks, and yes, our discussion with General Motors is and was, all of last week and for several days now—any opportunity that we will have with General Motors, with Toyota, with Honda, with Chrysler, with Ford, with any of our new automotive companies yet to invest in Ontario, we do want the next generation of automobile to be built in Ontario.

That is why we've launched a $1.15-billion Next Generation of Jobs Fund. When this fund begins to roll out, as it already has with other sectors, I would look to this member to support the fund, to support our ability to go out and chase investments, to bring them right here to Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: There are some things that are passing strange here.

I want to quote one Dalton McGuinty, May 7, from the Hansard of this place, the assembly: "GM has chosen to make its first-ever hybrid truck in Ontario."

Dalton McGuinty, May 13, here, in this Legislature: "We've learned recently that GM is going to produce its first-ever hybrid truck in North America here in Ontario."

But there's another story that the workers in Oshawa tell. Yes, all of the technology, the development, for this new fuel-efficient truck was done in Oshawa by Oshawa workers. Yes, the McGuinty government handed over $235 million. But the Oshawa workers say it's not going to be built in Oshawa; it's going to be built somewhere else.

So tell us, how can the Premier be promising one thing, handing over $235 million—the workers do the work, but the—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think we should be clear here about the kind of investment that General Motors has made in Ontario. The largest single investment by an automotive company in Canada is in fact the Beacon project. That was a $2.5-billion program. Where did it come? It came to Ontario. Why did it come? It came because of our automotive investment strategy. And let me say this: All of the developments at the Oshawa car plants are a direct result of that.

The very fact that we have a flex line that is going to allow General Motors to change their products as consumer demand is changing—which is very obvious to many of us today. We know that there are other parts that are very challenging. We also know that we plant our flag in the automotive sector as a very strong component of Ontario's manufacturing sector, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I heard lots of words, but no answer to the question. Those workers in Oshawa did the engineering and development work. They built the hybrid that was unveiled in Chicago in February. Some of the $235 million the McGuinty government gave to General Motors was used to do that development work. But the workers in Oshawa know that this truck is going to Mexico.

So I ask again, how could the McGuinty government give $235 million to GM? How could the Premier go around the province saying this truck is going to be built in Ontario? We find out today you had no job guarantees, no product guarantees; it's going to Mexico. How could the McGuinty government be so incompetent as to allow that to happen?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think we should be clear here. If there is more than one partner that we have had in the automotive sector, it's been the workers who work in the automotive sector. That is not what I can say about this particular member of the House. I would ask this particular member, when is the last time you talked to the leader of the CAW and asked him his view of the Ontario government's role in developing investments in the automotive sector? I would just ask him that question.

If there has been a government that has been on the side of workers in automotive, it has been this government, the likes of which the CAW has never seen. I will say today that we are on the side of workers. We want all of the investments to be in Ontario and we will continue to fight to see that that happens, unlike this member, who continues to vote against every single initiative that comes forward to help the very sector that he purports—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question? The leader of the third party.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Acting Premier: I actually went out and met with some of those workers in Oshawa yesterday who are going to be losing their jobs, thanks to the incompetence of the McGuinty government.

I still have not heard an answer. The Oshawa workers know what's going on. Two hundred and thirty-five million dollars of the people's money went from the McGuinty government to General Motors. The Premier, in this House and across Ontario, goes around saying, "Oh, the new, fuel-efficient, next-generation-hybrid Sierra pickup truck is going to be built in Oshawa." The workers there do all the development work, but guess what? The McGuinty government didn't get any job or product guarantees, so the truck is going to Mexico. I ask again, how could any government be so incompetent as to allow that to happen?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think that we have to point the finger at a couple of parties in this House that have refused to support the automotive sector. We stepped forward with an automotive investment strategy and we asked every member in this House to support Ford, to support Chrysler, to support General Motors, to support Toyota, to support Honda. On every single front, your answer was no, no, no, no, and no.

The result today is that we have more investment that has come to this jurisdiction than any other jurisdiction in North America.

Does this sector face challenges? We are the first to understand that it is undergoing some dramatic shifting. The reality is that we want our workers working in our plants. We will continue to fight to see that that happens, more so than any other jurisdiction on this continent.

Mr. Howard Hampton: What is so unbelievable about this is that 2,600 workers, who just won an award yesterday—the Oshawa truck plant, tops in the group in efficiency and quality—the workers who developed the very truck that was put on display in Chicago by General Motors, the very workers who have won all these awards for efficiency and quality, have been sold out by the McGuinty government.

You gave $235 million to General Motors and you got no product guarantee and no jobs guarantee. Those workers want to know: What are you going to do now? What are you going to do to ensure that that $235 million, those jobs, that next-generation truck, stays in Oshawa? Are you going to stand up to GM or not?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think we've made our position more than clear: Not only will we stand up for General Motors, we stand up for CAW workers, we stand up for Ford, Chrysler, Toyota, Honda and any world company that wants to bring investment to this province. We will stand up for them because that means good jobs for our families.

We understand the challenges that General Motors faces today. Let me say this: He purports to speak for the CAW; let me ask him if he supports Buzz Hargrove when he says, "We need both levels of government engaged in order to keep our share of future investment and jobs." And, "Without provincial support (including its participation in GM's Beacon project), the situation facing the industry today would be far, far worse." Do you agree with Buzz Hargrove? Do you agree with that statement?

Mr. Howard Hampton: I think Mr. Hargrove will have his own questions he'll have to answer, and he'll have to answer them someplace. But I'd like to get an answer from the McGuinty government. Here is the reality: There's $235 million of Ontario money that went into the GM plant in Oshawa, there's $200 million of federal money that went into the General Motors plant in Oshawa, and the development work was done on the truck. I don't disagree with making those investments, but I think if you're going to make those investments, you should get job guarantees and product guarantees. What is the McGuinty government going to do to force General Motors to live up to the obligation? They've got the money; the truck was developed in Oshawa. Are you going to force them to produce that truck in Oshawa and sustain Ontario jobs?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: Let me say this again: We understand that the Beacon project that we've participated in did not include the truck product. What we were very heartened to see is the innovation that exists at General Motors, at their engineering centre right here in Oshawa, one of their best engineering centres in world-wide GM, they have the capability to develop the hybrid truck. We want that production in Ontario. We want it to stay here. The fact that it's moving, the fact that we understand the challenges in the industry and what it's facing today—we will continue to work with General Motors and with the CAW.

We recognize those challenges and we want them to be strong. We understand that our workers today are facing serious challenges. So let me say once again, when it comes time to vote, to put your money where your mouth is, will you stand with the CAW workers or will you stand—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

ROAD SAFETY

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: My question is to the Attorney General. Yesterday, through our transportation critic, Frank Klees, we heard that the driver responsible for David Virgoe's death because of street racing was sentenced to two years of house arrest.

When this Legislature passed its own street racing legislation, we sent a clear message to the public and the courts that the province was going to crack down on this criminal activity with a heavy hand. The leniency of the sentence handed down to the individual responsible for David Virgoe's death is an insult to the will and intent expressed by this House and the people of Ontario. Minister, what are you going to do to ensure that the message sent by this House is heard loud and clear in our courtrooms?

Hon. Christopher Bentley: As the member, who is a former Solicitor General, knows, first of all, we prosecuted this case to the full extent of the law. We made submissions in court. Those submissions were not accepted in court. A judge made an independent decision. We are obtaining and awaiting the report of the trial crown before we decide on the appeal issue.

Our government has made it clear, both with provincial legislation and in prosecuting federal legislation, which this is, that we take these matters very seriously. We prosecute them to the full extent of the law. We take a strong position in favour of public safety on these and all matters at all times.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I appreciate the Attorney General's comments, but waiting for a possible appeal to wind its way through the courts will not send a clear message to the hotshot speeders who are going to take to our highways this summer that street racing is a one-way ticket, and should be a one-way ticket, to jail.

Debbie Virgoe, David Virgoe's widow, is in the House today, and I would ask you to tell her that her husband's death will not be in vain.

Attorney General, will your government provide unanimous consent to a resolution calling on the federal government to impose a mandatory minimum jail sentence for deaths caused by street racing? Will you do that?

Hon. Christopher Bentley: To the widow and to the family, our hearts go out for a terrible loss in a terrible case. There is nothing we can say that will change that loss.

We have been clear in this House—on all sides—in our courts, through the prosecutors, and in the position that we have taken publicly through the media that we will take a tough stand on any form of driving offence, whether it's under federal legislation or under provincial legislation. We will continue to take that tough stand. We took it in this case and we will continue, whether it's under federal or provincial legislation.

MANUFACTURING JOBS

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is to the Acting Premier. It's not just about auto jobs moving to Mexico. The Hallmark Canada production facility in North York closed its doors Wednesday, putting 200 more manufacturing workers on the street. Announcements like these seem to be an everyday reality in the Dalton McGuinty government. What is the Premier going to do now: send Hallmark a sympathy card? When will this government admit that its jobs plan isn't worth the paper it's printed on?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: What this government recognized some time ago is that we need all hands on deck when it comes to working with our manufacturing sector. That includes the federal government; that includes every member on all sides of this House.

When budgets are tabled in this very House that speak to things like our skills strategy to reach out to workers who are going to need retraining to work in other areas, we expect full support by all members of this House. And let me be clear: Workers out there who are losing their jobs, individuals who work on those plant floors, who are at Hallmark or at Canac Kitchens, any of those—we feel for those people, and we ask, "How can we help?" That means that when we reach out with our programs, we want to go to them and say, "Every member of the provincial Legislature wants to support a program like this." But we'll watch your voting record very carefully to see how you support the workers that you purport to care for.

Mr. Paul Miller: I'd like to thank the minister for keeping an eye on me.

Kind words won't put food on the table. New Democrats put forward Bill 6 and Bill 71 that would protect workers' severance payouts after mass layoffs like the one at Hallmark. The Premier himself said he would review our bill in this House. He said he'd review it. For Hallmark workers, it would mean 20 weeks' notice, better retaining options and two weeks' severance pay for each year of employment.

Since the government is incapable of saving manufacturing jobs, the least it could do is make the lives after layoffs slightly better. Why won't this government pass Bill 6 and Bill 71 immediately to help the people of this province who are in dire need?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: To the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Brad Duguid: For the member's information, Ontario is the only province in the country with statutory severance pay obligations. No other province requires employers to provide statutory severance pay. What the member wants to do with one of his private member's bills is put a tax on the very employers that are providing these jobs for these individuals.

We are leading the country. We are working with other Ministers of Labour across this country and going after Ottawa to ensure that they provide the protections under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act that these workers need. We're taking leadership on this issue—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you.

The member from Stoney Creek will come to order, and please be reminded: When you ask a question, please listen to the response.

TUITION

Ms. Sophia Aggelonitis: My question is directed to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. Hamilton is the proud home of excellent post-secondary education institutions like McMaster University and Mohawk College. In my riding and across the province, post-secondary education tuition fees continue to increase year over year, bringing the average undergraduate tuition fee for a university student to about $4,500 and the average tuition fee for a regular college program to just over $1,900.

Minister, what measures are you taking to keep tuition rates from climbing and to ensure Ontario students have access to affordable, quality education?

Hon. John Milloy: I want to begin by congratulating the member on her support for post-secondary education, particularly in the Hamilton area. She's joined by my colleague the Minister of Government and Consumer Services in her advocacy for both McMaster and Mohawk.

The member raises a very important point about tuition fees being faced by students. I was very proud that our government, upon entry into office, instituted a two-year tuition freeze in order to bring forth a fair tuition framework under which tuition fees are capped at 5% annually. What this means is that annual increases are limited to about $100 for almost 85% of college students and $200 for 70% of university students. The new tuition fee framework fulfills our commitment that for every dollar we ask in tuition to put forward—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Ms. Sophia Aggelonitis: My question is again to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. McMaster University, Mohawk College and other Ontario post-secondary institutions offer a variety of programs that enhance the skills and training of our students, playing an important role in helping them prepare for the future in the workforce. However, increasing costs mean that programs become unaffordable to some individuals.

As well, once students graduate and begin looking for employment, they're often saddled with student debt.

Minister, I know this government wants to move forward without leaving people behind. Could you tell this House what financial assistance is available to students in my community and across the province to assist in the costs of obtaining a post-secondary education?

Hon. John Milloy: I'm very proud, after the horrendous cuts of the previous two governments, that our government came forward with one of the greatest investments in post-secondary education in Ontario's history: $6.2 billion. Part of that investment was $1.5 billion specifically aimed at student aid. Through this, we've tripled the number of grants available to students, with one in four, approximately 120,000 in Ontario, now receiving non-repayable grants. We've increased OSAP maximums by 27% for the first time in 12 years, and we've limited the student's annual repayment debt to $7,000 through the Ontario student opportunity grant program. Additionally, once a student has graduated, we provide debt management measures to students struggling to repay their loans.

I'm pleased with the supports we've offered students, and we're going to continue to work to make sure that finances are never—

INFECTIOUS DISEASE CONTROL

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: My question is for the Minister of Health. Yesterday our party introduced an opposition day motion calling for a public inquiry and investigation concerning the deaths in hospitals attributable to C. difficile. Regrettably, public confidence in our health system has been shattered as we learn of past and new outbreaks. This week we heard about St. Mike's, and up in Alliston.

I ask the minister today, will you restore public confidence in our health system and support our call for an investigation and a public inquiry to determine what happened and how we can plan for the future to contain outbreaks?

Hon. George Smitherman: The future is now, and the proposal of the honourable member is to invite people to stop their work and spend time in inquiry and investigation when all of those knowledgeable in the subject, including the coroner's office, offer us the advice that the information that is required on the part of the health care system to respond appropriately is before us.

Accordingly, our strategy is to act. Dr. Michael Baker will lead these efforts on behalf of the patients in the province of Ontario, and a key part of the strategy will be to offer a dramatic rise in the amount of information that's available to the public in public reporting mechanisms on a wide variety of patient safety indicators. We feel that this is the approach that will allow us to make the most progress the fastest on behalf of the 13 million Ontarians.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: The time for action is long overdue. Regrettably, the minister was negligent in his duties, having known about this since 2004. In order to restore public confidence in the health system, which I can tell you has been seriously eroded—and last night there was a meeting at the Burlington hospital where we've had at least 62 people die from C. difficile. People begged for information, transparency; they want to know why their loved ones died, and they want to make sure that it doesn't happen to anybody else.

It is time. These outbreaks occurred throughout the entire province; it is time to restore confidence. I call upon you: Be accountable. Will you support this inquiry, which can go on at the same time as everything else is going on?

Hon. George Smitherman: The honourable member pretends that the leadership time of individuals is expandable and isn't watered down when you're asked to do a variety of things at the same time. This is an artificial premise. More to the point, it's the honourable member who seems only now to have awakened to the reality of C. difficile, by the way that she presents information on this issue.

Indeed, the problems in the health care system associated with superbugs are ones that hospitals must grapple with every single day. Only vigilance on the part of those who are in the environment—who are patients, who are visitors, and especially amongst those who work there—can produce the results necessary on behalf of patients.

The honourable member, in the second part of her question, asked about transparency. You see that the response to our plan to bring a wide variety of patient safety information into the public domain has been well received, and some people have said it's too ambitious; but we do it on behalf of patients, because—

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Mr. Peter Tabuns: I have a question for the Minister of Correctional Services. On Monday, Minister, I asked about the cruel treatment of Fahim Ahmad, Zakaria Amara and Mohammed Dirie, who have languished in solitary confinement for two years. These three men have never been convicted or tried for anything. You, Minister, responded by saying that it was a matter of federal jurisdiction. In your hand you have the letter from Stockwell Day, federal minister, saying that Minister Bartolucci's ministry has jurisdiction over individuals on remand or awaiting trial or sentencing. Given your jurisdictional authority, why won't you end the cruel treatment of these three men and release them from solitary confinement?

Hon. Rick Bartolucci: I want to thank the member for the question, because I think some clarification is necessary. Inmates who are placed in segregation are entitled under law to just and humane treatment and receive specific services and activities that include the right to daily outdoor exercise; access to legal counsel, services and materials; access to clergy and spiritual advisers; visitation with family members, relatives and friends; and access to telephone services—to mention only a few. Every inmate within the correctional services system is granted those rights if, in fact, they're in segregation.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: The answers keep getting a lot more interesting. You have power to end this punitive treatment of these three men. You can follow the standards that have been set out by the Supreme Court, or Corrections Canada, or the United Nations. Can you table a directive or an order that gives you the right to punish these men when they have no reason to be punished through segregation? Will you treat them properly and release them from segregation into the general population?

Hon. Rick Bartolucci: First of all, I outlined a few of the rights that people in segregation have. Let me continue with that: They have access to library materials, institutional programs, the opportunity to buy items from institutional canteens with personal funds etc. These people's rights are being respected. We will not interfere with the operational matters of any correctional services, because that would be inappropriate.

Interjections.

Hon. Rick Bartolucci: They can yell all they want. They may not have confidence in correctional services. We have confidence in the correctional services system.

VOLUNTEERS

Mrs. Liz Sandals: My question is for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Members of all three parties have been happy to attend Ontario Volunteer Service Award ceremonies in our ridings. Minister, when you joined us for our local ceremony in Kitchener, we recognized volunteers who had served five, 10, even 60 years with the same organization. However, some recent statistics have identified a concerning trend: The number of volunteer hours given each year is increasing but the total number of volunteers is in decline. In my riding, the Volunteer Centre of Guelph/Wellington does a wonderful job of promoting volunteerism. What is your ministry doing to foster volunteerism in the province, and how will this affect my riding of Guelph?

Hon. Michael Chan: I want to thank the honourable member for her question. In order to help promote volunteerism and increase the visibility of volunteer opportunities, my ministry has developed unique partnerships with 60 different volunteer organizations. These partnerships promote volunteerism, develop inclusive volunteer opportunities for Ontario's diverse communities and provide a forum for sharing best practices.

Partnerships in small and medium-sized organizations like the Guelph-Wellington volunteer centre help secure volunteers for generations to come. Recently, in conjunction with National Volunteer Week, I had the privilege of visiting these organizations. I was pleased to see the innovative programs, insightful resources and enthusiastic staff.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I too am very proud of the Guelph-Wellington volunteer centre. They have an exemplary record of matching the skills of volunteers to the organization's needs and of working with local organizations to develop their volunteer capacity. However, the average age of volunteers in Ontario is increasing. In many organizations, seniors do most of the work. We need more young volunteers.

Minister, outside the required 40 hours of volunteerism for high school students, how is your ministry making certain that volunteerism in Ontario is a value that passes down from generation to generation, and that we maintain our volunteer base?

Hon. Michael Chan: I understand the member's concern, and let me assure you, the spirit of volunteerism is alive and well in Ontario.

My ministry is working on a partnership project in Kitchener-Waterloo called Engaging Youth from Diverse Ethno-Cultural Communities: A Working Model. This project encourages youth to volunteer within their communities and build leadership skills.

Recently, a youth aged 13 gave this reason to volunteer: "I could inspire other people and teach others how easy it truly is." Simply put, youth are becoming more engaged.

Finally, let me leave you with a quote from another youth who I believe spoke very eloquently, explaining why youth volunteer: "Leaving a legacy for other children and youth to learn and grow from."

CONSERVATION

Mr. Tim Hudak: A question to the minister responsible for the Ontario Realty Corp. Through the Ontario Realty Corp., your ministry will be participating in an open house meeting on June 11 in Stoney Creek to discuss the Eramosa karst. Will the minister direct the ORC to announce at that meeting that the 92 acres of environmentally sensitive land to the east of the Eramosa karst will be permanently protected as part of the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area?

Hon. David Caplan: I want to thank the member for the question, because I did have an opportunity to attend and to present the deed, with former member Jennifer Mossop, to the conservation authority to protect the karst.

The member should know that it is early in the process and no decision has been made on the future of the property. The realty corporation is currently studying the lands from a number of perspectives. They've taken on a number of experts around archaeological, environmental, hydrogeological and planning to determine what the future protected lands should be, what the future use should be. In fact, I'm told that Rita Giuliatti, spokesperson for the Friends of the Eramosa Karst, commented on the progress to date, that "she's glad to see the province's Ontario Realty Corp. is conducting a thorough review of the four properties it owns near the existing 73-hectare park."

Mr. Tim Hudak: Minister, the concern is that the 2008-09 provincial budget says the ORC is required to contribute to the $701 million in sales and rentals for this fiscal year. Stoney Creek residents and others who care about the future of this environmentally sensitive land are very concerned that you will sell off some of that sensitive land in order to meet the budget targets assigned to you by the finance minister.

My colleague from Hamilton East-Stoney Creek, Mr. Miller, and I have both toured the karst. We share those concerns. You have the authority to direct the ORC. You have the ability to build on the good work of former member Brad Clark of the previous PC government and the good work of Jennifer Mossop that you've also continued as minister. Why don't you build on that good work that has involved both our parties and dedicate the remaining lands to be permanently protected as part of the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area?

Hon. David Caplan: Nice try, I say to the member opposite. In fact, the member knows that the lands in question are already designated for urban development in the official plan of the city of Hamilton. The Hamilton Conservation Authority and the province have already established very strict environmental criteria for permitting development in this area. That's why the Ontario Realty Corp. has taken the steps that it has—to engage experts on karsts, on hydrogeological features, on archaeology, on conservation and planning—to provide the best advice possible as to which lands need to be protected, as we have done previously with the 73 hectares that we have put in perpetuity through a deed transferred to the local Eramosa Karst Conservation Area. I do acknowledge that there is great interest locally, and that is why—

CONSERVATION

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is also to the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal. On several occasions I've raised in this House the issue of the Eramosa karst feeder lands. These feeder lands are essential to the life of the Eramosa karst. Any development could cause the feeder water system to dry up, causing the death of the Eramosa caves. This is the best example of the karsts created in Ontario after the last glaciers retreated.

I invite this minister to visit the Friends of the Eramosa Karst website and to come to the official opening of the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area on Friday, June 20, at 2 o'clock to gain a real appreciation of the need to protect the feeder lands.

Why won't this government protect these lands now by handing them over to the Hamilton Conservation Authority? It's well within your jurisdiction.

Hon. David Caplan: I'm glad that this member and the one who asked the previous question have finally taken an interest in these very important lands. I can tell you that on previous occasions I have been to the karst, I have walked the land. I know that Minister Cansfield and my colleague from Hamilton Mountain quite recently toured the Eramosa karst. It's an important hydrogeological feature. That is why this government ensured that 73 hectares of land—very sensitive karst lands—were placed in perpetuity in the deed given over to the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area. That is why the Ontario Realty Corp. is working with the friends of the karst, with the local community, with the city of Hamilton and with the conservation authority, bringing in renowned world experts to provide the very best advice and guidance as to what lands should be protected. The—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Paul Miller: My colleague Mr. Hudak and I are very concerned about the public information consultation number one that is happening on June 11. This consultation should be focused on the protection of the Eramosa karst feeder lands, not on any other interested parties like developers. Will this minister guarantee that the Eramosa karst feeder lands are on the list to be protected forever?

Hon. David Caplan: It's very instructive when Rita Giuliatti, a spokesperson for the Friends of the Eramosa Karst, commented on our progress today. She said, and I know the member opposite would want to hear this, that she's "glad to see the province's Ontario Realty Corporation ... is conducting a thorough review of four properties it owns near the existing 73-hectare park." In fact, I know this member doesn't, and previously his party doesn't, like to consult the public. This government and our agencies certainly like to work with our colleagues, whether it's with the city of Hamilton, our stakeholders through the conservation authorities or local residents. I can assure this member that the ORC studies and the thorough review that they are doing for the best—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question?

BORDER SECURITY

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: My question today is for the Minister of Transportation. As a result of 9/11, very serious concerns have been raised about cross-border trade and travel. Times have changed and so has the identification required to cross the border. I've heard numerous calls from my constituents about this issue of photo identification cards and, quite honestly, they're very confused about this. They've heard conflicting reports of what is needed to cross the border. Some have heard that they can no longer use their driver's licence as proper ID. Some have heard that the Ministry of Citizenship is requesting to have a chip in there.

I'd like to ask the minister the following question: Could he clarify for this House what exactly his Photo Card Act legislation will do to ease the concerns?

Hon. James J. Bradley: I will share with the member what we hope to accomplish with this legislation. He would know that as of June 2009—that's not until next year—the western hemisphere travel initiative land and sea rules come into effect, and all individuals at that time looking to enter or re-enter the United States by land or sea will require a passport or passport alternative. This is why we've introduced legislation that, if passed, will give the government authority to implement a new enhanced security driver's licence.

There are more than four million people in Ontario who do not hold a valid driver's licence. That's why we've also proposed a photo ID card which would give people who do not drive the option of obtaining a convenient government-issued photo card. Non-drivers who are citizens may also obtain an enhanced photo ID card to be used at the US border.

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: My question again is for our great Minister of Transportation. In the previous answer given by the minister, he spoke about two different kinds of cards being proposed in this legislation. I'm sure that the constituents of my riding will be interested to know that if this is passed, they will be able to obtain such documents and that these proposed documents can be used as an alternative to a passport.

I'm hoping that the Minister of Transportation can provide this House with more details on these cards and how one can apply for these cards if this legislation is passed. In short, I'm asking the minister to please consider streamlining this process so that this application process can be made as easy as possible for our constituents.

Hon. James J. Bradley: It's an excellent question. It is actually the creation of three separate products being proposed through the photo card legislation. The first is an enhancement of the new and improved driver's licence that was rolled out in December 2007. This enhanced driver's licence is a voluntary option, and it will be available for the regular fee, with a fee on top of that, and would be valid for the same five-year time period. Initial rollout will be available in major sites across Ontario, and the application process will be set up to meet WHTI requirements at border crossings.

The second product is the photo ID card. This is an optional card for those who do not have a driver's licence but may require government-issued ID. There's a third product which is an enhanced version of the photo ID card. This would allow the cardholders to use it as proper—

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: My question is for the Minister of Labour. Minister, I'm sure it would be impossible for you to not know what's transpiring in the auto sector as a whole. The writing has been on the wall for a number of years. I've tried, through methods in this chamber, to highlight the concerns within that industry, and it has been falling out the way I predicted.

Minister, one of the things that took place yesterday was that Buzz Hargrove specifically mentioned that your ministry was becoming involved, or was going to be asked to become involved, with the CAW, assisting in the contractual obligations with the contract between the CAW and General Motors. Can you enlighten us as to what your ministry is doing?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I think the member realizes that this government shares his concerns, as a member who has a number of constituents who are personally impacted by this, for those workers and their families. Obviously, that's our first priority.

As Minister of Labour, of course, I can't get directly involved in discussions and negotiations going on between employers and their workers and representatives. However, our Ministry of Labour officials are available upon request from either or both parties to assist in any way they can to ensure the parties are able to reach resolution on some of these very complex and important issues.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: I thank the minister for the response. It was very specific in mentioning some of the branches or the options that may be available through the Ministry of Labour. Can you enlighten this Legislature as to specifically what options the ministry can enhance or work with to make sure that the contractual obligations are followed through with?

Hon. Brad Duguid: We fully expect GM, as we would any employer across this province but in particular the auto companies, to fulfill all of its obligations with regard to its collective agreements, in particular with regard to the treatment of employees for severance, layoff and termination responsibilities. However, if any of the parties wish to ask for the assistance of the ministry, we are there; we're eager. We have some of the best mediators in the country, who would be more than happy to assist the parties in any way they can as they work through this very difficult time.

As I said, the McGuinty government stands with the auto workers of this province. We recognize the important contribution they've made to our economy. We sympathize with the difficult time that they're going through right now, and certainly our ministry officials would be available to help in any way they can.

HERITAGE CONSERVATION

Mr. Peter Tabuns: To the Minister of Culture: Designating the Alma College a heritage site would have meant better upkeep that would have prevented the fire that gutted that architectural marvel.

This morning, the Architectural Conservancy of Ontario, the mayor of St. Thomas and concerned citizens were here asking for a proactive approach to preserving heritage properties. They don't want what happened at Alma College to happen again.

Will the minister agree to launch a provincial review into the protection and designation of heritage sites in this province?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: I know I am joined by everyone in the House in our sadness at the loss of the beautiful and historic building which was Alma College. I realize what a difficult time it must be for alumni and citizens of St. Thomas as they work through this loss.

However, Alma College faced a number of serious challenges, including the fact that it was in an advanced state of deterioration. The city had recognized the heritage value; they had designated. However, the building was allowed to deteriorate over a long period of time, and when it was brought to the attention of the OMB, which was asked to settle the dispute, a structural engineer at that time advised the OMB that it was in such a state of disrepair that the cost to rehabilitate was prohibitive, and the fact that there was no alternative use being proposed made their perspective very difficult to agree with.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: Minister, as you well know, given those circumstances, in order to protect that building and those like it, it's going to require provincial intervention with cash. What concerned citizens have asked is that an Alma College heritage foundation fund be set up and operated by the province to preserve and protect heritage sites across Ontario.

Will you agree to establish this fund to ensure that heritage properties across Ontario don't meet the same fate as Alma College?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: The Ontario Heritage Act was reviewed and updated by this government less than two years ago. Considerable improvements and strategies were built into that act.

In addition to that, in 2006, the province, my ministry as it then was, was very proactive in setting up a working group among the owner, the city of St. Thomas and ministry officials to look for and find solutions that might have assisted with the situation of Alma College. However, as I have mentioned—also it should be noted that the current owner walked away from those working group efforts—as I have noted, it was a sad case that this building was allowed to deteriorate. But it had been deteriorating over a long period of time, and it was far too late, in the opinion of structural engineers or any of the experts, to move in and assist the building, which would have been prohibitive in cost.

If I may just continue a moment, and that is to say that we have created a new act. We have a new process. We have given municipalities the ability to—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for question period has ended.

PETITIONS

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Jim Wilson: I want to thank the members of the congregation of Walkerton Pentecostal Church for sending this petition to me.

"Petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I agree with this petition, and I'm signing it.

HOME CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario government has continued the practice of competitive bidding for home care services; and

"Whereas the competitive bidding process has increased the privatization of Ontario's health care delivery, in direct violation of the Commitment to the Future of Medicare Act, 2004; and

"Whereas home care workers do not enjoy the same employment rights, such as successor rights, as all other Ontario workers have, which deprives them of termination rights, seniority rights and the right to move with their work when their employer agency loses a contract;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We call on the government of Ontario:

"(1) to immediately stop the competitive bidding for home care services so home care clients can receive the continuity and quality of care they deserve; and

"(2) to extend successor rights under the Labour Relations Act to home care workers to ensure the home care sector is able to retain a workforce that is responsive to clients' needs."

I fully support this petition, will affix my name to it, and send it with page Alie.

CHILD CUSTODY

Mr. Jean-Marc Lalonde: I have a petition from parents and grandparents of St. Albert and surrounding area.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the people of the province of Ontario, deserve and have the right to request an amendment to the Children's Law Reform Act to emphasize the importance of children's relationships with their parents and their grandparents; and

"Whereas subsection 20(2.1) requires parents and others with custody of children to refrain from unreasonably placing obstacles to personal relations between the children and their grandparents; and

"Whereas subsection 24(2) contains a list of matters that a court must consider when determining the best interests of a child. The bill amends that subsection to include a specific reference to the importance of maintaining emotional ties between children and grandparents; and

"Whereas subsection 24(2.1) requires a court that is considering custody of or access to a child to give effect to the principle that a child should have as much contact with each parent and grandparent as is consistent with the best interests of the child; and

"Whereas subsection 24(2.2) requires a court that is considering custody of a child to take into consideration each applicant's willingness to facilitate as much contact between the child and each parent and grandparent as is consistent with the best interests of the child;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to amend the Children's Law Reform Act to emphasize the importance of children's relationships with their parents and grandparents."

I add my name to this petition.

SCHOOL FACILITIES

Mr. Paul Miller: "We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We call on the government of Ontario, the Minister of Education, to approve Hamilton-Wentworth District School Board's business plan to build a new Winona public school in the community of Winona; that approval and funding be allocated expeditiously and with great urgency so that construction can commence immediately;

"We are calling on the government to live up to their promise for 'excellence in the public education system,' that our children will be put first and to ensure that schools are safe and healthy;

"We call on the government to provide the children of the Winona community an opportunity to learn, grow and unite in a new Winona public school that is desperately required to meet and address the pressures and conditions they are currently facing, and that are placing them at risk."

I agree with this petition and affix my name to it.

FIREARMS CONTROL

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: This petition goes in tandem with Bill 56, which was introduced as a private member's bill by the member from Eglinton-Lawrence, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas innocent people are being victimized by the growing number of unlawful firearms in our communities; and

"Whereas police officers, military personnel and lawfully licensed persons are the only people allowed to possess firearms; and

"Whereas a growing number of unlawful firearms are transported, smuggled and found in motor vehicles; and

"Whereas impounding motor vehicles and suspending driver's licences of persons possessing unlawful firearms in motor vehicles would aid the police in their efforts to make our streets safer;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 56, the Unlawful Firearms in Vehicles Act, 2008, into law, so that we can reduce the number of crimes involving firearms in our communities."

I agree with this petition 100% and I'm delighted to sign it.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Ted Arnott: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas part-time college workers in Ontario have been waiting for 30 years for bargaining rights; and

"Whereas thousands of part-time college workers have signed OPSEU cards, and the Ontario Labour Relations Board failed to order a timely representation vote; and

"Whereas the Ontario government must immediately make good on its promise to extend bargaining rights to college part-timers;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"The McGuinty government must immediately pass legislation legalizing the rights of college part-timers to organize, and direct the colleges to immediately recognize OPSEU as the bargaining agent for part-time college workers."

PROTECTION FOR MINERS

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people of Sudbury.

"Whereas the current legislation contained in the Occupational Health and Safety Act and regulations for mines and mining plants does not adequately protect the lives of miners, we request revisions to the act;

"Lyle Everett Defoe and the scoop tram he was operating fell 150 feet down an open stope (July 23, 2007). Lyle was 25 years and 15 days old when he was killed at Xstrata Kidd Creek mine site, Timmins....

"The stope where Lyle was killed was protected by a length of orange plastic snow fence and a rope with a warning sign. These barriers would not have been visible if the bucket of the scoop tram was raised. Lyle's body was recovered from behind the scoop tram.

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Concrete berms must be mandatory to protect all open stopes and raises;

"All miners and contractors working underground must have working communication devices and personal locators;

"All equipment involved in injuries and fatalities must be recovered and examined unless such recovery would endanger the lives of others; and

"The entire act must be reviewed and amended to better protect underground workers."

I support this petition. I will affix my name to it and send it with page Taylor.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan, subject to public meetings; and

"Whereas it is important to ensure that the new birthing unit at Centenary hospital, a $20-million expansion that will see 16 new labour, delivery, recovery and postpartum (LDRP) birthing rooms and an additional 21 postpartum rooms added by October 2008, will not cause any decline in the pediatric services currently provided at the Ajax-Pickering hospital; and

"Whereas, with the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government, it is important to continue to have a complete maternity unit at the Ajax hospital; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for the Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding; and

"Whereas the parents of Ajax and Pickering deserve the right to have their children born in their own community, where they have chosen to live and work;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service that our Ajax-Pickering hospital now serves the fast-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain its full maternity unit."

I shall affix my signature to this and pass it to Doaa.

LONG-TERM CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people of Hamilton and Burlington.

"Whereas understaffing in Ontario's nursing homes is a serious problem resulting in inadequate care for residents and unsafe conditions for staff;

"Whereas after the Harris government removed the regulations providing minimum care levels in 1995, hours of care dropped below the previous 2.25 hour/day minimum;

"Whereas the recent improvements in hours of care are not adequate, vary widely and are not held to accountable standards;

"Whereas there is currently nothing in legislation to protect residents and staff from renewed cuts to care levels by future governments; and

"Whereas care needs have measurably increased with aging and the movement of people with more complex health needs from hospitals into long-term-care homes;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Immediately enact and fund an average care standard of 3.5 hours per resident per day in the regulations under the new Long-Term Care Homes Act."

I fully support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Christopher.

ANTI-SMOKING LEGISLATION

Mr. Jeff Leal: I have the last batch of petitions, from the riding of Peterborough.

"Children and Smoke-Free Cars—Support Bill 11

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas children exposed to second-hand smoke are at a higher risk for respiratory illnesses including asthma, bronchitis and pneumonia, as well as sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS) and increased incidences of cancer and heart disease in adulthood; and

"Whereas the Ontario Medical Association supports a ban on smoking in vehicles when children are present, as they have concluded that levels of second-hand smoke can be 23 times more concentrated in a vehicle than in a house because circulation is restricted within a small space; and

"Whereas the Ipsos Reid poll conducted on behalf of the Ontario Tobacco-Free Network indicates that eight in 10 (80%) of Ontarians support 'legislation that would ban smoking in cars and other private vehicles where a child or adolescent under 16 years of age is present'; and

"Whereas Nova Scotia, California, Puerto Rico, and South Australia recently joined several jurisdictions of the United States of America in banning smoking in vehicles carrying children;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to approve Bill 11 and amend the Smoke-Free Ontario Act to ban smoking in vehicles carrying children 16 years of age and under."

I agree with this petition and will affix my signature to it.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Any further petitions? The time for petitions is about to expire.

This House stands recessed until 1 p.m.

The House recessed from 1203 to 1300.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

Mr. Norm Miller: The forestry sector in this province has long had a world-renowned platinum standard for excellence, a record that began under another government with the largest conservation efforts our province has ever seen.

Our forest management practices have worked in support of endangered species, and the science proves that species have been brought back from the brink under current forestry practices—species like caribou, red-shouldered hawks and bald eagles.

A few weeks ago, the McGuinty government sent clear signals to the forestry sector that it would not honour its commitment to provide for a long-term regulation under their new Endangered Species Act. The industry was in shock, as it had been working in good faith with the ministry in the development of regulations that would recognize current forest management plans.

More than 230,000 jobs and countless communities in the north hang in the balance, which is why the Ontario Forestry Coalition came to Queen's Park yesterday to raise the alarm.

This development begs the question: Why? The answer is quite simple: This government has become the pawn of powerful environmental groups and has put those concerns ahead of First Nations, communities and ordinary people.

Perhaps Peter Foster said it best in his article in the National Post yesterday: "There can be no doubt that activists have done a brilliant job in infiltrating Queen's Park. Whether such infiltration should be considered a cause of celebration depends on where you stand on the issue of animals having priority over people."

ISLINGTON JUNIOR MIDDLE SCHOOL

Ms. Laurel C. Broten: I recently had the pleasure of visiting Islington Junior Middle School in my riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore on the occasion of their 175th anniversary.

Established in 1832, Islington Junior Middle is the second-oldest elementary school in all of Toronto and has a large multicultural community, where more than 40 different languages are spoken, including Korean, Somali, Serbian, Russian, Arabic, Bengali and Urdu, to name a few. A strong academic program, combined with extracurricular activities in music, drama and sports, as well as before- and after-school programs, truly brings out the best in this school community.

The village of Islington in Etobicoke was settled by United Empire Loyalists fleeing from the United States after the American Revolution. In 1822, there was an unofficial school for eight students on the shoemaker's premises on Burnhamthorpe Road, just north of Dundas. By 1832, the growing population of Islington necessitated the building of a one-room log cabin school with monies donated by the community.

To celebrate this milestone in Islington Junior Middle's history, MABELLEarts, a Jumblies Theatre project, under the artistic direction of Leah Huston, collaborated with artists from Pigeon Creek Collective, school staff and students to design and produce a giant puppet pageant. The pageant took the form of a visual poem to tell the story of the history of one of our oldest schools.

We've all witnessed many changes since 1832, but what has not changed is the way that Islington Junior Middle School continues to serve the community. Happy 175th anniversary.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Ms. Laurie Scott: As is happening each and every week, this week we heard of thousands more job losses in Ontario. This includes over 2,500 jobs lost at General Motors in Oshawa, through the closing of its truck assembly plant.

In my riding of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock, General Motors is the largest private employer. The negative economic impacts of these job losses will hurt local businesses, suppliers and manufacturers throughout my entire riding.

Over 200,000 manufacturing job losses under the watch of the McGuinty Liberals prove to Ontarians that their Premier doesn't believe in workers.

Today, the Premier tells us about a so-called strategy that may provide help to less than 10% of those hundreds of thousands of workers without jobs in McGuinty's Ontario.

The Premier, on April 29, said, "The Minister of Economic Development and Trade tells me that we're about to build GM's first new hybrid truck in North America right here in Ontario." Well, members in this House have heard directly from General Motors that this hybrid truck isn't going to be built in Oshawa or even in Ontario, for that matter.

Not only does the minister break promises to Ontarians; she's now breaking promises to the Premier. I suppose you could call that a little taste of his own medicine.

Dalton McGuinty has spent $600 million of taxpayers' money on his so-called auto investment strategy without job guarantees. At this point, the only thing he has created in Ontario is the loss of over 20,000 auto sector jobs.

MAD PRIDE DAY

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: I'm delighted to rise on behalf of Mad Pride Toronto. Back in the 1970s and 1980s, many psychiatric patients were deinstitutionalized from facilities like Queen Street and the Lakeshore. Ex-patients organized for support and called themselves psychiatric survivors or, now, consumer survivors.

In the fall of 1993, they began a yearly pride event to empower themselves and educate the broader community. In the year 2000, the local community aligned itself with the global Mad Pride movement, which recognizes July 14, Bastille Day, another day of liberation, as theirs.

Last year, Mayor David Miller declared July 14 Mad Pride Day. It is the day when the annual bed push and celebration happens outside of CAMH and continues into my riding of Parkdale, proud home to many consumer survivors.

Ruth Ruth, one of the activists behind Mad Pride, is a celebrated director, actor and consumer survivor. I dedicate this statement to her and all the others who have made Mad Pride Day such a landmark by doing something mad and declaring, along with David Miller, that July 14 is Mad Pride Day to all Ontarians. Let that day be everyone's day to discover their mad side. By all means, join us in Parkdale to push the gurney down Queen St.

Don't get even; get mad.

PUNJABI MUSIC

Mrs. Amrit Mangat: I was honoured to have the opportunity to speak to the Punjabi Heritage Foundation of Canada during a recent event in Ottawa honouring the life and times of Surinder Kaur, who was known as the nightingale of Punjab, and Nand Lal Noorpuri, known as the people's folk song writer.

Surinder Kaur dedicated a lifetime to the promotion of authentic Punjabi music. She lived to lend a voice to Punjab; its flourish, its richness. She visited Ontario several times and performed to huge audiences. Her career as a folk singer started when she was only 12. She recorded over 2,000 songs and performed as playback singer in several famous films. During Surinder Kaur's visits to Ontario, she sang many of Nand Lal Noorpuri's songs to large gatherings.

I would like to thank Mitter Rasha, president of the Punjabi Heritage Foundation of Canada, for inviting me to pay tribute to these artists who continue to have such a lasting impact on Punjabi culture and heritage, including in Ontario, where their songs can be heard on Punjabi radio and Punjabi television programs frequently.

TORONTO CATHOLIC DISTRICT SCHOOL BOARD

Mr. Peter Shurman: This morning, newspapers across the GTA carried the headline that the province has taken over the Toronto Catholic District School Board. The Minister of Education based her decision to strip the board of its power based upon an investigator's report detailing the fiscal irresponsibility of this board.

I believe that the minister has the moral responsibility to go even further. In January of this year, an investigation by the Toronto Sun revealed rampant abuses by TCDSB trustees with regard to school-issued credit cards and expense accounts. Trustees were expensing food, booze, clothes and vacations on taxpayer-funded credit cards. One of the worst offenders billed a Caribbean vacation, pizza delivery and Tim Hortons coffee to taxpayers.

In January 2007, TCDSB trustees voted themselves medical, dental and life insurance coverage despite legal counsel advising that they did not have the authority to award themselves such benefits. Since the 2003-04 school year, the average cost per TCDSB trustee has increased by 163%.

As I said, the minister has the moral responsibility to go further than stripping the board of its responsibility. TCDSB trustees betrayed their staff and the students and parents they are supposed to serve. They have put the viability of this board in serious jeopardy. Although the Education Act doesn't allow the minister to dismiss trustees, the minister should, at the very least, exercise her moral authority and call upon all members of the TCDSB to immediately submit their resignations.

COCA-COLA BOTTLING CO.

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: Yesterday, Coca-Cola Bottling Co. introduced the first of 10 heavy-duty hybrid-electric vehicles to its fleet in Ontario. The addition of these delivery trucks to their fleet will improve fuel consumption by 37%, reduce emissions by 32% and create less noise and emissions when stopped in traffic.

This company recognizes that climate change is one of the most important environmental issues facing our world today. Their environmental policy indicates that they are committed to improving the efficiency with which they use energy and to reducing their CO<sub>2</sub> emissions and setting improvement targets for the future.

Coca-Cola has a large production facility in Brampton, with three bottling lines employing approximately 800 employees. In 2006, Coca-Cola Bottling Co. celebrated 100 years of doing business in Canada. On behalf of my constituents of Brampton-Springdale, I'd like to congratulate them and thank Coca-Cola for integrating state-of-the-art technology into vehicles that transport their beverages. This announcement is a great way to celebrate Environment Week.

PETERBOROUGH REGIONAL HEALTH CARE CENTRE

Mr. Jeff Leal: Friday, May 9, 2008, was a momentous day for Peterborough. It was the day we cut the ribbon to open the new Peterborough Regional Health Care Centre. This is a project that has involved the community of Peterborough, the Peterborough Regional Health Care Centre Foundation and the government of Ontario, all working together to provide the funding necessary to build this state-of-the-art facility. It was only possible through the hard work, dedication and commitment of all these partners that this project reached fruition.

This new hospital means better service to the residents of this area, it means access to the latest technology and it means doctors will come to Peterborough to work in this new facility.

As he cut the ribbon, the Honourable George Smitherman said, "I will declare it's ready for occupancy. Peterborough Regional Health Care Centre was built on the backs and love of local people." It took four years to build this new hospital, and many more years to raise the funds.

In an emotional speech, the president and CEO of PRHC, Mr. Paul Darby, said, "I'm overwhelmed with the enormity of this project and what it represents for Peterborough and the region.

"We did it. Together, we all did it."

Everyone from the Premier to each resident of Peterborough who contributed to this project can feel proud of this great accomplishment.

CLIMATE CHANGE

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: Earlier this week, Premier McGuinty and Quebec Premier Jean Charest signed a memorandum of understanding on fighting global climate change. A major component of this partnership is a cap-and-trade system shared by both provinces that could be in place as early as 2010. This means that companies that emit less greenhouse gases than their caps could then sell those unused quotas in an open market to other companies that are exceeding their emissions caps.

For years, farmers in Lambton-Kent-Middlesex have been discussing the agricultural opportunities presented by carbon sinks and carbon credits in this type of system. The cap-and-trade system will help both provinces transition to a low-carbon economy and create a green future for our children.

This system also serves as an impetus for technological innovation and job creation. I'm pleased to say that the McGuinty government is already moving on that front with our Next Generation of Jobs Fund initiatives.

But with so many positive outcomes, I was surprised to see and hear that the federal environment minister and former provincial Conservative member criticized this initiative, saying, "The reality is, we can't have efforts at the provincial level." I disagree. The fact is that Ontarians are looking to our government for action on the fight against climate change, and we are doing just that, not only through this agreement with Quebec, but also with our efforts to improve public transit, encourage conservation and more.

This government is committed to a greener Ontario, and we will work with our partners—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Thank you.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Mr. Jean-Marc Lalonde: I beg leave to present a report from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and move its adoption.

The Deputy Clerk (Mr. Todd Decker): Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill 55, An Act to enact the Ontario French-language Educational Communications Authority Act, 2008 and make complementary amendments to the Ontario Educational Communications Authority Act / Projet de loi 55, Loi édictant la Loi de 2008 sur l'Office des télécommunications éducatives de langue française de l'Ontario et apportant des modifications complémentaires à la Loi sur l'Office de la télécommunication éducative de l'Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.
Report adopted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: I beg leave to present a report from the Standing Committee on General Government and move its adoption.

The Clerk-at-the-Table (Ms. Tonia Grannum): Mrs. Jeffrey from the Standing Committee on General Government presents the committee's report as follows:

Your committee begs to report the following bill, as amended:

Bill 48, An Act to regulate payday loans and to make consequential amendments to other Acts / Projet de loi 48, Loi visant à réglementer les prêts sur salaire et à apporter des modifications corrélatives à d'autres lois.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.
Report adopted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

2076467 ONTARIO INC. ACT, 2008

Mr. Lalonde moved first reading of the following bill: Bill Pr13, An Act to revive 2076467 Ontario Inc.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Pursuant to standing order 85, this bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Private Bills.

2029652 ONTARIO LTD. ACT, 2008

Ms. Horwath moved first reading of the following bill: Bill Pr9, An Act to revive 2029652 Ontario Ltd.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Pursuant to standing order 85, this bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Private Bills.

FAIRNESS FOR FAMILIES ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LE TRAITEMENT
ÉQUITABLE DES FAMILLES

Mr. Hudak moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 88, An Act to provide fairness for families by amending the Taxation Act, 2007 to allow income splitting for taxation between cohabiting spouses and common-law partners / Projet de loi 88, Loi prévoyant le traitement équitable des familles en modifiant la Loi de 2007 sur les impôts pour permettre le fractionnement du revenu entre conjoints ou conjoints de fait visés aux fins de l'impôt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mr. Hudak for a short comment.

Mr. Tim Hudak: As you may know, families in Germany, France, United States, Ireland and Switzerland allow married or common-law couples to file a joint tax form and effectively split their income. The federal government's moved on this with respect to pension income. Families who choose to have a spouse stay at home or work part-time pay higher taxes than a couple with the same income who are both working full-time. This is unfair. The Fairness for Families Act will bring equality to all married or common-law couples by amending the Taxation Act in Ontario to allow them to file a joint income tax return with respect to provincial taxes for their spouse or common-law partner.

OMBUDSMAN AMENDMENT ACT (HOSPITALS AND LONG-TERM CARE FACILITIES), 2008LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT
LA LOI SUR L'OMBUDSMAN
(HÔPITAUX ET ÉTABLISSEMENTS DE SOINS DE LONGUE DURÉE)

Mme Gélinas moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 89, An Act to amend the Ombudsman Act with respect to hospitals and long-term care facilities / Projet de loi 89, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'ombudsman en ce qui a trait aux hôpitaux et aux établissements de soins de longue durée.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The honourable member for a short statement?

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Currently, under the Ombudsman Act, the Ombudsman may investigate decisions, recommendations, actions and omissions of government bodies and may exercise other powers necessary for an investigation. The bill amends the act to give the Ombudsman the same powers in relation to hospitals and long-term-care facilities.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

CONSUMER REPORTING AMENDMENT ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES RENSEIGNEMENTS CONCERNANT LE CONSOMMATEUR

Mr. Ruprecht moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 75, An Act to amend the Consumer Reporting Act / Projet de loi 75, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les renseignements concernant le consommateur.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mr. Ruprecht.

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: The purpose of Bill 75 is to prevent as much as possible identity theft and lessen the inequities which presently exist between the banking sector and consumers.

Before I get into the details, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to tell you that I'm dividing my time with the member from Oakville and the member from London—Fanshawe.

Identity theft is a very serious crime. There are presently over 53 million credit cards in circulation in Canada, which is much more than the total population of our country. Since our personal quality of life—yes, our well-being—is directly affected by our creditworthiness, our credit rating, is affected by the mortgage we can buy, is affected by the loans we need, is affected by our credit score, let me tell you how this bill will help Canadians with their financial security.

Bill 75 affects the Consumer Reporting Act and speaks directly of the “duty to inform” the consumer “about missing or stolen information.” I will go through these 10 points and then try to explain each of them in more detail, and I'm hoping I won't run out of time.

(1) “The bill provides that where a consumer reporting agency”—such as Equifax, a bank, TransUnion—“and any other person, such as a bank, to whom a consumer report has been provided, discover that there has been an unlawful disclosure of consumer information or that such information has been lost or stolen, they shall immediately inform the affected consumer.”

(2) “Duty to truncate”—that is, to mask-out—“vital information

“The bill provides that a consumer report shall not provide information pertaining to a consumer's address, date of birth, social insurance number and credit account number that is not in a truncated form and also that there be no information in a consumer report other than information provided by the information provider, except for the unique identifier number.”

(3) “Duty to delete unconfirmed information within 30 days

“The bill provides that consumer reporting agencies shall investigate disputed information within 30 days and correct, supplement or delete any information found to be unconfirmed, incomplete or inaccurate.”

(4) “Duty not to penalize consumers for applying for credit

“The bill provides that consumer reporting agencies and other persons may not consider, as a key factor in determining the credit score of a consumer, the fact that a consumer report has been requested. In addition, credit scores and the key factors used to determine them are added to the list of information to be disclosed to a consumer on request.”

(5) “Duty to provide full disclosure if credit denied

“The bill provides that a person who takes adverse action against a consumer on the basis of information contained in a consumer report shall inform the consumer of the action and provide a copy of the report, including the name and address of the agency that prepared it, and shall notify the consumer of the right to correct incomplete or inaccurate information.”

(6) “Duty to disclose calculation of credit score

“The bill provides that consumer reporting agencies shall disclose, upon request of the consumer, the range of possible credit scores, under the model used, all the key factors that adversely affected the score, the date the credit score was created and a summary of how the credit score was calculated, including the method being used.”

(7) “Duty to report only inquiries resulting from applications for credit

“The bill provides that consumer reporting agencies shall only report inquiry records resulting out of actual applications for credit except in a report given to the consumer.”

(8) “Duty to report in writing only

“The bill provides that consumer reporting agencies shall only report information on consumer reports in written or electronically transmitted form, and not orally.”

(9) “Duty to retain information that is not contested legally

"The bill provides that consumer reporting agencies shall not delete or otherwise fail to make available any information in a consumer file that is not contested in legal proceedings brought by a consumer against the agency arising out of a claim of inaccuracy in a consumer report."

(10) "Duty not to report debts vacated after bankruptcy proceedings

"The bill provides that consumer reporting agencies shall not provide the names of creditors or the amounts owing to such creditors after the date on which the debtor is discharged from bankruptcy. The consumer reporting agencies shall continue to be able to note bankruptcies by providing information on the date of filing for bankruptcy, the date of the discharge and the total amount involved."

This is quite a lengthy discussion in terms of protecting the consumer. What are we trying to do with Bill 75? The essence is clear: to provide a way that will safeguard identity theft, which according to the RCMP, the privacy commissioner of Ontario and the Privacy Commissioner of Canada, Jennifer Stoddart—in a recent report released the day before yesterday, what does she say about identity theft? She says the following, and remember, this was just released two days ago: "Over the past few years, hundreds of thousands of Canadians have been affected by data breaches, with financial institutions being the worst culprits."

Here we are; the Privacy Commissioner of Canada says, "Hey look, business guys, hey look, financial institutions, you are too lax with private information that has to do with financing." It says quite clearly that there's a problem here, that there's identity theft taking place that can be and should be avoided as much as possible. That is quite an undertaking. We're trying to safeguard the consumer. We're trying to safeguard private information so it cannot be stolen.

Let me tell you simply this: I personally have been affected by it, and I've got the copies and the bills here. Look what it says, for instance. It says here, "Mr. Ruprecht, you owe $866.10, because your credit card was debited. You bought a computer and you bought some clothing. Please pay up."

I was surprised when I heard this against my name. Since I didn't want to pay, guess what happened to me? I said, "This is fraud. I didn't even know about this. I don't have a credit card. Certainly, I do not have an MBNA credit card." Yet I'm supposed to pay this bill on a card that I didn't request and on a card I didn't charge. This happens to hundreds of thousands of people. I'm sure if I were to ask the members here, there would be many who have had the same experience.

How do we then get to the credit-granting institutions and tell them, "Hey, look, this is wrong"? If I were not an MPP and I were an ordinary resident in my riding saying, "Hey, something's wrong," then what's the next item that we're trying to protect the consumer against, getting this information out quickly? Why?

Let's assume, for instance, I go on the 407 and I get a bill and I say, "Oh, this bill is wrong," just like this credit card bill was wrong. If I don't pay and I say, "Sorry, I wasn't on that highway. I didn't have anything to do with this bill," immediately what they say is, "All right, you don't pay and we'll report you to Equifax and TransUnion," which are the holders of your credit cards.

They'll report it. Consequently, if they report that you don't want to pay, immediately your FICO score on your credit report goes down. Then try to get a mortgage. Try to get a loan for your car. If you thought you'd get a good deal, you're wrong. The amount of credit you get is not only lowered, but what happens that's even more important is that the amount you now pay on interest on your mortgage, or the amount you pay on interest on your car loan or any loan, is suddenly higher. Instead of paying 4%, you might end up paying 6%. Is this fair? No.

This Legislature has a duty to perform, and that is to protect the consumer against this kind of fraud. Identity theft is really reaching—according to the Privacy Commissioner of Canada—proportions which must be checked. It is, she says, an epidemic. Identity theft is an epidemic. Now, when Equifax admitted that 2,500 of its files were "stolen," then I asked the RCMP—I wrote a letter—"You know what? Tell me please, RCMP officers, one thing: Who are you going to charge now? Yes, we know Equifax was not as careful as they should've been. Who are we charging here? Who should be charged?" The RCMP replied to me in a letter and they simply said, "You know what? This is so complex, the truth is that it is so overwhelming, that we're unable to help you." That's essentially the fact. They told me something else that I should share with you today. They said to me, "We have identified six sites where swapping of private information is open. It's on the Internet."

So when you open the file, when you open the Internet, and you say, "I'd like to get a passport. I'd like to get a driver's licence. I'd like to get a security card. I'd like to get any private information," there is a list that says, "For your passport information, we'll pay you"—it's in terms of swapping—"I'll swap something and you give me something else."

On the Internet a real passport, meaning the numbers and the information, costs you, as a swap, $500. A driver's licence costs you $500. A social security card costs you $250. Amazing—the RCMP says they've identified six sites where this takes place. How do we stop this? They're overwhelmed. This is what the Privacy Commissioner of Canada says it is: an epidemic.

Do we have a role to play here? Can we at least mitigate the situation to some degree? Can we help out? Can we help the consumer? Yes, we certainly can. Here's the deal. The first point in Bill 75 says simply this: If a security breach has been committed—in other words, if your file has been stolen, if your private information has been compromised—wouldn't it be a good idea to have the credit granter, or a bank, or Equifax or TransUnion, say, "You know what? I'll admit that 2005 files have been stolen and you're one of them. Please check it out. Be careful. Have a look at what's on your credit card."

It's clear. Can we do something about this? Is it fair to give a 30-day notice? Yes, it is, and I'm here to tell you today, and I'm hoping that you will support this bill, because the essence is important. As the privacy commissioner says, we've simply got to stop this leaking of private information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: I want to compliment my colleague from Davenport. I know that Mr. Ruprecht has brought this bill forward before.

Let me first speak on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party and the official opposition and indicate how important we feel that this legislation is for consumer protection and that we're interested in working with the Legislature and all three parties to ensure that there are greater consumer protections in Ontario.

I might note at this point that the last time there were sweeping introductions of consumer protection in the province of Ontario was in 2002. Under a previous Progressive Conservative administration, in which my colleague the member from Niagara West—Glanbrook was minister of consumer protection at the time, he brought in sweeping reforms. I might add that I am disappointed that at this point in time there are still regulations from that piece of legislation that passed in 2002, regulatory regimes that have not yet been put in place, whether it's for the bereavement sector or the auto sector or even the Ontario racing community.

That said, while I am proud of the achievements of our previous Conservative administration under Mr. Hudak's leadership, I must say that, today, protecting Ontario consumers is even more important when you're looking at identity theft or Internet fraud or even when you're looking at the bill before this Legislature that was introduced by committee today, Bill 48, which is on payday loans.

I might also add that this is the fourth time this bill was introduced by the member. I encourage him to continue to raise awareness on this very important issue. I think it speaks to his insight into what happened to him, but also to his determination for change. But let me speak, I guess, to the disappointment we have on this side of the chamber that a member from the governing party who has direct experience in identity theft, who actually introduced a bill that the former Minister of Economic Development, Joe Cordiano, brought before this House—that the Liberal cabinet wouldn't adopt this legislation. In fact, in 2005 there was unanimous consent to try and move this piece of legislation along so that it would be speedily passed. Here we are again, three years later, three sessions later, a new Parliament, and we're still debating a piece of legislation that is long overdue.

Just to summarize for those who have just joined the debate: As defined by the federal consumer agency of Canada and Industry Canada, a credit report is a snapshot of your credit history. It's one of the main tools that lenders use to decide whether or not to give you credit. That is what this bill is about. It's actually improving consumer reporting to protect people against identity fraud. A person's credit history is recorded in files maintained by at least one of Canada's three major credit reporting agencies: Equifax, TransUnion and Northern Credit Bureaus.

These consumer reporting agencies are private businesses that create, maintain and sell information about you to a business that has the right to have access to your file and has paid a fee to a consumer reporting agency. There are two classes of information which you may file at a consumer reporting agency: credit information and personal information. As outlined by this member, his private member's bill provides that if the consumer reporting agency and any other person, such as a bank, to whom a consumer report has been provided discovers that there has been an unlawful disclosure of consumer information or that such consumer information has been lost or stolen, they shall immediately inform the affected consumer. It also outlines the duty to shorten vital information so that a consumer report does not provide information relating to a consumer's personal information, such as an address, date of birth, social insurance number and credit card account number.

Some other key provisions include—and I think that the member who has put this piece of legislation forward four times succinctly described them to this Legislature—the duty to delete unconfirmed information within 30 days; the duty not to penalize consumers for applying for credit; the duty to provide disclosure if credit is denied; the duty to record only inquiries resulting from applications for credit; the duty to report in writing only; the duty to retain information that is not contested legally; the duty not to report debts vacated after bankruptcy proceedings; the duty to provide a true copy of the report; and the duty to store and safeguard information in accordance with the Personal Information Protection and Electronic Documents Act.

As many folks here know, and I know that there are a few members who are critics or part of the government and consumer protection sector that we've got here in this chamber who have been part of the general government committee that put through Bill 48. I have spoken an awful lot about Ontario becoming a credit card economy. That is why we need this legislation.

I highlighted some of the complexities around this, and as a result, I believe it is imperative that Ontario's consumers are well-informed of the issues surrounding such a complex issue in this chamber: the credit reporting system, as it has such an important impact on each of our daily lives. I really am heartened that he has brought it forward, but I just can't reiterate enough that a senior member of the Liberal caucus has brought this forward. I remember debating the former Minister of Government and Consumer Services, who's in front of me right now, on Focus Ontario and talking about the same piece of legislation over a year ago—two years ago now, I believe—and how important this was and the bravado and the promises that the government gave us that they were going to protect Ontario's consumers, and nothing.

What I'm frightened about, as I go into my concerns about this piece of legislation, is this: What we're doing here today is important, but it will never become law unless it is a government cabinet minister who actually brings forward this legislation. What we're doing here today is nothing more than just an educational awareness campaign. Quite honestly, the member who brought forward this bill, Mr. Ruprecht, ought to be congratulated for his persistence, but shame on the government. Four times this member has brought this forward, and I bet you, when all the Liberal members speak on this legislation in this House today—do you know what they're going to do?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Support it.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: They're going to support it. They're going to vote for it. Will it become law? What are you going to do around the cabinet table? What are you going to do around the caucus table? Are you going to call on the Minister of Government and Consumer Services and demand that this piece of legislation become law? Are you going to do it? I'm not sure.

The general public does not have a whole grasp on consumer reporting, and we must do our best in this Legislature to make the information as accessible as possible, and for that I commend the member. As Linda Leatherdale noted on December 11, 2005, three years ago, in a Toronto Sun article called "Credit Clampdown," "Many victims don't realize they've been hit by scam artists until they find the deed to their home is no longer in their name, their bank account is wiped out, or credit card bills arrive showing a wild spending spree."

We in the Progressive Conservative Party and the official opposition are delighted to see the bill. As some of you may recall, when the member first introduced the bill in 2005, our member of provincial Parliament for Barrie, Joe Tascona, debated the bill. He made a few excellent points and noted that we were and remain saddened by the fact that, again, it was brought forward in private member's bill format, not by the government. I hate to see the member being used in the name of consumer protection when this government is not going to do a thing. He's just being used.

But first and foremost, this is about the consumer. If the current Ontario government was truly supportive of this piece of legislation and protecting consumers from fraud and identity theft, it would have brought this legislation through the Minister of Government and Consumer Services, and it should have been done several years ago.

The second point I'd like to make is that it is essential that our province play a regulatory role and establish an enforcement mechanism when it comes to consumer reporting. The member, of course, has made some excellent points, and he brings forward some rules and regulations that are outlined in his bill. But specifically, if a security breach occurs and personal confidential financial information is stolen from an individual, consumer reporting agencies and financial institutions must inform the consumer.

While I agree with his point that standards of protection must be introduced and adhered to by the industry, my question is, what if the credit reporting agency does not adhere to these rules? Nowhere in this piece of legislation does it indicate the repercussions and/or the penalties associated with an offence. This is a serious question which I believe requires further consultation.

As I've stated, the Progressive Conservative Party is looking forward to continuing the debate on this legislation. I applaud the member. As I've said several times, I only wish his government would listen. It's essential that this legislation receive considerable and substantive consultation with stakeholders throughout the community of Ontario, but also to make sure that we have public hearings into this legislation. It's an important issue, and I urge the member to talk to his cabinet and his caucus and tell them to put this piece of legislation as part of government legislation. We must hear from the affected stakeholders: the people in this province who are being ripped off, who are being defrauded. We need to protect the people who have sent us here. We must be extremely effective and helpful to our consumers.

On that note, I just want to again congratulate the member. I want to look at the members opposite in the government and say to them: If you're serious about this, don't just say it in this Legislature today so that you can tell the folks back home that you're supporting it and then sit on your hands with your lips zipped at your caucus table and not see this piece of legislation come forward as a piece of government legislation by the end of this four years, because this is important. As I said, whether we're talking about payday loans or identity theft or Internet fraud, we must be protecting the consumers of Ontario. This is what the bill does. We need to put it out to the public and support the legislation, and the government ought to get on with doing something.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: I'm certainly pleased to speak in favour of this member's bill once again in the Legislature. It's a sign of persistence that he's continuing to introduce this bill, but it's also a sign of commitment, and I think that's the important piece. This member is committed to making a change here in Ontario. In this particular case, as he indicated in his opening remarks, part of that commitment comes from his own personal experience. From the description of that experience that he shared with us a little bit earlier on, his first-hand brush with the identity theft issue was relatively minor in terms of financial impact. He ended up receiving a credit card bill that had a couple of purchases on it that amounted to less than $1,000. For some people, $1,000 is a great deal of money, and for others it's perhaps not as much. But I can tell you that the incidence of identity theft leading to credit card fraud in the province of Ontario is much, much more vast than this one example signifies. I think the member actually remarked on some of the statistics that he has been able to glean from the RCMP, particularly in regard to identity theft, and credit card fraud as well.

It's interesting because this issue is one that the member raises in his bill, but it's not only in the credit reporting agencies where this is problematic, particularly in terms of identity theft. We know that this is a huge problem in terms of the Internet. I think it was only about two months ago when everybody was warned that if you do Internet banking, don't do Internet banking, because there's some new worm or some new process where hackers have gotten into people's bank accounts from following certain keystrokes and have been able to hack into people's accounts and have drained those accounts. Of course, that's something we're always having to keep an eye on in regard to technological change.

We also remember that there was a significant criticism of the government not too long ago. The auditor was very critical of the Ministry of Health and the fact that they had been issuing tens of thousands of OHIP cards that didn't even relate to the number of people in Ontario who were eligible to hold one of these OHIP cards. So even the government's own ministry—the Ministry of Health, I would say, one of the most important ministries the government of Ontario has in its fold—experienced this whole issue of fraudulent identification being utilized to obtain OHIP cards inappropriately. We know it's an issue that touches the individual, but it also touches organizations like the provincial government.

The member did a fine job of outlining some of the progressive changes that he's hoping to make here, as did the previous speaker on the bill, the member from the Conservative caucus. New Democrats also support this bill. We believe that it provides new legislation that supports against identity theft. We believe that it improves the privacy of information that is kept by credit card agencies, and we also believe that it creates better disclosure practices. The member did go through the process of reading the clauses in the bill that specifically address many of those issues. He indicated that those were the things he felt most important.

In fact, if you go through the bill—it's the fourth time the member for Davenport has brought this bill forward. It's not a huge bill; it's eight pages long. It's an eight-page-long bill and yet the impact of it on individuals and their ability to feel secure in terms of identity theft and in terms of fraudulent practices that result from identity theft is enormous. When he spoke about the dollar value of some of these situations, it's hard to believe that a bill of merely eight pages, which has been introduced four times in this Legislature now—in fact, I was corrected. It wasn't necessarily this member who has done it all four times, but nonetheless, I think that's irrelevant. What is relevant is that a bill of this import, which is rather small in terms of the number of pages, in terms of the physical size of the bill—the impact that it can have in the province of Ontario is absolutely enormous.

I find it frustrating that when private members, during this part of our agenda, bring forward these pieces of legislation that really are pretty much no-brainers—they are pretty much no-brainers. People watching in TV land and people in the galleries today would think, "Why wouldn't all of the MPPs in this chamber agree to this kind of a change?" It protects consumers and makes sure that if someone is utilizing information that they've provided, they get the heads-up that that's happening. It gives them a chance to correct information about them that they find out is being inappropriately recorded and stored. It creates all kinds of checks and balances that are lacking, that lead to the kind of fraud that we see in the province of Ontario.

So as we go through the process today, we'll see these members who are now present in the House—I don't think I'm allowed to talk about how many, because if I talk about how many, it will indicate how many aren't here. So I won't do that, Mr. Speaker. I won't put you in a position of having to call me to order.

Nonetheless, the reality is that I would suspect everyone in this chamber understands how important this bill is, will support it, will speak in favour of it, and yet, at the end of the day, for the fourth time, we will not have improvements to the Consumer Reporting Act in the province of Ontario. We won't get those improvements, because, notwithstanding how important this is and notwithstanding how many people speak in favour of it and notwithstanding how many people out in TV land and in the galleries are watching this, notwithstanding any of that, it takes the government to make changes to the law. Even when private members bring forward great ideas like this, ideas and pieces of legislation that are meant to really improve the situation for people in the province of Ontario—the government uses this all the time when they're trying to pass changes and they get some criticism from the opposition. They say, "Well it's children, so it's non-partisan;" "It's poverty, so it's non-partisan;" "It's this, so it's non-partisan." It's kind of their cloak in trying to say, "Don't criticize anything we do, because we're just trying to do good." The argument is bogus nonetheless.

You know what? In this particular situation, this really is a non-partisan bill. It's brought forward in the time when we deal with these issues in what is technically a non-partisan fashion, because it is private members' business. But I don't think that lets the government off the hook in terms of taking a bill that is their very own member's bill and actually making the changes. I would hope that the minister responsible—and I believe that's the Minister of Government and Consumer Services, Minister McMeekin, who's from my very own community; he represents the riding of Ancaster–Dundas–Flamborough–Westdale—would see fit to take this private member's bill and take it upon himself to introduce a government bill, because that's what it takes to become law, to get it through the Legislature.

It's about time, when we see all the tragedies and horror stories that happen as a result of identity theft in this province, that we have a tightening up of the legislation. Again, I want to commend the member. I know the member from Nickel Belt will have a couple of comments after the rotation. New Democrats think that this bill can be improved. I hope that she'll have an opportunity to suggest some of those improvements, but New Democrats do support the bill and congratulate the member for bringing it forward.

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: It certainly is a pleasure to join the debate today on Bill 75. I really want to thank my colleague for bringing this forward, because every so often a bill comes along in private members' time that's meaningful, that's practical, that can really make a difference, or can prevent tragedy in somebody else's life.

I think this is a good example of such a good initiative, because it talks to something that all of us deal with in everyday life, as consumers, members of a family, people who need mortgages or car loans. We all have credit cards, I assume, that type of thing. We all have bank accounts. In a modern society like we have today, financial information is transmitted on a fairly regular basis.

I think that consumers in Ontario need to be confident that that information is both treated confidentially and that should anything happen to that information, should there be a breach of security—I think under the current practice we have right now in Ontario, the consumer should be absolutely outraged that if there's a breach of security, there's no onus on the people who experience the breach to notify the consumer that that information is now out of the confidential realm and has moved into the public realm. I think it's common courtesy. I think it's the sort of business practice that should be everyday business practice in the province of Ontario.

I thank the member from Davenport for bringing forward this bill, because it really could make a difference. Certainly we've heard examples of members of this House who have experienced identity theft, where they've had issues, or they've had items charged to their own credit cards, or they've been confused with other people, and bills have been ascribed to them.

I think we can do this, and I think it's put forward by the member from Davenport in a very fair and balanced way. As I said earlier, we all know that the issuance of credit now is a part of everyday life. Credit is used in a number of business transactions, from very small to very large. I think we should expect that lenders, the people who are extending that credit, should exercise due diligence before they extend that credit. I don't think anybody's arguing with that fact, but we know that that involves the transmission of personal information.

In my opinion, consumers in Ontario don't have the protection they should have and don't have the protection that is contained in Bill 75, because currently the system is slanted away from the protection of consumers and is actually slanted towards protection of the credit-granting agencies or those people who keep that type of information. I think, if you go through the bill, you'll find some very practical information. If the average person in Ontario knew what little protection they had without the protection of Bill 75, they'd be very concerned.

I'm going to close my remarks here, but I want to extend my thanks to the member for Davenport for bringing forward a very meaningful bill. I'd urge all my colleagues, on behalf of consumers around this province, to support the bill when the time for the vote comes.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I'm always privileged and honoured to stand up and speak in support of Bill 75. I believe I've spoken on this bill in the past—last year, I believe, when the honourable member for Davenport introduced it in this House for the third time. This is the fourth time.

Many members spoke in different fashions, but the member for Davenport brought a different approach to it today. I think his aim and goal for introducing this bill is to protect consumers across Ontario. It's a very important initiative. It's a very important bill. As I listened to the many speakers who spoke before me, they are supporting this bill very well, because we have to protect the consumer in Ontario.

I want to tell you something very important that happened in my riding. Not long ago—last week—one of my constituents came to my office and was complaining that he got five bills from the authority that looks after the 407—five bills. He assured me that he never drove on the 407. He never went on the 407. He was shocked when he received the bills. Somebody must have stolen his licence plate.

Identity theft is very common these days, through many different initiatives, because the technology is very advanced. The criminals are very advanced too. We are advanced in technology and the criminals catch up with advanced technology, because they want to hack into the computer system, go to the personal information, take it and use it against people.

This poor man who came to my office was so upset. He's not a rich person and he's being billed almost $2,000. He doesn't have the money to pay it. He and his wife have been working hard for many years to save a little bit of money on a yearly basis, to pay the mortgage, to do some stuff in the house. He does not have the money to pay the authority of the 407. He does not know what to do. He came to my office and we filed a complaint.

The member for Davenport brings to this House a very important issue. I think all of us should support it—definitely. I don't agree with many of the speakers who spoke before me about private members' bills not going through. Since I got elected in 2003, I've seen a lot of private members' bills pass in this House. I'll give an example: the diabetes machine—what do you call it? The pump machine for diabetics?

Mrs. Liz Sandals: The diabetic pump.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: The diabetic pump machine. It has passed. And not long ago, the member for Sault Ste. Marie passed a bill that you cannot smoke while the kids are in the car. So many different initiatives are being brought to us in this House. I think of—

Ms. Andrea Horwath: That was a government bill, though.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: Well, it's our job to co-operate with a ministerial bill that fits with our government agenda. Normally, private members' bills bring awareness to the people of this government in order to be adopted and become law in the province of Ontario.

I think this member is a dedicated member. He's determined to see this bill pass. It's important, not just because he had a bad experience with identity theft, but also to protect the people of Ontario. So many people across the province, so many people across many different communities, face the same problem. I think our job and our duty, as elected officials, is to create ways—laws, rules and regulations—to protect our constituents, our people in this province.

I want to congratulate the member for bringing this forward. I'm going to support it for a second time. Also, I'm going to speak up wherever I go in order to create more awareness about it.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I would like to continue on some of the comments that my colleague from Hamilton Centre had started. First of all, let's make it clear that as a New Democrat, I support this bill. It provides new legislative support against identity theft, improves the privacy of information kept by credit agencies and creates better disclosure practices. It protects the public.

As we know, identity theft is an increasing concern, with over 3,000 complaints of identify theft creating a $7.5-million loss—and apparently this is a conservative estimate; it could be way bigger. We look forward to this bill going to committee so that we can hear from the experts, consumer advocates and people who have lived through this to get their opinions on this.

We think the bill could go a little bit further. Many states in the US have brought legislation forward around what they call credit freeze rights. Basically, it's a law that was started in California. It's called California Law SB 168. It allows consumers to freeze their credit records at each credit agency. That prevents an identity theft. That means that even someone with the name, address, social insurance number, date of birth etc. will not be able to borrow or obtain credit under that name. There are 40 states in the US that have followed California's lead. The credit freeze is so tight that it doesn't even allow the person who triggered the freeze to get credit unless they provide a secure personal identification number, a PIN number, as it's called, to stop the freeze. The service is free and it goes a long way to give people the peace of mind and the protection they want.

This bill effectively provides for credit alarms. Credit agencies would have to inform individuals about missing or stolen information, but this could be ignored by lenders, meaning that consumers may still be open to theft.

As the member from Nepean–Carleton mentioned, this bill has been presented to this House many times before. We hope that this is the time it will become the law in Ontario and that a private member's bill will actually make it through to become the law of the land. The New Democrats will support this, with some improvements.

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: I do have a few more minutes extra; I appreciate that. I just want to tell the House that this bill is not only costing individual consumers a lot of money and a lot of heartache, but in addition, let's consider this: In North America, guess how much money is being defrauded? It costs our whole economy over $50 billion in fraud in terms of identity theft. It's amazing.

Let me tell you what's really going on out there. I know many members have received these kinds of letters from our banking institutions. For instance, I have one here from TD, another from RBC, another from the Bank of Montreal and others from two other banks. These are the kinds of letters that we're getting as consumers—not as MPPs but as consumers. It says the following: "Due to a recent security breach in the TD Canada Trust computer systems, we're asking all customers to immediately log in and report any unnoticed password changes, unexplained fund depletions or otherwise. We recommend you update your banking information of your accounts"—and what do you do next? What is the request here? It says, "Link up below and tell us your numbers."

There are thousands of letters going out. Guess how many people are responding to these fraudulent letters? It's a fraud. TD is on here and so is the Bank of Montreal. At first, when I got this, I thought that this is what's called an "official communication" from the bank. It isn't; this is fraud. There are thousands of people responding to this fraud because they think it's real. They think this comes from an official bank when in fact it doesn't. Guess how many people are responding to this fraudulent letter? The consumer reporting agencies tell us that 5% of Canadians are responding, are linking up and are providing all banking information that's requested here.

This is a fraud, and I would only hope that all of us will tell the people of Ontario and all the consumers, please, whatever you do, do not respond to any official-looking communication from any bank and certainly don't log on and provide personal information. Please don't do that.

We have with us today one of the vice-presidents of the Insurance Brokers Association of Ontario. They are supporting this bill as well. Why are they supporting this bill? Because—and this happened to me as well. Guess what? TransUnion sent a letter to my insurance company. My insurance company is Allstate. Allstate in turn sent me a letter saying the following:

"Mr. Ruprecht,

"TransUnion ... provides us with aspects of a consumer's credit history"—your consumer credit history—"which we use to establish a score." They have found that specific characteristics apply to me. And what is that?

"Based on your"—new—"score," Mr. Ruprecht, "with respect to your property insurance coverage"—on my house—"your premium reflects an increase from this factor."

In other words, my FICO score on my credit file went down a few numbers, and immediately what does my house insurance do? They say, "I'm sorry, your score goes down, and up goes your insurance."

We have a law that says when car insurance comes in that way, it's illegal. Why not make it illegal for house insurance as well? That's why I think this bill is so important.

The brokers' association says the following:

"The practice of using credit reports as a basis of premium calculations disadvantages those with poor credit, and adds to the financial burden of those who can least afford to bear it. Removing this provision would effectively prohibit this practice" and they agree with it.

"Thank you very much," they say, "we support your proposed changes." So it is clear that when the TransUnion and Equifax people provide the FICO score, they should not be able to have the insurance company tell us they'll raise the price of our insurance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Thank you. Mr. Ruprecht, you have up to two minutes to respond.

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: I certainly very much appreciate that this will be supported by all parties, I hope. I know that having introduced this bill previously—Bill 38—there was unanimous consent that something should be done. It behooves us as legislators to try to help our consumers.

One of the most important items in my new bill simply says this as well, that I should not be penalized for looking for a better mortgage. As it stands right now, if I as a consumer look around for different banks and ask them, "Please give me a good rate for my house mortgage" or "Give me a very good rate for my car, for my loan"—I would ask them to do that. As soon as I have more than two credit inquiries—inquiries, which are not leading to the actual loan, just an inquiry—or if you want to rent a house or an apartment and the landlord asks the credit reporting agencies, Equifax and TransUnion, for an inquiry, they would ask, "How is Mr. Ruprecht doing? What is his credit score?" So the landlord then gets the response. As soon as he gets the response, that is considered an inquiry. If there are more than two or three inquiries which have not led to an actual loan or mortgage, I am being penalized.

What's the proof? I have the proof right here. I have a number of cases, in case anyone wants to see them, where this in fact took place. That's why I say this bill is a good bill because it would prohibit me or anyone else, any Canadian consumer, from receiving an inquiry which then reflects on bad credit.

DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I move that, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should recognize positron emission tomography (PET) as a vital diagnostic tool for care, and as such should introduce an implementation plan with timelines to achieve the same level of access to PET scanning here in Ontario as in jurisdictions such as Alberta, British Columbia and Quebec.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mrs. Witmer has moved private member's resolution number 25. Pursuant to standing order 97, Mrs. Witmer, you have up to 12 minutes for your presentation.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I have brought forward this resolution today on behalf of the men and the women and children in this province who are being denied access to PET scanning.

PET scanning is the gold standard when it comes to diagnostic tools throughout the world. They help to diagnose and they help to plan treatment for patients. Regrettably, in this province, we are still doing clinical trials, which have been ongoing now for about five years. We still have no plan, no timelines, telling us when they will be accessible to all people, as they are in other provinces and other countries throughout the world. So people continue to be denied access to PETs, which, as I say, are the gold standard for diagnosis throughout the world.

I first became aware of the problems that people were having when I had a constituent in my own riding, Mike Allard, who was denied access to PET scans because he didn't fit the limited criteria in Ontario. He was going to be forced to pay the $2,400 out of his own pocket if he were to go and get PET-scanned. Today, many doctors in Ontario, many specialists, recommend that their patients have PET scans in order that they can diagnose where the cancer is and also help in the planning of a course of action when it comes to treatment.

Regrettably, if the people are denied access—which, in most cases, the majority are—they will have to pay, out of their pocket, $2,000. They can go to Mississauga to a private clinic, or, as many people do, they can travel to the United States or to Quebec. Unfortunately, there are many, many gaps in the Ontario health system today, and this is one of the many gaps that we do have. I am calling on the government to develop a plan and timelines in order that we can have the same access as elsewhere.

I am pleased to be supported in this resolution by CARP. I am also pleased that the president of the Ontario Association of Nuclear Medicine, Dr. Christopher O'Brien, wholeheartedly supports the resolution. I would like to quote what he has had to say, because I think it says it better than I could say it. He's the expert.

"It is a travesty that the patients of Ontario are subjected to limited access and are also subjected to inappropriate hurdles to gain access to PET scanning, a well-established and -researched diagnostic procedure....

"It is unacceptable to see patients denied access to PET scans in Ottawa when, across the river in Gatineau," Quebec, "patients with the same cancer have access to PET scanning and the beneficial impact on their care that PET scans deliver. Access to modern diagnostic procedures should not be based on postal codes.

"It's time to bring Ontario into the 21st century."

That was Dr. Christopher O'Brien, president of the Ontario Association of Nuclear Medicine.

I am also pleased to have the support of the Canadian Association of Nuclear Medicine, which embraces this resolution to provide all Ontarians access to PET scans. I want to quote their president, Dr. Jean-Luc Urbain. He says:

"Over the past three decades, all the benefits" of PETs "for the management of patients with cancer have been extensively documented...." Listen to that: "over the past three decades." Here we are in Ontario, still saying that we need to go through tests and clinical trials that have been undertaken in other parts of the world and have found that this PET is appropriate for use. He goes on to say: "Not only does this procedure save life, it also decreases the burden of disease, saves patients from inappropriate treatments and ... spares a fair amount of taxpayers' dollars for other health programs.

"In all developed countries in the world," he says, "except Canada, PET scanning is used routinely for the diagnosis and management of patients with cancer." In those countries, it is used routinely. It "is considered as unethical and malpractice not to recommend this procedure."

He goes on to say that this is absolutely necessary, and I would support that. The time has come when the McGuinty government must recognize, as other governments throughout the world have done, that the PET is a vital diagnostic tool for care and management of treatment.

I have many testimonials here that I am going to read into the record. I can't read them all, but I was absolutely flabbergasted by the number of people who have approached me once they heard I had a resolution and was fighting on their behalf to make sure we could have fair and equitable access to PETs. If you don't have the $2,500 that is required to get your PET at a private clinic in Mississauga or go to Quebec or to the United States, you can't have one. This government talks about the fact that they don't support two-tier medicine. We have two-tier medicine in the province of Ontario. If you don't have the money, you can't get the PET scan. In some cases, people are mortgaging their homes in order to get a PET scan, because they know it helps with the diagnosis.

I want to read one letter from Mr. Sam Bruno, cancer patient in Sudbury, who says, "I ... fully support Mrs. Witmer's resolution." He goes on to say that he's met with his local MPP, Mr. Bartolucci; he's written articles. He knows that people like CARP and unions and other patients support this resolution. He goes on to say, "My dying wish is to see Mrs. Witmer's resolution taken seriously by this government and to see it provide access to funded PET scans to Ontarians as quickly as possible. It may be too late for me but not too late for the thousands of cancer patients in this province in need of a funded PET scan. Mr. Smitherman," he asks, "will I see the implementation of PET within my shortened lifespan?"

He goes on to say: "As a cancer patient, I have been extremely frustrated and disappointed with this government's flagrant nonsense and pretence with its continuous PET scan trials. Anyone with even an ounce of common sense would agree that access to funded PET scans needs to be an integral part of our provincial health plan.

"Now, let's get this done once and for all!"

His letter is so much the same as those we get from others. Here is a mother, Mrs. Deborah Maskens, and she says:

"As a stage 4 kidney cancer patient who has travelled twice to the United States to access a medically necessary PET/CT scan, I ... support Mrs. Witmer's resolution. In my own case, a PET finding of cancer in an additional lymph node changed the planning for my surgery ... at Toronto General. Thanks to the PET scan in the US, radiologists at Princess Margaret were able to see a second area of cancer previously undetected on CT images. With this information, surgeons were able to remove all remaining cancer in one operation. Without the PET, an additional surgery or additional months of cancer treatment would have become necessary."

She concludes by saying, "I will need another PET scan early next year and sincerely hope that, next time, I will not need to board another flight out of Ontario," to the United States.

She also mentions that she's had two battles to fight. The first is the one with kidney cancer, which has very few treatment options. But, she says, the second one is even more frustrating, and that is that despite her oncologist's recommendations, the Ontario government still does not fund access to PET scanning even when it is deemed medically necessary.

Here is another one, from Margo and Eric Paraskevoopoulos. "Thank you," they say. The husband, Eric, has faced colorectal cancer and has been fighting this cancer. He was scheduled to have a CT scan to determine the stage; then they decided that they would instead go to Montreal and pay for a PET scan. That CT scan that they had, by the way, showed no cancer in his liver, and when they decided they maybe should go to Montreal to have a PET, guess what? It showed "five cancerous lesions in the liver.... When we presented the results of the PET scan to the specialist, he was surprised...." So, as you can well imagine, there was a different course of treatment undertaken for that patient.

They indicate that they were alarmed at the discrepancy between the PET and the CT scans, and they also were concerned about the long waits that they have experienced to see the colorectal surgeon and the oncologist. They are continuing now to have all their scans and tests done in Houston. Folks, this is absolutely unbelievable. They indicate they have no faith in the Ontario health care system. Here is a young man with two daughters aged four and five, and he's fighting for his life but he can't get the diagnosis and the treatment that he needs. His wife says:

"Ms. Witmer, I commend you on your fight to provide more accessibility to PET scans for residents of Ontario.

"I never understood why people who experienced injustices did not fight for change. Now I understand. It has been seven months since my husband's diagnosis, and I am already tired. But I will do whatever I can to ensure others do not have to go through what we have. I owe this to my husband and our two children."

I got letters like this—so many of them.

It is an injustice that in a province such as Ontario we do not have access to this gold standard, this diagnostic tool, which is used by countries throughout the world. I call on this government to provide a plan in order that we can have equality for all people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I am pleased to rise today in response to the motion from the member for Kitchener-Waterloo about positron emission tomography, better known as PET scans. Basically, PET is nuclear medicine imaging technology and it is used to detect and evaluate different types of cancer. How does it work? Radioactive material is injected into the patient and then the machine detects cancerous cells by measuring the amount of energy used in that area.

As of November 2007, there were 22 centres performing publicly funded PET scans in seven of the Canadian provinces. Some provinces fund a certain number of PET scans each year. In Quebec, it's 21,000; in British Columbia, 3,500. In Alberta, they fund 3,000 PET scans a year; in Nova Scotia, 1,500; in Manitoba, 1,000; and in New Brunswick, 600.

If we look at this by 100,000 of population, because not all provinces have the same number of residents, it goes like this: For Quebec, it's 272 per 100,000 residents; in British Columbia, 81; in Manitoba, 83.

The funding level varies greatly as well. It goes from about $1.3 million in New Brunswick to $14 million in Quebec. Ontario provides funding for PET scans through clinical trials on two registries and through the Ontario PET access program. The total number of patients, residents of Ontario, as of December 31, 2007, in those clinical trials goes as follows: We have 1,406 enrolled in clinical trials, we have 1,198 in registry studies and we have 45 that have access through the access program. In Ontario, we have nine publicly funded PET scanners and they are used for those clinical trials.

Three active clinical trials evaluate the role of PET scanning in the diagnosis and staging of head and neck cancer, metastatic lung cancer, and colorectal cancer with liver metastases.

Two clinical trials—on potentially resectable non-small-cell lung cancer and breast cancer—have completed patient accrual and the results are presently being analyzed. I—as is the member from Waterloo—am certainly looking forward to seeing what the results are going to be so that a decision can be made.

The Ontario Cancer PET Registry Study provides PET scans for patients with a solitary pulmonary nodule, potentially resectable non-small cell lung cancer, or suspected recurrent cancers—and there are limits in those; those are from the thyroid, from the germ cells, and colorectal—with elevated tumour markers but negative anatomical findings in traditional imaging tests, such as X-ray, MRI, etc.

The Ontario Cardiac PET Registry Study provides PET myocardial viability assessments to patients with severe ventricular dysfunction being considered for revascularization or a heart transplant. Some of the examples were given by the member a few minutes ago.

Patients who are not candidates for the clinical trials or registry study may apply for a PET scan through the Ontario PET access program. The PET access program is for those who don't qualify for any other trial, but if your physician or your oncologist feels that he or she would like to order a PET scan, then the request is reviewed by a panel consisting of an oncologist, a nuclear medicine physician and a radiologist who review each application on a case-by-case basis to determine whether the PET scan would be appropriate. This is an interim measure until the clinical trials are completed and a decision is made as to how many PET scanners—when, where, etc.—will be rolled out in Ontario.

Based on current indications recommended by the Ontario PET Steering Committee, about 2,000 PET scans are currently anticipated in this fiscal year. I'm talking here of 2008. If you want to link this back to some of the stats that I said before, that would be about 16 PET scans per 100,000 population. That puts us kind of in the middle of the pack.

The five clinical trials were originally supposed to be completed in 2007, but for reasons that are unclear, they are expected to continue into 2009. For me, this raises a lot of concern. We know that the PET scan is an expensive technology, and we know that we need hard, solid evidence to make funding decisions on this new technology. What I don't want to see happen is that those clinical trials are being unduly delayed so that funding decisions don't have to be made. This would be unacceptable to this party and I think unacceptable to everybody in Ontario.

The Ontario PET Steering Committee has recommended a new pilot study because, as years go by and more knowledge is gathered about the usefulness of PET scanning, a new pilot study on diagnosis of recurring cancer is due to begin patient enrolment this spring. So it is just starting.

There are also privately owned PET scanning clinics in Canada, and Ontario has one such clinic. I think the member from Kitchener-Waterloo has mentioned in some of her examples that people have actually had to go to those private clinics. The cost of those varies between $2,300 and $2,800 for one scan. This is a huge amount of money and certainly out of the reach of most people on fixed incomes, low incomes or minimum wage in this province.

We do, though, in Ontario have access to 11 PET scanners that are located a little bit throughout the province. We have some in London, Ottawa, Toronto and Hamilton. Those are available for the people in the clinical trials and on the PET access program. I'm really disappointed to see that the ministry didn't see fit to have one of those clinical trial sites in northern Ontario. With the higher burden of cancer diagnoses and lower survival rates after a cancer diagnosis of people living in northern Ontario, you would have thought that one of those clinical trials would have been there, but it wasn't. They have been concentrated in London, Ottawa, Toronto and Hamilton.

Although there are a number of very well-respected oncologists and nuclear medicine specialists who support the use of PET scanning, there is still considerable debate in the medical community about the effectiveness of PET scans as a diagnostic aid in Canada. Recent systematic review concluded that: PET scans bring little benefit to diagnostics except for head and neck tumours, they can play a role in assessing recurrent and residual cancer, and they are beneficial for the identification of distant metastases in later stages of disease when tumours are larger and other results are equivocal.

The potential negative effects of extended reliance on PETs are that tests could be ordered that are not necessary, and it might deter more time-intensive clinical intervention by physicians. We have seen, through the wait-time strategy with MRIs, that although the number of MRIs that are now being performed in Ontario has nearly doubled—certainly the resources to support MRI testing have nearly doubled—the waiting list has not gone down one iota.

The main reason for this is that MRIs are now being requested for more and more procedures and diagnostics that, really, MRIs were not made for. When we see results coming back from MRIs with a diagnosis of a sprained lateral or medial collateral ligament of a knee, it leads me to ask, how can it be that any physician with all those years of study was not able to diagnose a sprained knee without an MRI? There is a little bit of a judgment call here in that as the technology becomes more and more available, it's not always being used for the intention it was put there.

As far as stakeholder positions, I agree with the member that there are very strong proponents for greater access. The Canadian Society of Nuclear Medicine is one, the Cancer Advocacy Coalition of Canada is another one, and the Ontario Association of Nuclear Medicine is another—certainly three stakeholders that have very clear positions. They want PET scanning available to all, and they want it immediately. There are other stakeholders just as important that are ready to wait for the results of the clinical trial before expanding access. Those, I must add, include the Canadian Cancer Society, which to me is also a heavyweight in that field.

We certainly recognize the importance of increased access to new technology to help with the prevention, diagnosis and treatment, but we also recognize that many new technologies are extremely costly and that the health care budgets are increasing. There is still significant debate within the medical community about the effectiveness of PET scanning. We agree that the government needs to complete the clinical trial assessing the effectiveness of PET scanning, but we will not tolerate any delay in those assessments that would delay the making of a decision towards increasing access to PET scanning. The motion as it stands isn't clear, because it proposes equal access to Quebec, B.C. and Alberta, which, as I've already said, have already got different rates of access, so it's a little bit misguided and a little bit premature.

Mr. Bas Balkissoon: I'm pleased to join in and speak on this motion on positron emission tomography, better known as PET scans. The McGuinty Liberals are investing in health care after years and years of neglect under the previous Conservative government. We've come a long way. Yes, there is still more to do, and we accept that. We currently have clinical trials under way to evaluate PET technology. Two of the clinical trials have completed patient accrual and results are being analyzed by the Ontario Clinical Oncology Group. This process that the government is going through is endorsed by international experts.

While the trials are underway, we have an access mechanism that allows Ontario patients to access PET technology today. I repeat that: Today, Ontario patients do have access to PET scans. Ontario has established one of the largest PET infrastructures in Canada, including 11 PET scanners at nine centres. Seven of these Ontario PET scanning facilities in four Ontario geographic areas participate in the Ontario-funded PET evaluation study. Recently, the Thunder Bay hospital announced the purchase of a PET/CT scanner to be operated by the research institute attached to the regional cancer centre.

Before we offer widespread access to PET scans, it is critically important that we know exactly those indications for which this is the most desirable form of a diagnostic test to be utilized. We are not in a position to offer this technology without strict guidelines about its most appropriate use.

I think that our government is being responsible. I think our government is being accountable. We are doing a lot more today than in the year 2003, when the previous government was in power. We accept that there is more to be done, but we must be accountable for our decisions. We must be responsible to Ontarians. We will do more after these trials are reviewed and we will do what is right for the people of Ontario.

We took over from a Conservative government that was closing hospitals; 31 hospitals were ordered closed while our population was aging. They were firing nurses by the thousands and compared the nurses to hula hoop workers. The Conservatives were intent on breaking up public health care. We all know that they're in favour of a private health care system. Our government is in support of the health care system that we have today.

We're working to improve it, we accept that there is more to be done and we will do that in the coming years.

This is a motion that is only intended to represent that government's viewpoint. We will do what is right for Ontario.

Mr. Ted Arnott: Whenever I hear Tina Turner's song "You're simply the best" on the radio, for some reason I think of the member for Kitchener-Waterloo. It's not surprising that her supporters picked this recording as her theme song for her leadership campaign in 2002, because we believe that she's simply the best member of the Legislature.

Even the Toronto Star has recognized her as "the hardest-working MPP in the province," and I couldn't agree more, although I know that the vast majority of MPPs all work very hard. Some members of the House may not be aware that this past year the member for Kitchener-Waterloo received significant recognition by Equal Voice, an organization dedicated to encouraging the election of more women. They recognized Elizabeth Witmer as "the greatest female Premier" Ontario could have, and so she would be.

I've considered it a great privilege to have had the chance to work with her the last 18 years, and hopefully for many more years to come. Through her advocacy, first as the member for Waterloo North, and since redistribution in 1999 as the member for Kitchener-Waterloo, her riding has seen major improvements to health care services. A few examples include a new cancer centre, dialysis unit and MRI at Grand River Hospital in Kitchener; a new cardiac centre at St. Mary's hospital in Kitchener; new childbirth and children's services at Grand River Hospital; the Kitchener Downtown Community Health Centre; and improved access to doctors and primary care through the introduction of family health networks, which the current government calls family health teams.

Her record on the environment is just as impressive. While she served as the Minister of the Environment, I was privileged to serve as her parliamentary assistant. During this period, she announced the date for the closure of the Lakeview generating station, which at the time was the most polluting coal-fired power plant in the province. She expanded the Ontario smog patrol and she committed $10 million for municipal groundwater studies—a very important step towards a better understanding of this vital natural resource, our drinking water.

I could go on and on about her impressive achievements while she served as Deputy Premier and Minister of Education, including new textbooks, enhanced funding for special education and literacy programs. She supported building new schools, including St. Luke, St. Nicholas, Lester B. Pearson, Laurelwood, Northlake and St. Mary's. Post-secondary education in Waterloo region has benefited greatly because of Elizabeth's work. She has pushed for a new science research centre at Wilfrid Laurier University, my alma mater, and the University of Waterloo Research and Technology Park, among many other leaps forward at these two leading Canadian universities, and at Conestoga College, the number one institute of technology and advanced learning in Ontario.

Unfortunately, I have to say that since the McGuinty Liberal government came into office in 2003, Ontario has lost its leadership role in health care. The system today no longer benefits from the same kind of dedicated and outstanding leadership we saw when the member for Kitchener-Waterloo served as the Minister of Health, and I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, during your tenure as Minister of Health. We have not seen that kind of strong leadership since 2003. That's why she quite appropriately has seen fit to introduce this resolution on positron emission tomography scanners, or PET scanners, as they are known.

As I understand it, a PET scanner is a state-of-the-art, 21st-century diagnostic imaging technology which produces a three-dimensional image or map of the body's functional processes. It is particularly helpful to have this information if you're being treated for cancer.

At a time when Alberta, BC, Quebec and Manitoba are leading the way in providing their citizens access to this amazing and life-saving technology, Ontario, as has been so often the case under this government, lags far behind. In fact, PET scanners have been used in Canada on a clinical basis for the last 20 years.

It's not just Canada that has accepted this proven technology. The United States, Japan, Germany and many other smaller countries across Europe adopted it many years ago. It's no wonder, given the success of the PET scan as a routine diagnostic procedure for cancer patients, as well as its uses in pediatrics, cardiac disease and neurological disease.

We must listen to Dr. David Webster, a nuclear medicine specialist practising in Sudbury, who has called upon the government to finally accept the science from around the world by making this crucial tool available to all Ontarians who need it and to recognize that the time for select clinical trials is over.

We must listen to the Federated Women's Institutes of Ontario and their advocacy coordinator, Mrs. Pat Salter, who says: "It is no longer acceptable to delay this life-saving diagnostic, regardless of the position of the Ministry of Health, given this is the standard throughout the world for cancer treatment and many other disorders."

I understand that OHIP is already compelled by law to reimburse Ontarians for PET scans performed in other jurisdictions. If that's the case, what's stopping this government from providing the service here at home? Why do patients have to travel hundreds of kilometres in some cases for this medical care that they so sorely need?

Again, Ontario is falling behind the rest of the country, and the McGuinty Liberal government's Minister of Health seems completely unwilling to do anything to change it. Our health system is in desperate need of new leadership from this government. We need a system that is patient-centred and one that responds to their needs.

I urge all members of this House to listen to the doctors, listen to the patients, listen to the families, listen to the experts and listen to the member for Kitchener-Waterloo. Support this motion and send a strong signal to the Minister of Health that he must make PET scans a higher priority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): I thank the honourable member for his contribution to the debate and I thank him for his kind personal comments. Further debate?

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I'm honoured and privileged again to get the chance to speak on this motion brought by the member from the opposite side, talking about PET scans and radiation treatment for cancer patients in Ontario.

I am proud and honoured to be a part of the government. Since we got elected in 2003, we have invested heavily in health care, because we value the health care issues in Ontario. We think it's our responsibility as a government to treat all the people in Ontario, and all the people have the right to have access to publicly funded, accessible health care. I remember when we started in 2003, I think the budget was almost $28 billion. The last budget invested almost $40.4 billion in health care across the province of Ontario.

I know the member opposite brings in very important issues, and I'm glad to see our government taking steps toward this issue. We have 11 machines across the province of Ontario, at nine centres in different regions, to do pilot studies to see if this one will benefit the people of Ontario or not.

I know that cancer patients seek all opportunities and avenues in order to treat themselves—especially their parents and their loved ones—because these are important issues and a very difficult disease. It's a very complex disease. Not many people now are able to totally get well from it or be treated 100% for it because the technology is not there yet.

One of those initiatives that the honourable member brought to this House was PET scans. Our ministry and our government want to introduce it to the community step by step in order to see if this will work or not. It has not been proven yet that it's the right treatment and full treatment in order to detect cancer, treat cancer and cure cancer.

I think it's important for us to keep talking about this issue. I'm not sure if it's the right way. I think that our government and our Minister of Health have been working very, very hard in order to seek the best way, the most important way, in order to help people across the province to be treated. We can see a lot of achievement at this level, in many different areas: MRI centres across the province of Ontario have been almost doubled since we got elected; many patients have access to health care without any problem; we lowered the wait times; and many different steps are being taken toward this avenue.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to join in the debate on the resolution that, "in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should recognize positron emission tomography (PET) as a vital diagnostic tool for care, and ... should introduce an implementation plan...."

I was listening to my colleague from London-Fanshawe. You don't have to look far to find out the best way. Everybody else is doing it but us. I lead with that.

I'm pleased to thank the member for Kitchener-Waterloo for bringing forward the resolution. She has certainly been a strong advocate for health care. She is our health care critic and does a great job in bringing forward the needs in that industry to the Legislature. Hopefully, with the example of this resolution, we can get all-party support so we can move forward with this very important diagnostic tool that needs to be accessible by the people of Ontario.

There's no question—I've spoken many times here as a former nurse—on the importance of preventive medicine, early detection and prevention, and better solutions for individual treatments. Early detection not only makes someone more comfortable in the long run, but it saves lives. There's no question.

When you go to a doctor or to health care practitioners of all sorts, they feel more confident when they know they've done all they can to diagnose and treat a patient. It's very frustrating when you know that a solution exists—in this case, a diagnostic tool—that can bring forward the best treatment possible for the patients they see. When you have the barriers that exist today—we have this barrier to accessing PET scans—it's just not acceptable that the McGuinty government will not move forward on this.

We've had many quotes from people. Dr. David Webster, for example, the nuclear medicine specialist at Sudbury Regional Hospital, has pointed out that PET scans will ultimately save money because they will yield more accurate diagnoses and better treatment.

PET scans are accessed worldwide, including the other provinces outside Ontario. It's not at clinical trials anymore; it's not a new or experimental procedure. We need to open PET scans to be available to all the people in Ontario who need to have PET scans.

The Ministry of Health Promotion has a budget of nearly $400 million. One would think that, with a budget of this magnitude, they would be able to come to the conclusion that Dr. Webster has and would demonstrate interest in actually promoting health and making the lives of Ontarians more comfortable as they battle major illnesses like cancer and heart disease.

I'd like to remind my colleagues in the Legislature that one in four people will die from cancer. Based on current incidence rates, 39% of Canadian women will develop cancer during their lifetime, and 45% of men will. Those are staggering statistics.

I think that we all have to step back and say, "How do we approach this as a team?" It's very hard. I know that political cycles tend to be shorter than planning-for-health-care cycles, but sometimes, please, just take the politics out of it and move forward for what's best for the people—in this case, of Ontario—in their health care.

If you look at the data from the US National Oncology PET Registry recently released, it shows that 38% of patients who had a PET scan were able to have their treatments changed as a result of the findings of the scan. These were changes for more effective treatment. If there is access to PET scans, there are some treatments that people are going through that they wouldn't have to go through. They would be ruled out; they wouldn't be effective. I just can't tell you how much of a difference that makes in someone's life.

The evidence is staggering. Again, I go to the Ministry of Health Promotion website. It says that the ministry will help Ontarians lead healthier lives by delivering programs that promote healthy choices and healthy lifestyles. It's kind of ironic that people are leaving the province to get their badly needed PET scans. This is not delivering programs, and it's certainly not promoting healthy choices for better treatment solutions.

It's quite another thing, and I think this was brought up earlier today, that Ontario is the second-largest PET installation base in Canada but it's not delivering a PET scanning program. So you go to all this trouble to oversee installations, and then you stall on clinical trials of over 1,000 individuals instead of helping the estimated tens of thousands of people waiting for a PET scan.

My colleague from Newmarket–Aurora has raised in the House a number of times the installation and operation of cone beam CT scanners in private dental practices. The Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care is just starting to determine the process on the rules and regulations related to the operation of the dental CT scanners in all settings. The minister can't drag his feet on the heels of these useful devices the same way he has on PET scanners. The approval will not cost the government anything. Ontario has an opportunity here to be ahead of the curve when it comes to health care and the promotion of health, as a health care leader. We have the largest population of any province, and this should be reflected in our ability to deliver first-rate health care to the people of Ontario. Instead, we're the only province that has not approved the use of cone beam CT scanners in dental offices. Instead, dentists are sending people to get in line for their CT scans at hospitals, a drain on our health care system and a greater radiation risk than the cone beam style of CT scans that could be available in dental offices.

As a nurse, as the health promotion critic and especially as a citizen of Canada and a resident of Ontario, I urge the government to recognize PET as a vital diagnostic tool for health care and preventive medicine. I thank the member for Kitchener–Waterloo for bringing forward the resolution today, and I am hoping that all parties can take the politics out of it and pass this resolution.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: I'm pleased to speak to ballot item number 29. I think that some of the comments of our colleague from Haliburton–Kawartha Lakes–Brock to try and look at this from a non-partisan position are important suggestions. When I heard about this particular ballot item coming from the very well-respected member for Kitchener–Waterloo, a former Minister of Health, I decided to delve a little more deeply into this particular issue.

It is clearly a prudent approach that our government has taken, one that shows our dedication to fiscal responsibility. We have a consistent approach in our government that all new health technologies that appear promising but for which there is insufficient quality evidence of clinical utility to justify multi-million-dollar funding, need to be subjected to very careful evaluation. That's the approach that we have adopted here in Ontario.

Our colleague from Nickel Belt mentioned the fact that notwithstanding the 11 PET scanners at nine centres, unfortunately Sudbury does not have one in place. I know that she will be happy to hear that since October 1, 2007, the northern health travel grant is available to all northern patients referred for PET scanning.

When we look at the clinical trials and the registries, we see that there has been a large target enrolment. As an example, the head and neck cancer clinical trial—a cohort trial—has a target enrolment of 400. As of March 31, only 328 have been enrolled, so there is certainly more space. There are spots for people in that particular clinical trial, as there are a number of spaces in the stage 3 lung cancer trial. It's interesting to know that there are well over 3,000 individuals who have accessed PET scans through the Ontario PET evaluation trials and registries.

There have been some quotes from some noted authorities, and I'd like to quote Dr. Bill Evans, chair of the Ontario PET steering committee, oncologist and president of Hamilton's Juravinski Cancer Centre, an excellent centre: "There has been criticism in Ontario in its seeming tardiness to adopt. But it's a decision taken by cancer specialists of the province, various surgeons and medical and radiation oncologists...."

"In cancer, we have to figure out how best to use it. When the clinical trials are completed, there will be a complete evaluation."

Mr. Shafiq Qaadri: First of all, it's a privilege to speak on this particular issue from, as reported, the hardest-working MPP, the Honourable Elizabeth Witmer, former Minister of Health and current MPP for Kitchener–Waterloo on ballot 29, "That, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should recognize positron emission tomography"—or PET scanning—"as a vital diagnostic tool for care, and as such should introduce an implementation plan with timelines to achieve the same level of access ... here in Ontario as in jurisdictions such as Alberta, British Columbia and Quebec."

I think there are a number of issues that are important, and I would thank our honourable colleague for raising this particular issue. Of course, as a physician MPP, I certainly support the broad outlines of attempting to bring 21st-century technology to a wider audience, a wider participation rate, so that we, as physicians, may be further empowered to diagnose, treat, monitor and intervene on an earlier and earlier basis.

I think, though, perhaps some of the political rhetoric embedded in the commentary or within in the ballot item itself is largely being addressed, because as you know, the government of Ontario, with its current health budget of something on the order of $40 billion plus, having increased from $28 billion when we took office in October 2003, has demonstrated its extraordinary political will, the McGuinty vision and a real resourcing of the health care sector broadly.

I'll give you a case in point very briefly in the 47 seconds that I have left. PSA testing—cancer testing for men—is now covered. A female patient came to me and said, "Doctor, I want you to do a PSA test." I said, "Why?" "I want to find out if I have prostate cancer." I said, "You don't have prostate cancer." She said, "How do you know unless you test me?" The reason I bring that up in a somewhat humorous way is that if we allow unregulated widespread access to, let's say, the latest fashionable test of the day, it will probably be misused, overused and abused. That's why I think the government is taking a measured approach with the clinical trials at a research level, gathering the facts and information so this modality—very extensive, as you know—can be used judiciously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mrs. Witmer, you have up to two minutes to respond.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I want to thank all the people who spoke to the motion. I would encourage the Liberal members to look at the motion. The motion is simply committing your government to introduce a plan of implementation with some timelines in order that Ontarians will know when they can achieve fair and equal access to PET scanning here in Ontario, similar to the access that we have in other parts of Canada, such as British Columbia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, Quebec or Alberta, and also the same access that people in other countries of this world, such as Chile, Lebanon, Argentina etc., have to PETs. That's what we are asking for in order that people may know that the time will come that there will be equal access.

I think I've pointed out that this is a diagnostic tool that is the gold standard in the world today. It is being used by other governments. The clinical trials and tests that are being undertaken here in the province of Ontario that were to last two years have now gone into almost five years. In fact, one of the members of the PET scan steering committee, Dr. Charron of the Hospital for Sick Children, resigned two months ago because he said that there's an obvious ethical problem with a technology that can benefit cancer patients and the fact that it's unavailable to most of them under the presumption that it's being studied.

The time for study is over. It has been studied to death by other countries and provinces. It has been accepted for use. We know that it has a big impact in the diagnosis of cancer and certainly in the treatment. The latest data from the US said that 38% of patients had their management changed to a more appropriate therapy. This certainly demonstrates the need for PETs. I urge you to support the motion.

HEALTHY SCHOOLS

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: I move that, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario develop an "Eat Local: Live Fresh" food miles strategy to encourage publicly funded schools to serve healthy, local Ontario foods to their students.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Pursuant to standing order 97, Ms. Pendergast, you have up to 12 minutes for your presentation.

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: I rise in the House today to call on the government of Ontario to develop and encourage publicly funded schools to serve healthy, local Ontario foods to their students. I'm thrilled that today our gallery is full of young students from our schools in Ontario. I'm calling on schools to change: to change the philosophy under which we operate, to change the way we make healthy choices, to change because it's the right thing to do. It's for our children, and I will speak to the ripple effect this has from childhood to aging.

We have removed trans fats from school cafeterias. Let us replace them with healthy choices and local choices, to reduce the food miles that our food travels. The concept of food miles is used to describe the distance that food travels from the location where it is grown or raised to the location where it is consumed. In Waterloo region alone, imports of 58 commonly eaten foods travel an average of 4,497 kilometres to the region. These imports account for 51,709 tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions annually, contributing to climate change and air quality, both of which have an effect on human health.

A significant opportunity exists to reduce our contribution to global climate change and air pollution by replacing imports, while at the same time doing the right thing for the health of our children with food items that are sourced locally. The implications are boundless, including strengthening our communities, our economies, reducing the carbon footprint, supporting our farmers, health and wellness, and teaching our students good choices.

Schools are the microcosm of larger society. What we begin here will spill into the larger communities. Beginning with schools, the Healthy Food for Healthy Schools Act has set the stage. This act amends the Education Act to add provisions regulating the trans fat content of all food and beverages sold in a school cafeteria. The bill bans trans fats from food in school cafeterias and vending machines and calls for healthier menu choices in cafeterias.

According to a report published by Health Canada, while most Canadian children and youth are healthy, a number of nutrition concerns do exist. Poor eating patterns contribute to chronic health problems such as cardiovascular disease, diabetes, cancer, and later in life, osteoporosis. Obesity in children is increasing. Inadequate nutrition affects the long-term development of our children. We owe it to our children to offer them healthy choices within the very educational institution in which they spend their days: schools.

We have a responsibility to provide our youth in schools with healthy choices, as well as to educate them with health and wellness courses for them in the long term.

"Eat Local: Live Fresh" will provide an enhanced learning experience for Ontario's schoolchildren by supporting their sense of local identity. According to the CSPI study Are Schools Making the Grade?, "Poor nutrition is a key preventable risk factor for the major chronic disease that takes a huge toll in morbidity, disability and premature death in Canada."

The fear is that "today's generation of children may be the first in a long time to live shorter, sicker lives than their parents."

Poor nutrition is a key preventable risk. This government has taken the first steps with the Healthy Food for Healthy Schools Act. Now let's take the next step and replace trans fat with healthy local choices that support agriculture and build local economies and strengthen our local communities.

Premier Dalton McGuinty has pledged to work with farmers, the agri-food industry and community organizations to increase the public profile and sales of Ontario food products. This government will invest $56 million over four years to promote Ontario food products for farmers' markets. This encourages all Ontarians, when grocery shopping or dining, to pick Ontario freshness.

We need to move that Ontario freshness into our schools and make the opportunity to Live Fresh available to our students in schools. Premier Dalton McGuinty has said, "Everyone has a role to play to support Ontario agriculture," and, "If we buy Ontario, everyone wins because we are supporting our farmers, our processors, our rural economy, our environment and ourselves with healthy food from here at home." Healthy food from here at home reduces the food miles travelled, reduces the carbon footprint, and supports local farmers, local agri-tourism and the local economy.

Our students have a role to play in this beyond better health, beyond learning wellness, right into developing their own commitment to their local communities at a grassroots level. They learn a sense of dedication and commitment to their world, and they will continue to choose to live local; they will continue to choose to eat fresh.

This will promote a sense of mutual prosperity based on confidence. Students will feel satisfaction by supporting local farmers, and food producers will also be encouraged to reinforce their quality control when they know that their product is being consumed in their own backyard.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs is involved in the Pick Ontario Freshness marketing strategy and Foodland Ontario to build awareness of and demand for the fresh, high-quality foods grown and produced in Ontario.

The benefits of eating local and living fresh, both in our schools and at a community level, are tremendous. The community of Kitchener-Conestoga and the larger Waterloo region have rallied together to support this resolution of a "Eat Local: Live Fresh" food miles strategy. We have several exciting initiatives occurring that both support this resolution and deserve recognition.

St. Mary's High School, one of the largest schools in Waterloo region, has not only moved to reduce the trans fats from its cafeteria, but has also taken the next step to move forward. A student-led initiative to serve healthy foods in their cafeteria has resulted in a school policy to that effect. The exceptional part of this is that it's student-led, it's student-inspired, and it's student-driven at the grassroots level.

We are continuing to look at the aspect of reducing food miles and supporting local agriculture and farmers' markets. Anne Facey, who is the director of the St. Mary's High School progressive cafeteria policy, states: "Kids consume half of their daily calories in a high school setting. We have a responsibility to educate them about their nutritional health and raise awareness about the socioeconomic factors surrounding where their food comes from."

Foodlink of Waterloo region, under the leadership of executive director Peter Katona, is a grassroots organization made up of farmers, food businesses, consumers and other community stakeholders who are committed to putting local food on local tables. Since 2002, Foodlink has been committed to championing a healthy local food system to sustain our community food producers. They've taken a leadership role in linking rural and urban towards a common appreciation of local food and its role in building stronger communities. The Buy Local, Buy Fresh map marks its sixth year in Waterloo region. It features farmers, along with local farmers' markets, food processors, restaurants and shops, and they support local food. As Peter says, "Local food is not cheap; it is priceless."

Foodlink supports the "Eat Local: Live Fresh" resolution and is pleased to support healthy food in our schools. Peter Katona also says, "In Waterloo region, if you have gone 100 miles to localize your diet, you have likely gone 90 miles too far."

The Herrle family in my riding of Kitchener-Conestoga has become a local tradition in the region and has been growing and marketing fruits and vegetables in Waterloo region for 45 years. They state the following:

"We believe that the promotion of a local food economy in our schools is a priceless lesson we can teach our students. The 'Eat Local: Live Fresh' program will be a healthy boost to our students, to our environment and to our local economy. The Buy Local, Buy Fresh campaign has had a tremendously positive impact in our region. May 'Eat Local: Live Fresh' be embraced the same way."

Under the leadership of president John Tibbits and his team—Marlene Raasok, John Richards and Elissa Bonin—Conestoga College is developing a wellness concept called Choosing Lifestyles of Health to implement in their programming so that our students can continue to develop healthy lifestyle choices. They are moving toward a centre for wellness excellence or a one-stop shopping model for student wellness. The student association supports this concept. President John Tibbits supports “Eat Local: Live Fresh” and he says, “We want to be fit to live, not just live to be fit.”

Dr. Ron Schlegel in my riding has formed a unique partnership between Schlegel—University of Waterloo Research Institute for Aging, or RIA, and the University of Guelph to ensure that optimal food and nutrition are at the forefront of disease prevention and long-term health planning, and we must continue to do that health planning for all ages.

St. Mary’s hospital in Kitchener has been honoured as well for its neighbourhood market. They are thrilled to be recognized as innovators among their peers.

As you can see, this concept of “Eat Local: Live Fresh” food miles strategy is embraced in Waterloo region, both within the school setting as well as within the larger community.

Today I call on the government of Ontario to recognize the priceless benefits of a “Eat Local: Live Fresh” food miles strategy and encourage its implementation both within our schools and throughout our communities as a whole across this province. It’s the right thing to do for our children; it’s the right thing to do for their future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I’m pleased to very briefly join the debate on the motion that has been put forward by the member for Kitchener—Conestoga, where she is calling upon this House to develop an “Eat Local: Live Fresh” strategy to encourage our publicly funded schools to serve healthy, local Ontario foods to their students.

Many of the people she has talked about as supporting this—Dr. Schlegel, Dr. Tibbits, and the Herrle family and the fresh farm produce that they produce and sell—are close to my riding. I just want to congratulate her on bringing forward this particular resolution. I think she has done a good job to raise awareness one more time about what is necessary if our students are to be as healthy as they possibly can be. We see obesity in our schools, and it’s important that students eat healthy. Of course, whenever we possibly can, if we can eat foods that are grown locally, all the better for those who provide those foods.

I congratulate her on her resolution and certainly will be supporting it.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I’m happy to rise and talk about “Eat Local: Live Fresh,” the food miles motion. Certainly, the NDP supports the eat local movement and would encourage the government to do everything in its power to increase the amount of local food served in our public schools. We have long supported nutrition in schools. Former NDP colleague MPP Tony Silipo introduced the first school nutrition program, and that was 15 years ago.

Eat Local is a win-win scenario: It supports local farmers, it reduces the impact on the environment of transporting food, and it encourages consumption of healthy, fresh produce.

The member from Kitchener—Conestoga said that schools are a good place to start, and we would agree. Eating patterns and habits started in childhood and youth tend to endure throughout adulthood.

It is particularly critical to encourage the provision and consumption of local and fresh food in schools at this time. Why? Obesity rates are climbing due to poor diet and lack of exercise, especially among young children; children and youth are increasingly targeted by advertisements for fast foods and processed foods, both very unhealthy; and financially stressed schools are increasingly selling things such as chocolate bars and other unhealthy foods to raise funds for basic programs because they just don’t have the budget to do so otherwise.

An eat local, eat fresh strategy needs to be more than symbolic. The strategy needs to be comprehensive and include education, legislation and financial support.

If you talk to the public at large, everybody will tell you it is a good idea. So why aren’t we doing it? Well, we’re not doing it because there are some structural issues. The eat fresh, eat local strategy needs to effectively respond to those structural issues that mitigate against the purchase of local, fresh food. Education and provision of information is important, but raising awareness is not enough. We need to address the current barriers to the purchase of fresh and local food.

First, I want to talk about the financial barriers as well as the time pressures on individuals.

Some 340,000 Ontarians rely on food banks each month. They have to rely on mostly second-rate canned and packaged goods that are not fresh and probably not local. If the food bank is lucky enough to have some cash donations, they will buy milk. Why? Because 60% of the food bank users are kids, and we know that they need milk.

Today is National Hunger Awareness Day. An important part of any strategy to promote fresh and local food is a strategy to end hunger in a wealthy province such as Ontario. Such a strategy means ensuring that all Ontarians have access to adequate incomes, whether through fair wages or decent income supports for those who are not able to work. That is the only way that all Ontarians will be able to purchase healthy, local food.

Time is also an issue. Too many Ontarians are working multiple jobs to make ends meet. They have no time to seek out and purchase local, fresh produce that is not available in the corner store or the local supermarket but that you have to go around to the producers to get and then prepare.

Second, advertising: An eat local, eat fresh strategy needs to include legislation to ban advertising of junk food and pop in schools. It is presently being done in Quebec, it has been in the UK for some time, but it is not here in Ontario. It should ban junk food advertising to kids outside of schools, as some other countries have done. We need to recognize that multinational companies are spending hundreds of millions of dollars on sophisticated and very cool ads, but those ads are aimed at getting kids to become hooked on sugar, salt, caffeine and other unhealthy chemicals. Most of them have no nutrients whatsoever. Without bans and controls on junk food advertising, any government strategy will be only a drop in the bucket.

Third, we need to adequately finance our schools. Parents are put in the difficult situation of having to raise funds to cover basic educational needs: classroom expenses, library books, sports equipment, music, IT—the list goes on. When the school doesn't have enough money to provide the basics needed for education, it's very hard for those same schools to think of spending locally, eating fresh and eating local.

One of the easiest ways to raise money, of course, is to sell junk food. Has anybody bought a chocolate bar lately from those cute little guys who come to the door, raising money for their school? I know I have. They also hold barbecues, and what do you find at those barbecues? Hot dogs and pop. I've paid my dollars for hot dogs and pop. I want to support my local school, but at the bottom I know that this is not healthy. We are sending a message to our kids that is wrong.

For a school to be in a position to implement an "Eat Local: Live Fresh" policy, they have to have adequate financial resources so they aren't put in a position where they have to fundraise for the basics. Schools also need financial support and incentives to purchase local and fresh food and be able to pay for the storage, the environmentally friendly utensils and plates etc.

It is heartening to see that there is a growing movement in support of the purchase of local food. Yesterday, the city of Markham became the first municipality to implement a local food procurement policy, ensuring that a minimum of 10% of its material and produce comes from LFP-certified Ontario farmers, with further increases of 5% per year.

Also, Local Food Plus in Toronto has developed a certification for local, sustainable food that includes sustainable production, safe and fair working conditions for on-farm labour, and reduced food-related energy consumption and greenhouse gas emissions.

The agricultural sector is beginning to respond to the Eat Local movement. Historically, our agricultural sector has been thought by the government to be an export sector. The vast majority are large farms that are growing produce for export. However, with the rising cost of gas and oil, things are beginning to change and a movement is growing to buy directly from the local farmers. But it is not easy.

I want to give an example from my riding. Although we have quite a few chicken farmers and egg producers, there is nobody in and around Sudbury who can get that accredited—if it's a small, medium or large egg. It doesn't seem so high-tech to me to see if an egg is small, medium or large, but because we haven't got anybody, we cannot buy fresh eggs from our egg producers in Sudbury. They have to be shipped out, measured—small, medium, large—and then God knows where they end up. If you want to buy local eggs, you have to go to the market, you have to go to the farmer. Why am I not allowed to buy local Sudbury-grown eggs in my supermarket? It's beyond me.

Hagar, which is just on the edge of my riding, has about 30 farmers who have been brought together, each investing $3,000 of their own money to open a slaughterhouse, because there are none to be found in and around Sudbury. This is the type of partnership and management that would be managed by an intermediary who already processes meat bought from the packers. The farmers are waiting to hear back from the Ontario Cattlemen's Association's expansion program with the hope of the program starting in October.

There are many more examples of structural barriers to eating locally and eating fresh. If we want those programs to be successful, we have to pay more than lip service to them. We have to look at those structural barriers and change them, and this is what the NDP intends to do.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I'm very pleased to rise and speak in support of the motion by the member from Kitchener-Conestoga.

As has been noted earlier, we understand that there is an increasing problem with our school-aged kids with the issue of obesity. If you look back at the data from about 1977 or 1978, back in there, the official stats told us that about 13% of children were overweight or obese. If you look at the current data, we find that that rate has doubled. We now find that 26%, or about one in four kids, are overweight or obese. Clearly, that's an alarming statistic, particularly because we know from all the medical research that if a child is overweight early in life, they're likely much later in life to have difficulty with diseases such as heart disease, diabetes, cancer, osteoporosis and a variety of issues.

Our government has taken a couple of steps to deal with that. We know that the issues related to childhood obesity are a lack of exercise, and poor nutrition habits. In terms of the sedentary lifestyle that we know a lot of kids have, we now require that there be phys-ed every day in our elementary schools, to try and get our kids to be more active.

We've just recently passed a bill called Healthy Food for Healthy Schools. It does three things. First of all, it bans trans fats from being sold in schools, predominantly school cafeterias but also any other forum where food is routinely being sold. It focused on processed trans fats. There are small amounts of naturally occurring trans fats in dairy products and ruminant meats, and they are exempt. The processed trans fats, which cause the health issue, are being banned. We're also banning junk food from school vending machines.

The third piece of this, which we are currently working on, is providing broader nutritional guidelines for all foods that are sold to kids in school. That's where this motion from the member really fits in very nicely: As we develop those broader nutritional guidelines based on Canada's Food Guide, we expect that we will be getting away from the fries and some of those other sorts of staples in school cafeterias and looking a lot more at a healthy diet. There's a great opportunity here, as we have a healthier diet in school cafeterias, to bring in local foods.

I live in a part of the province where in fact the major grocery store chain actually does have flats of locally grown strawberries in season and crates of locally grown corn in season, but I know as I travel around the province, if I'm on vacation and go into a grocery store, that's not always the case. It's often a huge issue actually even being able to access locally grown foods in our grocery stores.

There's an opportunity here not only to provide foods but also get students to start to think about where the food comes from. How many of us know when we go into a grocery store whether the meat came from the farmer down the concession or whether it came from Australia, from New Zealand or from Texas? I have a huge abattoir in Guelph that produces boxed meat, yet if you go and look at boxed meat, you will find that most of it comes not just from out of the province but out of the country. If we adopt these sorts of programs, we can start to educate our kids to find out where their food comes from, because in a lot of cases, you would be very surprised at the answer. It doesn't come locally. We need to give much more thought to the Foodland Ontario program and to this motion, "Eat Local: Live Fresh," and make sure we get more local foods.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to join the debate on the resolution today before us that would encourage publicly funded schools to serve healthy local Ontario foods to their students, brought forward by the member from Kitchener-Conestoga. I have spoken many times in the Legislature about how important agriculture is to the riding of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock and about all the farmers and producers I have. Again, the slogan "Farmers Feed Cities" fits. It's in many of our constituency offices, and we participated in many of their education campaigns out there.

I'm pleased to support the principle of the resolution. It stresses the need to promote our products and, in turn, let our producers know that we value them and support them.

I'd like to point out one fact. In the backgrounder, the member from Kitchener-Conestoga listed some excellent examples of community leadership on that front. Kawartha Choice FarmFresh, which is in both Peterborough county and Kawartha Lakes, is an excellent example of great community leadership, showcasing local produce with end-of-the-laneway farm signs so they know they can come up the driveway and buy farm produce, and also the farmers' markets that we have throughout many of our small communities and that started on the May 24 weekend. We'd like to see them expanded. I would like to see a year-round one at the new Lindsay Agricultural Society and bring people from Toronto to the area, because we have many products all year round. I have many goat dairy industries that are quite attractive to urban dwellers, and the products they produce are fantastic. It's interesting that we could maybe make that connection. But they certainly need to be added to that list.

The Ontario cattlemen were here and served fine beef this week to all of the MPPs, and the Foodland Ontario programs are out there.

As opposition critic for health promotion, I certainly agree with promoting healthy choices in diets and helping kids make decisions. We need to start to educate them early as to how food is produced. As we've all seen the price of fuel and the cost to the farmers increase, we need to assist more of our local farmers and buy more locally. I know that the Dairy Farmers of Ontario have been working hard, creating great leadership in the school milk program currently used in the province. I've met with many members in my local riding from the DFO. They want to expand that milk program to include milk from cows that are fed a diet with DHA omega 3, which is instrumental in the development of the brain, the eyes and the nerves in the critical years of youth in their physical development.

I know that my colleague from Oxford is going to speak further on this, but I just want to comment that our farmers in Ontario need help. They have been asking the government for help for a long time. There is no question that we support the intent of this resolution. Our farmers need a long-term, sustainable plan for our agriculture sectors or they're not going to be able to grow the local food that we eat, and it is getting to be that crisis. We cannot push any more farmers out.

In 2005, the Kawartha Lakes Chamber of Commerce said, 50 farms closed down in my area. It's many more than that now. The input costs are growing extremely high. The cost of production is so much that they need political support. There has to be the political will that we want our farmers to stay in business and produce the high quality of food that they do produce.

I appreciate the resolution that has been brought forward today, and I know my colleague the member from Oxford is going to expand at length on that.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: I'm pleased to have a couple of minutes to talk about the "Eat Local: Live Fresh" motion from the member for Kitchener-Conestoga. People think that Hamilton is a big city, and it is: 500,000 people; that's fairly big. So it's perceived as a city, but in fact one of the major industries in Hamilton is agriculture. We have a number of farming enterprises around Hamilton in what used to be some of the smaller communities that became a part of Hamilton during amalgamation.

I know for sure that there are several initiatives being undertaken to try to get people to tie into our local farmers and to purchase their foods. One of our current city councillors is a former farm family of the year, from his area in Flamborough. There are organizations like plan b Organic Farm. They provide the opportunity for people to enlist in a program whereby they pay a certain amount of money and, every week, groceries are delivered fresh from the farm for the families to consume over that week. We have organizations like the Conserver Society, Environment Hamilton and others that are encouraging people to acknowledge the importance of eating from our local farms.

We have a new farmers' market that was relocated right into a neighbourhood on Ottawa Street. It used to be located in a mall parking lot, and now it's really engrained into a neighbourhood in a business district, which is quite fabulous.

We have a number of community organizations, including our community health clinics, the North Hamilton Community Health Centre, that have implemented community gardens for people who don't have land of their own and who can go and produce vegetables and things over the summer to feed their families from a fresh, local perspective. We have a new such enterprise on the Hamilton Mountain at 1605 Garth Street that I was invited to attend.

But we also have things like CanGro, where the government of Ontario didn't support the operation and farming of those peaches and we no longer have that industry. That's a shame.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: Again, it's a pleasure to be able to support the member for Kitchener-Conestoga's resolution to "Eat Local: Live Fresh," whereby we will be encouraging publicly funded schools to serve healthy, local Ontario foods to their students. I see this as building on Bill 8, the Healthy Food for Healthy Schools Act, that recently received third reading, where we banned trans fats in school cafeterias and vending machines. This is a concerted effort on the part of our government to bring full attention to the issue of how good nutritional practice can positively influence our health. I think, as everyone is becoming increasingly aware, that poor eating habits do contribute to chronic health problems, whether they be diabetes, heart disease, cancer, osteoporosis, so the patterns established in the early years are ones that will produce lifelong benefits for our children, and perhaps our children will influence their parents to look at good nutritional programs as well.

The Ministry of Health Promotion, of course, is very much involved in promoting the concept of eating as many fruit and vegetable servings a day; five to 10 is obviously an excellent idea. When these are locally produced, obviously there's less need for preservatives, fewer chemicals, which can also potentially influence our health.

The northern fruit and vegetable pilot was a program the Ministry of Health Promotion introduced in 2006-07, and that was in conjunction with the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association, the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, and the Porcupine public health unit, schools and local school boards. They started off by providing three servings per week of Ontario-grown fruits and vegetables to 5,000 students in 24 elementary schools in Timmins, Schumacher, South Porcupine, Porcupine, Matheson, Iroquois Falls and Cochrane. Obviously, accessing fresh fruit and vegetables is a challenge in the north. We have recently expanded that program and now it is in 60 elementary schools in Porcupine and Algoma regions.

These are examples of very positive steps that our government is taking in order to encourage individuals to eat fresh and local.

I also wanted to mention a very useful interactive website that you can access through the Ministry of Health Promotion website: the EatRight Ontario interactive web—and also a call centre, for those who are perhaps less likely to use the Internet. It enables Ontarians to readily access up-to-date, comprehensive nutrition information and advice on healthy eating from a registered dietitian.

Hopefully, all these measures will reap long-term benefits for all Ontarians.

I commend the member for Kitchener-Conestoga for bringing this resolution forward.

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: I'm pleased to rise to speak on and support this resolution, which would bring more locally grown Ontario food into our schools. I want to recognize the member for Kitchener-Conestoga, who has not been here very long yet, for bringing her first private member's business into this House and deciding that it was important to bring in an agricultural piece of business, a resolution to ask the government to prepare a strategy for doing a better job of getting Ontario food into our schools.

I just want to point out that over the past three years the locally grown movement has been increasing. We heard the member in her introductory remarks point out the 100-mile diet, in which people attempt to eat only food that is grown within 100 miles of home. I want to say to everybody in the Legislature this afternoon that if you use that 100-mile rule, all the good food in Oxford county is eligible to fit the criteria. So from here on in, you will eat nothing but the best if you stay in the 100-mile radius.

More and more people are recognizing the value of eating locally grown food. I think there are a lot of reasons for this movement, and it's worthwhile. It means the food meets high Ontario standards; it means that we aren't wasting resources, including the environment, by shipping foods long distances, as was mentioned by the member; and to me the most important part of it is that it supports our local farmers and our local agriculture industry. That's why I support the principle of this resolution. I believe that our schools should already be serving locally grown Ontario foods. In fact, one of our party's campaign commitments was that all Ontario public institutions, from schools to hospitals, would purchase foods from Ontario farmers. We also committed to promote Ontario-grown foods by ensuring that when people went to a cafeteria in a hospital or a public building, they would see a sign telling them that the food they are being served was grown and produced by their fellow Ontarians.

Over the last few years, as the member pointed out, the McGuinty government has been quite comfortable telling schools what they can and can't serve, and banning trans fat from the cafeteria. If the McGuinty government feels they should tell schools what food they can serve, why haven't they already said that the food they are serving should be Ontario food? It would have been easy to include that change in the Healthy Food for Health Schools Act, which was introduced by the Minister of Education, Kathleen Wynne, and passed on December 5, 2007. The bill bans trans fat from food in school cafeterias and vending machines and calls for healthier menu choices in cafeterias based on the new Eating Well with Canada's Food Guide. I don't see that it would have been very difficult to have included, and they should give preference to, food produced in Ontario.

That wouldn't have been the first place that happened. There was legislation passed in the state of Washington. The reason I mention that is because the approach that is being recommended here is to develop a strategy, not what that strategy will be. This bill that was passed in Washington "eliminates low-cost bidding requirements for school purchases of Washington-grown food and allows schools to adopt price preference for local food." It was mentioned in the member's presentation that it isn't cheap, it's just the best buy.

The second one is, "requires development of food procurement procedures for state entities to encourage and facilitate purchasing of Washington-grown to the maximum extent practicable." Again, it's not suggesting that you would always have to have Washington food, or in this case Ontario food, but in every case where it is possible and practical it would be done.

"Requires all state food contracts to include a plan to maximize the availability of Washington-grown food purchased through the contract." If that were passed by our government in Ontario, it would be a great boon for our farming communities.

I just want to point out that this legislation in Washington promotes local produce being produced and served in schools, and the bidding process allows schools to take into account where the food was grown. Again, it may not be the cheapest food, but because it was grown at home, that's the one they're allowed to purchase. They don't always have to take the best price.

So why in Ontario does a government member need to use private members' business—and I appreciate that she did—to ask her own government to develop a strategy to bring Ontario food into schools? The ability was there all along. Why didn't they do that? Why hasn't the Mc-

Guinty government already included that in their legislation?

Now, I wasn't asked, and I'm not suggesting the member should have asked, but if I had been asked, I would not have introduced a resolution today. I would have introduced a bill, a piece of legislation that would have included that—the same as in Washington state. There, the government doesn't develop a strategy, the government actually makes it happen. That would have been a great benefit to us all.

Recently, I was talking to an agriculture leader in our province and he was telling me he had just been to a school breakfast program that morning. He visited us in Oxford shortly after that and he said he was quite disturbed. He went to the school breakfast program, and the produce they were serving at the breakfast program was in fact not Ontario produce. This is food that is bought with Ontario taxpayers' dollars, being purchased by an Ontario institution and being fed to Ontario children, yet it is not produced in Ontario.

Mr. Peter Kormos: So where was it coming from?

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: I don't know. I wasn't able to follow the whole trip, because it didn't come straight from where it was grown to where it was served, but I'm sure it went well beyond the 100 miles.

Again, the member's resolution speaks about developing a strategy. I support the goal of eating locally grown food, but I have real concern that if this government keeps ignoring the needs of our farmers, there won't be any food grown in Ontario.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I'm delighted to stand up this afternoon and speak in support of the resolution by my colleague the member from Kitchener-Conestoga. The resolution is the "Eat Local: Live Fresh" food miles strategy, which promotes fresh fruits, vegetables and food being served in our schools. I think it's a very important initiative, because this initiative fits with our government direction.

I remember when we were elected in 2003, our government, the Minister of Education, introduced a law to ban junk foods from elementary schools. I think that was a very good, important step. Not long ago, we also introduced another bill banning trans fats from school cafeterias across Ontario. Now the member from Kitchener-Conestoga is bringing in a different initiative to create awareness and promote local products being planted in local areas.

It's important for us to support local farmers, local producers and our local economy. We, the province of Ontario, are a big producer of many different products: carrots, lettuce, celery, grapes. Many different fruits and vegetables are being grown locally. We also have a lot of meat production in the province. So it's important for us as a government, especially at the school level, that when we introduce a different program across the province, Ontario tax dollars are spent locally and used to support the local economy. This is part of the strategy to promote local initiatives, to support the local economy and create an awareness among the kids about what we grow in Ontario.

This initiative will also help to reduce obesity among kids across Ontario, and also reduce health risks. What happens when people eat a lot of junk food products—chocolate bars, chips—that aren't healthy or fresh? They increase their risk of diabetes, heart disease and many other diseases.

This resolution is important. Hopefully the next step will be to adopt it in a government bill, to become law in the province of Ontario. This will help us, as a government, to maintain the health of the people of Ontario.

I remember last year, the Minister of Health Promotion, in conjunction with the Minister of Education, came up with an initiative to support and create awareness in many different schools. I know that two schools in my riding, Clarke Road high school and Montcalm high school, participated in this program, introducing healthy, fresh fruits and vegetables for breakfast on many different days to the students at those schools. It was a very good initiative, and I hope all the schools across Ontario will promote that.

Again, I'm glad to support this resolution. I congratulate the member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate? The Liberals have 26 seconds. Seeing none, Ms. Pendergast, you have up to two minutes to respond.

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: I'd like to begin by thanking all of my colleagues for an engaging and supportive discussion. Thank you to the members from Guelph, Oak Ridges–Markham and London–Fanshawe, as well as my colleagues the members from Oxford, Haliburton–Kawartha Lakes–Brock, Kitchener–Waterloo, Nickel Belt and Hamilton Centre. Thank you to everyone today for engaging in this discussion.

I did want to leave you with a quote, as I always do as an English teacher, just to remind you that, "We cannot always build the future for our children, but we can build our children for the future." That's what this is about today: the discussion that we have the tools to build our children for the future, to give them healthy choices and to encourage them and teach them how to choose local.

For me, "local" in Kitchener–Waterloo region is the world-famous Schneiders meats, Tavistock cheeses and dairy, Herrle's corn, as we heard about earlier, and the Wellesley apple butter festival. I can't forget the Kitchener–Waterloo Oktoberfest and all of the wonderful sausages for Oktoberfest.

It's more than just healthy food and good choices in schools and teaching wellness; it's about the big picture as well: reducing the carbon footprint, reducing greenhouse gas emissions, learning to invest locally, investing in our community and everything that our communities stand for, and strengthening our local farmers and our local farmers' markets. We have the St. Jacobs Farmers' Market. Of course, absolutely it all comes together in learning to eat healthy.

I did want to just reiterate that if food has travelled 100 miles to come to Waterloo region, it has travelled 90 miles too far.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The time provided for private members' public business has expired.

CONSUMER REPORTING AMENDMENT ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES RENSEIGNEMENTS CONCERNANT LE CONSOMMATEUR

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): We will deal first with ballot item number 28, standing in the name of Mr. Ruprecht.

Mr. Ruprecht has moved second reading of Bill 75, An Act to amend the Consumer Reporting Act. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Second reading agreed to.

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: I'd like to have Bill 75 referred to the Standing Committee on General Government, please.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Shall the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on General Government? Agreed. So referred.

DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): We will now deal with notice of motion number 25.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Hon. Michael Gravelle: Mr. Speaker, I believe we have unanimous consent to put forward a motion regarding division of time for debate on the motion for third reading of Bill 55: that the time available to 10:45 this morning be divided equally among the recognized parties for debate on the motion for third reading of Bill 55, An Act to enact the Ontario French-language Educational Communications Authority Act, 2008 and make complementary amendments to the Ontario Educational Communications Authority Act, following which the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the motion for third reading of Bill 55 without further debate or amendment.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Members have heard the motion by the Minister of Northern Development and Mines for the splitting of the debate. Agreed? Agreed.

ONTARIO FRENCH-LANGUAGE EDUCATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS AUTHORITY ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR L'OFFICE DES TÉLÉCOMMUNICATIONS ÉDUCATIVES DE LANGUE FRANÇAISE DE L'ONTARIO

Ms. Wynne moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 55, An Act to enact the Ontario French-language Educational Communications Authority Act, 2008 and make complementary amendments to the Ontario Educational Communications Authority Act / Projet de loi 55, Loi édictant la Loi de 2008 sur l'Office des télécommunications éducatives de langue française de l'Ontario et apportant des modifications complémentaires à la Loi sur l'Office de la télécommunication éducative de l'Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Debate?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 55 today. French-language education and culture have a huge impact on our province. The very fact of Franco-Ontario culture is part of our definition as Ontarians, because the French-language community plays such an important role in Ontario's cultural and economic development. That's why I'm pleased that we are moving forward with this legislation, with third reading. If passed, this legislation would support Ontario's French-language students, teachers and parents. This is an educational issue, but it's also a broader cultural issue for Franco-Ontarians and, as I say, for all Ontarians. This proposed legislation, Bill 55, is the last step required to formally give TFO its independence. In fact, TFO has been operating as an independent entity for some time. TFO has its own board of directors, it administers its own budget and it operates separately from TVO at this point.

Given TFO's successful transition to becoming an independent broadcaster, it makes complete sense to finish this process and formalize TFO's status by passing the proposed legislation.

Les élèves francophones ont besoin d'immersion dans leur culture en dehors de la salle de classe ainsi qu'en dedans. Les émissions de TFO permettent aux Franco-Ontariens et Franco-Ontariennes d'apprendre et de se divertir dans leur propre langue lorsqu'ils sont chez eux. Cela aide aussi à renforcer leur identité et leur culture, car la programmation de TFO est conçue ici-même en Ontario. TFO est une histoire de réussite bien ontarienne et TFO demeure la pierre angulaire de la politique d'aménagement linguistique du ministère de l'Éducation. That cornerstone of our aménagement linguistique in our French-education school boards is extremely important to the dissemination of Franco-Ontarian culture. C'est un soutien clé à l'éducation en langue française en Ontario aujourd'hui.

Teachers use TFO's resources extensively in our French-language schools, and TFO also has the support of Ontario's francophone community and French-language education stakeholders. Some 83% of Ontario francophones say that it's essential for all francophones in Ontario to have access to TFO. So if 83% of Ontario francophones are saying that, that goes well beyond our education system. The feedback that TFO receives directly from the public is overwhelmingly positive. In fact, in 2007-08, TFO received 2,500 phone calls and 1,200 e-mails from viewers, and TFO estimates that 90% of the feedback it gets from the community is positive. I think we would agree that that's a good rating for any institution.

Ce qui est intéressant, c'est que les sites Web et la programmation éducative de TFO sont populaires non seulement auprès du personnel enseignant, des élèves et de leurs parents ici en Ontario; ils ont aussi comme leur public des élèves francophones du monde entier, ainsi que leurs parents et enseignants. Il est évident que TFO fait un excellent travail.

TFO plays a big role in spreading culture in Franco-Ontario and beyond Ontario, throughout the world. It provides positive reinforcement of Franco-Ontario identity and values in all of their diversity. As I said, to my mind, that is an affirmation of Ontario culture as much as it is an affirmation of Franco-Ontario culture. That's why I ask everyone in the Legislature to support this legislation. It will make TFO's self-governing status permanent and it will allow TFO to continue on this very successful path that it has begun. It's important we do this now, because we need TFO to continue to provide resources that meet the unique educational and cultural needs of Ontario's francophone population.

I want to thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank in advance the members of the Legislature who will support this legislation. I'd like to share my time with the member for Guelph-Wellington, my parliamentary assistant, Liz Sandals.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Further debate?

Mrs. Sandals: I too am very pleased to rise in support of Bill 55. As has been mentioned, this proposed legislation is the last step needed to formally make TFO's independence permanent. In fact, TFO has had its own board and has operated independently from TVO for more than a year now, and TFO recently moved into new independent offices in downtown Toronto.

TFO is a voice that unites francophone communities across Ontario, a voice that allows them to express their Franco-Ontario identity within Canada and a voice that tells the rest of the world who we are. It has become a gateway to reach Franco-Ontario youth through its programming and its website. This is particularly important in ridings like mine, where there's a very small francophone community and the cable TV outlet doesn't carry any other French-language service on its standard service: no CBC French, no CTV French. In areas like mine, TFO is really the only access to francophone TV. So it's very important to the francophone community in areas like mine.

As my colleague the Minister of Education pointed out, TFO has received much praise from the French-language education sector and from Franco-Ontarians. Just two weeks ago, three of TFO's programs were recognized by the Alliance for Children and Television during its 2008 French-language awards of excellence. This shows that TFO produces French-language educational and cultural programming that is second to none in Canada.

The ministry has also heard from education stakeholders in the Franco-Ontarian community in support of TFO and Bill 55. I would like to share with you some of the comments and submissions we have received from the sector. Mr. Paul Taillefer, president of the Association des enseignantes et des enseignants franco-ontariens, has this to say about the benefit of passing the proposed legislation: "We are confident that passing the proposed legislation would allow TFO to better meet the needs of schools and the Franco-Ontarian community and to fulfill its role as a francophone producer and broadcaster in Ontario, in Canada and abroad."

The Centre francophone de Toronto also expressed its support for passing Bill 55 and for an independent TFO. The centre's executive director, Mr. Gilles Pelletier, added that "governance of services by francophones is the ultimate guarantee that French-language services will be offered on an ongoing basis."

Ron Marion, president of the Association des conseils scolaires des écoles publiques de l'Ontario, said "ACEPO greets Bill 55 with open arms as it would create an autonomous and entrepreneurial TFO—a TFO that supports the sustainable development of communities."

We also heard from the Conseil ontarien des directrices et directeurs de l'éducation en langue française. CODELF said, "For years, Ontario's French-language school boards have been dreaming of having access to an educational broadcaster that is run by francophones for francophones."

The Association franco-ontarienne des conseils scolaires catholiques also supports Bill 55 and TFO. AFOCSC's president Robert Tremblay said, "Our TFO is a powerful learning tool for our students. Not only because TFO produces high-quality pedagogical resources ... but also because it provides students with a living window on Ontario's francophonie."

If passed, this legislation would make TFO independent and therefore better able to support our students. That is why I urge my fellow members to support this legislation.

I would just like to add that at committee when we did the public hearings on this bill, all the presenters were in support, there were no amendments to the bill and all parties supported the bill. This seems to be a bill that has been very favourably received. I'm looking forward, I hope, to its passage on third reading debate.

Mr. Peter Shurman: I rise today to comment on Bill 55, the Ontario French-language Educational Communications Authority Act, 2008. Why? Because it is back here after committee review. It is absolutely unchanged. It is still one of those bills we simply need to pass, so we will pass it today. But I beg the indulgence of members here, if I add a few new comments on this government's priorities, given that we're spending this time discussing a bill that is, first, already basically implemented, and second, not the kind of thing we couldn't have dispensed with more readily while we put valuable time to use on an economy that isn't going to hold up or a health system that can't seem to get a handle on serious bacteria infection or servicing taxpayers who are funding all of this.

As the opposition critic for francophone affairs, I commend any efforts that are made to promote the French language and culture. That's why I'm on my feet here today. Last week when I asked the Minister of Education about Ottawa money—federal dollars—also earmarked for educating our kids in the French language, I was disappointed, to say the least, to hear that this excuse for a government is effectively diverting federal heritage language allocation funds only to the public system after years of ensuring that kids in all schools received the federal grant, to see to it that they also had what is their right: a knowledge of the French language. But not anymore. The minister says you can't police private schools. How will we ever police silly moms and dads who choose to smoke in their cars while junior is in his car seat if they can't police who gets other people's money to learn French in schools?

Vindictive, nasty and unfair; three of a long list of words I could use to describe the McGuinty Liberals. I could say, "I digress," but I won't because it is not digression to describe this web of nonsensical activity that feeds into itself, in one way or the other, to provide things for Ontarians that are questionable as to priority, while leaving the important stuff alone, as people go through life thinking, "Maybe it'll all be okay." Would that that were so.

TFO and Bill 55: In my role as critic, I have spent a great deal of time studying and learning about the Francophone culture of our province. I have become more familiar with the 1.4 million Ontarians who have a working knowledge of the French language, almost 11% of Ontario's total population. There are 488,000 whose mother tongue is actually French living in Ontario. Unbelievably, almost, there are some 50,000 Ontarians who are francophones and who do not speak any English whatsoever. I have learned about French pockets—communities like Sudbury and the Niagara region—where significant portions of the population are francophone. I have learned about these members of the francophone community, whose only ties to their culture are through the Internet and the programming provided by TFO. Hence, the incredible interest from the teaching community in this particular bill; more on that later.

I have looked at our education system and have become aware of the work that is being done to encourage bilingualism. Comme citoyen bilingue, il me semble que c'est normal dans un pays comme le Canada, et c'est pourquoi j'ai exprimé ma difficulté avec certaines décisions récentes du gouvernement McGuinty.

The province of Ontario has some 90,000 students, from 350 schools, who are learning the French language. According to the Ministry of Education, nearly half of Ontario's teachers regularly use TFO's programming in the classroom. That is quite appropriate.

TFO has created award-winning educational programs that help parents and teachers alike. TFO provides 225 different teachers' guides and 15,000 educational resources divided by grade and subject matter. In addition, TFO produces 4,000 educational programs for French-language schools, 1,600 of which are provided free of charge. All of these resources are available through their website. TFO staff also consult with parents and teachers, showing them how to use TFO's resources effectively.

The people of Ontario should be incredibly impressed with how much work TFO has put into its educational programming, and we have the tax money to do that, apparently—Ontario tax money. But, when Ottawa hands some over for the same purpose, basically—education—that's for public education only, no longer for private. Why? Because the government can get away with it. Let's hope Ottawa doesn't agree.

It is good use of tax money to educate kids in the second official language. It creates value for Ontarians. The continuing resource base provided by TFO gives true meaning to the term "public service." Our party continues to support Bill 55.

Although we will be supporting this bill, it doesn't mean we don't have several reservations about how the McGuinty government has handled this file. In separating TFO, we have effectively created a new government department, complete with all the costs that go with that. Duplication of services could lead to reduced resources for other areas. It will undoubtedly do so. The government failed to bring in this legislation prior to actually separating TFO from TVO—fait accompli. The government announced this intention in 2006 and split them in May 2007. Why is now the time for legislation, so long after the deed was done? Likely because, as with much of this season's legislation, it keeps Ontarians' focus off the big picture. Not to worry, the gas pumps and the cost of a head of lettuce, a pound of cherries or a taxi ride will refocus people this summer.

Debate on Bill 55 was nearly nonexistent and, when it did take place, it was a waste of time. Not because the idea doesn't make sense, but because it does. Clause-by-clause review at committee lasted three minutes. Deputations were all by French educator-teacher groups. Coverage of this Legislature on both TVO and TFO is almost nonexistent. That has been mentioned repeatedly here. No one seems to care that these television services cost Ontario taxpayers money, lots of money. The services are run for and by Ontarians and they are not out, like commercial broadcasting, to gain ratings or advertising revenues. So cover the darn Legislature and let taxpayers know what we're doing here. It ought to be fun. It would scare the daylights out of them, I suggest.

Since taxpayers fund government-owned and -operated networks, one could reasonably expect that the business of interpreting government to taxpaying citizens would be prime in the program makeup of these services. This legislation legitimizes an entirely new department in the province of Ontario. The legislation calls for the creation of a new board of directors, plus regional councils and advisory committees. Will these appointments be more partisan appointments from a government famous for rewarding its friends with taxpayers' money?

Laughter.

Mr. Peter Shurman: You liked that.

I underscore that just to get it on the record, and I call for doing the right thing: Put people in positions for their knowledge contribution and expertise—no more, no less.

These are reasonable concerns, given the track record of a tax-and-spend regime now entrenched in all aspects of Ontario's administration. The McGuinty government sat around for a year, knowing this was coming, and what did they do? Nothing. Then the separation came along. Did they act? No. TFO has been a de facto separate entity since May 2007, more than a year. That's two years of no plan, two years of no action. Now there is action, at a cost, and before it has been discussed, debated or passed by the Legislature, which does have jurisdiction over it, after all.

Do I sound a little ticked off today? Why wouldn't I be? What are we discussing here? And once passed this week, today in fact, what positive change will our citizens receive besides a new piece of legislation finally recorded on our law books for posterity? All the while, TFO's legal status has been in limbo because this government hadn't separated them from TVO in legal terms. The bill doesn't do anything new. It basically is a fix.

According to Claudette Paquin, the current CEO of TFO: "TFO is a well-recognized resource for French-language students, teachers and parents, and is greatly appreciated by francophiles across Ontario. This legislation is the last step to officially make TFO into an independent, self-governed educational broadcaster. We hope with all our hearts that the legislation will be passed."

We on this side of the House agree with Ms. Paquin's assessment of TFO. With the support of our party, it will be passed; in fact, it will pass unanimously, I suspect. But it cannot go unsaid that this is the work of an arrogant government that more and more often puts the cart before the horse and thinks that's just fine. After waiting two years for this legislation to be introduced, of course Madame Paquin hopes this bill is passed.

Mr. Peter Shurman: The derision I hear on the other side simply confirms what I'm saying. TFO is an organization whose efforts I support and applaud for what it does. It is also an organization that has been purchasing property, acquiring assets and entering into contracts.

How is it that we have departments splitting off from one another without legislative control before the fact? It kind of explains things, doesn't it? First nations issues: "Don't worry. We're fixing it." C. difficile infections: "Don't worry. We're fixing it." Massive economic shifts, unhealthy to our once-proud province: "Don't worry. We're fixing it." Thank you, Dalton McGuinty. But on the TFO file, can the minister explain who would be responsible in the case of, for example, a legal dispute?

This sort of mismanagement begs the question: Who is actually running things? Is the minister running her department or is the department running the minister? We have learned that with this government in control of taxpayers' money, the inmates are in control of the asylum. I know, I know, I used that line in another debate, but I liked it so much I wanted to use it again.

Clearly, this is a government that has no plan. Both TVO and TFO receive the bulk of their funding from the people of Ontario. For the most part, the networks provide either educational or highly relevant programming, so why is there this exception—the incredibly poor coverage that the proceedings in this very House receive from both of our public broadcasters? They have a responsibility to provide better coverage to educate the people of Ontario as to what goes on in this chamber.

The regular legislative channel does not produce the proceedings of this House in French. I am actually speaking primarily in English today so that viewers all understand the impact, in my words, not those of a translator. That is appalling, considering how often we hear the McGuinty government claim to support the rights of the francophone community.

For many in the francophone community, TFO represents the best access that they will have to provincially relevant news, and it's wonderful that extra funding for the teaching of French to public and Catholic school-children will continue on Ottawa's dime. Perhaps the private schools can use TFO too, at their own expense, to teach a heritage language, because they'll have to if they want to and if they want to do what the ministry is talking about in terms of French language while it purloins the Ottawa dollars earmarked for this purpose.

On TFO, there is no coverage of the proceedings of this House outside of their daily news program. TVO in English does a little better, but not much better. Question period is on daily from—are you ready?—3:00 a.m. to 4:00 a.m. on TVO. I know how many people will stay up for that.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: You can TiVo it.

Mr. Peter Shurman: Yes, we'll TiVo it.

TVO and TFO should be used to promote and maintain the cultural diversity of our communities.

In closing, francophone people have a long, rich heritage here in Ontario. They have raised generation after generation of children here. They have worked hard; they have helped to build our province. The Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario has fought and will continue to fight to ensure that their culture is promoted and celebrated here in Ontario. This bill, although late, will help to ensure that the francophone people of this province have continued access to media content in their own language. I believe it is indeed something that we can all support, but I again would remind the government that the power of what we have created goes well beyond what is envisioned. Let us use it wisely.

M. Gilles Bisson: C'est avec une certaine fierté et une joie que je suis ici ce matin pour finalement, en troisième lecture, finir le débat sur ce projet de loi pour créer une autonomie pour la chaîne de TFO, quelque chose qui a commencé il y a déjà une couple d'années et qui va finir avec notre propre législation qui donne les droits et les pouvoirs nécessaires pour permettre à TFO d'opérer avec une autonomie à elle-même, et n'être pas seulement une organisation qui est fusionnée avec un organisation bilingue.

Je veux prendre un peu de temps pour parler de la différence entre travailler dans une agence bilingue et c'est quoi d'avoir une agence qui est autonome elle-même dans sa langue, soit en français, soit en anglais.

J'ai écouté le membre conservateur parler. C'est un peu le même débat qu'on a entendu en deuxième lecture, puis des commentaires qui étaient donnés au comité. On parle d'une perte d'argent. On dit qu'on pourrait mieux dépenser nos sous si on avait une organisation bilingue, et créer une TFO autonome à côté de TVO—ce n'est pas nécessairement méchant, la manière dans laquelle le membre conservateur le dit—

Interjection.

M. Gilles Bisson: Merci, madame la ministre. C'est bien beau d'avoir cette discussion-ci avec vous aujourd'hui. C'est votre législation. J'aimerais avoir une chance d'en parler et puis de comprendre.

Je veux parler de la question de ce qui arrive avec des organisations bilingues par rapport aux organisations autonomes. Ce qui arrive dans beaucoup d'instances, quand c'est une organisation bilingue, c'est que le groupe francophone se trouve dans une situation minoritaire dans une organisation qui est par majorité anglophone. Ce qui arrive, c'est que chaque fois que tu essaies d'avancer un projet ou faire des décisions quelconques, c'est toujours la bataille de convaincre tes collègues. Ce n'est pas que tes collègues sont méchants, mais ils ne comprennent pas ta situation. Ils n'ont pas vécu ta vie; ils ne marchent pas le même chemin. Donc, c'est toujours à convaincre. C'est difficile d'avancer les dossiers pour être capable de mieux desservir ta communauté.

Un bon exemple, c'est les conseils scolaires. Quand on avait des conseils scolaires, soit séparés ou publics, c'étaient des conseils bilingues. Par exemple, chez nous dans mon coin on avait les francophones comme majoritaires sur le conseil catholique, avec les anglophones en minorité. Quand je parle à mes collègues anglophones qui ont servi sur ces conseils-là, eux autres disent qu'ils ont eu le même problème que les francophones quand ils se trouvaient en minorité. Si tu veux avancer un projet, tu as besoin d'être capable de convaincre tous les autres sur le CA ou sur la commission à prendre ta position. Ce qui arrive, comme j'ai dit, ce n'est pas parce que ce monde-là sont méchants, c'est juste qu'ils ne comprennent pas, et ce qui arrive est que tout devient une bataille.

Justement, une des présentations que j'ai eues—je ne me rappelle pas trop le nom—c'était quelqu'un qui avait vécu cette expérience, qui avait travaillé comme conseil élu catholique sur un conseil où les francophones étaient minoritaires, et ce qui arrive, c'est qu'à cette heure ils sont majoritaires. Il a dit qu'avec les avances qu'on a faites avec notre propre conseil francophone majoritaire où nous autres on est autonomes, on était capables d'avancer des dossiers dans 10 ans comme on n'en avait jamais pu avancer dans l'organisation bilingue.

C'est une raison pour laquelle les francophones veulent avoir leur propre gestion dans certaines organisations, parce que c'est clé d'être capable d'avancer ses dossiers, c'est clé d'être capable de faire ce qu'il y a à faire sans toujours avoir des batailles soit avec l'administration ou alors avec ton CA, afin d'être capable d'avancer des dossiers.

L'autre question aussi : si tu travailles à l'intérieur d'une organisation bilingue, parfois ça veut dire que tu travailles en anglais. Pour vous donner un exemple parfait, et je ne dis pas « organisation méchante »—on a à Kapuskasing le centre de counselling. Le centre de counselling familial, c'est l'organisation qui prend soin de ceux avec des problèmes de santé mentale. C'est une organisation francophone. Ils sont bilingues, oui, dans le sens qu'ils donnent des services en anglais, mais par majorité c'est une organisation francophone. Ce qui arrive dans cet instant, c'est que le langage du travail dans l'institution elle-même est le français. Donc le « staff » se parle en français; les correspondances sont faites en français; le langage du travail est le français.

Si tu regardes par exemple une autre organisation, à Timmins, c'est la Canadian Mental Health Association, une organisation bilingue où on peut desservir les francophones en français, mais la majorité étant anglophones, ce qui arrive, c'est que le langage du travail est l'anglais. Ce n'est pas pour dire qu'ils sont méchants; ça veut seulement dire qu'on va toujours aller là où la majorité se trouve, parce que c'est plus facile. Si tu as plus de personnes qui parlent anglais, on va travailler en anglais; si tu as plus de personnes qui parlent français, tu vas travailler en français.

Il y a une autre partie dans toute cette affaire-là : si on a des organisations bilingues où on se trouve minoritaires, soit anglophones ou francophones, on se trouve dans une minorité non seulement pour des décisions mais aussi pour le langage du travail. Pour les francophones, c'est même plus important, parce que pour les anglophones c'est facile de vivre en anglais en Ontario. Partout, l'anglais est le langage majoritaire, et je n'ai pas de problèmes avec ça, mais la musique, la télévision, notre interaction avec les gouvernements municipal, fédéral ou provincial, la plupart est faite en anglais. Ça veut dire que les francophones, pour avoir un milieu de travail et une vie francophone, pour garder leur langage et pour être capables de s'exprimer et d'écrire mieux en français, perdent de plus en plus cette habileté dans les organisations bilingues.

Quand une organisation est francophone, ça crée une place où il y a du monde qui travaille en français, où le langage est important non seulement pour parler mais aussi pour écrire et lire, pour être capable de faire tout ce qui regarde l'administration. Ça crée une certaine classe—je ne dirais pas une classe, ce n'est pas un beau mot, c'est un peu élitiste—ça crée un noyau où on peut avoir des francophones qui travaillent en français en utilisant le langage quotidien.

C'est pour cette raison que les organisations autonomes francophones sont importantes : (1) ça nous donne l'habileté d'être majoritaires dans nos institutions pour faire nos propres décisions afin de mieux être capables d'avancer nos dossiers et desservir notre communauté, et (2) ça crée l'habileté de travailler en français parce que l'organisation ait une pensée francophone où on puisse non seulement pencher ses dossiers mais où on peut travailler en français.

Pour TFO c'est très important parce que c'est une organisation qui est clé pour être capable de garder le langage ici en Ontario pour les francophones. À Timmins, à Ottawa, à Hearst, à Kapuskasing, c'est moins un problème, parce qu'on se trouve pas mal majoritaires francophones dans nos endroits. Si moi, je parle le français après trois générations en Ontario, c'est parce que je vis dans un endroit où il y a beaucoup de francophones et où on se parle en français. Mais quand tu es un francophone à Windsor, ou tu es un francophone à London ou à Belleville, ça devient beaucoup plus difficile parce que tu te trouves dans une situation minoritaire et l'occasion d'utiliser ton français et de le parler quotidiennement dans ta vie devient de plus en plus difficile. Donc, on a besoin d'outils pour ces francophones pour qu'ils aient l'opportunité d'utiliser leur français et de le perfectionner.

Je pense qu'une des clés de base, c'est l'éducation. On a, à travers la province, accès à l'éducation française, soit catholique ou publique, et on peut faire ça n'importe où dans la province. Les parents, comme on le sait, choisissent d'y envoyer leurs enfants français. Pourquoi ? Parce qu'ils trouvent que c'est important. Un, c'est parce que maman et papa sont francophones et on parle le français à la maison, et on veut que les enfants restent francophones. Donc, non seulement le parlent-ils à la maison, mais ils envoient les enfants à l'école. Ou on a des mariages mixtes où soit le mari, soit la femme est francophone et l'autre est anglais, ou italien, ou n'importe quelle autre nationalité, et c'est important de donner un endroit où le jeune ou la jeune est capable de parler le français autrement qu'à la maison, parce que possiblement, c'est plus difficile.

Quand tu élèves des enfants, et papa est francophone et maman ne parle pas le français, papa n'a pas la même interaction avec les enfants que la mère, donc il y a moins de chance pour les jeunes de garder leur français, et l'école devient clé. Si maman est francophone, même si elle travaille, la maman a toujours plus de connexion avec les jeunes, donc, la langue serait peut-être un peu plus facile à transmettre aux enfants si la mère parle le français. Mais encore, elle a besoin de soutien parce que son mari ou son partenaire ne parle pas la langue; donc, l'école devient clé.

L'autre partie, après l'école, non seulement au primaire ou au secondaire, c'est aussi la question des collèges et des universités : on a établi un système de collèges francophones en Ontario. Le Collège Boréal est, à Ottawa—voyons. Le collège francophone.

Interjection.

M. Gilles Bisson: Mon Dieu. Non, non. Boréal, et à Ottawa c'est—

M. Phil McNeely: Cité collégiale.

M. Gilles Bisson: Cité collégiale. Merci beaucoup. Est-ce que tu as des blancs de mémoire des fois? C'est impossible à figurer pourquoi j'ai eu ce blanc de mémoire-là, parce qu'on a assez travaillé avec ces organisations-là.

Mais ce qui arrive, c'est que les jeunes ont la chance de finir le secondaire et aller au collège pour prendre un programme en français, et encore, ce ne sont pas des organisations bilingues; ce sont des organisations francophones. Donc, ces collèges ont développé des programmes pour des francophones d'une manière qui fait du bon sens pour la communauté. Là, on a une université francophone, qui est l'Université de Hearst à Timmins, à Hearst et à Kap, et là encore la seule université en français est dans mon comté, et c'est encore important. Pourquoi? Parce qu'on a non seulement l'habileté de développer nos propres programmes selon nos besoins, mais on a aussi le noyau du monde de travail à l'université et au collège qui travaille en français.

Donc, c'est quoi, l'autre clé? C'est TFO. Je vais finir sur ce point-là. TFO amène à la maison, pour ces parents qui se trouvent dans un endroit minoritaire, possiblement un des outils les plus importants pour garder la langue, parce que les enfants peuvent regarder la télévision en français. La programmation pour les jeunes, je dois dire, à TFO est excellente, et ça donne la chance à l'enfant de regarder la télévision et de voir quelque chose en français. Il faut savoir qu'il y a 300 canaux en anglais. Si tu as le câble ou un « satellite dish », comme on dit, il y a plein, plein, plein de postes en anglais. Tu peux même voir des postes en italien ou en d'autres langues, mais il y a seulement soit CBC Radio-Canada ou TFO.

Sur la question de TFO, au moins, c'est un aperçu ontarien. Le problème avec Radio-Canada—c'est excellent comme organisation et c'est du bon monde qui travaille bien fort, mais c'est plutôt un aperçu du Québec. Il faut comprendre qu'en Ontario, les francophones ne se voient pas comme Québécois; on se voit comme Franco-Ontariens. Ce n'est pas dire qu'on est en chicane avec nos amis québécois ou québécoises. Ça ne veut dire rien d'autre que notre identité est totalement différente.

Oui, ma famille, les Bisson, est partie de la France, et elle a été au Québec et est restée là pour 200 ans, 250 ans—plus longtemps que ça, de 1640 jusqu'au début du dernier siècle, environ. Mais ils sont venus en Ontario et la famille a changé son aperçu quand elle est venue vivre ici en Ontario parce que c'est ce qui arrive quand on déménage de notre coin du monde.

Donc, TFO nous donne un aperçu francophone pour ceux qui demeurent en Ontario, et surtout pour ceux qui se trouvent dans une situation minoritaire.

Je veux aussi poigner sur un point que je pense est un problème avec TFO et TVO, et c'est la question de la période des questions. Je pense qu'il serait simple, puisqu'on a une chaîne de télévision ontarienne qui appartient au gouvernement de l'Ontario, que TVO en anglais et TFO en français diffuseraient la période des questions et d'autres débats qui sont importants, tels que celui aujourd'hui sur TFO, sur leurs chaînes de télévision TVO et TFO. Je trouve vraiment bizarre que le monde ne soit pas capable de regarder leur propre période des questions de leur Assemblée sur les canaux de TVO ou TFO à une heure raisonnable. Il doit y avoir quelque chose à faire, si cette chaîne nous appartient, que le gouvernement et la ministre responsable pourraient leur demander de la faire figurer dans leur horaire, pour qu'au moins on puisse avoir cette période des questions. Si la personne n'a pas le câble, ça veut dire qu'elle n'a pas accès à la période des questions. TVO et TFO, des fois c'est la seule télévision publique qu'on a autrement que CBC et possiblement les postes locaux.

Je ne comprends pas pourquoi on ne fait pas un meilleur effort pour développer la programmation pour qu'on puisse avoir des programmes comme Panorama en français et The Agenda en anglais, avec d'autres programmes qui nous donneraient notre période des questions et un aperçu de cette Législature.

Je veux finir en disant que le parti néo-démocrate va voter pour ce projet de loi. On n'a aucune réservation sur notre support. Pour nous, c'est de l'argent bien dépensé. Je ne suis pas d'accord avec mes collègues qui disent que c'est une duplication puis qu'on serait mieux servi d'une institution bilingue. Pour moi, c'est important qu'on ait nos propres organisations qui soient autonomes en leurs décisions, avec notre propre CA, et qu'on ait l'habileté de travailler en français dans ces institutions pour qu'on puisse vraiment desservir la communauté d'une manière qui fait du bon sens.

Avec ça, je suis très fier aujourd'hui de supporter cette législation et je regarde pour le passage de ce projet de loi.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Merci.

Further debate? Seeing no further debate, Ms. Wynne has moved third reading of Bill 55. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Third reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Orders of the day?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: Madam Speaker, I seek consent for the House to recess until 10:45 a.m.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed. This House now stands recessed until 10:45 a.m.

The House recessed from 0943 to 1045.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Good morning, members. I take this opportunity on behalf of the member for Thunder Bay–Atikokan to welcome some guests from Agnew H. Johnston Public School in Thunder Bay: Pauline Fontaine, Mike Judge and Alison Lavoie.

On behalf of page Gregory Nettleton, his mother, Judy Nettleton, is sitting in the public gallery today.

I'd also like to welcome, in the Speaker's gallery, Kathie Cunningham, my office manager from my constituency office, who's visiting Queen's Park. Welcome, Kathie.

On behalf of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, I'd like to extend a very warm welcome to the Canada Egypt Business Council delegation, led by the Honourable Dr. Hany Helal, Egyptian Minister of Higher Education and State for Scientific Research, and accompanied by His Excellency Ambassador Wafaa El Hadidy, Consul General of Egypt, and Mr. Assem Mohamed Fahmy Ragab, Chairman of Investment Authority of Egypt, who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. Welcome to our guests today.

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd just like to make a comment regarding last Thursday. Last Thursday, I called the leader of the official opposition to order and asked him to withdraw certain language on the grounds that it imputed motives to another member. Upon review of the phrase in its entirety, I have found it to be within the bounds of what is acceptable in this place. I perhaps reacted too hastily. For that, I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition. My apologies.

ORAL QUESTIONS

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: Right off the top, Speaker, thank you for that. That was very gracious of you. I think it sends a very positive signal about your role in that chair.

My question is to the Premier. Last week, I asked about the $5 million doled out to Local 793 of the operating engineers' union in a seven-month period, a grant that represented 20% of the total skills training fund; 50 other applicants received the remaining funds. Can the Premier tell the House today why Local 793's application was so special that it received significantly more tax dollars than any other successful applicant?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities.

Hon. John Milloy: As I indicated last week, I'm very proud of the investments our government has made in terms of skills training. As I pointed out, about 14% of apprentices in Ontario are trained through union training centers and union-employer training centres. Our government recognized that through the creation of the STIP program, which was $25 million in equipment and other capital that was made available.

These investments were made available to all union and union-employer training centres. Through two public and competitive calls for proposals, contracts were awarded based both on eligibility criteria and weighted evaluation criteria. The delegation of authority to approve and award transfer payments was made to the public service. It was delegated to them, with the final sign-off of the deputy minister. It was a clear and transparent process. The allegations—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: Apparently, members of Local 793 have a different view behind you handing them $5 million in tax dollars. In their March newsletter, they congratulate their business manager, Mike Gallagher, for his success in lobbying the government and landing $5 million in tax dollars. The exact words: “The effort has paid off in spades and the return on investment has been phenomenal—something like 5,000%.” Minister, is the investment they’re referring to the $153,000 they contributed to Working Families?

Hon. John Milloy: As I mentioned last week, the allegations that are coming from the leader of the second party are outrageous. If he has proof of this, I wish he’d table it here in the House. The simple fact of the matter is that this was an open and transparent process.

The funds in question went for the following: in Morrisburg, six tractor loader backhoes, four dozers, three packers and two excavators; in Oakville, two boom trucks, a truck-mounted crane, a conventional crane, a conventional crane simulator and a concrete pump; in Morrisburg, a bulldozer and ripper, three skid steers, three mini excavators, two concrete pump simulators, three excavators and ten mechanical hoe simulators.

I’m proud that we’re able to invest in skilled trades in this province. Just because that party, when they were in power, did nothing for skilled trades or apprenticeships doesn’t give them the right to stand up with unwarranted accusations.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: In the June 15, 2007 edition of the Toronto Star, Ian Urquhart reported that Working Families was re-forming in preparation for the upcoming provincial election and “expected to get the go-ahead ... next week.” The very next week, June 18, the aforementioned Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Pat Dhillon, a principal of Working Families, met with the former finance minister and Liberal party campaign chair. There was no agenda and no minutes of that apparently secret meeting. One week following that meeting, Local 793 received the first instalment, a $3.3-million grant.

Connect the dots. The chain of events reeks of wrongdoing. Minister, will you commit to releasing the details and purpose of that meeting? Did you use taxpayer dollars to cement a sweetheart deal with Working Families?

Hon. John Milloy: The claims by the Leader of the Opposition are simply untrue. If he has any evidence, I wish he’d bring it forward, or if not, recall them. I am quite frankly surprised that the member opposite does not recall the important work that operating engineers do, especially since when he was Minister of Economic Development and Trade he made a special trip to their training facilities in Morrisburg for a photo op and to present them with a $2.3-million cheque.

Let me quote from the press release at the time: “Upgrading skills of employees in the heavy equipment industry is vital for this sector. Skilled workers strengthen the competitiveness of businesses and industry in Ontario ...” said Bob Runciman, Minister of Economic Development and Trade.”

I am happy to bring forth the details of this program to any member of the House, as well as a very handsome photo of Mr. Runciman presenting the cheque to the operating engineers.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I remind the member of the use of props.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: Before I begin, I’d just like to say to our visiting delegation: ‘as-salāmu-calaykum.

My question is for the Premier. Less than three weeks ago, the CAW and General Motors workers signed an agreement that was found to be null and void 16 days later. During that agreement, the CAW workers made substantial concessions in the vacation area, the wages area and the benefits packages as well.

Premier, the province of Ontario used to have a considerable advantage, whether it was through WSIB or through OHIP. Workers in other jurisdictions are now seeing that and are eliminating those competitive advantages for the province of Ontario. Premier, what is your plan to give the auto sector and the manufacturing sector that competitive advantage to make sure we’re strong in the future?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it’s important to note that a few months ago we were able to table in this House an economic update—that was last December—followed by a budget that was tabled in this House. On both of those occasions, we embedded in those budget documents initiatives that would lower business costs for Ontario. These are the kinds of initiatives that were hailed by business communities, saying “This is exactly what we need.” They pointed out very specific items they were looking for. One of them was the elimination of the capital tax. That was made retroactive to January 1, 2007. An organization about the size of General Motors had a savings of some $10 million. These are the kinds of initiatives that business has asked for and that in fact they have had.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Supplementary, the member from Durham.

Mr. John O’Toole: I’d like to refer the question back again to the Premier, as this is such an important matter. As the member from Oshawa has pointed out, to be competitive today, you’ve got to have some plan. Now the minister has suggested you have a plan. Well, that’s of very little use to the 2,600 families that now don’t have jobs, who are part of the larger picture of over 200,000 jobs lost in the manufacturing sector.

The real issue here, if you can think through this plan, Minister, is the ripple effect in the economy. Think of the municipalities who will now lose the tax from that industry. It's not just General Motors. The whole manufacturing sector is in peril, and you seem to be asleep at the switch. In my view, if you look at the ancillary industries, this is a serious problem, and what I don't hear is any consistent plan is to have a recovery in the manufacturing sector of Ontario.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I would think that if this member chooses to stand up and ask questions of this nature, he would check with some of the experts in the field, like the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association. Ask its director or its member executive how they feel about this provincial government and how we've come to the table, trying in these very challenging times to work with this sector to see that they have opportunities. In fact, in our last budget alone, we targeted to the very supply chain that this member references some $50 million of assistance that is now finding its way to those companies in the supply chain.

These are the kinds of real ways to help an industry that is challenged. I look forward to yet another question where we can table more examples of how this government has come to the table time and time again for a very important sector of the Ontario economy.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Final supplementary, the member from Whitby-Oshawa.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: Premier, you can't just sit there and wring your hands. This is a situation that requires action now. Premier, will you commit today to bringing together business, labour and community leaders to develop a plan to deal with this devastating blow to our economy?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it's important in these challenging times that we do what the people who are looking for assistance from all levels of government do, and that is, work together to find solutions. That means that this government will continue to call on the federal government to join us with our automotive strategy.

Let me just say this. This in fact was written by the one individual who represents all of the CAW workers. In the words of Buzz Hargrove, "The attacks of Runciman and Hampton on Ontario's auto strategy are anything but informed. They are an attempt to make cheap political points at the expense of tens of thousands of hard-working autoworkers in Ontario who quite rightly fear for their future. Myself and my members are deeply offended"—as are we on this side of the House.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: This is a question to the Premier. General Motors signed a collective agreement with auto workers just last month. General Motors promised its workers would have jobs at the Oshawa truck plant until the end of the contract. Now, 2,600 workers are being put out the door. While General Motors puts workers out the door, they're still collecting the $235-million handout from the McGuinty government.

The Premier has said here in the Legislature and elsewhere in the province that as a result of the $235-million handout, a new hybrid-powered truck would be built at the Oshawa truck plant. Clearly, General Motors deceived its workers. My question is, did General Motors also deceive the Premier and the McGuinty government?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: We intend to continue, notwithstanding the reluctance of my colleague opposite, to pursue as aggressively as we can new investment in the auto sector in the province of Ontario. The leader of the NDP has never been onside for our approach, notwithstanding the tremendous successes that we have enjoyed. He has never been onside, notwithstanding the fact that in comparison and in contrast to what has happened to the auto sector in Michigan and other states south of the border, we've enjoyed remarkable successes. He remains adamantly opposed to the government rolling up its sleeves, sitting down with the auto workers, sitting down with the auto sector and doing what we can to land new investment here in the province of Ontario. At some point in time, I hope that he will stand up in favour of new investment in the auto sector in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I heard a lot of words, but no answer. One presumes that the Premier knew what he was talking about when he went outside this Legislature and boasted that a new hybrid truck would be built in Oshawa, when he told this Legislature on May 7 that General Motors would build a new hybrid-powered truck in Oshawa, when he told this Legislature on May 13 that a new hybrid-powered truck would be built here in Oshawa. But it turns out that the Premier didn't know what he was talking about. The Premier has either been duped by a large multinational corporation or his government is incompetent. I ask the Premier, which is it?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Again, my friend remains adamantly opposed to finding ways to work in a highly competitive global economy to land new auto sector investment in the province of Ontario. He thinks we should write off that sector. Canadian and American consumers on an annual basis, in a bad year, are still buying 15 million cars; in a good year, they buy 18 million or more. The leader of the NDP says that we should get out of the auto business in the province of Ontario. I disagree, and so do the workers and the families that rely on their living—and a prosperous future as well. We have, through countless agreements—whether with Toyota, Honda, GM, Valiant, Ford, the Ford Essex engine plant, Chrysler, Nemaq, Linamar, AGS and Denso, to list a few—landed significant new investments in the auto sector in Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The Premier obviously wants to avoid answering any questions about General Motors. New Democrats believe in making strategic investments to sustain jobs, but unlike the McGuinty government, we believe we need to get product guarantees or job guarantees before you give $235 million to General Motors. The Premier may not like it, but Ontarians have a right to know what the Premier agreed to with General Motors. After all, it's their money, and after all, Ford also received $100 million and Chrysler $77 million. We need to know, are we going to see more layoffs at those companies?

So I ask the Premier again—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Question?

Mr. Howard Hampton: —will he own up to the fact that the Premier and the McGuinty government bungled their negotiations with General Motors when he gave them $235 million and now they're laying off thousands of—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Premier?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: The leader of the NDP knows that there was a penalty provision in place. It looks like circumstances will evolve in such a way that a penalty will in fact ensue and we will enforce the contract, should that in fact occur, some time next year.

But let me talk about some of the other things that we have done through that particular investment. It included a $58-million investment for our new Automotive Centre of Excellence at the University of Ontario Institute of Technology to ensure that the parts and vehicles of tomorrow are researched, designed and built in Ontario. That was part of the package that demonstrates once again that we are looking out at the distant horizon when it comes to securing new investment in new product in the auto sector in the province of Ontario.

There is a marked difference, a stunning contrast. The leader of the NDP believes we should do nothing. We believe that we have an obligation to roll up our sleeves, work with both sides and land continuing new investment.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Premier: Yes, engineering and design may be done in Oshawa, but the jobs are all going to Mexico, and that's as a direct result of your government's bungling the whole agreement with General Motors.

But it turns out that not only have you bungled the operation with General Motors, but now, you've also bungled your much-boasted-about second-career retraining program.

It appears that 10,000 forest sector workers who were laid off in northern Ontario will not be eligible for second-career retraining. Not only did you let down the workers in Oshawa, Premier, but it seems you have no regard for all those workers in northern Ontario who were laid off. How can you do this sort of thing to workers who are facing a very difficult time?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: We are very proud of our new program. It's the first of its kind in Canada. It creates two-year, long-term training opportunities for workers who have lost their jobs during the course of the past year.

There is a significant new investment associated with this program. The leader of the NDP says that it is not enough. It's reaching out to 20,000 Ontario workers who have lost their jobs. He loses sight, of course, of the fact that through our existing Employment Ontario program—that's a $1-billion annual investment—we are caring for 900,000 other Ontario workers.

What we're asking the Ontario worker to do is not easy. There are 20,000 opportunities, but if you're 43 with two children and a mortgage, to go back to school for two years is a significant sacrifice. My hope is that that new program, available for 20,000, will be greatly oversubscribed.

Mr. Howard Hampton: Once again, the Premier struggles to avoid answering the question. The fact is that your so-called second-career program only works in terms of people who were laid off after June 1, 2007. The reality for northern Ontario is that most people in the forest sector lost their jobs before June 1, 2007. So workers in Thunder Bay, Chapleau, Dubreuilville, Nipigon, Red Rock, Smooth Rock Falls, Kenora, Dryden, Ignace, Espanola and Nairn Centre all lost their jobs before June 1, 2007.

Premier, tell those workers in northern Ontario why the McGuinty government thinks they're second-class workers and aren't worthy of access to this kind of job retraining.

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities.

Hon. John Milloy: To reiterate what the Premier said, right now we have, through Employment Ontario, access to 900,000 workers for supports throughout Ontario. We're spending $1 billion a year. Second career, which was announced several years ago, enhances that by offering additional training to workers who want to move that step forward.

As the Premier mentioned, there are right now, through Employment Ontario, access to 900,000. Over the next few months, as we have workers come forward under second career, we're going to be monitoring the ones who come forward, we're going to be monitoring the ones who are not eligible for the program and making any adjustments to the program to make sure that it's enhanced and serves the best needs of Ontario employees.

Mr. Howard Hampton: Once again, both the Premier and his minister try to avoid the question. There's only one answer to this. Either you have bungled this job-training strategy or you just don't care about those laid-off workers in northern Ontario.

The fact of the matter is, literally whole communities have had their economies wiped out. Whole communities have watched 500 or 1,000 workers laid off and they have very few options, other than retraining.

I simply ask the McGuinty government again: Is this your message to laid-off workers in northern Ontario? They don't count? They don't matter? They're not worthy of job retraining? Or have you simply bungled this, just as you bungled the $235-million cheque to General Motors?

Hon. John Milloy: The leader of the NDP is being mischievous with his question. He knows darn well that we invest over a billion dollars a year in terms of retraining opportunities for all workers across this province.

As soon as we learn that there may be a possibility of a downsizing or a possibility of a layoff, within one hour our ministry is in contact with the plant in question, with the union, with the workers, with the community. We've set up rapid re-employment training centres in communities. We've set up adjustment in communities. We've made sure that we work with all affected to make sure that there are opportunities for all workers to receive the support that they need—support in finding a job, support in training opportunities and support moving forward. Second career adds to these supports, but it's in addition to the $1 billion that we're already spending.

To stand up in this Legislature and suggest that we are not helping workers in communities throughout northern Ontario is wrong and it's mischievous. We are investing—

C. DIFFICILE

Ms. Laurie Scott: My question is to the Premier. Today's Hamilton Spectator reports that when Northern Ireland was hit with 51 C. difficile deaths, the health minister set an immediate action plan in motion where an expert panel did a comprehensive three-month review. In a letter to you dated May 15 of this year, our leader, John Tory, asked you to do just what Northern Ireland did; that is, commence an investigation that would report back in 90 days. Why haven't you proceeded with the investigation? Why is the death of over 260 people from C. difficile not enough to spur this government into protecting public confidence in our health care system?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I'm pleased to take the question. I know that the Minister of Health has spoken to this on several occasions, and he has related to the opposition that we have had three independent reviews thus far. There was a coroner's jury that made specific recommendations, there has been an investigation into the Joseph Brant outbreak, and our government has our own medical expert advisory committee that has made recommendations.

But I think it's also important to take into account the views of Dr. Richard Schabas, a former chief medical officer of health in the province of Ontario, who said that the Conservative government turned its back on public safety. When he was asked about an additional public inquiry, he said the following: "I'm not sure a public inquiry is necessarily the logical next step. They often make for good theatre, but they don't get us where we need to go, which is to address this problem in a vigorous and effective way, and I think largely we already know what the underlying problems are with C. difficile." I'm inclined to agree with the expert.

Ms. Laurie Scott: Over 260 people have died from C. difficile that we know of. That's a crisis, and that should be dealt with. The article from the Hamilton Spectator goes on to say, "Graham Tanner of Britain's National Concern for Healthcare Infections says the first act in dealing with a superbug like C. diff is to accept that a severe problem exists," which you do not do. It also says that "a British patient advocate, who has been following the spread of the bacterium around the world, says the Ontario government 'appears to be in denial' over C. diff."

Premier, over the last four years, despite repeated warnings that C. difficile does exist, you sat back while scores of people have died unnecessarily from this virulent strain of C. difficile since 2004. The Ombudsman has referred to you as being "inexcusably lax" on this life-threatening matter. I ask you again: Why won't you launch an investigation and treat C. difficile as the serious health threat that it is?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Again, to use Dr. Schabas's expression, it might "make for good theatre," but what we need to do now is move ahead on the basis of the information that we do in fact have.

In December 2004, the provincial infectious disease advisory committee sent out its best practices document on C. difficile—back in 2004. Since then, we've established 137 new infection control positions in hospitals. Handwashing guidelines have been referenced countless times during the past several years. In March 2007, the acting chief medical officer of health—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I've warned the member from Renfrew repeatedly. Any more outbursts and I'll be forced to eject him. Premier.

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Just to list a few of the steps that have been taken even more recently: In March 2007, the chief medical officer of health sent out C. difficile fact sheets to all our medical officers of health and our hospitals. They sent out countless C. difficile bulletins as well in the same month. In May, they held focus seminars. There have been video conferences. We have updated best practices documents—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question, the member from Beaches–East York.

POVERTY

Mr. Michael Prue: My question is to the Premier. After the minister of poverty reduction's private, by-invitation-only, last-minute so-called poverty consultations are over, Ontarians have now learned from her that no public report will be released. Countless taxpayers' dollars are being spent on these sham hearings. The poor have barely been consulted, and now we know that there will be no report released.

This government must be accountable. Why won't the government show that it's serious about reducing poverty and publish a report before the Legislature returns in September?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I'm pleased with the work that Minister Matthews is doing on behalf of all Ontarians. We have committed ourselves, notwithstanding some challenging economic circumstances, to find a way to make a real difference in the lives of families, but especially children who are growing up in poverty in Ontario.

There have been a number of consultations held throughout the province. I understand that there will be several held in the greater Toronto area—tonight, in fact—and I would invite the member opposite to hold one on his own.

I just don't think that families affected by poverty are looking for another report. I think they're looking for action, and that what we've committed to do.

Mr. Michael Prue: Obviously, the Premier has not listened to the criticism that has been out there—the outcries of Ontarians who were shut out of the meetings. Surely the public has the right to hear what the hand-picked few had to say at those meetings.

We wonder why the minister is afraid to release her findings. Why won't this government prove that it is serious about reducing poverty and make its findings public?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I understand that there are three public meetings tonight in the city of Toronto. The member opposite is invited to attend whichever one he would like to attend. I am also advised that the minister had been writing on her website after each meeting. He can log on and read the updates that are made available there.

What we are determined to do is to put in place specific indicators that help us better understand poverty, help us better measure poverty, put in place some ambitious targets and then make transparent our successes or, frankly, lack thereof when it comes to achieving those targets. That has never been done before. It has never been embraced by any government before. We look forward to doing that. We think it's the right thing to do. And in a highly competitive global economy, it's absolutely essential that we issue an all-hands-on-deck edict to all Ontarians. We need everybody at their best, and that's what we intend to do.

DISASTER RELIEF

Mr. Bill Mauro: My question is to the Minister of Community Safety and Correctional Services. On Thursday evening and Friday morning in Thunder Bay and surrounding area there was an incredibly heavy rainfall in a very short period of time. I want to thank you, your staff and the ministry for all their support and constant communication. I appreciate the work of the EMO.

Minister, small organized communities in my riding like Neebing, Oliver Paipoonge, O'Connor, Conmee, Gillies and Fort William First Nation have been severely affected in terms of their infrastructure as a result of the downpour, which led to localized flooding. As well, unorganized areas like Nolalu have been severely affected, and their local services board is working diligently to fix and repair the damage caused by the rain.

Minister, can you provide this House with a status update of the situation in my affected communities?

Hon. Rick Bartolucci: I would like to thank the member for Thunder Bay–Atikokan for this very important question. Last Friday, a sudden rainstorm caused pretty significant flooding in Thunder Bay-area townships and the Fort William First Nation. Emergency Management Ontario successfully coordinated the provincial response and facilitated the flow of information between the province and the municipalities.

EMO field officers were deployed to the area to provide advice and assistance as necessary, and the Office of the Fire Marshal assisted by coordinating local fire services. The Ontario Provincial Police is actively working with affected communities to warn the public of any dangerous road conditions and is taking steps to make communities accessible by road.

The provincial emergency operations centre continues to monitor the situation closely. We are thankful that no serious injuries occurred, and we thank the communities for their incredible interactions during this very serious time.

Mr. Bill Mauro: As mentioned, many small townships in unorganized areas have been severely damaged. Our government has recognized that small townships have small tax bases and major infrastructure responsibilities. Through our budget announcements and infrastructure programs, communities like Gillies, Oliver Paipoonge, O'Connor, Conmee and Neebing have received provincial assistance for roads and bridges in their areas.

By Saturday afternoon, I had managed to reach most of my affected mayors, although some, understandably, were very busy. These mayors and residents of unorganized areas will once again be looking to us for assistance. Mayors like John Valenthe in Gillies, Bob Rydholm in Conmee, Ron Nelson in O'Connor, Steve Harrasen in Neebing and Lucy Klusterhuis in Oliver Paipoonge, as well as my residents in unorganized areas, want to know what assistance we will be able to provide as they struggle to meet this latest challenge. Minister, what assistance is available for these communities in my riding of Thunder Bay–Atikokan?

Hon. Rick Bartolucci: Speaker, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing.

Hon. Jim Watson: I join my colleague Minister Bartolucci in thanking the member from Thunder Bay–Atikokan for his hands-on work with this very troubling situation in northwest Ontario.

The Ontario disaster relief assistance program, ODRAP, provides assistance when damages are so extensive that they exceed the capacity of a municipality or a community to pay those costs. I understand that the townships of O'Connor and Gillies have, in fact, declared a state of emergency under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act. Affected municipalities have up to 14 days after the emergency to declare a state of emergency.

My ministry will work quickly to work with the member and to help those municipalities in need. Ministry staff will evaluate all requests for assistance by ODRAP, and I'll review their recommendations quickly. I can assure the member that our staff will work with the affected municipalities to help them through the ODRAP process.

TOURISM

Mr. Ted Arnott: My question is for the Premier. At a cost of $8 million, the Premier recently appointed the member for Vaughan to study the tourism industry in Ontario. But we need action now, not a year from now or two years from now, as per the study's original time frame. Today our tourism industry is heading into what could be one of its worst summers on record. That's why John Tory's plan to eliminate the retail sales tax on accommodation and attractions would stimulate tourism so that families can save money and actually have their holidays in Ontario. My question is this: Will the Premier instruct his $8-million tourism czar to at least consider this plan, and if not, what immediate relief will he provide the tourism industry this summer?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I want to commend my colleague opposite for his ongoing commitment to enhancing tourism opportunities in Ontario. I want to let him know that we continue to make some real progress in that regard.

More Ontario families are choosing to vacation in the province than ever before. Our plan to increase tourism within the province in particular is working in helping to grow the economy. Stats Canada figures from April to June 2007—we look forward to seeing where they're going to be for this year—show 21 million visits within the province. That's a 5% increase over the year before. It's the third-highest increase in Canada. Some $2.3 billion was spent on travel; that was nearly a 4% increase over the year before. Some $1.4 billion was spent on overnight trips; again, that was nearly a 4% increase over the year before. So, notwithstanding a struggling economy otherwise, tourism continues to grow at a healthy rate in the province.

Mr. Ted Arnott: That's just not good enough. Their study so far has done nothing except put tourism in the red—Liberal red, incidentally. It's just the beginning of June and our tourism numbers are already in freefall. Just ask the members from Simcoe North and Parry Sound—Muskoka. Our plan would allow families to keep their summer travel plans in Ontario. The Premier's plan offers nothing but travel plans for the member for Vaughan. I ask the Premier: What will he do today to stop the ripple effect that a weakening tourism industry will have on our economy this summer?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Again, one of the things of which we are very proud is our advertising campaign:

"There's no place like this." I know that the member opposite will have seen some of those ads, and I'm sure that he's very much supportive of those. We've been using a number of entertainers and Ontario personalities to help promote the quality of the tourism experience in Ontario. Especially given rising gas prices, I know that Ontario families are still determined to seek out some kind of experience, modest though it may be, when it comes to having some kind of a holiday opportunity with the children. We are strongly encouraging them to look just around the corner to the wonderful experiences that are to be found in this province. From the great northwest all the way down to the Niagara region, there are all kinds of great family, quality opportunities to be enjoyed this summer in Ontario.

RENEWABLE ENERGY

Mr. Peter Tabuns: To the Minister of Energy: Minister, your recent changes to the renewable energy standard offer program will curtail the provision of badly needed wind, biomass and solar power in this province. You have a continuing policy to keep OPG out of developing renewable power, although they have considerable expertise. Minister, why are you turning your back on renewable power? Why are you betting the province's future on your nuclear gamble?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: Actually, it's quite the contrary, I might say. He perhaps doesn't understand it. Our whole idea is to more than double the use of renewables in Ontario. As a matter of fact, we'd hoped that under this plan, called RESOP, to have over a 10-year period 1,000 megawatts. After 18 months, we've already signed, I think, 1,400 megawatts. It is phenomenally successful—so successful that we are making some adjustments to continue to expand it dramatically.

I would say to the member that in the next few days we will be going out for another 500 megawatts of clean, renewable energy. We are going to be going out for another 500 megawatts of combined heat and power. We are aggressively pursuing—

Mr. Peter Tabuns: So if you're aggressively pursuing it, why do sustainable energy advocates say that you're cutting back in the north and southwestern Ontario and eastern Ontario? Why are you suspending those payments? Why are you suspending those purchases of renewable power? Why are you not going to the maximum on renewable power and avoiding the $40-billion nuclear gamble?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: Again, I say to the member, and particularly to the public, we are aggressively pursuing and expanding the reuse of renewable resources. Our problem is that we have an excess of applicants wanting to come forward and we are trying our best to accommodate them. The member should recognize that what we're doing in the next few days is another 500 megawatts. The renewable energy program—the RESOP program—is one of a kind in North America. We're very proud of it; 1,300 megawatts after 18 months. We thought we'd do it in 10 years and we did it in 18 months. We are going to continue wherever we can to accept those applications.

To the member, there may be the odd person who may be complaining because they can't get access, but for the overwhelming majority of people involved in renewable energy, I think they would say that Ontario is leading the way, and we will continue to do that.

ELDER ABUSE

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: My question is for the minister responsible for seniors. Minister, elder abuse is a very serious issue facing many of our seniors in Ontario, and it is estimated that between 4% and 10% of Ontario seniors experience some form of abuse at some point during their later years. I'm certain that all of my colleagues in this Legislature would agree that simply is not acceptable. Ontario seniors have played a crucial role in building our province and we must protect them from all forms of abuse.

Can the minister responsible for seniors please inform the House what steps our government has taken to prevent elder abuse from occurring?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: I thank the honourable member for her question. She is quite right, as ever. Elder abuse cannot be tolerated. Ontario seniors have helped to build and maintain a strong Ontario, and they continue to make valuable contributions to our province. Our seniors deserve to live with dignity and they deserve respect and to be in a safe environment. That's why this government is building safer communities for Ontario's seniors by investing in the elder abuse prevention strategy.

I'm more than pleased that the McGuinty government recently provided $209,000 for the Ontario Network for the Prevention of Elder Abuse to help the prevention network protect seniors from all forms of abuse. This investment will ensure that Ontario's seniors have the help and support they need to live safely and with dignity.

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: I am very pleased that the government recognizes the seriousness of elder abuse in Ontario. My riding of Huron-Bruce is home to a very large number of seniors, so this issue is of a great deal of interest to me professionally and personally. The government and its partners must work together to raise awareness of elder abuse and they must continue to support prevention initiatives across our province. After many years spent working and raising a family, seniors deserve to be treated with the utmost respect for all that they have contributed to our society.

Can the minister explain how this elder abuse prevention funding will protect our Ontario seniors?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: In spite of the catcalls, which I guess indicate some lack of interest or indifference to this matter, people on this side of the House consider elder abuse an incredibly important issue, one that we are compelled, with any sense of fiduciary duty, to be right out in front on, doing all that we can as a government.

The funding that I made mention of helps Ontario's seniors by supporting 52 community-based elder abuse networks in the province. Each community network partner received $4,000 to help with the service coordination, front-line staff training and public education. It will also help the networks mobilize community activity to help prevent, and respond effectively to, elderly abuse. This funding indeed builds on the McGuinty government's $1.65-million strategy to combat elder abuse, and that is the first of its kind in Canada.

SCHOOL TRUSTEES

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: To the Minister of Education: The public trust has been shattered and you have lost the confidence of Ontario taxpayers. Your disappointing and also delayed reaction to the spending violations within the Toronto Catholic District School Board is amplified by the not one, but two people you have hired at exorbitant rates to investigate this issue.

Minister, your performance on this issue has been really poor at best. When are you finally going to restore the public trust and confidence in the ministry's ability to deal with this issue?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: It is a little astonishing to me, the reaction from the member opposite. I have been spoken to a number of times over the weekend by people in the public coming up to me and saying, "Your government has done the right thing"; teachers from the school board coming and saying to me, "You are on the right track. You have done the right thing. Thank you very much."

So in fact, everything that we have done as a government, everything that I have done as the minister—to act on the information that I got from the Toronto Catholic District School Board, from the investigators who went into the school board—has been in the interest of restoring public confidence in that school board and in publicly funded education in general. At the end of the day, what this is about is the fact that we need all of our kids in the absolutely best learning environments possible. That's what our actions are about.

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: Minister, that's one in a long list of pat answers that we've heard for many days. You're not fooling the opposition and you're certainly not fooling the people of Ontario. Your inactions have compromised the reputations of trustees who are working, and have acted, within the confines of the law.

Now we see that your former colleagues have been charging their home cable bills to the taxpayers of Ontario. Minister, will you suspend the salaries and benefits of those trustees who have breached the public trust and restore the confidence back into education?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: My actions have been taken in order to make sure that at the Toronto Catholic District School Board and school boards across this province, public dollars are spent in the public interest and for the benefit of our students. That is why we have a supervisor now in the Toronto Catholic District School Board. That is why that supervisor will be making financial decisions on that board.

The fact is that the Toronto Catholic District School Board situation is a cautionary tale. There are boards across the province who are looking at their expenses and looking at their policy guidelines. They must all be transparent. There must be checks and balances in place.

The issue that member opposite raises is one at a school board where there are checks and balances in place. There is money being paid back. Those receipts are vetted. Those must be transparent to the public. That's what my actions have done, shone a light on the issues at boards across—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): New question.

CHILD CARE

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Grandparents play a crucial parenting role when their own children are unable to do so due to mental health problems, drug abuse or other life issues. Grandparents in some parts of our province—Hamilton, London and Ottawa—have been, or are about to be, cut off the Ontario Works temporary care assistance. This program provides basic financial supports to low-income grandparents to meet their unexpected parenthood duties.

The minister seemed reluctant to act on this issue at our meeting last week. Perhaps she has given it more thought. So I ask again: Why won't this government immediately direct all municipalities to stop cutting grandparents off from temporary care assistance for no good reason?

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: First of all, let me congratulate and thank the grandparents who are taking care of their grandchildren. They are rendering a very needed service, and I want to say thank you to them.

This temporary care assistance is short-term. It says so; it's temporary care assistance. Different municipalities have applied different rules, and I thank the member from the NDP for bringing this to my attention. We need to review it. We cannot apply rules in different areas differently.

However, I'll say to the member: This is a temporary care assistance allowance, and we are going to review all this within the review of the poverty reduction strategy.

Mr. Paul Miller: I guess the minister's interpretation and my interpretation of legislation are different. Minister, as you and your staff know, there is no legitimate reason to cut off grandparents from temporary care assistance benefits. You say it's temporary. Your program directives clearly state that temporary care assistance is intended to be available for as long as the child needs the care. When will you direct all municipalities to fully implement your ministry's temporary care assistance program and stop undermining grandparents who are raising their vulnerable grandchildren? These people need help now, not after a big review.

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: I think that the legislation is very clear. It's temporary care assistance, but it was brought up by the member from the NDP that it's being applied differently in Hamilton. However, the member of the opposite party is asking me to reverse a decision that was rendered by a tribunal. I cannot do that. All members in the House know that.

What I'm saying is, this needs to be reviewed within the poverty reduction strategy. We will do it.

Again, I want to thank and show my appreciation to the grandparents who are taking care of their grandchildren.

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mr. Dave Levac: My question is for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Minister, we have heard the rumbling, the gnashing of teeth and the wringing of hands from the official opposition about the closure of Ontario's developmental services institutions, where our sons and daughters, our brothers and sisters and relatives with intellectual disabilities have been isolated and excluded from our communities for decades. We are aware of the services of the extremely dedicated professional and caring staff providers. Specific to our most vulnerable citizens, can the minister please explain to us what impact this closure will have on them and their families?

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: First of all, I want to thank the member for Brant for his constant advocacy for the full inclusion of those with disabilities. It is unfortunate that the opposition has decided to play political football with the lives of Ontario's most vulnerable. They say that those with intellectual disabilities are made homeless and live in long-term care, which is incorrect. They are playing politics with the lives of those who have been forgotten for far too long.

The story of this transition is a new era of inclusion and it's a positive one. It is a story of people who have been handicapped by a system that dismissed their abilities. It is a story of people finding new friends, new places to live, new chances to work and a new opportunity for life. This government will continue to support and care for Ontarians with intellectual—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Dave Levac: I appreciate hearing what the minister has to say about the new delivery of these particular services. I'm also sure that Ontarians all over the province will join those living with intellectual disabilities and their families in celebrating the end of an era of exclusion and embrace more inclusiveness and diversity in our communities, and I hope we get rid of the NIMBY attitude that some have.

It seems to me and to others that the members of the opposition are just a little bit confused as to the process surrounding these closures. They suggest that we are forcing these vulnerable citizens out of their homes and are unconcerned about the well-being of these wonderful people. Is there any possible way that the minister can clear up the opposition's confusion? I know it's a tough question, but I'm sure she can answer it.

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: Yes, it is unfortunate that the opposition has decided to play a football game with these individuals. So far, this government has invested $279 million in funding to close facilities and to strengthen the foundation of community services. Of this funding, $70 million went into capital projects to create community-based living accommodation, and the remainder has gone into providing additional community services and developing infrastructure. We are confident that with this careful and thoughtful planning—involving families, ministry staff, health professionals and community partners—facility residents will be successfully placed. This government wants to make sure that these individuals are fully included in our community.

ROAD SAFETY

Mr. Frank Klees: My question is to the Attorney General. On Thursday of this past week, my colleague Mr. Runciman raised the issue of the leniency of the sentence handed down to the driver responsible for Mr. David Virgoe's death, the result of street racing. The Attorney General is fully aware that the only way he can ensure that justice is done and that the will and intent of this Legislature—as expressed by legislation that was passed here—is exercised by the courts is if he appeals that lenient decision. I'd like to know whether the Attorney General will commit today that he will in fact appeal that lenient decision.

Hon. Christopher Bentley: Not surprisingly, I'm not going to comment on the specifics of the member's question. I will say to the member—and we've had discussions about this before, as have all members of the House—that we take street racing very seriously. Whether it is under the Criminal Code or under our new highway traffic legislation, it is simply unacceptable. It not only places the driver at risk, it places all members of the public who are users of the roadway at risk—for no reason whatsoever.

We will continue to prosecute these cases to the full extent of the law, continue to take them very seriously. As I indicated to the member before, on the specifics of that matter, the process is that a report is received from the trial crown so the chief prosecutor can be aware of all of the circumstances, and the decision will be made in due course on the issue of the specifics my colleague asked.

Mr. Frank Klees: In responding on Thursday, the minister said the following: "Our government has made it clear, both with provincial legislation and in prosecuting federal legislation, which this is, that we take these matters very seriously. We prosecute them to the full extent of the law. We take a strong position in favour of public safety on these and all matters at all times."

The minister knows fully that the only way to ensure in this case that this individual is prosecuted to the full extent of the law is if he appeals this case. We fully understand that he wants to review information, but what we also want to know from him is that he will uphold the intent, through the power that he has to appeal, as fully expressed by—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister.

Hon. Christopher Bentley: I thank the member opposite for reading my quote from the other day—it saves me the necessity of repeating it—because that is precisely the position. And we give all matters that have the potential for an appeal due consideration. I know my friend opposite would want us to receive the report from the trial crown—because the chief prosecutor was not present in court, I know the member opposite would want us to receive all of the information that was tendered not only by the defence but by the crown, including victim impact information, so that we have a full examination of all the facts before making that decision. And that in this case, as in all cases, is what we endeavour to do, and then that decision will be made in full consideration of the principles that I've outlined and my friend has quoted.

HEALTH CARE FUNDING

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Ma question est pour le premier ministre. "With horrific cuts in the auto industry devastating Durham region, it's a fine time to kick the mental health supports out from under the area's residents," say the Ontario Public Service Employees Union as well as the Ontario Nursing Association. Can the Premier explain, in the wake of massive cuts to the region's flagship employer, General Motors: How is cutting 200 staff and 80 beds at the local hospital in Durham region good public policy?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I'm not familiar with the specifics of this particular matter, but I can say that we continue to invest new dollars in health care. We've invested substantial new dollars since we first earned the privilege of serving Ontarians as their government. I gather that some local officials, in their wisdom, are considering making certain kinds of changes. We'll have to wait and see whether that bears out in fact.

I can say that our government has demonstrated its ongoing commitment to health care with more doctors and more nurses and shorter wait times, dramatic new investments which are resulting in an improved quality of care available for all Ontario patients and our families. I look forward to hearing more about the details of this in the supplementary, but I want to assure the member opposite that the main thrust of our health care policy is to enhance it, and that's done in part by new funding.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Here's what Smokey Thomas, the head of OPSEU, the Ontario Public Service Employees Union, had to say: "This is a gutting of hospital services for the communities of West Durham and Scarborough. We were promised efficiencies; instead we are seeing critical cuts to core services. This doesn't solve a problem—it merely pushes it off to somewhere else in the health system.”

As Smokey Thomas asks, will the Premier agree to step in right now, reverse these cuts and get the hospital back on course to help the people through tough times?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Again, I can only speak to this at kind of a higher level because the Minister of Health has the details on this. I can say that with respect to the Rouge Valley Health System in particular, we have provided more operating dollars every year. We have increased the base funding to Rouge Valley Health System by 15.5% since 2003. As a result of our government's commitment to hospitals and patients in Ontario, hospital funding will have increased—this is overall—40.3% between 2003-04 and 2009-10. We think that is a significant new investment.

In the 2008 budget, the government committed to $80 million over the next three years to further improve mental health and addiction services, including funding to increase treatment for eating disorder services and early intervention for psychoses. We think that we are making some considerable progress. We want to continue to work with our partners who work on the front lines, but I want to assure all of them that our intention is to enhance the quality of the experience in any health care setting for all Ontario families.

MEMBERS' ANNIVERSARIES

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Before the members depart, I just want to take this opportunity to congratulate the co-deans of the Legislature, who today are celebrating their 31st anniversary: Jim Bradley, Norm Sterling, congratulations and thank you very much.

PETITIONS

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mr. Frank Klees: Speaker, with your permission, I want to extend a special welcome to my constituents Audrey and Harry Neary from Aurora.

I have a petition that I would like to present, submitted by Michael Bolton of Sacred Heart secondary school in Newmarket. It reads as follows:

“Petition to the Parliament of Ontario:

“Whereas the legacy of Pope John Paul II reflects his lifelong commitment to international understanding, peace and the defence of equality and human rights;

“Whereas his legacy has an all-embracing meaning that is particularly relevant to Canada's multi-faith and multicultural traditions;

“Whereas, as one of the great spiritual leaders of contemporary times, Pope John Paul II visited Ontario

during his pontificate of more than 25 years and, on his visits, was enthusiastically greeted by Ontario's diverse religious and cultural communities;

“Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to grant speedy passage into law of the private member's bill by Oak Ridges MPP Frank Klees entitled An Act to proclaim Pope John Paul II Day.”

As a proponent of this bill, I'm pleased to affix my signature, and present it to page Gregory to deliver to the table.

LONG-TERM CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people of the city of greater Sudbury.

“Whereas understaffing in Ontario's nursing homes is a serious problem resulting in inadequate care for residents and unsafe conditions for staff;

“Whereas after the ... government removed the regulations providing minimum care levels in 1995, hours of care dropped below the previous 2.25 hour/day minimum;

“Whereas the recent improvements in hours of care are not adequate, vary widely and are not held to accountable standards;

“Whereas there is currently nothing in legislation to protect residents and staff from renewed cuts to care levels by future governments; and

“Whereas care needs have measurably increased with aging and the movement of people with more complex health needs from hospitals into long-term-care homes;

“Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

“Immediately enact and fund an average care standard of 3.5 hours per resident per day in the regulations under the new Long-Term Care Homes Act.”

I fully support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Jocelyn.

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mrs. Laura Albanese: I have a petition from the residents of York South-Weston.

“To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the legacy of Pope John Paul II reflects his lifelong commitment to international understanding, peace and the defence of equality and human rights;

“Whereas his legacy has an all-embracing meaning that is particularly relevant to Canada's multi-faith and multicultural traditions;

“Whereas, as one of the great spiritual leaders of contemporary times, Pope John Paul II visited Ontario during his pontificate of more than 25 years and, on his visits, was enthusiastically greeted by Ontario's diverse religious and cultural communities;

“Therefore we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to grant speedy passage into law of the private member's bill”—Bill

25—"entitled An Act to proclaim Pope John Paul II Day."

I agree with this petition and affix my signature to it. I will hand it to page Gregory.

BLUEWATER HEALTH

Mr. Robert Bailey: I have a petition today signed by over 8,000 residents in Sarnia-Lambton that reads as follows. I'd like to pay special notice to the lady who collected them, Arlene Patterson, who's with me here today.

"Whereas the community of Sarnia-Lambton has lost confidence in the administration of Bluewater Health corporation, due to the reduction of services;

"Whereas community concerns regarding the lack of information, cuts, layoffs, firings, closed board meetings and complaints have met with defensiveness; and the hospital is in a serious dispute with its doctors that has been unresolved for over a year;

"Whereas the community funds the hospital through donations and municipal tax levies and relies on our hospital as a vital public service, and taxation without elected representation is undemocratic;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Minister of Health to send a provincial supervisor to conduct a full investigation into the operation of Bluewater Health, with the intent to make the required changes that will resolve these concerns from physicians, staff and community. We also petition the minister to help to change the bylaws of the hospital corporation, so that the board members are elected by a bona fide community membership at an annual general meeting at the Bluewater Health corporation."

I affix my signature to this as well.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Mike Colle: I have a petition here from the good people at the Westside Animal Hospital.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I agree with the people of Westside Animal Hospital. I affix my name and I give the petition to page Chris, who is from the great riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. John O'Toole: I have a series of petitions here. This particular group comes from Living Water Community Church, which is located in Uxbridge. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its" rightful "place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly ... to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I'm pleased to sign it in support and present it to Gregory.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network ... board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan...; and

"Whereas, despite the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government, this plan now calls for the ill-advised transfer of 20 mental health unit beds from Ajax-Pickering hospital to the Centenary health centre...; and

"Whereas one of the factors for the successful treatment of patients in the mental health unit is support from family and friends, and the distance to Centenary health centre would negatively impact on the ... care for residents of Ajax and Pickering; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for Rouge Valley ... to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service to our Ajax-Pickering hospital, which now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain the badly needed 20-bed mental health unit."

I shall affix my signature to this and pass this to Charles.

LORD'S PRAYER

Ms. Sylvia Jones: This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the current government is proposing to remove the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message is one of forgiveness, of providing for those in need of their 'daily bread' and of preserving us from the evils we may fall into; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I proudly affix my signature.

FIREARMS CONTROL

Mr. Mike Colle: I have a petition here.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas innocent people are being victimized by the growing number of unlawful firearms in our communities; and

"Whereas police officers ... and" other "licensed persons are the only people allowed to possess firearms; and

"Whereas a growing number of unlawful firearms are transported, smuggled and found in motor vehicles; and

"Whereas impounding motor vehicles and suspending driver's licences of persons possessing unlawful firearms in motor vehicles would aid the police in their efforts to make our streets safer;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 56, entitled the Unlawful Firearms in Vehicles Act, 2008, into law, so that we can reduce the number of crimes involving firearms in our communities."

I affix my name to the petition and I give it to page Kelvin from the riding of Eglinton-Lawrence.

SCHOOL CLOSURES

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: I have a petition here from the parents of the students of Rideau Centennial Elementary School in Portland, Ontario, requesting that the Minister of Education in the province of Ontario review the accommodation review process of the Upper Canada District School Board under the Boundary 2020 study. The board made their school closure resolutions on May 14, 2008.

I agree with this petition and I affix my name thereto. I give this petition to Jocelyn.

HOSPITAL SERVICES

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I have petitions here from the citizens across Ontario, but mainly from the Midland and Penetanguishene area.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the government-appointed supervisor of the Huronia District Hospital (HDH) has recommended a merger of HDH with the Penetanguishene General Hospital (PGH);

"Whereas the supervisor recommended changes to the governance of the hospital to eliminate community memberships and the democratic selection and governance of the hospital board and directors based on an ideology and not on the wishes of the community;

"Whereas the supervisor has also recommended the splitting up and divestment of the mental health centre in Penetanguishene, creating uncertainty in the future of mental health beds and services; and

"Whereas hospital mergers and restructuring under the local health integration network can result in a loss in the total number of hospital beds and services provided to a community,

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We call on the government of Ontario to "Protect the current level of beds and services at all sites in Midland and Penetanguishene;

"Protect the community memberships and the democratic governance of the new hospital created by the merger of HDH and PGH."

I'm pleased to present this and ask Murray from Orillia, the Warminster area, to present it to the table.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: I've got a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I agree with this petition, Speaker, sign it and send it on to you with page Chris.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Charles Sousa: This petition is in support of Bill 50. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I sign this and I give it to Charles.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Mike Colle: I've got another petition from the wilds of western Mississauga to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly decreasing the pressures "....

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I support this petition for western Mississauga and I give it to page Chris from—I forgot. From which riding?

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): He's not supposed to tell you.

Mr. Mike Colle: He's not supposed to tell me. It's a secret. I forgot.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for petitions being expired, this House stands recessed until 1 o'clock, this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1204 to 1300.

UXBRIDGE COTTAGE HOSPITAL

Mr. John O'Toole: I rise in the House today to update members on the situation at Uxbridge Cottage Hospital and particularly the future of their emergency room. Earlier this year, the community was understandably concerned over the possible closure of the emergency room at the cottage hospital.

I attended a public meeting on June 3, and members of the public were told that the summer ER schedule is being filled and that by September, 11 doctors will be working in the ER. This is the plan. Janet Beed, the CEO for Markham Stouffville Hospital, of which the cottage hospital in Uxbridge is one of their sites, was there and gave a very thorough overview of the transitions occurring in health care. Cottage hospital chief of medical staff Dr. Michael Damus said at the meeting that there is an ongoing challenge to attract and keep doctors working in ERs across Ontario.

I'd like to commend Roger Peirson, chair of the Uxbridge physician recruitment committee; Tracy Evans, president of the Uxbridge Cottage Hospital Foundation; and all in the community, who are working hard to keep the ER open and to ensure that Uxbridge has a full range of hospital services. Community support in Uxbridge is extremely strong to retain all service levels in their hospital.

I would urge the government to look more closely at the funding of hospitals in Durham to ensure that they receive their fair share of funding under the HBAM program and to keep pace with the growing needs of a growing community. It's time that each of us recognize how vulnerable we are without a hospital in the community. Everyone is at a loss on how this government is failing. Smaller hospitals in rural Ontario are at threat many times.

CAPITAL FOOD BLITZ

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: I'm pleased to rise in the House today to share with members of this Legislature the wonderful activities that are taking place in my riding of Ottawa Centre. For a number of years prior to my election to this honourable chamber, I had the pleasure of working with the Ottawa Food Bank to coordinate the Capital Food Blitz, a door-to-door food collection initiative that is now in its fourth year. Each year, this event is growing, adding more teams and helping to collect more food from very generous Ottawa residents. Previous blitzes have taken place in the community of Westboro, and this year we had the pleasure of returning to a very supportive neighbourhood while extending the food drive to the community of Glebe.

Last Thursday, armed with brown-paper grocery bags, I joined 80 volunteers to hit the streets in Glebe and Westboro to collect non-perishable food items. I'm pleased to let you know that together we collected 12,000 pounds of food in a span of just three hours. I am proud to inform the Legislature that the blitz raised 42,000 pounds of food in the last four years.

I want to congratulate Liz Wood, events manager at the Ottawa Food Bank, and the many volunteers for all their hard work and dedication to this event. I commend them on their tireless commitment to ensuring the success of this wonderful initiative.

TOURISM

Mr. Norm Miller: As summer approaches, Ontario's tourism industry is facing one of its most challenging seasons in decades. In my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, many tourism-related businesses are concerned about what effect factors like the high Canadian dollar, record gas prices and the slowdown in the US economy will have on the upcoming summer season. Students are worried about finding summer jobs to pay for college or university, while small businesses are just wondering if they can make ends meet. A decline in tourism would be felt across Ontario, as the industry employs nearly 200,000 people and is the number one employer of youth and seasonal workers.

Recently, the Tourism Industry Association called for urgent action by all levels of government to help with the looming crisis, but the McGuinty government has failed to put forward any plan to address their concerns. Ontario's tourism industry cannot afford to wait for another report before the government takes action.

By eliminating the retail sales tax on hotels and accommodations, as proposed by John Tory and the PC Party, we can make it easier for families who are travelling to the many tourism destinations that our province has to offer, many of which are located in Parry Sound-Muskoka. In order to help this struggling sector, we need to encourage families to stay in Ontario for their summer vacations. We need to give a boost to our tourism sector now. I call on this government to implement the retail sales tax holiday on accommodations and attractions, as proposed by the PC Party.

HOSPITAL SERVICES

Ms. Andrea Horwath: Proposed changes to hospital services in Hamilton have the community up in arms. Hamilton city councillors in fact are promising to mobilize. A major restructuring is being contemplated, with little real consultation with residents and users of our hospitals.

People in my riding are justifiably worried. They fear the worst. The proposal is extremely controversial. For example, it would rob the West Mountain and the entire western area of Hamilton of an emergency department.

I have raised warning flags with our local health integration network, the LHIN, with the Minister of Health and with the administration of Hamilton Health Sciences Corp., but I believe there has been a serious lack of earnest dialogue with concerned members of our community. That has to change. It has to change, and it has to change fast.

Hamilton will not tolerate having a major restructuring of hospital services rammed down its throat. I put my concerns in a letter to the LHIN chair on May 5, and remain troubled that no one has bothered to respond to this urgent critical matter.

The McGuinty government, too, is ducking the issue. The hospital CEO feels that hosting a few public information centres and talking to his medical staff is all the consultation that's required, but even health care professionals at the hospital are not sold on the new direction. Ultimately, the hospital is for the community. Hamiltonians—through the LHIN—should make the decisions about services, not the local hospital administrator alone.

I call on the McGuinty government to guarantee a proper process for consultation to ensure it's the community that has the final say in this very important matter.

MALVERN BICYCLE CLASSIC

Mr. Bas Balkissoon: I rise today in the House to tell you about a truly uplifting event I recently attended in my riding of Scarborough-Rouge River.

The Malvern Bicycle Classic is a road race for youths aged 10 to 18 in the Malvern community in Scarborough. This was the first year this race was held, and it was a resounding success. Sponsors generously outfitted 85 neighbourhood children with bikes and helmets, and the kids trained alongside police officers from the local police division in preparation for the races. The participants and spectators were treated to a display by the Toronto Police Service's precision motorcycle team, and the kids got to watch an elite group of 50 competitive racers in action.

The best thing to see was how the community came together for the children, to make this day happen. The city of Toronto, Toronto Police Service and the Ontario Cycling Association all worked together to encourage kids to get outside for a day of fun and some healthy competition.

Many sponsors supported the race, providing not only bikes and helmets but food and drinks, T-shirts and prizes. What I loved about the event was the energy of the kids, who were most obviously having a wonderful time. The Malvern Bicycle Classic is a great example of a neighbourhood coming together to promote healthy activity, good sportsmanship, positive community relations and self-esteem for our youth.

I'd like to especially recognize the work of Rick Gosling, Jim Crosscombe, Rick Meloff and Staff Sergeant Jim Darbyshire. Congratulations to all the organizers, sponsors and participants on a very successful day.

TOURISM

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I rise today to comment on the inaction of the McGuinty Liberals to help support the drastically declining tourism industry in Ontario.

Over the weekend, I had the opportunity to participate in a boat and cottage show down at the beautiful Couchiching Beach Park in the city of Orillia. Without question, the biggest issue facing the citizens who attended is the high cost of gasoline and the fact that Dalton McGuinty is doing absolutely nothing to help relieve the impact.

I spoke to families who cannot afford to take any kind of vacation this year. I spoke to men and women who can no longer take their families to even a fast-food outlet because that money is now used to buy gasoline. I spoke to resort operators who will definitely be cutting back on summer staff this year because they simply do not have the business.

The PC caucus has a solution that will at least help stimulate the tourism sector. Three weeks ago, we launched our summer tax relief plan. This plan calls for the immediate elimination of the retail sales tax on tourism-related businesses. The Minister of Tourism calls it a piecemeal plan, but he has done absolutely nothing to gain the respect of the tourism industry.

Hundreds of millions, if not billions, of dollars will be lost in the tourism industry this summer. I call on this government to adopt the Progressive Conservatives' summer tax relief plan. Please indicate to the small-business communities that, for once, you actually care about their existence. Remember, the provincial sales tax savings may in fact be reason enough for many Ontarians to travel in Ontario this summer.

Once again, on behalf of all Ontarians, I urge the government to adopt the PC summer tax relief plan.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. Mario Sergio: Last Thursday, in my riding of York West, Premier McGuinty made an announcement at Seneca College regarding a $355-million investment for the second-career strategy. The strategy will train people who have recently been laid off or have been unemployed since June 1, 2007, to find a new career and not just another job.

The second-career strategy offers training for up to two years, and it can be three years when combined with literacy and basic skills upgrading. Workers can choose between college or private career colleges for careers such as technical mechanical engineer, construction surveyor, building inspector, foreman, lab technician, accounting clerk, paralegal and so on. The second-career strategy will target and be of most benefit to laid-off workers from the manufacturing and service sector and/or workers who have lower skill levels and want to upgrade to a higher level.

I would like to encourage people to find out more about the program by contacting their local employment office, which will direct them to their nearest assessment centre, or the Employment Ontario website, the Employment Ontario hotline, community colleges and private career colleges. Of course, there will be valuable information at the local constituency office.

I want to thank the Premier and Minister John Milloy for a new innovative program to provide long-term, full-time jobs and new skills for thousands of laid-off workers in our province.

HOCKEY NIGHT IN CANADA

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: Last week, it was announced that the CBC has decided to stop licensing the theme for Hockey Night in Canada. The theme song has been used for almost 40 years, playing at the beginning and end of the NHL broadcasts.

Like many Ontarians, I was surprised and a little saddened by this announcement. In my household, when the theme song came on, it meant the end of the talking and the socializing. It was time to watch hockey.

While it may seem strange to some a theme song could be such a big part of the Canadian consciousness, the fact is that it is uniquely Canadian. It's something that can be heard in households in rural Ontario or a pub in downtown Toronto. It's so recognizable that many people even have it for their cellphone ring tone.

Over the weekend, the show of support for the song has been unbelievable. Radio shows, newspapers and blogs have been posting comments from Canadians who want the CBC to keep the theme song. I think I speak for many of my colleagues when I say that I hope the CBC and the song's composer can work out their differences and keep the theme song on the air.

We need to cherish our unique pieces of Canadian culture, and you really can't get much more Canadian than hockey on a Saturday night.

FOREIGN-TRAINED DOCTORS

Mr. Phil McNeely: I am pleased to speak in the House today about the recent release of this government's report on international medical doctors. This report is a result of the hard work of my colleague from Etobicoke-Lakeshore, in which she presented five key recommendations as to how Ontario can further increase its number of internationally trained doctors. The recommendations include helping make the registration process for international doctors easier and more streamlined, introducing a transitional licence, and more efficient assessments.

This report complements the progress the McGuinty government has already made in the last four years when it comes to international medical doctors. In fact, we've doubled the number of positions for international medical graduates from 90 spots to 200 spots. For the fourth straight year, more certificates were issued to international medical graduates than to Ontario graduates by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario.

Along with the report, this government will soon be introducing legislation that will build even further on this progress. This is good news for our hard-working internationally trained doctors as they enter practice in this province. It is also very good news for the Ontario families looking for a family doctor.

This government wants to ensure that Ontarians get the help and care that they need. The insights and recommendations from this report are another way that we are accomplishing that goal. Thank you, Laurel Broten, for your great work.

PAYDAY LOANS ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 CONCERNANT LES PRÊTS SUR SALAIRE

Mr. McMeekin moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 48, An Act to regulate payday loans and to make consequential amendments to other Acts / Projet de loi 48, Loi visant à réglementer les prêts sur salaire et à apporter des modifications corrélatives à d'autres lois.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Further debate? Mr. McMeekin.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: It's again a privilege for me to rise in this House to take up third reading of the government's proposed Payday Loans Act, 2008. I should just say at the outset that I will be sharing my lead-off time with my parliamentary assistant, Charles Sousa, who is opposite and is eager to get going, I suspect.

I know you will permit me a moment to thank all members for the passion and professionalism demonstrated throughout the debate that followed second reading of this important proposed legislation. The debate was lively and the arguments were well presented on both sides, as both sides of the House recognize the importance that this legislation has to many Ontarians.

On a personal note, let me just share that, as members know, there was a four-week period or so where I was at home recovering from some surgery. I got to watch a fair bit of TV. I got to watch the best two political teams on television: CNN, which was covering primarily the Democratic debate, and of course the Legislative Assembly, which I watched with a great deal of eagerness.

Mr. Bruce Crozier: You've got to get a life.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: My friend said I should get out more often, but it was really good to hear so many friends in this place on all sides of the House, who stood to pass on their prayers and good wishes my way. I want to take a minute, if I might be allowed, to say thank you for that. My spirits really were buoyed, and I think my recovery was expedited as a result of all the caring and sharing that was going on.

At the outset I want to give a word of special thanks regarding second reading and subsequent to Charles Sousa, my parliamentary assistant. Our colleague had already impressed many of us in this place with his role as MPP. As my parliamentary assistant, he delivered again by making over and over again the powerful arguments in support of the need for regulation and stability within the payday lending industry. Well done, Charles. You did good, and I'm proud of you.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Be careful, Ted. You've got a whole classroom up there behind you. Don't lose them.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: We certainly want to welcome the class up there as well, who are seeing democracy here at its finest.

I want to also take a minute to thank the ministry staff, who so often do so much of the real legwork and all too frequently aren't acknowledged for the wonderful work they do. I want to take a minute to thank them personally and read their names into the record. On the policy front: John Mitsopoulos and his team, which included Frank Denton, Jeff Hurdman, Diane Zimnica and Christina Christophe, who were very instrumental in pulling some of the policy issues together. On the communications side: Jennifer Lang, Scott Williams, Rose Bliss, Nemone Smith and Sherry Chartrand—wonderful people who did a really good job working to bring this day and this possibility forward. Let the record record that for historical purposes. When their grandchildren one day say, "What did you do at Queen's Park?" they'll be able to go back and say, "We put the first piece of payday loan legislation—which has been changed many times since, to be improved—into the books."

I'm pleased to say that we've achieved what appears to be broad support for the passage of Bill 48 on both sides of this House. I am so very, very proud that, notwithstanding some of the specific technical differences we may have—and may have when this debate is over—at least we all recognize in this place the need for this legislation. That's really important.

Two weeks ago, I had the pleasure and the privilege of addressing the Standing Committee on General Government. They commenced the depositions and began clause-by-clause analysis of Bill 48. I thank all members of the committee for their diligence, for their hard work and for their passion with respect to this bill.

I restated at that time my belief that this proposed legislation strikes a precise and positive balance where payday lending is concerned. On one hand, there is a demand for better consumer protection in this industry. There's also the need for a fair and stable marketplace that will prevent consumers from going underground to get short-term loans. I'm happy to say that the proposed Payday Loans Act, 2008, does exactly that: striking, as I referenced, that precise and positive balance between the two major concerns involved in this issue.

The members of this House should know that many Ontarians do, indeed, have short-term requirements for payday lending services. They sometimes need money for necessities, something to tide them over before the next payday. Our proposed legislation of the industry is designed to protect them as consumers, but I've also made the case that the proposed legislation is a solid step in the fight against sustained, cyclical poverty in Ontario. It's more than that, but it's a significant step there as well. It's an important step, as all of us within government and all across Ontario know, that will help us focus more intently on the wide-ranging challenges associated with poverty in our beloved province.

To that end, I pledge to work tirelessly to move forward to better protect vulnerable consumers. That's our job as a government and as a House. I'm asking all members to join today in doing the same. From many of the fine submissions arising out of the committee process, you can see the clear need for this legislation and how cyclical debt continues to keep many of our citizens economically marginalized. The facts on the ground in many low-income areas across the province bear daily witness to this need.

As our friends from the United Way of Toronto shared with the committee, their Losing Ground report on poverty estimates that in 1995 there were 39 payday lending and cash-chequing outlets in Toronto. By 2007, they counted 317 such storefronts, the majority of which are situated in neighbourhoods targeted for support by the United Way. That's an eightfold increase just in Toronto alone. It's a concern for everyone in communities all across Ontario. It's a deep-felt concern, I know.

It is clear that continuing to allow the unregulated conduct of this necessary financial activity—often in low-income neighbourhoods—will only further the problem of cyclical debt. When you factor in harmful lending practices such as the so-called rollover loans, it was imperative to take action. That is why I am pleased to state again that our proposed legislation will provide for a stable, regulated payday lending industry in which customers will be protected and treated fairly.

Through the fine and dedicated work of my predecessor the Honourable Gerry Phillips, this government had already required the industry to provide clear and prominent disclosure regarding the total cost of borrowing on these loans. That move alone has helped us to better protect many consumers.

The passage of Bill 48 will do even more. We will license the entire industry, prohibit harmful lending practices and provide an extensive consumer protection and enforcement regime. We will also help to educate the public on issues of financial literacy, and we will do this through an education fund paid for by the payday lending industry itself.

Finally, an expert panel will recommend to the government a limit on the maximum total cost of borrowing associated with payday loan agreements. We are committed to getting this job done, and done as quickly as possible.

I want to tell you now what some very important outside observers have said about our proposed legislation.

Judy Vashti Persad of the Toronto and York Region Labour Council said, "We are pleased that the government has recognized the need for legislation to regulate the payday lending industry."

Edward Lantz of ACORN, a wonderful community service organization that helps so many people—and I see some nods in the House from those who have had the privilege, as we have, of knowing of their good work—tells us that "their members are encouraged that there will be a licensing regime introduced, that there will be inspections and that there will be a ban on the hidden fees that have caused so many problems for low- and moderate-income people across Ontario."

Patti Smith of National Money Mart said, "Speaking on behalf of a company that's actively sought government regulation for many years, I am delighted to see [this] legislation. Voluntary adoption of best business practices, as Money Mart has done for years, can only go so far. We need a government-mandated level playing field for all operators so that we can deliver industry-wide protection to consumers."

With all that said, I believe this House is about to do the right thing regarding payday loans. When this legislation passes, we will indeed have the strongest payday lending rules in the entire country. And we're going to get right to work on producing the important limit on the maximum total cost of borrowing. Payday customers will be better informed, payday customers will be better protected, and payday customers will be better able to address the needs of themselves and their families.

The proposed legislation would create a regulatory framework that encourages fair competition and discourages cycles of debt dependency, especially for those Ontarians who can least afford it. I think that has to be good news for all of us here in the House.

Again, I want to thank the committee members for their great work; Mr. Sousa for his active role and incredibly hard work and those long, long hours spent debating what seemed like so many fine points with respect to guiding this legislation down through the line; and you, Madam Speaker, for the time you kindly afforded me to make our case from this side of the House. Thank you very much.

Mr. Charles Sousa: Thank you, Minister, for your remarks and kind words. I want to say it has been a real privilege to participate with members from all sides to help bring this bill forward. I am pleased to stand with Minister McMeekin today and speak to some important details of Bill 48, the Payday Loans Act, 2008.

If passed, this progressive piece of legislation would strengthen protections for Ontario consumers and their families. The bill would protect those Ontarians who from time to time rely on payday loans to help them through a short-term financial squeeze. It would modernize and regulate Ontario's payday lending industry in a fair and balanced manner.

The minister introduced Bill 48 on March 31, 2008. Before introduction, we consulted broadly with industry and consumer groups and with academic groups to gain valuable insight on the direction Ontario should take in this matter. We also co-operated closely with our provincial counterparts to ensure a harmonized approach where possible—all this to protect consumers who rely on payday loans.

On May 1, 2008, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on General Government. During those two days of public hearings, we received many fine submissions. We consistently heard delegates' support for creating a stable and fair regulatory framework for the payday lending industry. I want to refer to one of these submissions. Gillian Mason, vice-president of strategic initiative and community partnerships, addressed the committee on behalf of the United Way of Toronto, an agency that does phenomenal work in providing a wide range of social services in this city.

Through its work, the United Way has seen the challenges that economically disadvantaged consumers face in society. It's these Ontarians, our most vulnerable consumers, that this bill is particularly intended to protect. Ms. Mason told us, "We are pleased that your regulatory framework does appear to have teeth. It is sound public policy that lenders who do not follow the rules will risk penalties, prosecution and possibly revocation of their licence. A balanced approach of meaningful enforcement and enhanced consumer education makes sense to us."

Let me take some time to highlight once again the strengths, or "teeth," of Bill 48. We understand that all consumers deserve equal and strong protections from harmful lending practices. As I mentioned during the committee hearings, full disclosure and enforcement are priorities within this proposed act. If passed, Bill 48 would create a licensing regime for payday lenders and payday loan brokers. This would immediately provide all users of payday loans with strengthened protections against dishonest operators in the industry.

Once licensed, lenders who don't follow the rules risk penalties. How are we going to enforce this? A registrar will be appointed under the proposed act to administer the legislation. The registrar would have the authority to conduct inspections of the business premises of a licensee. Subject to an appeal procedure, the registrar would be able to revoke or suspend licences. Also, the consumer protection branch of the Ministry of Government and Consumer Services would administer the administrative monetary penalty provisions. If convicted, a corporation could face a maximum fine of $250,000. If convicted, an individual could face a maximum fine of $50,000 or a maximum term of imprisonment of two years less a day, or both. We believe these types of penalties will make licensees think very seriously about breaking the law.

As we discussed during second reading, Bill 48 also proposes banning a variety of harmful practices that currently exist in the payday lending industry, such as rollover loans, concurrent loans, inflated default charges and discounting loan principles. To demonstrate how these practices get out of control, consider this example. A 23-year-old making $30,000 per year has to use a payday lender to get through a rough spell and finds him- or herself rolling one loan into another for weeks on end. This, all too often, comes about because the consumer cannot pay off their loan within the original loan term. The consumer rolls over the loan, and the cost of borrowing compounds with each rollover. This results in the consumer having to repay many times more than the original amount advanced. We won't allow this to happen under our proposed legislation.

Under Bill 48, payday loan borrowers would also be protected with a critical cooling-off period. The borrower would have two business days to cancel their payday loan agreement without penalty. The borrower doesn't need a reason to cancel the agreement. In short, the proposed Payday Loans Act, 2008, has been designed to prevent the lender from profiting from the borrower's inability to repay the loan.

I want to go back to another submission made before the committee. Neighbourhood Legal Services for London and Middlesex wrote, "We are pleased to see that under the proposed legislation a 'payday loan' company would be prohibited from making concurrent and back-to-back loans. It also appears the legislation will prevent payday lenders from imposing unreasonable default charges or cancellation fees. Again, we believe these are significant steps that are needed."

Indeed, creating a level playing field for all operators and banning prohibited practices are important steps forward in stabilizing and modernizing the payday lending industry.

I would like to talk now about perhaps the most important element of the bill, which is the Ontario payday lending education fund. The fund would help educate consumers in regard to financial planning and literacy. It would also promote awareness so that consumers better understand their rights and obligations under the proposed legislation.

The United Way, which I commend for playing a leadership role in this area, told us, "This is a good start on consumer education and it appears there may be more things to come. We look forward to learning more about the proposed Ontario payday lending education fund to be financially supported by payments from payday lenders and loan brokers. We agree with you on the need to educate the public, particularly with respect to financial planning, and we share your expectations that this can result in better-informed consumers."

Creating smart consumers is a strategy at the heart of Ontario's Consumer Protection Act, 2002, one of the most sweeping and proactive pieces of consumer legislation in the world. For several years, the McGuinty government has strengthened protections for Ontarians with amendments to the Consumer Protection Act, 2002, because we know that smart, informed consumers are good for business and a strong economy.

This bill springboards off the progress we have made. As the Honourable Stan Keyes, president of the Canadian Payday Loan Association, said, "Bill 48 follows legislative changes enacted in 2007 to improve disclosure and transparency for customers. This includes the requirement to prominently display posters that disclose the cost of borrowing for payday loans—something we advocated for—and the use of a standard form disclosing the details of a loan. By adding to those disclosure provisions by prohibiting rollovers and ending abusive charges, the government will ensure that payday loan customers are able to understand and compare rates and be protected from abusive practices. These are fundamental issues and we are pleased to see them dealt with in legislation."

The bottom line is that the education fund and full disclosure of information would give consumers more knowledge and clarity when they make borrowing decisions.

Finally, this proposed legislation would allow us to set a maximum total-cost-of-borrowing limit that can be charged in payday loan agreements. This proposed act prohibits hidden fees. If a consumer wishes to borrow $300, all amounts that the consumer is required to pay to a lender to receive the $300 are considered "cost of borrowing." It would be an offence to request or receive payment of the cost of borrowing before the end of the loan term. Again, it doesn't matter if charges are called interest, brokerage fees, administration charges or any other name; they are all part of the cost of borrowing.

Ontario will establish an independent expert advisory board to recommend to the minister what an appropriate upper limit would be to the total cost of borrowing for payday loan agreements in the payday lending industry. Board members will be selected from the consumer sector, the financial sector and the academic community. As I said to members during second reading, it is essential to set the limit on the maximum total cost of borrowing for payday loan agreements in regulation based on the solid advice and recommendations of an expert board. It is necessary to establish an effective total cost of borrowing that both protects consumers and provides them with access to credit from legitimate operators, as opposed to the alternative: going underground.

Let me conclude by reiterating what the minister said earlier. The passage of Bill 48 would give us the strongest payday lending rules in Canada. I, too, want to thank the Standing Committee on General Government and those who came before the committee. Their advice on how to improve and advance this important piece of public policy was invaluable and much appreciated. I also congratulate the many members of staff who have worked long and tirelessly on this bill. I take this opportunity to also thank them in advance for the dedication that will be required in drafting regulations.

This government wants to modernize and regulate the payday lending industry and increase public confidence. We want to better protect those Ontarians who, from time to time, rely on payday loans. We want to create a level playing field in the payday lending industry that protects both consumers and investors. I hope that all members in the Legislature share this view. Fellow colleagues, with your support we look forward to the passage of the Payday Loans Act, 2008.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments?

Mr. Norm Miller: It's my pleasure to add some comments on the speech made by the Minister of Government and Consumer Services and the member from Mississauga South on Bill 48, which is An Act to regulate payday loans and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

I think all parties agree that it's time that this industry have some rules to protect the borrowers taking advantage of payday loans. Certainly, as the minister pointed out, in the last 15 years we've seen a proliferation of the number of these businesses set up in towns and cities around the province of Ontario. It's those who can least afford to borrow money from these payday loan operations that are being taken advantage of, in many cases, so it's important that this bill limit the maximum borrowing costs.

I guess the question I would have is: What is the maximum interest rate going to be? What is the maximum total cost of borrowing going to be? As I understand it, it's going to be some panel that's going to make a recommendation. But that is obviously pretty important. I think all parties support this bill, and we look forward to the government getting on with it, to getting on with the job.

There are some questions about the new bureaucracy they might be creating with the Ontario Payday Lending Education Fund Corp. and what that means exactly. I think I'd just concentrate on improving the business and general education and hopefully not creating another new bureaucracy, because I think we have enough bureaucracy in the province of Ontario.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: It's going to be a delight to give the lead address on this bill. I love to speak about loan sharks and I delight in speaking about usurers. It reminds of my former profession as a United Church minister, one that I share with Minister McMeekin across the aisle. So that's what I'll be doing. Hopefully I'll be giving voice to those who were voiceless at the deputations. The ones who did not come before the deputation committee to give their witness were the ones who actually are the victims of the loan sharks and the usurers. So I hope to give them voice.

We heard from those who work with them. We heard from ACORN, Parkdale legal, United Way and Justice Matters. We heard from all of those groups that work with those who did not have a voice. They certainly gave them voice, and I hope to amplify that voice in this House.

Make no mistake about it: What we're speaking about is an illegal activity that is going on right now in our municipalities, on just about every corner. Why do I call it illegal? Because it is. Under the Criminal Code of Canada, anybody who charges more than 60% interest is a loan shark, is a usurer, is in contradistinction to the law of the country of Canada. That's what these folk do. They look legitimate, but they're not legitimate.

This bill is a very small first step towards legitimizing something. Our concern in the New Democratic Party is what is legitimated: Would the final regulations that go forward be something that's going to be south of the 60% mark; that is to say, something that is not usury and that is not loan-sharking?

I will take great pleasure, as I did on committee, in speaking at length about this.

Mr. Mario Sergio: I'm delighted to join my voice, even if briefly, with respect to the approval, hopefully soon, of Bill 48. I have to laud and praise Minister Ted McMeekin and his PA for Mississauga South for doing the consultative process on this particular piece of legislation. I hear that there is wide support in the House. I think the question is not if this will be approved, if it will pass through this House; it's a question of how soon we can make it happen.

I remember that in 2003-04, when we still had in those days the consumer and business services ministry, we initiated this process, because the government understood at the time that there was a huge need; there was a void. We had a very unregulated market which was taking advantage of consumers in general.

I'm pleased to see today that we are finally there. We are doing third reading and hopefully will approve legislation as soon as possible. I think the market is not only ready, but I think it is important that we move into this area and provide the necessary legislation, with the necessary regulation, to provide protection for our consumers. It doesn't affect a particular area; it affects our general area. I think it's time that we indeed recognized that this is an industry that needs to be regulated by legislation and not let run as it did, without any protection for the last few years.

I've heard both the minister and the member for Mississauga South as to some of the regulations that we look to impose. It's not only the protection that we provide within Bill 48, but also some of the consequences for those irresponsible who keep on abusing our consumers. I hope that it passes soon.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: I'm pleased to add a few comments with respect to Bill 48, the Payday Loans Act. It is time that the government did address this issue. This is a situation that has gotten seriously out of hand in the last couple of years. I can even comment, in my riding of Whitby-Oshawa, on the number of new payday loan operations that are opening up at an ever-increasing rate. So I think it is something that we do need to have regulated for the purpose of protecting the vulnerable clients who use them most often. I think that even the legitimate payday loan operators are in support of this. They want to be regulated so that the bad apples out there don't diminish the work that they're trying to do on a legitimate basis.

We do support this kind of legislation, but as far as the official opposition is concerned, we do have some concerns with respect to the Ontario payday lending education fund. We are concerned about how effective it's going to be in terms of teaching financial literacy to those people who need some assistance with this. We see so many consumers who are getting caught up in cyclical debt. They have to go from payday loan to payday loan in order to survive and often have to carry that debt into other periods of time, thus building up more and more debt as time goes on.

There is really a great need for greater consumer education in this area. I'm not sure that this fund, as it's set up, is going to be able to do that. I could speak to the fact that the Canadian Bankers Association, for example, has an excellent student program. They will actually come to the high schools and teach finance and commerce courses that they have in high schools to teach our young people about how to budget and set up household funds and to live within their means.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Teach them about 40-year mortgages.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: As the member from Welland mentioned, talking about not getting into 40-year amortizations on mortgage loans and so on, it seems like a good thing at the time, but we need to learn to live within our means.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Response?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: I want to thank the member from Parry-Sound Muskoka, the member from Parkdale-High Park, my colleague from York West, and the member for Whitby-Oshawa for her comments.

Let me just say in response that I believe it's not our role to employ or to destroy the payday lending industry; it's our role to regulate the industry and make sure it operates well. We would have preferred, frankly, had the federal government gotten involved and taken its responsibility to define a formula right across the country, but unfortunately that didn't happen. So we're working with our provincial counterparts to try as best we can to avoid the evolution of a patchwork quilt of requirements, and note that a couple of provinces have been moving, like us, in the direction of aggressively protecting consumers.

We have a lot of optimism and confidence in the expert panel getting the kind of input that the general government standing committee got and shaping recommendations around the total cost of borrowing. We continue to believe that an informed and educated consumer is a smart consumer, and any time we can do anything of significance to enhance the consumer literacy of the people of Ontario, that obviously stands us all in better stead.

I agree with the couple of members opposite who say that it's time to get on with it, so let's do it.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Further debate?

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: I appreciate joining the debate today on behalf of the official opposition as the critic for government and consumer services.

I want to start off, however, by congratulating my colleague from Carleton-Mississippi Mills for his 31st anniversary in this place. Mr. Sterling and I both represent a very wonderful part of the city of Ottawa, the old Carleton county. I know in many of his terms he actually represented many of the folks that I now represent. On behalf of them, I would like to thank him for the many great years of service he's given, not only to Carleton county but to the new city of Ottawa. So thank you very much, Norm.

Applause.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: I don't think he ever expected there would be so many Liberals applauding him over his 31-year career, but that's wonderful. He's a fine fellow.

It comes as no surprise that the official opposition will be supporting this legislation; we said so from the beginning. In fact, our criticisms of the bill were to improve it. I will outline them today, because I still think there is room for improvement on this piece of legislation. Having said that, the Conservative Party, in the form of the official opposition here today, will vote in favour of this legislation. It is because there has been a demonstrated niche, for whatever reason, in this country for payday loans.

I will touch briefly on the fact that I believe that we need greater consumer protections in this province. The last time we saw far-reaching consumer protections in this province was in 2002, when the member for Niagara West-Glanbrook was the minister of consumer protection. In fact, under the former Progressive Conservative government, there was actually a ministry dedicated to protecting consumers. The Liberal government eliminated the consumer and business services ministry and put the consumer protection responsibilities under the Ministry of Government Services.

When you look at some of the issues that we face as part of this legislation—or that we faced even last week under Tony Ruprecht's bill for protection against identity theft—these issues haven't been addressed. Instead, this piece of legislation is couched under “addressing poverty,” but we all in this Legislature know that just putting caps or lending rates in place is not going to actually get at the root cause of poverty. This should have been a consumer protection bill; it should have been a fiscal or an economic bill. It should have dealt with the cycle of debt that people in Ontario get into, and it should have been firmly entrenched in the mandate of this legislation to protect consumers. I think that's where I have an issue. One of my colleagues just minutes ago asked me if this bill dealt at all with credit cards. No, it does not. It also does not deal with Internet payday loans. These are some of the key issues that we need to deal with. They have not been dealt with in this legislation, although I will say we will vote for it because it is a start.

When we were discussing the payday loan industry during second reading, I thought it was helpful to bring forward some research that I had done with the Library of Parliament, because I wanted to know a little bit more about the payday loan industry in this country and how it developed. It is easy at first blush to say this is usurious, this is criminal activity, but then you have to actually look back at why it developed. Through the Library of Parliament, I read a great dissertation by Andrew Kitching of the Law and Government Division and Sheena Starky of the Economics Division of the Library of Parliament. I think everyone here would agree that Canada's foremost research bureau is the Library of Parliament. I had a great opportunity when I was working on Parliament Hill to get research from them. They do wonderful and thoughtful things.

They did a paper entitled Payday Loan Companies in Canada: Determining the Public Interest. The objective and impartial findings of this research team concluded, “The payday loan industry presents an interesting situation for policy makers, where both the public interest and the best course of action are somewhat unclear.” I think we struggled with that during committee hearings. They added an interesting observation in their conclusion: “Criminal prosecution, however, could eliminate the payday loan industry and, in the absence of increased servicing by traditional lenders,” such as the banks, “leave some consumers without access to the credit or convenience they desire.” I think that through the dissertation—I do have this paper available here if any of my colleagues would like to see it—it became very clear that there is a point in this debate where we have to consider access to credit and the convenience that consumers desire. I think that's why this piece of legislation missed the boat when it was decided it was going to be a poverty bill rather than a consumer protection bill, because, again, it doesn't deal with the root problems of poverty, which we all see, regardless of our constituency, in this great province.

That's an important point and it means that the debate on payday loans is actually about choice. It is there by demand. It is there for free, willing and able-thinking people in Ontario. As a credit counselling society once said, “We believe that consumers are better served in a healthy and competitive marketplace instead of a marketplace with fewer providers.” That's why I'm happy that the minister has acknowledged that we're not trying to employ, but we're also not trying to put out of business, payday lenders, because, quite honestly, who we should be trying to put out of business are the dubious lenders out there, the people we have no control over, the people who are not operating in the light of day. We have no idea what they're doing and we certainly don't want to push vulnerable citizens into their hands.

I think that's where my struggle began when I was researching this piece of legislation. I think it's so important that we all support regulating the industry so that we do get those scammers out of the payday loan industry.

Bob Whitelaw, who was one of our deputants during the committee hearings, said there were 750 payday loan operators in Ontario offering small, short-term loans as an advance before an individual receives a paycheque, pension cheque, employment insurance payments or social assistance payments based on direct deposit. He acknowledged that the industry was growing and that one major company recently announced a strategic change to open a store in every community with a population of 7,500 rather than the current base of 40,000 or more. I think that's why, in communities right across this country, you're seeing more, more and more of these groups of stores.

He asks, "Why do Canadians use payday loans rather than traditional credit products, such as lines of credit, overdraft protection and access ... on credit cards?" He makes the point that I think we're all trying to get at: "Simply put, there is no financial institution today that will provide small, convenient short-term loans, that type of product that responds to the increasing consumer acceptance and use of payday loans, except for the payday business."

When you further delve into that—it's something that the Library of Parliament also pointed to—people are using these more and more for convenience. I think that's why, more and more, we have to make sure that there are rules regulating the system so that only the people who are going to play by the rules are in the game. I think that's a very valid point.

As I move forward in terms of talking about some of the ongoing research, Environics clearly indicated in its recent poll that an increasing number of Canadians are living from paycheque to paycheque. I think that also speaks to the fact that we're in a cycle of debt. We're a credit card economy. A credit card economy means that there is a deeper root to that problem than just payday loans. I think it warrants a greater look by the minister and perhaps this finance minister as to why people are living from paycheque to paycheque in this province. Environics confirmed that more than one third of Canadians are living paycheque to paycheque, as they indicate that they are in some financial jeopardy if their pay is held back two or three days. Bob Whitelaw says that that's 33% of Canadians. I think we ought to be concerned by that.

I just would like to talk very briefly about some of the criticisms I do have of the bill, even as it stands. I believe that the bill has gone to a certain length. I think there were places where we could have improved the legislation. I think that, first and foremost, it's educating people about their own financial state. We need to be talking more about fiscal literacy, and I don't believe that it's been adequately addressed in this piece of legislation. Again, I think it strikes the fact that we're not talking about consumer protection here; we're not talking about the fact that there is a broad spectrum of people in this province using payday loans for various reasons and that we need to make sure they are doing what they should be doing.

I'll just go to Chris Robinson, who appeared before committee. He said that the payday lending education fund is "a waste of time and money." I'll continue to read: "The problem of lack of financial capacity or financial literacy is much broader than payday lending. The social problems that provide ready demand for payday loans, even at very high rates, are much deeper and more fundamental than a lack of understanding of payday lending. If we wish to reduce the harm from payday loans by education, we need to provide consumer financial education to cover all three areas of concern. An understanding of payday loans and avoidance or minimization of them would be a natural consequence for anyone who has the broader education."

My colleague from Whitby-Oshawa had indicated earlier that that is a concern of ours in the piece of legislation. We drew the comparison in the party that the Canadian Bankers Association is teaching younger Ontarians. One of the resolutions that I had actually put forward on this legislation was to encourage students in high schools to start learning more about their own fiscal literacy. Unfortunately, that was defeated by the Liberals.

I think that until we're ready to delve more deeply into the root causes of why people are actually going to payday loans—and that is poverty, but it's also that we've got a new generation of a credit card economy. People, when they want something, go and get it. It's not like the good old days when people used to save their pennies.

I remember, when I was a kid, saving my money for a trip. I used to put it into one of those big water bottles. In fact, that's what I'm starting to do with my own little girl right now. We go home and we have a little fund for her. We're trying to teach her fiscal responsibility, but my gosh, it's not happening anymore. We're going to have to start talking about those sorts of issues, and that's why I will always advocate for fiscal literacy courses at the high school level.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: Well, my daughter's three, so I'd better not give her much more of an allowance. I'll be in the broke house before she's 31, before she's here as long as Norm's been in the Legislature.

Further, I just want to go on to another issue that I have with the piece of legislation, which is that caisses populaires and credit unions are still included in this legislation, despite being part of another regulatory framework through the Minister of Finance. So now we're going to doubly regulate credit unions and caisses populaires. I'm not sure how good that's going to be for business. Credit Union Central of Ontario provided me with some notes. I know they have written to the minister and have asked that credit unions and caisses populaires be specifically exempt from Bill 48.

When I put that resolution forward, it was defeated by the Liberals, of course, but I'd like to just point out some of the things they have written:

"Section 3 of the act states, 'This act does not apply to persons, entities or payday loans or classes of persons, entities or payday loans that are prescribed.'

"Currently, credit unions are exempt from the provisions of the Consumer Protection Act, including the provisions of the regulations thereunder dealing with payday loans. Compliance with that statute is enforced by the Ministry of Government and Consumer Services.

"The credit union system is concerned about the possibility of having two different ministries regulating different but related aspects of its business.

"We are of the view that it would be more efficient from the government's and taxpayer's point of view to have DICO and/or FSCO carry out all regulatory functions with respect to the operations of credit unions, rather than to assign this small part of its business to a different ministry.

"If credit unions will not receive an absolute exemption from the operation of the bill, then we are of the view that it would be preferable to add parallel provisions dealing with potential 'payday lending' by credit unions to the anticipated draft general regulations under the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires Act (which haven't been released yet—but the new act passed in the 2007 budget bill), and amend the bill to deem compliance by credit unions with their own legislative and regulatory requirements with respect to payday lending to be in compliance with the provisions of the bill."

They conclude: "We feel the government, taxpayers and the credit union system are better off exempting credit unions from Bill 48, and provide parallel provisions to regulate potential payday lending by credit unions under our own regulatory regime."

I couldn't agree more, but this government has found, at every opportunity, a way to increase the regulatory burden on businesses right across this province. That disappoints me.

I'd like to go on further. I just want to talk briefly about the regulations, because this bill is going to be dealt with mainly by regulations. In fact, if we talk about the expert panel—the expert panel, I might add, that didn't include Chris Robinson or Bob Whitelaw, two of the foremost thinkers on payday loans—much of it is designated by regulation. I think that's what's concerning. Whether you're looking at the Ontario payday loan corporation, whether you're looking at the expert panel, a lot of this is left to the discretion of the minister, and in the interests of accountability, it ought not to be. It ought to have been dealt with in this piece of legislation, which it wasn't.

In fact, when you look at the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires Act, that is now going to rely on more regulations at the minister's discretion. I might add, too, in terms of the 2002 all-encompassing piece of legislation I mentioned that the Progressive Conservative government brought in under the member for Niagara West—Glanbrook, many of the regulations have not been met yet. Whether it's the bereavement sector or the racing sector or whether it's used cars, this government has been slow to respond. I think that is a real concern when you're looking at the legislation before us right now. A lot of what we're going to see in terms of how this sector will be managed will be dealt with in regulations, will not be debated on the floor of this Legislature. I think that is very concerning to Ontarians.

I mentioned the expert panel and my concerns there. I think the final concern I have is that there is no Internet payday loan protection. I think that was something Bob Whitelaw succinctly pointed out during the debate. He said, "Bill 48 is silent on how to acknowledge and respond, through legislation and compliance, to the growth in Internet payday loan firms. My research, and I've shared this with the Senate," of Canada, I presume, "shows that there are 1,200 or more existing online payday firms."

How can you offer consumer protection in this province against payday loans when anybody with a computer can now go ahead and get one? You're not regulating that and protecting consumers against Internet payday loans. You're either going to do this well, or you're not going to do it right. I think by ignoring the fact that we need it—and it was a resolution of mine, supported by my colleague in the third party, that was defeated yet again by the Liberals. I think that in the true interest of consumer protection, if we are prepared to regulate payday loan operators on the streets of this city of Toronto, the streets of my city of Ottawa and the streets of your city of Hamilton, then we'd better be regulating the folks right across this province and in other countries who are offering the same. In the interest of consumer protection, that is the right thing to do.

Bob Whitelaw continues: "A Web-based application form is all that's required. Considerable personal and bank account information is filled out online and then the payday loan is transferred into your account, and a few days later the funds are withdrawn to repay the loan. These payday Internet firms do not exist only in Canada, but throughout the United States and internationally. There are issues on personal identification, privacy etc. When I mention these Internet groups to the credit unions and banks, they are less than thrilled to know that their customers and clients are providing a tremendous amount of personal information online."

I think that when you look at the context of what Bob Whitelaw is saying to the committee, and now through my words into this chamber, he's got a really valid concern. I think it goes back to the Tony Ruprecht bill of last week talking about identity theft. When you're putting that much personal information on the Web—

Mrs. Christine Elliott: It's dangerous.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: My colleague says that it's dangerous, especially for this type of money and this type of product. We had an opportunity, through clause-by-clause, to address that issue. The Liberals chose not to. As a result, I have real concerns that we are not adequately protecting Ontario's consumers.

I think that also means that we do need to bring forward more sweeping consumer protection changes throughout the province of Ontario. I think we need to deal with identity theft. I don't think it's new; I think that this has been a real concern. I look to my colleague Tony Ruprecht in bringing his bill forward four times. He's a former minister of the crown in the Liberal government, and he has had to bring this piece of legislation four times.

Mr. Peter Kormos: And a good minister, a darned good minister.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: My colleague from Welland says that he was a good minister, so there you have it.

Mr. Peter Kormos: And how does his caucus treat him?

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: Well, they let him put in a bill. My colleague asks, "Why does his caucus treat him the way they do?" I don't know. It's interesting to note that the four times he's brought in this piece of legislation on identity theft and protecting people's credit scores, he was in government. Actually, this is the interesting part of that piece of legislation we debated last week: It was first brought in by Joe Cordiano, who's a former minister of the crown over there. It passed last week, but we're not going to see any protections there.

We have the minister before us right now, and if he were for the interests of greater consumer protection, he would consider dealing with Internet payday loans, he would deal with Internet fraud, he would deal with credit scores, and he would put forward a piece of legislation like no other in this country to protect Ontario's consumers. I think that is why we're all concerned, because we're not seeing that.

We're regulating an industry right now where there is a group called the Canadian Payday Loan Association, or CPLA. They have a certain code of conduct and best business practices. I know that many of the members here are very familiar with Stan Keyes, who's the president. He may not be of the same political persuasion as me, but I certainly respect him as a former federal Minister of Revenue. And he had a lot of colleagues that I know.

Mr. Peter Kormos: He didn't have to be a Liberal.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: He didn't have to be a Liberal; no one does. Unfortunately, it happens.

Interjection.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: I'm not sure about that, but I will say this: They've hired this organization, the CPLA—and this is where I think you have to make a distinction, and the struggle that I had is that you've lumped everybody in with the same. When you look at a group like the Canadian Payday Loan Association, they have their own ombudsman, who actually investigates what's going on out in the field. They have a guy named Sidney Peckford. He lives in Ottawa, in my community—I think he was born in Newfoundland—so of course he is quite a guy. He was talking briefly about the code of business practices that they employ and that he is responsible for enforcing, which they adopted back in 2004. It has 18 sections designed to protect consumers.

Essentially, that's what we're adopting here today, and I think we could have gone one step further, because it really isn't the organizations that belong to CPLA that we're trying to get at. We're trying to get at the pawn shops; we're trying to get at the folks who are charging usurious rates and who go unnoticed, who don't have a storefront; we're trying to get at the people who are actually engaging in criminal activity—not the folks who are trying to provide a niche in the marketplace. As we learned from the Library of Parliament, there is a need in this country—not that we agree with it or anything, but there is—and it's really about providing a service that people believe is needed there.

As of 2004, for example, the Library of Parliament says that "there were an estimated 1,200 payday loan stores in Canada, although the industry is growing rapidly and there is no easy or official means of tallying the participants.

"Moreover, no authoritative information is available on industry revenues or profits." One study does suggest, however, that companies may use the broker and insurance models to minimize their risk of being charged with exceeding the criminal rates in Canada.

Before I conclude, because I have a few more minutes left on the clock and I know that, because I generally agree and I did get my points of contention out, I do want to go right back to the identity theft bill, which I believe should have been debated in full as a government bill. I don't think it should have been brought in here as a private member's piece of legislation, and I can't believe that we were duped last week. The government came in here to try and dupe us.

Mr. Peter Kormos: That's powerful language.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: Well, they came in here last week to try and tell us that they were doing something on consumer protection, and they chose not to. I might also add that I think there is a determination for change in the community. I think that when you're looking at a credit card economy and people are taking out credit cards in other people's names and we're looking at identity theft, that's a very serious issue that must be addressed.

In conclusion, I would just like to say that I support this bill. The official opposition will be supportive of this piece of legislation. I did lay out the issues of contention to us, such as fiscal literacy, which we're not doing enough about in this province and which I will continue to press on. I do believe that the caisses populaires and the credit unions should have been exempt from this piece of legislation just purely because they are already part of a regulatory framework with the finance minister.

I think that too much is in the regulations, and that is a scary thing when we're dealing with a piece of legislation designed to protect consumers and for these folks over here, designed to eliminate poverty. This bill, in their view, is to eliminate poverty, which I do not think, for one minute, it ever will. I think that it should have been a consumer protection piece of legislation.

I also believe that the expert panel is one that we'll have to watch—we'll have to see. The minister is able to reject the recommendations or not. The second thing is that, of course, we know that Mr. Chris Robinson was not included as an interviewee for this particular panel, and he is one of the foremost thinkers on this issue. And, of course, there's no mention of Internet payday loans. I don't know how you can have a consumer protection bill when you effectively eliminate one piece of the pie.

There we have it: There's what the official opposition believes. We will support this legislation, but we will continue to make sure that there are greater consumer protections in this province, and we will stand up for them here in this chamber and outside this chamber so that issues like identity theft, Internet payday loan scamming and other key issues that are very important to our constituents will be addressed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I look forward to the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments?

Mr. Peter Kormos: I, for one, want to thank and applaud the member for Nepean–Carleton for her thorough, thoughtful and astute analysis of this legislation, and the capable way in which she pointed out its shortcomings—shortcomings that could have been addressed had the Liberal majority on the committee bothered to pay attention and listen to the input by Ms. MacLeod on behalf of the Conservatives and Ms. DiNovo on behalf of the New Democratic Party.

Like so many others, I'm shocked that the government has persisted in bringing caisses populaires and credit unions into yet another regulatory regime that wasn't designed for them. These are co-operatives. These are run by boards of volunteers. They're the real backbone of the Ontario financial industry when it comes to small-town Ontario, rural Ontario. So I say to the minister, you'll have an opportunity in one minute to get on your feet and respond to the charge that you've been delinquent in not excluding credit unions and caisses populaires from the regulatory regime designed for payday lenders—your bill legitimizing mobsters and loan sharks.

In a few moments time, we're going to hear from Cheri DiNovo, the member for Parkdale–High Park. She's the NDP critic on this matter. I know that folks who are watching will bear with us for a few more minutes till Cheri DiNovo gets on her feet to discuss this bill. She, of course, has spearheaded the movement for regulation of payday lending here in the province of Ontario. We should be very grateful to her. All of this assembly should be.

If Ms. DiNovo sees fit to let me share some of her time, I may have the opportunity to speak to this bill myself for but a few minutes this afternoon. I would beg your indulgence in staying with us to allow me to talk to you about my views on this piece of legislation.

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: I'd like to thank the member for Nepean–Carleton for noting that it was 31 years ago today that I was first elected to the Legislative Assembly. I do want every member of this Legislature to know that although Mr. Bradley was elected the same day, I think I was sworn in before he was.

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: I don't know. I'm just saying that in jest.

But over the years that I have been here, and in a very historical context, I really believe that it is time for legislation like this to come to the floor of the Legislature. I'm glad to see all three parties supporting this legislation.

I'd like to give due regard to a friend of mine who is a former Liberal member from the now east end of Ottawa, Gilles Morin, who brought forward many private member's bills dealing with this particular subject matter. I do not know whether this bill is the same as that brought forward by Mr. Morin, but the thrust of the effort is the same as Gilles brought forward. So to one of my former colleagues—who probably is not watching, but perhaps I'll send him a copy of this Hansard—I'd like to congratulate him on keeping a focus on the issue for a long period of time. I think he used up two, three or maybe even four of his private member's slots in order to bring this issue to the floor of the Legislature. He was unsuccessful in passing them, but all good things come to an end.

Mr. Charles Sousa: I appreciate the comments from the members for Nepean–Carleton and Welland and the member from Carleton–Mississippi Mills. And congratulations on your tenure.

In regard to credit unions, let's address that now. Credit unions are legislated under the Ministry of Finance. They've requested parallel legislation and they've agreed to the terms and conditions as set out by Bill 48. At this point, the bill is there to protect consumers regardless of who's providing the services. Until such time as that's determined, we can possibly transfer it over. The minister has the power of exemption to do just that, but we want to continue to protect consumers in the meantime. So credit unions have that ability for exemption during the transition.

Another great point of interest was the whole notion of the bill being part of the poverty agenda, the education agenda and a fiscal matter. In fact, it is all three. I think it's important for us to address them and put this forward, regardless of where it is that it should be put. I think it's high time that we move forward.

The issue of Internet payday lending: It's a federal matter in terms of legislation. There is no jurisdiction to enable us to act on and enforce that legislation. What we have, however, is a bill that protects consumers regardless of whether it's a storefront or an Internet procedure. We have the ability to enforce it as it stands in terms of practice. I'd just bring that forward for the purposes of Hansard.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: I look forward to commenting on Bill 48. I hope I get an opportunity to have the minister or the PA respond to some of it.

First of all, when we talk about the federal government having jurisdiction over it, it's the same as the sex offender registry: The feds have one and we have one. Ours is more powerful than theirs, and we can set a precedent by which the feds will follow our lead.

There are two areas in which I have concern. Hopefully, this will open the door with regard to credit cards and what takes place with credit cards. The variable rate changes that happen without notification, the increasing of credit without notification of individuals, or the actual interest charges on credit cards—those are very substantial, and hopefully this will address and move forward on that.

But the area that I am hoping the minister or the PA will be able to enlighten us on is the actual impact on tax refund players. There are a number of significant individuals or organizations that will do taxes and offer refunds immediately, and there's the same mindset as with the payday loans individuals, whereby an individual comes in, and the documentation says it becomes somewhat addictive. What's going to happen with those individuals who get an immediate refund, paying high interest rates on tax refunds? Hopefully, some of this legislation will address it. When you read the legislation, it kind of covers it, but doesn't specifically lay out any groundwork that opens that door. I'm hoping I'm not going to hear it's something of a federal responsibility; I think we should be leading by example again, as we have in other cases.

These might be two areas that we can move forward on: credit cards and making sure the consumer is protected, as well as potentially tax refunds and what happens in that situation.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Response?

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: I want to congratulate my colleagues for getting involved in the debate. I want to thank my colleagues from Oshawa, Carleton-Mississippi Mills and Welland, and the parliamentary assistant. I appreciate their comments, but I would just like to reiterate the fact that I do think this bill falls short of our fiscal literacy goals in this province.

I think if the minister wanted, at his discretion, to exempt caisses populaires and credit unions, he would have done it in the bill.

I believe that a lot of this is dealt with by regulation, and my colleague from Oshawa makes a good point: Why not be leaders in dealing with Internet payday lending and not wait for the federal government? The federal government, after all, did delegate responsibility to the provinces to deal with payday loans. Regardless of what we may feel, that is the case, and as realists I think that's where we have to be. So as realists in this place, we must acknowledge that there are Internet payday lending firms throughout the world that are preying on our consumers.

Therefore, I believe we would have been far more prudent in dealing with a bill designed for consumer protection, a bill that would have dealt with the cycle of credit card abuse in this province and a bill that would have acknowledged that fiscal literacy rates in this province need to be improved, and we should be doing much more than the Ontario Payday Lending Corp. That doesn't mean that I even believe the Ontario Payday Lending Corp. will actually reach the people who need it the most.

As I am out of time, I thank all members for their spirited debate, and I reiterate that the Conservative Party will be supporting this piece of legislation. We believe it's long overdue, but there could have been a few more improvements.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Further debate?

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: I thank my colleague from Nepean-Carleton. She made some excellent points. Really, those who I want to address are the people who are watching at home.

I am going to share my time with the member from Welland. I actually owe the member from Welland a congratulatory nod, because the member from Welland brought in a payday lending bill before the one I brought in, before the one that Minister McMeekin brought in. His, however, was like mine: It had some teeth to it. It had a hard cap, and the hard cap we shared was the hard cap that Quebec has as law, which is 35%. I'll talk about that in a little while, because truly, in this particular bill, the devil is in the details. We're waiting on the regulation. The regulation really will be the bill because what this bill needs is a hard cap, and until and unless it has a hard cap, there really isn't any step forward. This is simply the door opening; nobody has yet walked through.

For those who are listening and watching at home, what we are speaking about here is a very straightforward financial product. I described it as loan sharking and usury, and that's what it is. That is what it is. The federal Criminal Code has defined usury in this country, and that is 60% interest or more. Those who are watching at home are saying, "Sixty per cent interest?" You'd have to be financially illiterate if you were middle class, had some means and had a credit card that charged you more than 30% interest. In fact, you could now go to your bank and get prime plus, which is round 4%. So if you have means in this country, you can get the cheapest financial loan possible. Here's the injustice: If you don't have means, if you are the poorest people in the province of Ontario, you will pay the highest rate of interest. If you go to a payday lender—that is, a usurer or a loan shark—you will pay more than 60%. Hence it is illegal, as defined by the Criminal Code. The fact is, the illegality of this product is not enforced. That's what we're dealing with. We're dealing with one little step toward enforcing what should have been enforced from the beginning. You know, this is proven in the courts over and over.

One of the wonderful deputants who came and spoke—and spoke, really, in the interests of those who are victimized by payday lenders—was Justice Matters. This paralegal organization makes their living by defending the victims of payday lenders, and they defend them on the basis of the Criminal Code. They take the payday lenders, including the big ones—Money Mart and the others—to court. In fact, there is a class action suit against Money Mart as we speak. They take them to court and they win every time. They win the interest they paid, the fees—all illegal—that they paid. But of course, the problem here is that the victims of payday lenders, the victims of this illegal, unregulated trade, usually don't know the law, and they usually don't have the time and the money to hire a lawyer to press for what is justifiably theirs. That's the situation we start from.

If you're interested in how much interest the payday lenders charge, let me tell you about a Star editorial a little while back. You suspect the hand of the Atkinson foundation behind the best of the Toronto Star. It did a whole series on payday lenders and a whole series on their victims. Here's one: Kim Elliott. She first borrowed $250 from a payday lender after her partner lost his job. She had no idea that the couple would entangle themselves in an escalating series of loans that would ultimately cost them $20,000 in interest and fees in less than three years. Carol Goar wrote a very insightful column, the title of which was, "1,000% Interest 1,000% Wrong."

When you go to a payday lender, you will pay between 300% and 1,000% interest. Now, I ask those who are watching at home if they think that's fair. It's certainly illegal; it's certainly unjust; certainly it screams out for regulation. It actually screams out for the RCMP to kick their foot through the door and arrest them. That's what it screams out for. Why, one might ask, has this not happened? Why has the Criminal Code not been enforced in this particular instance for this particular industry that has sprung up? As my colleague said, and she said it well, of course this whole industry is overshadowed by the greater problem of poverty. The reason people are driven to payday lenders is because they have run out of options. It's because they don't have options.

One of the deputants produced a series of polls done which were very suspect. It was a polling company bought and paid for by the payday lending association. A better source of information on who uses payday lenders is Statistics Canada. They said, and this was about a year ago, that families with $500 or less in the bank were 2.6 times more likely to have used payday loans than those with between $2,000 and $8,000. Short-term loans require no credit check and typically dole out amounts of about $100 to $1,500. Families who have been refused a credit card are more than three times as likely to have had a payday loan than those who had been granted a card, the report said. Almost half of the families that used them had spending that outstripped their incomes. And really, we're talking about 3% of Canadians who use payday lenders, so we are talking about those who don't have options.

I've told this story before in the House, but I remember going out campaigning at a Toronto community housing development where the average income was government cheques, and they were OW or ODSP; they were welfare cheques. Just before the cheques came out, a local payday lender put a door hanger on every single door. The door hanger said: "Free coffee and free doughnuts if you come down to our store. And by the way, you don't need a credit check, and we will give you, instantly, a cheque for what you need." I ask you, is that not usury? Is that not loan sharking?

You heard, "We want to deal with the more prestigious of the payday lenders," if you can apply that term to usurers and loan sharks—the larger ones, I presume, the ones like Money Mart, which we see more often on the corner than the other ones that are maybe one-offs or two-offs. But all of them do the same thing. They all of them charge between 300% and 1,000% interest—de facto interest, cost of borrowing, because of course they never call it interest; they call it default charges and rollover charges and everything else.

By the way, talking about rollovers, yes, this bill does say something about rollovers, but only within the same payday lender. What we have discovered with those who are forced to use payday lenders—and remember: They're not using them to buy an Hermès handbag; they're not using them to buy Dior shoes; they're using them to buy food for their children and pay their rent. That's what people go to payday lenders for. We discovered that if they can't get the loan from one payday lender, guess what they do? They walk down the street to the next payday lender. So even if you bring in something that prevents a rollover loan with one payday lender, it just means that you've rolled over the client to the next payday lender. That's all it means. That simply does nothing to prevent—licensing does nothing. That's a pretty little piece of paper that you hang on your wall that says, "I'm going to rip you off and the government says it's okay to do so." That's all a licence does.

What we really and desperately need, and what I've been given assurances that we will get by the time this House sits in September or October, is a hard cap on the total cost of borrowing. The question is, what will that hard cap be? I modelled my bill, with a 35% cap, on Quebec legislation. That is the strongest legislation in the country. I heard Minister McMeekin, who is a nice man, an honourable man, say that we will have the strongest payday legislation in the country. If it is, then it will have to be at least as strong as Quebec's, which is a 35% cap. That's the strongest in the country.

It was certainly interesting to be in the committee and to hear the deputants. I had serious concerns going into that committee; in fact, such serious concerns that I mirrored on behalf of our stakeholders that I did what I could to try to stall the bill going forward. I tried to slow it down. I tried to "speak out" the bill; in fact I think I spoke for 80 minutes out of about a four-hour session, and we took many 20-minute recesses. "Why?" you might ask. A few things. Number one: Some of our stakeholders were very concerned about this legislation. They were concerned that this might pre-empt the Criminal Code in a devious and nefarious way; that is to say, all of those paralegals and others who defend the victims of payday lenders, usurers and loan sharks? They are the ones that should be trusted, with any monies that come from this usurious industry, to be able to educate their own. So we're asking that if this education component goes forward into practice, it not be administered by the payday lending association but it be administered by those who are victims of payday lending.

Another aspect: I said to my husband, "If you ever wonder about where the power lies in the province of Ontario where fiscal products are concerned, you should have been in that committee room because," as I said at the outset, "in that committee room you did not see one victim of payday lenders, but you certainly did see a lot of payday lenders and bankers in that room." One could ask, "Why did the victims not come forward?"

There are a few very good reasons why the victims of usurers and loan sharks—the same thing as payday lenders—don't come forward. One is shame. Most people are ashamed that they are driven to payday lenders. Another very practical reason is that most people who are driven to payday lenders don't have computers. They're not checking on the Internet all the time to find out when government committees meet, and they don't read the Globe. They don't follow the goings-on of this Legislative Assembly. Many of them are working, sometimes one, sometimes two, sometimes more than two jobs.

I see them in my community. I see them drift in and shuffle out of payday lenders, heads bowed and covered. They're embarrassed. They are embarrassed about what they're doing. They know that there's something shameful about it. Unfortunately, what they don't know—and this is where the educational component is so important—is that the shame is not theirs; the shame should abide with those who are loan-sharking, who are usurious, with the payday lenders themselves. They are the ones that should be ashamed, not those who are desperate, who are walking in the door.

I can tell you that where they're set up in my community, it's almost always in the poorest of neighbourhoods. It's almost always where those with mental health and addiction problems are close to hand. Now I ask you, what kind of legitimate industry would give a payday loan to somebody with an OW or ODSP cheque who's clearly not of right mind? And I see many going in and out.

We actually did a little survey. There's a payday lender just outside of a drop-in centre, where everyone in the drop-in centre is on ODSP or OW. Almost everyone in the drop-in centre has a mental health issue, an addiction issue, or both. Those are the people who take their cheques right across the street—it's very handy; there are very few banks around in the poorer neighbourhoods—and cash their cheque. That's who uses payday lenders. And they should be ashamed, they should be very ashamed—not the people who use them, but the people who abuse them, should be ashamed.

The other aspect of payday lending, and what came to light in that room, is the presence of the banks, the presence of power behind the payday lending association and their many usurious, loan-sharking outlets. Who is invested in payday lending, one might ask? It's very clear—and ACORN has done some wonderful work on this—that the banks are invested in payday lenders. One has to ask: a usurious business that operates against the Criminal Code of Canada—why don't they shut them down? Why aren't the police called? The police aren't called because—guess what?—the head of the Canadian Payday Loan Association is a former Liberal revenue minister. That's why the police aren't called.

Those invested in a payday lending institute and association and all of their outlets—Royal Bank, Toronto Dominion Bank, Scotiabank all have shares in payday lending. It's their dirty little secret. For many out there listening, who probably don't know that they're invested in payday lending, I would say: Check. If you have mutual funds, check them; make sure. If you have bank funds, make sure that your bank isn't one of the banks that is invested in payday-lending that. That's why the police aren't breaking in the door of Money Mart and arresting the operators. That's why they're not doing it, because there's vested power behind those doors.

It's tempting to do an analogy to payday lending; that is, if the Hells Angels set up shop on your corner and sold crack cocaine but called it an analgesic, everyone would be wondering, "Why is such an illegal operation happening out in the open, right on our corner?" It's an analogous situation. The only difference is, I guess the Hells Angels didn't contribute in the right places. They don't have power behind them—yet. Because it's very analogous. It is equally illegal and it's equally addictive.

If you go in with your $300 paycheque and you get $150 out and it's due in two weeks, what are you going to pay it back with? You're still only going to have another $300 paycheque in two weeks, and now you're going to owe $150 on it. You're still in debt and your children still haven't eaten and you still haven't paid the rent. That's the cycle.

That's another amendment, in fact, that we recommended: that the term of the payday lending be longer than two weeks, because if it's only two weeks, you're constantly on this treadmill of ever-increasing debt, in a sense, no matter what the interest rate is, but certainly if the interest rate is 300% to 1,000%. We recommend it be at least 62 days, because at least with a month, you have a chance—just a chance—to get your head above water, just a chance to pay back some of what you borrowed. That was an amendment, of course, that got voted down.

Obviously, the amendment to put a hard cap right into this bill got voted down because the government felt more study was necessary. This is a government that loves to study; they love to consult. They love to study and consult. It's acting that frightens them. It's actually doing something that terrifies them.

But here, when you don't act, people suffer. Every day that there isn't a hard cap, every day that there isn't a regulation on payday lenders, somebody out there is suffering.

Two wonderful films I recommend are Maxed Out and Debt Trap—excellent films.

Maxed Out talks about college students who get credit cards. It doesn't even go into the payday lending sphere. Credit cards are dangled in front of college students who can't afford to pay, especially in the States, where their student loans are even higher than here, and we have some of the highest in Canada right now; our students graduate with $28,000 to $35,000 in debt. Imagine giving someone like that a credit card. It's dangling something tempting and something addictive in front of them.

What happens? Typically, kids get into debt and can't pay it off. They have linked, in Maxed Out, suicides to young people who have been so in debt, who have gotten themselves so underwater, that they just can't get out. This is not just theoretical suffering; this is real and actual suffering.

In that film, a university professor is asked to come in and to look at the whole of the credit industry, particularly the credit card companies. She's asked to consult with them about how they can render their losses less, how they can have fewer poor loans and credit cards. She says, "Well, here's what you do. If you just eliminate the 15% at the bottom, the high-risk cases, you will eliminate 50% of your bad debt." One of the CEOs in this particular shot puts his hand up and says, "We'll also eliminate 50% of our profit," because it's the "churn 'em and burn 'em" that makes the money for the credit card companies, and it's certainly the churn 'em and burn 'em that makes the money for the payday lending associations.

Debt Trap is another interesting look at the Canadian equivalent. One young woman they talk to there has $100,000 worth of debt just for student loans alone, doing her doctorate. They started to collect, and then she started into the vicious cycle that so many do. She couldn't pay off her student loan. She was a single mother with a little girl. She goes to a payday lender. Then of course they have her, because once in the door, once on that cycle, round and round and round she goes, and bankruptcy becomes the only option—bankruptcy.

Those who defend the victims, those paralegals out there and others who are taking the money lenders to court on behalf of the victims to get their money back for them, are very concerned that the regulations that come in, even by the time that the House sits again in the fall, if they are not 60% or below, will, de facto, decriminalize usury and will make usury legal. Now, that's pretty obvious, I would think, to members of this House. It's pretty clear-cut to anybody watching this that right now we have Criminal Code protection that says that 60% and above is usury. Even though all of these companies are operating in that grey area and nobody's regulating them, even though no RCMP is arresting any of the owners of any of the payday lenders as we speak, still there is that protection so that if you have a savvy lawyer, if you do get a class-action suit together, you can go after them. But if you bring in a hard cap that's over 60%, then, de facto, you have legalized usury; de facto, we're worse off than we are right now with no regulation whatsoever. This is a real fear for those who are preyed upon by payday lenders.

So I hold that out because I've received assurances that we will have better than Manitoba, that we will have an expert committee upon which a victims' advocate will sit, and I've received assurances that this will be done in due course and not in long course, which means: by the time the House rises. I hope that that word is justified, that we see that. I also hope that when the hard cap does come in, it does not legalize usury but that it actually comes in below the 60% mark, because that's so critical.

A word also about enforcement: The minister set out the what-ifs—what if you don't comply? There are fines, but here's the problem with fines: If they are fly-by-night, if they are going out of business, if it's hard to track even the payday lenders down, how do you collect on behalf of the victims there? What Manitoba has done—and may I recommend this: Another amendment that we brought in that was shot down is to have a surety of some sort. If you're going to get your licence, if you're going to go into the business of being a payday lender and making micro-loans—and remember, we in the New Democratic Party have nothing against micro-loans; there should be outlets offering them—you should do it at a reasonable rate of interest, that's all, and we think 35% or under is reasonable. We think that's reasonable.

To those listening at home: If you're looking at your credit card statement and you're seeing "35%," you should get yourself another credit card. If you're looking at a 35% mortgage, you should get yourself another mortgage.

That's not unreasonable; we think you can make a profit at 35%. So we think that those firms that get licences should have surety. There should be some way of compensating the victims if they break the law, if they break the regulations—if they pass the regulations—or even if they break what is already stated in Bill 48. There should be some way of guaranteeing it. It's not a lot to ask that a firm that gets a licence also get surety. We ask it in all sorts of other industries; why not in this one, where the victims are so hard-pressed?

Professor Robinson was talking about the makeup of the expert panel, and he was one who absolutely is against payday lenders. Please. This is an ethical stance; an absolutely ethical stance. How could you be in favour of payday lenders as constituted now? They're usurers by definition of the Criminal Code of Canada. How could you be in favour of them? It's not about going underground. They don't have to go underground. They're aboveground, breaking the law. They absolutely meet every definition of a loan shark, except perhaps for the violence. The violence is to their souls, the souls of their victims, not to their bodies. It's to their souls. But it's still violence nonetheless. When you charge somebody 300% to 1,000% interest, you are doing that person violence. That's loan-sharking.

He applied to sit on the expert panel to determine the rates, "but the Public Appointments Secretariat has not judged me suitable for an interview." This is a man who's a professor of finance, Atkinson School of Administrative Studies, York University; a widely published expert on personal finance; wrote two reports on payday loans for Industry Canada in 2004 and 2005 and one report for the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now—ACORN. "He appeared in 2007–08 as independent expert witness for the Manitoba Public Interest Law Centre in the payday loan rate cap hearings in front of the Manitoba Public Utilities Board. The board adopted his recommendations almost entirely.”

But he's not good enough for the expert committee. Neither is Bob Whitelaw, and I already outlined his background.

So again, one can't help but be a little suspicious about the experts on the expert committee. I wonder if Stan Keyes, former revenue minister for the Liberal Party and head of the Canadian Payday Loan Association, will be one of them. I hope not. I hope that this committee is struck with advocates of the victims and with true experts, impartial experts, experts like Bob Whitelaw or Professor Robinson who've seen both sides of this issue.

Bob Whitelaw is a classic expert—the first president of the Canadian Payday Loan Association. He had an epiphanous experience, a road-to-Damascus experience, and now helps to consult so that they will not continue their usurious practices. He now works with the credit union companies to try to develop a product that will—whoa—offer a loan at 28% interest. Sounds outrageous, doesn't it? But that's good news in this industry. Good news is 28%.

I'm going to leave some time for my colleague from Welland. But just to wrap up, sometimes one stands in this Legislature and is really in a state of awe at all the backbenchers who look so studiously at their desks, like bad students. It's like when we didn't do our homework at school and the teacher is standing at the front looking for somebody to answer, and they never meet their eye. You don't meet the teacher's eye, right?

As a United Church minister, I can tell guilt when I see it. It's the backbencher who won't meet your eye when you're talking about something like loan-sharking and usury, who knows that what you're saying is right, who knows that charging 300% to 1,000% interest to the poorest people in our communities is wrong. They know it's wrong. They also should know that it's illegal. Don't believe me; check your Criminal Code. They should know it's illegal and they should know it's ethically and morally wrong.

The only question that remains is: Why not do something about it? Unfortunately, Bill 48 doesn't do anything substantial about it. We in the New Democratic Party will support it because we support an inch forward. We would like a mile forward, we would like a yard forward, but we'll support an inch forward, as long as it's forward. This bill takes an inch forward. But really, we're running on trust on this side of the House.

There's another ethical stance: running on trust—trust that everyone, including ministers in this cabinet, can see how wrong it is to legalize usury so that any rate over 60% is morally and ethically wrong.

The regulations must come in as speedily and hastily as possible. They must. They have to. Why? Because, as we speak, hundreds are proliferating across the province. We have almost half of all of the payday lenders of Canada in this province.

As American jurisdictions bring in hard caps that are much lower than ours, one by one, like dominoes across the States, guess where their payday lenders, loan sharks and usurers will go. They'll come here, and they are. Many studies have shown that they are poised on the border just waiting, because it's legal to be a usurer here. It's legal, but it isn't anymore in most of the jurisdictions that I've outlined in the States.

So I appeal, really, to that core ethic, to that core humanity that I hope everyone in this House shares, that knows when something is morally bankrupt. And that's what this industry is. It is; it absolutely is.

What should we do about it? We've received assurances—I'm going to say it again—that a hard cap will come in; that the hard cap on interest rates will be better than Manitoba's; that the expert committee will have the voices of the victims on it; that this will happen in a timely fashion: It will happen by the time the House meets again in the fall.

We ask for this. We demand this—not on our behalf. I'm sure no one in this House has ever walked into a payday lender. They certainly don't need to, with the 24% pay raise we all got a while back. But I can tell you that in my riding and in your riding and in all ridings—

Mr. Michael A. Brown: Let's see your receipts.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: Anytime you want. I'll show you the receipts—absolutely. Every month I give it away to a charity; no problem. I'm being heckled over here by one of the Liberal backbenchers, a former Speaker, about whether I donate my pay raise to charity, which I do, and I'm always happy to talk about that and always happy to talk about where it goes. It's a discussion for another day.

What I appeal for now, on behalf of everyone in this House, is that we act, that we don't consult anymore, that we don't study anymore something that has been studied and consulted to death across the world, but that we act; that we act as quickly as humanly possible, because every day that we don't, a life hangs in the balance—not your lives, perhaps, but the lives of your constituents for sure.

Let me just wrap up with a story about someone from one of our wonderful drop-in centres in Parkdale called the Parkdale Activity-Recreation Centre who used a payday lender. This is a place that feeds thousands of people a month, and usually, if you walk in there during the day, you'll see 100 people eating for free. They run supportive housing, and almost all of their clients have mental health or addiction issues or both. One hundred per cent of their clients are on government assistance of some sort. Payday lenders set up right outside their door, right across the street, and when they get their cheques, a lot of their members walk across the street not knowing that they're going to be paying 300% to 1,000% interest and not knowing that they're walking into an illegal outlet, so defined by the government of Canada's Criminal Code.

One of these members, a brilliant young man who suffers from schizophrenia, walked in there with his cheque. He couldn't read the regulations, but they lent him the money anyway. He had a cheque of $520 or thereabouts—but that's okay for our payday lenders—an Ontario Works cheque. He walked in there, not yet on ODSP—that's another story for another day, the difficulty in getting on ODSP—and they gave him $150.

I don't need to tell you the rest of that story. We don't need to ask what happened to this person; we don't need to know that he lost his room the next month and that he slept rough, as they call it in Parkdale and other parts, because he couldn't pay his rent and because he couldn't feed himself. Thank God for PARC, which fed him for free.

That's the result of the current state of payday lending; that's the status quo. I simply ask, is that what we can live with in this place? Will that let us sleep well at night, Liberal backbenchers, all of us? Is that what we could live with, or are we impelled out of everything that's decent, everything that's ethical in us, to act and to act fast?

Finally, just to recap, what do we need? A hard cap; to recap, we need a hard cap. We need at least 60% or under. We need to do this fast, not slowly. We need to bring this in in time for the House sitting again in the fall. We need—and we've had assurances about all of this—there to be members on that expert committee who speak for the victims. Finally, we simply need to do the right thing.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Very briefly—and I suspect that this bill is going to go to a vote in short order—I want to thank ACORN for their tenacious agitating, organizing and mobilizing of people around this issue and, of course, Cheri DiNovo, our member for Parkdale-High Park, who has pursued this matter with vigour and passion from the get-go, from her first election here in that by-election during the last government.

The bill demonstrates this government's perspective towards poverty. This government doesn't want to abolish or eliminate poverty; it wants to manage it. It wants to sanitize it and put a little bow on it. When you're regulating payday lending, that's all that you're doing: You're dressing up poverty a little bit. We should be passing legislation banning payday lenders, abolishing them and making sure that every resident of this province has reasonable access to a financial institution—and specifically, that means credit unions and caisses populaires, those that are provincially regulated, so that they don't have to resort to payday lending.

When you really look at the underpinnings, Ms. DiNovo is oh so generous. The $300-a-week paycheque, sometimes less—because when you're sleeping rough, you're out at 4:30 and 5 in the morning at those daily contract agencies, picking up work, more often than not, for below minimum wage. At the end of the day, you hold in your hand a couple of $20 bills and some quarters and nickels, and trust me, when you're making below minimum wage, you don't toss the pennies and coins into the street. People are forced onto unliveable levels of income, and they're forced onto Ontario Works and ODSP benefits. To call them benefits is perhaps a serious misnomer, isn't it?

So really, payday lending and ripping off people who are poor is all about poverty. Does this government want to abolish poverty? No, it doesn't. It wants to manage it. It wants to control it. It wants to suppress the potential that poverty has to create rebellion in and of itself. In that respect, the agenda here with payday lending regulation is a thoroughly objectionable one.

The banks—the dirty little secret of the banking industry, as Ms. DiNovo calls it—are lined up like the thieves in the night that they are, buying a share interest in payday lending operations, circumventing federal regulation. Those oh-so-profitable banks, showing record profits year after year, continuing to rip off every depositor and every small borrower that they can—it's not even fair to call it nickel-and-diming their customers, because they don't nickel-and-dime you anymore, with the bank fees, the ATM fees and the $17.50 fee if you haven't reported access to your account in the last two years. I find it remarkable that a bank's got your money in their account, they're using it, yet if you haven't gone to that account to take money out, letting the bank have full use of it, those thieving SOBs get away with charging you $17.50 for letting them use your money.

Those are the real criminals. I'd empty the Don jail out tomorrow if you'd guarantee me that it was bankers and payday lending operators that were going to fill those cells. Our streets would be far safer. We could empty the Don jail tomorrow, and the community would be far safer if we filled those cells with bankers and payday lender operators. And fewer people would be victimized. Think about it.

If you really wanted consumer protection in this province, the government would be telling payday lenders, "You've got to have a big rip-off sign at the front door and at every kiosk." Instead of saying, "May I help you?" the clerk in the payday lending operation would have to say, "Good afternoon, sir. I'm here to rip you off. I'm here to take your money and give you nothing in return. I'm here to turn you into a payday lending junkie."

That's what it's all about. It's just like the liquor companies who insist that they don't encourage drinking by young people. The beer manufacturers in this province—and God bless them—don't make money off the drinker who drinks a case a year. Seagram's doesn't make money off the rye drinker who drinks—I remember some of our parents used to have a bottle of rye that sat in the cupboard and came out at Christmastime. There was a little shot by the folks and then it went back in that cupboard. Liquor companies don't like those kind of consumers any more than payday lenders like the kind of consumer who pays the loan off in short order. You don't make any money off the customer who pays the loan off, just like this government's casinos don't make any money off the busload of senior citizens who show up once a year with a hundred bucks in their pocket. That's not the kind of gambler they want. The casinos want addicted gamblers people who show up and lose money, day after day. The liquor industry wants people who will binge drink and young people to be more actively drinking, as part of their advertised lifestyle. Payday lenders want victims who aren't going to pay the loan off. If this government was serious about consumer protection, there'd be big signs: "You are being ripped off," bigger than Money Mart and then Money Mart—this tall.

You see, the problem is that if they put those signs on payday lenders they'd have to put them up at the Niagara Falls casino, wouldn't they? They'd have to put them up at the slot machines at any number of racetracks, and they'd have to put them up in Windsor.

Mr. Kim Craitor: Hey, hey, hey.

Mr. Peter Kormos: I'm sorry, Mr. Craitor, please. You may be a fan of the casino economy. I recall very clearly the debate around casinos and casino gambling in this province and I tell you, the casino industry doesn't want people to show up once a year with 100 bucks in their pocket. They want them to show up every day with 50 bucks in their pocket. The payday lender doesn't want people to show up once in a lifetime because they need to carry themselves over through a little gap; they want them there every week.

Ultimately, it is the banks that have to be held accountable, because they've engineered and created an environment wherein payday lending flourishes. This government has to be held to account because of their refusal to raise minimum wage, to effect affordable daycare for every kid in this province, to increase ODSP by at least as much as they've increased their own salaries. If ODSP benefits were increased by as much as MPPs increased their own salaries over the course of the last four or five years, ODSP recipients would be ecstatic. They'd be giddy and far less inclined to become victims of payday lending operations.

The Conservative critic, who's done a stellar job, paid tribute earlier this afternoon to the Liberal member for Davenport, Mr. Ruprecht. She spoke of him with respect and affection and talked about—well, she did, and I'm sure he would want to acknowledge that himself and he wouldn't mind me doing it for him. But here is a long-time Liberal member, one of the top 10 in seniority in this Legislature, whose own colleagues won't even let him pass valid, meaningful, real consumer protection regulations and legislation when it comes to identity theft and consumer fraud of that ilk. That speaks volumes about the McGuinty Liberals.

They are cultivating an environment where the victims continue to be victims and where the wealthy continue to get wealthier. They're cultivating an environment where the gap between the richest and the poorest grows and grows and grows. They're cultivating an environment where the working middle class in this province is being forced into homelessness, unemployment and poverty. If you do, indeed, want to take a look at this from perhaps a cynical perspective, this payday lending regulation is part and parcel of that whole agenda. This is not a day the Liberals should be proud of, let me tell you that much.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments?

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: I want to congratulate my colleagues from Toronto—Parkdale—High Park. I should know this because I supported her in a by-election.

Mr. Peter Kormos: So did I.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: You sure did, and I congratulate my colleague from Welland as well. They make some valid points.

Sometimes we don't exactly come to an issue from the same perspective, but I think that the point is very clear. This piece of legislation, if you look full circle, does not address the root causes of poverty. From my perspective, I don't think that this legislation does enough for consumer protection. Specifically, fiscal literacy was not sufficiently addressed in this piece of legislation and Internet payday loans were not addressed in this piece of legislation. The regulatory framework is onerous; it is one that has added to the caisses populaires and credit unions of this province, making it more difficult for them to do the business they are expected to do by their clients.

We are also looking at an expert panel of which we do not know the composition. We know that some of the experts who are outspoken advocates didn't even receive interviews from the province, whether their experience comes from the payday lending industry or from the consumer advocate industry.

The final concern that we have is that clearly the root cause of poverty in this province isn't because of payday loans. We will support it. I'm hopeful that the New Democrats too will support it, because it is in fact a matter of housekeeping. The federal government has delegated responsibility to us in this Legislature to put together a regulatory framework. They didn't get it all right, they got a bit of it right, so we're going to say this is a good step forward. I expect the minister will come forward with a consumer protection package to deal with identity theft, Internet payday loans and greater consumer reporting credentials.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: I'll be brief. I just want to say at the outset that I appreciate the comments that were made opposite. We're listening carefully. We note in passing that in socialist Manitoba, which had an expert panel to look at rates as well, the rate they came in with in legislation cumulatively is in excess of 600%. I really am optimistic, as an honourable member, to do better than that. So we're looking at that.

The other issue that I think needs to be addressed is, why not the Quebec model? We didn't go there because of some of the very reasons the honourable member for Parkdale—High Park referenced: the unsavoury characters in any society, the criminal elements and the loan sharks who now feed on people who can't access a regulated, responsible payday lending industry. I don't know whether they're Hells Angels or Nazis or whatever; I know there have been all kinds of references, and that's neither here nor there. But I can tell you, it wasn't our goal to drive people into the hands of those sorts of unsavoury characters.

I've said before and I'll repeat it again: We want to develop a responsible payday lending regimen, one that acknowledges, as the member for Nepean–Carleton has done, that they just aren't poor, vulnerable people who use this service. The stats show that about a quarter might fall into that category, but there are people who from time to time need this service, and we want to make sure it's regulated and handled in a responsible fashion.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments? The member for Parkdale–High Park for a response.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: Just to respond to the minister, it's interesting that in Manitoba, despite their legislation, the payday lending associations are taking the government to court, so that again shows you the nature of the beast.

When I talk about loan sharks and when I talk about usurers, I'm talking about the payday lending association. I'm talking about those that operate already in that illegal yet grey, unregulated area right now in your city, in my city, on every second corner; those people who are charging right now between 300% and 1,000% interest. That's what we live with right here, right now. That's the situation. So we don't have to talk about somebody doing something nefarious; they're doing it. Nefarious is the order of the day. It's on your corner, it's operating, nobody is arresting anybody, and yet it is illegal by the definition of the Criminal Code of Canada, which says that anything over 60% interest is usury. So that is the situation.

What we're asking for in the New Democratic Party is very simple. It's not utopia. We're asking for a hard cap on interest rates, a hard cap under 60%; under the current Criminal Code definition, because otherwise it's worse than what we have right now. And we're asking for consumer advocates on the expert panel. That's what we're asking for. And we're asking for speedy action, which is to say we don't want to be having this conversation in a year. We want to see in the fall, when the House sits again, some action—60% or under. That will change the lives of victims, because at the end of the day that's what we're talking about, an industry that has thousands of victims in Ontario.

So with that, I'll let it rest and I'll live in hope.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Further debate? There being no further debate, does the minister wish to make a final reply?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: No, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Thank you.

Mr. McMeekin has moved third reading of Bill 48. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Third reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: Madam Speaker, I move adjournment of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The House now stands adjourned until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Resuming the debate adjourned on June 5, 2008, on the motion for second reading of Bill 85, An Act to permit the issuance of photo cards to residents of Ontario and to make complementary amendments to the Highway Traffic Act/ Projet de loi 85, Loi permettant la délivrance de cartes-photo aux résidents de l'Ontario et apportant des modifications complémentaires au Code de la route.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Further debate?

Mr. Frank Klees: We are debating Bill 85 this morning, the Photo Card Act, 2008, and I'm pleased to add my comments as the critic for the Ministry of Transportation for the official opposition. I'd like to first of all set the context for the bill, the reason that the government is bringing this bill forward, what precipitated it, and I'd like to speak, in principle, to the fact that as the official opposition we will be supporting the bill and its intent. I will also be outlining some concerns that we have that we anticipate the government will address in the course of committee, and also as it prepares for the implementation, phasing in, of the bill. I will be referring to some concerns that our privacy commissioner in the province of Ontario has expressed, along with privacy commissioners from across the country, with regards to some of the technology. We want to ensure that the appropriate safeguards are in place to protect the very important personal information that will be contained in these identification cards. I will also be taking some time to speak about the importance of ensuring that we have a smooth process of border-crossing between us and the United States, for many reasons. They are our major trading partner.

One industry that we are particularly concerned about is the tourism industry. We are concerned that as we go into this summer there are already signs of a reduction in the number of reservations, for example, that various tourist operators are receiving. There's no question that the price of gasoline has a great deal to do with that. And we are concerned that there seems to be very little, if any, response on the part of the McGuinty government to what could be another very serious impending economic downturn.

We already see the effects that the loss of manufacturing jobs has had in our communities. The McGuinty government appears—although there are and have been many announcements with regard to infusions of money in various aspects of the auto industry, it seems that the basis on which those investments were made was perhaps haphazard, that there were not sufficient safeguards put in place when those very substantial commitments to the auto sector were made. General Motors is an excellent example of that: more than $130 million of commitment of taxpayers' dollars, with good intentions no doubt, being invested in that industry, all with the underlying purpose of ensuring stability within that industry and ensuring a guarantee of jobs, and then, on the heels of that announcement, we find major closings announced—the truck plant in Oshawa. It has left not only the employees of that factory with great concern as to their future, but I know that even members of this government were caught by surprise, not the least of whom was the Minister of Economic Development, who was instrumental in ensuring and in delivering that investment into General Motors. We observed that she did not have the answers in terms of how this could happen, when in fact there was an expectation that jobs would be guaranteed. So I'll have something to say about the tourism industry and what the government should be doing.

First of all, the context for this: It was brought on, really, by the 9/11 disaster, a wake-up call for all of North America in terms of the threat to our security. Immediately, of course, the focus was on our borders and what is it that we must do and can do to ensure secure borders. All of us, on either side of that border, came to the realization that not enough was being done to ensure that those borders are secure. So under the western hemisphere travel initiative, now all travellers entering and leaving the United States by land or sea will be required to show a passport or an accepted alternative to a passport as of June 1, 2009. That presents, then, the concern of how we ensure that travel across that border, legitimate travel across that border, is not hampered and that we do so in a way that is both secure as well as convenient. Because in the same way that many of the border states rely on Canadians to travel there, whether it is for shopping, whether it is for entertainment, whether it is for holidays, we as well rely very heavily on US travellers coming to Ontario to enjoy what we have here in terms of our tourist attractions. What we are concerned about is to ensure that those American travellers are not discouraged from making that trip to Ontario because of the inconvenience at the border. So I think there's a mutual commitment on the part of our border state colleagues and the various state legislatures, along with us, to ensure that we have a mechanism that is at once secure as well as convenient.

Nearly four million people in Ontario do not have a driver's licence and therefore don't have access to even the basic identification. We've raised this a number of times as well. This is in addition to what we're going to be addressing today. But I think a by-product of this bill before us will, perhaps for the first time, actually address that issue of an identification card for people who don't have a driver's licence, that as we roll this program out, that will then be available to those Ontarians and give them an opportunity to access that kind of identification document.

In December 2007, you will recall that the Ontario government introduced what they referred to at that time as a "more secure" Ontario driver's licence that would help against fraud, misuse and identity theft. I recall well the Minister of Transportation assuring us that the advanced licence that was being introduced at that time would not contain citizenship information, not contain any more information than drivers' licences contain now. I find it somewhat odd that less than a year after that major announcement on the part of the government for a new driver's licence, an enhanced driver's licence, now we're back here with yet another revamped announcement that goes the full distance to photo technology. In fact, it will contain, in addition to the information that we now have on our drivers' licences, citizenship information and will be required to have some very advanced technology.

I guess what I have to question is this one-off type of announcement that this government continues to deliver to the Legislature here. It begs the question, are we not doing some longer-term thinking? Why was there one announcement a year ago and it's taken this long to then bring forward this technology? Will the information that we trust will be on these new proposed identification cards, these enhanced drivers' licences, be secure?

What I want to do is to address an issue of concern as expressed by the privacy commissioners of Canada. I want to just refer to discussions that we have had with our privacy commissioner here in the province of Ontario. They are specifically concerned with the RFID chip technology, how information on that chip will be read at the border and what the specific issues on citizenship verification will be. These are issues that we have assurance from the privacy commissioner, that they have in turn received from the minister, that they will be addressed.

The other concern is that there be a separate database. There are concerns regarding where the information that now will come into this database would actually go. As per the resolution of the privacy commissioners that there be a requirement that the personal information that is then gathered into this database not go stateside, that it is kept here in Ontario, the preliminary assurance that we have from the minister is that the government information will not go beyond our borders, and we look for assurance of that. There isn't a great deal of information regarding the RFID chip to which I referred earlier, other than that it is an advanced technology, that it is something that will allow a transmission of information as individuals approach a border, and that it will actually be recognized. A crossing guard at the border will either be able to then swipe the card using a magnetic strip similar to those on current drivers' licences, or to use that RFID technology. Information, we're assured, that would be available to border guards should not be any greater than what is currently available on a driver's licence or a passport.

Then again, it comes to the point that the technology is unknown technology as it relates to this kind of identification card. I commend the BC government for the fact that they have actually launched a pilot project under which they're going to limit the number of these cards to 500 while they go through their pilot project to test out how it works, to test out the security and efficiency of that technology. That trial run of that program should be of interest to us, and I would encourage our government to do the same, that once this legislation is passed, we have a very specific implementation program under which it would be phased in, under which we can be assured that all of the technical issues are dealt with and that we don't end up with problems that will cause us more issues in the long term.

The reason that I dwell on the privacy concerns is that I've raised issues in the past here in the Legislature concerning the Ministry of Transportation's dealing with personal information. You may recall that about a month ago, I raised in question period with the minister the issue of Anna Medeiros, who had been issued a driver's licence by the Ministry of Transportation, not ever having applied for a driver's licence. Observers of this debate who aren't familiar with the file will question how an agency of the government could issue identification such as a driver's licence to a citizen of this province who never applied for that document. The way that happened is that there is in legislation a mandatory requirement for physicians to report to the Ministry of Transportation if they are treating someone who has a condition that may—and I repeat, that may—be of concern to someone who drives a car. In other words, it may be an issue of sight or it may be potential for seizures, but if there is a concern that the individual may not safely drive a vehicle, then there is a requirement for that attending physician to make that report to the Ministry of Transportation.

In this particular case, in Anna Medeiros's case, her doctor made a report to the Ministry of Transportation about a potential concern. Ms. Medeiros not having a driver's licence, I'm advised that the Ministry of Transportation processed a driver's licence in her name, and then, once it was issued, immediately cancelled and suspended that licence. Now we have a situation where Ms. Medeiros has a record of a suspended driver's licence and is in the databank of the Ministry of Transportation as someone who may have an issue. When and if Ms. Medeiros ever applies for a driver's licence, whether that be five years or 10 years or 20 years down the road, her application will immediately be flagged theoretically, and whether her medical condition has improved or not, she now has the challenge of dealing with this record of a suspended driver's licence on her file.

I raised this matter with our privacy commissioner, Ann Cavoukian. My reason for raising it with her was to point out that when mandatory reporting was implemented in this province, it was never the intention that people be tracked this way. I personally and we as the official opposition believe that that is an inappropriate use of personal information. We asked that the privacy commissioner investigate this matter with a view to alerting the Ministry of Transportation that this is inappropriate. The privacy commissioner responded and confirmed that an investigation has in fact been commenced by the privacy commissioner into this practice. We look forward to hearing back from the privacy commissioner with regard to that.

I want to bring another matter to your attention as an example of how the Ministry of Transportation deals with matters of personal information. This is a letter that was sent to the leader of our party, John Tory, by Mr. Eddy Consenheim. I'm going to read it into the record because I think it's important that members understand and that the Ministry of Transportation gets the message clearly from us here that we will not simply stand by as the Ministry of Transportation deals with personal information of private citizens in such a cavalier way. There is enough encroachment into our lives by government, let alone this kind of presumptive intrusion into our personal lives.

Mr. Consenheim writes to Mr. Tory as follows:

"Dear Sir,

"Herewith enclosed is my letter to the Minister of Transportation about my complaint for the invasion of my privacy by a private corporation, the 407 ETR.

"I find it unacceptable that outsiders can obtain my personal information without my consent, see the copy with the description. I do not have a transponder and have never filed an application for this."

Signed, "Eddy Consenheim."

He refers to the letter addressed to the minister. I'm going to read that into the record. It's my understanding that the minister has yet to respond—this was written on May 1, 2008—and I will look forward to seeing the minister's response. The letter reads:

"Dear Sir,

"Recently, I discovered on the backside of the account statement from 407 ETR a statement that was never brought to my attention, and I don't know how long this statement has been included.

"The statement in question is the fact that 407 ETR 'may request a consumer report and a credit investigation of my personal information.' I find this very disturbing and I don't see the reason for this unless this is done for the government to gather more personal information that should be protected under the privacy act.

"As far as I know, and I have never been informed different, anyone wanting to get my credit information can do so when this is on the application and accepted by the applicant and signed for.

"It is beside the fact that the costing is getting absolutely outrageous and instead of the government's promises to change this, they are now giving more power to outside interests. This is totally unacceptable. I will also inform the other parties of this. It could well become a point of discussion in the next election." It is signed "Eddy Consenheim."

Attached to this is a copy of a 407 ETR bill. This is a bill that is sent to anyone who travels the 407 ETR. We're familiar with the technology, whether you have or you don't have a transponder which you sign for, apply for and, of course, agree to all of the terms and conditions of. As Mr. Consenheim rightfully states, if you make an application and you sign an agreement that a credit check will be done, we all understand that. But in this particular case with the 407, people get a bill without signing anything. You simply have to drive the highway, the cameras pick up your licence plate, it's tracked, and then you are automatically sent a bill. And here's what it states on this bill:

"407 ETR may request a consumer report containing personal information about you and may request a credit investigation and exchange information with credit reporting agencies."

On the back of the bill, there is no signature—no agreement by an individual to allow either the 407 or the government of Ontario to gather any personal information. It refers to other agencies. Is it referring to the Ministry of Transportation? Is it referring to other companies, other third parties, perhaps private companies? We don't know. It's a blanket release that is presumed, and Mr. Consenheim's point about this is that the 407, of course, cannot issue this without the sign-off by the Ministry of Transportation. So this is yet one more example of the Ministry of Transportation agreeing to the encroachment on personal information of private citizens in the province of Ontario. So when I raise the issue in the context of the debate of Bill 85 and the government's intent to bring forward an identification system that will contain not just the name and age and colour of hair and other information that we have on our driver's licence, but will also contain important citizenship information, we want to be very clear that whoever is administering that technology at the Ministry of Transportation has the resources to do so effectively.

We continue to hear about the misuse of information. We had an example again raised in this Legislature of an individual who had lost his licence for life as a result of drinking and driving. That same individual was issued a driver's licence. He made the application—the same name—and the Ministry of Transportation was incapable of doing the necessary cross-checking of that individual's identification to ensure that someone who should not have a driver's licence was denied that. We are not comfortable at this point in time until we hear from the minister. We will look for the minister to provide us information during committee of the steps that he has taken to ensure that there is competence and that there is ability at the Ministry of Transportation to in fact deal with these issues.

I want to turn to the issue of our tourism industry. We have heard from the Minister of Transportation that one of the reasons that they're moving forward with this technology is because we want to ensure a smooth flowing of travellers across our borders—and tourism is a big part of that. I want to question the government: Where is Mr. Greg Sorbara? Where is the tourism czar who was appointed by Dalton McGuinty for the express purpose of researching the tourism industry to ensure that the industry is healthy and vibrant? Tourism is one of the fastest-growing industries on the planet, and yet Ontario lags behind most other jurisdictions in terms of its growth rate of that industry. That is a shame given the extent of our natural resources in this province that should have our attention.

We're losing manufacturing jobs in a sector that is experiencing significant difficulties. Whether we're in southwestern Ontario, eastern Ontario or northern Ontario, we have the resources available here in this province to develop a dynamic industry that would be second to none anywhere in the world. People travel now from all parts of the world to experience our great north. Whether it's fishing, hunting, sightseeing or ecotourism, we have natural resources in this province that are second to none anywhere. Whether it's the wine country of Niagara that people come to visit, the farmlands in southwestern Ontario, eastern Ontario and all of the lakes and streams and all of the wonderful tourism resorts that we have there, we have available here an industry that is just waiting for a government to support the private sector, provide the encouragement and provide some of the destination marketing support that the industry so desperately needs. By the way, that is available to tourism industries in other jurisdictions, and yet it continues to be ignored.

As we go into this summer of discontent, compliments of Dalton McGuinty, where people should be looking forward to enjoying all that we have to offer throughout this province, we have skyrocketing gas prices, about which the government refuses to do anything. In the past we've seen travellers, we've seen boat trailers being towed, we've seen camping trailers heading north. I can tell you that our highways are half empty. When you talk to our gas station attendants, they'll tell you that while the revenue they're collecting is way up, the volumes that they're pumping are way down. When you talk to our tourism operators and you ask them, "What are the prospects for this summer?" they'll tell you, depending on where in the province, that reservations are down anywhere from 25% to 50%.

These are small business people, individuals who have invested their own resources in building their businesses. There is silence on the part of this government, the McGuinty government, in responding in any way, to provide any assistance, as we go into this summer.

We have made a proposal that is being ignored by the McGuinty government. We've called on the government to provide at least tax relief for individuals in this province over the course of the summer. We have called on the government to reduce the sales tax during the course of the summer. That would ensure that people have the opportunity to enjoy some of the benefits that we have available to us in this province.

My colleague Ted Arnott put out a press release just recently, calling on this government to ensure that tourism in Ontario will not be negatively affected. He was disappointed at the government's response to our proposal to eliminate the retail sales tax on all accommodations and attractions for the summer months.

Why would the Premier ignore a practical proposal over which he has absolute control? It's true he can't control the price of gasoline, but what he can control is what he charges consumers by way of taxation over the coming summer months on accommodations and attractions. To eliminate the sales tax is not a huge impact on the overall budget of this province. However, I can tell you that it would at least be an incentive for people to go to those gates, buy their tickets and to spend their money in those attractions.

"The Premier's plan isn't working. He's spending $8 million on a long-term, so-called tourism competitiveness study, but offers nothing for the many thousands of Ontarians whose jobs are already at risk." You may recognize who said that. It was Mr. Arnott in his capacity as critic for tourism in this province.

Interestingly enough, the announcement that the Premier made to spend $8 million in support of our colleague, who I think since this announcement has made a few mystery appearances in this place—obviously he's travelling, although it's hard to spend $8 million all by yourself. So he must be working overtime to do that.

What I would like to know is, what happened to the tourism strategy that was developed in 2002? The reason I remember that very well is that, as Minister of Tourism at that time, I travelled the province. It certainly didn't cost $8 million. I think the total extent of the entire study, under which we travelled from northern Ontario to eastern Ontario to southwestern Ontario, conducted consultations throughout the GTA and prepared a fulsome report—that entire exercise could not have cost more than $150,000.

Now, Mr. Sorbara, with an $8-million budget, in all of the time that he's been absent from this place and out there, out and about, no doubt consulting once again—I have no doubt as well that Mr. Sorbara, in his capacity as tourism czar of the McGuinty government, will not come up with another new idea that isn't already contained in that 2002 report. I would ask the current Minister of Tourism to go to his staff and ask them to dust off that report, bring it forward and begin to implement some of those recommendations that were proposed to this government by tourism operators and by individuals who have invested their good funds in creating a business in Ontario that is now slowly eroding because of the lack of action on the part of the McGuinty government.

Now we want to restudy it. Take the $8 million and give it to some of those people who need that money to upgrade their facilities so that they can bring people in. That's the best use Mr. Sorbara could make of that money. Take that $8 million, instead of using it once again to restudy something for which we already have the answers, and begin to implement a tourism strategy in this province.

The beginning of that should be our proposal, John Tory's proposal, the proposal that Ted Arnott, the critic for tourism in this province, authored, and that is to eliminate the retail sales tax on all accommodations and attractions for the summer months. That is a practical proposal. It would simply take five minutes to implement and it would have a substantial effect on the tourism industry right across this province.

We will be watching the Ministry of Transportation—having the lead on the implementation of this new security photo card—very carefully as to how they proceed. We look forward to working with them. We want this to be successful. We want to ensure that our borders are secure and that there is ease of crossing, both for passengers as well as for those doing business in Ontario and in the border states.

We look forward to this going to committee. We are certain that we will have experts coming forward, testifying before the committee, providing the assurances we're looking for. Most important, as I stated previously in the course of debate, I will be looking for the Minister of Transportation to provide us with the assurance here that the various departments within his ministry are adequately resourced to protect this information and to administer it efficiently and effectively, so that this proposal we have before us will in fact have the intended effect as it's described.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Questions and comments?

Mr. John O'Toole: It's always a pleasure to listen to the member from Newmarket–Aurora. Having been a former Minister of Transportation, it's evident that he knows of what he speaks, especially when it comes to having served as a Minister of Tourism as well. So he brings a lot to the topic. It's an important topic. He's described a couple of issues that aren't totally related, but the issue of privacy and the security of information is critical.

I think it's most important to listen, because he talked to some extent about the plight of tourism in Ontario. He did mention the travel czar or the tourism czar, Mr.

Sorbara. Over here, we're all worried about the $8-million trip that he took—one, two or however many trips it may have been. We're looking forward to some kind of report or accountability on that. Hopefully, the next time he travels he will have a travel card so that we can actually bar code all of his activity and where he went.

On a serious note, the real issue here is that it doesn't solve the problems the minister brings forward. What we're really interested in is having more tourists and visitors coming to Canada, coming to Ontario. This does nothing to improve that. Don't be misguided by what the minister said in his initial comments. I'm going to take a few minutes after the round has gone through to put on the record the sequences and some of the information that has been put out that perhaps could not give a true impression of the consequence of this card to the people of Ontario. It's important and we support it, but we always have to say that, for instance, if you're travelling by air, this card will not serve; you'll have to have a passport. There are significant gaps in this rush to get it done, and yet we've got the $8-million czar travelling around wondering where he's going.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I appreciate the comments of the member opposite during his speech. I think we share—well, I know we share—his concern over privacy and the security of the information that will be encoded in these cards. There are actually four different cards that we're talking about. We're talking about a photo card. We are talking about an enhanced photo card, which would be a photo card for someone who's not a driver but would like to have a card that identifies them and would have their citizenship included on it. We are talking about the normal driver's licence, and an enhanced driver's licence which would have citizenship identification on it.

It is an issue that we take very seriously in terms of the administration. We understand that the data bank has to be secure, that it has to be reliable and that we have to make sure that the individual's privacy is protected. That is what this is all about. I myself have talked to the people at homeland security in Washington. I've been there; I've talked to them. They are very concerned about the same issues. They've actually come to Ontario, looked at the way we issue drivers' licences, and my understanding is that they are comfortable with that. We have to do those sorts of things. I've also been to the state department, where I've had the same kind of assurances. We have to ensure that our partners in this particular project, the Americans, understand that we are capable of doing it, and we have to understand that the flip side of this is that the American states are also doing it. Michigan is doing it. Washington is doing it. New York is working at it. They want to do it, too. We want free passage or as close to free passage across the borders as we can get.

Mr. Robert Bailey: I too would like to rise—

Mr. Robert Bailey: I know all about the border. I'd like to commend the member from Newmarket–Aurora for his remarks and description of the bill and our concerns with it. We support it under the proviso that our concerns will be addressed. In Sarnia-Lambton it's certainly important that we have timely border access. It's one of the major border crossings, probably rivalling the Windsor crossing. It's important. I hope a number of people will take the opportunity to cross the Sarnia-Lambton border this summer to come down to the 150th anniversary of the discovery of the oil industry in Oil Springs, Ontario. That's going to be all summer. I hope the members from Peterborough and Algoma will take that opportunity to come down there.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I want to be there, Bob.

Mr. Robert Bailey: Maybe you'll have to car-pool.

Anyway, it's vital to our local economy and it's vital to the economy of Ontario that we keep this traffic moving and keep the border open. I think the issues about security of information are very important in this day and age, that people have those guarantees that their information that they do share with government departments be held in security. I'm sure the government will listen to the comments from the opposition, take those under advisement and improve the bill anywhere it does need improvement. We look forward to further debate on the bill and working with the government to make it a better bill.

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: Just very briefly, I appreciated the third reading opening address by the member from Newmarket-Aurora, both the first half of the speech in which he was dealing primarily with Bill 85 and the second half in which he was dealing primarily with the issue of tourism in Ontario. It was nice that he could blend the two together so successfully.

We share concerns around issues of privacy and working closely with the privacy commissioner. I know the minister will be taking into account, both from his speech and during committee, the concerns being expressed by the opposition. We all have equal concerns about ensuring that we protect the privacy of individuals while at the same time providing windows of opportunity for exactly the kinds of things the member from Sarnia-Lambton spoke to, and that's ease of access across the border for Ontario residents.

We were pleased to hear as well in his opening comments that it's the intention of the official opposition to support this legislation. It's always encouraging that when they see good legislation come forward, they want to work, as opposition, to enhance it where they can. They recognize the good work being done by the government in bringing forward good legislation and it's their intention to support it at the time of second reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): That concludes the time for questions and comments. The member for Newmarket-Aurora has the floor.

Mr. Frank Klees: I want to thank the members from Durham, Algoma-Manitoulin, Sarnia-Lambton and Pickering-Scarborough East for their comments in response to my comments during debate.

The member from Pickering-Scarborough East referred to his gratitude that the opposition would support legislation coming forward from the government. It's a rare occasion that we have. It's now been about five years that the McGuinty government has occupied government benches and I think in the course of that, truthfully, there have really only been about two occasions when I could stand in my place and say, "That is good legislation. I'm willing to support it." But even here today, there are reservations. We're going to be watching very carefully. We do look forward to working with you in that regard.

We have common ground in terms of our concern for security of our borders and we share common ground in terms of ensuring that we have convenient access both for our American friends and Ontarians travelling to the United States. At the end of the day, the important element of this will be that we have in place a technology and a document that are both effective in terms of ensuring cross-border travel as well as protecting the important personal information of our citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Further debate?

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: I appreciate the opportunity to spend just a few minutes on Bill 85, following the leadoff third reading by the member from Newmarket-Aurora and having commented briefly on what he had to say. I understand from those Qs and As that were ongoing that the member from Durham also has the intention of taking just a few minutes to put a few things on the record in that regard.

I think it's important—it remains important; it's not that it will be new, but it remains important—that as we talk about Bill 85, the enhancement of identification, both driver identification and non-driver identification, it's a particularly good opportunity for us, as we talk about cross-border activity, to also talk about the opportunity to provide sources of identification for those who wouldn't necessarily be drivers in Ontario. There are four million people in the province who don't hold a valid driver's licence but who want the opportunity to have the type of ID that they might get asked for on a fairly regular basis.

When one opens up a bank account, as an example, the banks want to see ID. They want to see photo ID, and they'll often ask for a driver's licence. Those who haven't had the opportunity to drive don't have that, and they don't have the easy access to photo identification that can be used for that purpose.

Proving age for seniors' discounts: Obviously discount opportunities for seniors are provided extensively, not only in this province but in other provinces and internationally, and when someone is asked whether they are eligible for a discount as a senior for some modest savings, it's nice to have a form of identification that works effectively. Many of our seniors don't drive or are no longer driving, so as a current strategy whereby identification is easy for them to take advantage of these savings, the photo ID card is an ideal means by which they can do that.

Certainly work on enhanced photo identification of a variety of sorts is ongoing. As we know, it's not a new issue. We know what sparked this type of activity, but I certainly want to acknowledge the leadership shown by the current and past Minister of Transportation and the Premier in regard to identifying this as an issue and working so closely with our partners across the border in the US, the northern US states close to us, and pressuring the federal government in the United States of America to acknowledge and recognize that there are mechanisms by which one can be identified for the purpose of crossing the border in addition to passports.

As we know, a large percentage of people in this country, and an even greater percentage within the USA, don't have passports. But many of those people want to travel cross-border for the purpose of visiting with family, for the very tourism that the member from Newmarket-Aurora spoke about, for the purpose of short cross-border visits—whether it's the casino opportunities or entertainment or shopping opportunities, and those are activities in both directions—or whether it's something like Marineland in Niagara Falls that American families want to come and visit. Having a passport is not the one and only means by which one should have the opportunity to cross over the border.

Enhanced driver's licence strategies will be an excellent means by which we can expedite border crossings and work very co-operatively with our neighbours cross-border. We know that in Washington state and British Columbia, they've been experimenting and working with this for a limited time now, but the uptake is increasing. It's a good measure for us to see the level of success and also measure where there may be shortcomings so that we can enhance our process, and as it rolls out, it will be an even more effective process for us to use.

There are a couple of matters I just want to comment on extremely briefly: the matters of citizenship and privacy. There will be no citizenship information held on the card. It's certainly not the intent of government to risk any privacy matters by containing that. There will be a requirement, though, that citizenship be identified at the time of application for the card, because for security reasons, if we're going to use these for cross-border activity, it's obvious that we want to ensure that citizenship is confirmed. We can do that in Ontario by virtue of birth records. For those who are not native-born to Ontario, we will have to depend upon our work with the federal government to identify citizenship for the purposes of the application and the issuance of the card but not for the purposes of carrying that information on the card.

We'll take extreme care—and I know this will be part of the committee discussion—to ensure the privacy of individuals even as they use this card. Our privacy commissioner has spoken to this matter. We obviously take her comments seriously, and we look forward to her continuing input as this process unfolds and look forward to comments from all sides of the House on how we can ensure that people's privacy is protected in this matter. I have a great degree of confidence that we will actually be able to ensure that occurs. We continue to work very closely with the privacy commissioner on this matter as this process moves forward, even during the course of the debate, in anticipation or hopefulness that, having heard from opposition parties their intention to support the legislation, it will actually see its approval throughout this process. So we continue that work with the privacy commissioner and the federal government as it relates to privacy and citizenship-related information.

This will not be a citizenship database. We're not looking to use this mechanism to create yet another database of information, but we certainly will verify citizenship at the time the application process is unfolding.

This is exciting legislation we're moving forward on. I think it's a responsive piece of legislation; it's an indication to the public at large that the government and this Legislature understand the needs of this province and its citizens from the standpoint of having cross-border access and from the standpoint of having identification that they can use effectively for their day-to-day business here in Ontario, throughout this country or elsewhere. Having photo identification is so terribly convenient for those of us who normally will be able to walk with our driver's licence as it currently exists within the province when we're asked for photo ID. It's easy to pull it out; it's easy to use as a second piece of identification.

I was out of the country recently, and I had my passport with me, but where I was, they were actually looking for two pieces of ID, because I was Canadian and travelling abroad. It was nice to have my driver's licence provide that level of assurance that they were looking for. They could actually compare the pictures, and even though they're a little bit dated at this point because they all have different time spans for when they expire, they could at least compare and ensure themselves that they were actually dealing with the person they thought they were dealing with. This will provide an opportunity—particularly the photo ID cards—for those who don't have a licence of any sort to have that extra identification available to them; the secondary opportunity to identify themselves, whether it's a birth certificate and then a photo ID card that has the photo on it, or even a passport and a photo card as a supplementary form of identification that one would want to have available.

As a matter of fact, I'm dealing with a matter as an estate trustee currently and dealing with a bank. Before we can actually deal with the matters at the bank, they ask that we bring two forms of photo identification to the bank for the purposes of allowing us to work as trustees to an estate. Certainly my driver's licence allows me to do that, but there will be those who wouldn't be in that situation, who wouldn't readily have photo ID available. The photo ID card would be a wonderful opportunity for them to do that.

I think, as well, the enhanced driver's licence strategy is really only a small step. This legislation and its debate, if it's adopted, will be a significant step but not the only one. The technologies that are readily available to us now and could be used will be a way in which we can enhance this process even more. We first need to get the enhanced driver's licence strategy in place and provide people with opportunities to look at the secure fashion of the driver's licence opportunity for identification, but we need to use this as a jumping-off point to look at other opportunities.

We need to expedite travel cross-border. This is not just a matter of being able to travel between here and the US; it's a method of being available to travel expeditiously cross-border. We know the constraints at the border crossings, we know the issues around that, and we know the expenditures that are proposed for capital investment to allow people to move back and forth efficiently and quickly. This will be one more opportunity for us to build on that so that people will be able to, with this type of identification, travel quickly, efficiently and effectively in both directions across the border—enhance those opportunities, allow people to spend more time at their desired destination, whether it's for hours or days or even weeks.

If they're on a short-term turnaround, as the member from Sarnia-Lambton was commenting earlier, I'm sure he would love to see the opportunity for people to get across that border as quickly and as efficiently as conceivably possible to allow visitors to his community to take advantage of the wonderful things in that community and allow those in his community who need to travel cross-border for their purposes to get there quickly and efficiently as well. That's not just his riding; there are those in this Legislature who are close to border crossings. I'm not one of those per se who is directly on a border crossing, but those who are certainly would like to see the opportunity for their constituents and visitors to their community to have a high level of access.

This is one significant step in that process, but I'm personally optimistic that we will find other opportunities to do things even more effectively, taking advantage of technology in an even more substantive way.

I just wanted to add those few comments to the ongoing debate at second reading and look forward to this matter going to committee. I think I misstepped earlier when I referenced the member opposite, the official opposition critic, when I probably referenced the third reading leadoff speech; I would have erred in doing that, because we have yet to complete the second reading debate and allow this matter to go to committee.

I appreciate the time allocated to me and look forward to this process as it unfolds.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Questions and comments?

Mr. Norm Miller: I'm pleased to add some comments to the speech from the member for Pickering-Scarborough East to do with Bill 85, the Photo Card Act, 2008. I would certainly have questions for the government: When last year they'd just announced the big, new, enhanced driver's licence, where is the long-term planning, when now we have another photo card? Why are there three photo cards, including a basic photo card? Why wouldn't all of them have the enhanced information? And of course we've had some privacy concerns that have been raised by previous speakers.

Having enhanced information on the photo card is very closely related to tourism. I certainly have some substantial concerns to do with the upcoming summer season of tourism, particularly as a representative of the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. I note that at least one member of this Legislature sent out a press release entitled "Summer of Discontent," referring to the upcoming tourism season this year, where we have high gas prices, the high value of the Canadian dollar, and the US economy that has slowed down a lot. So it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that this is going to be a challenging year, particularly the summer season, for tourism. What has the McGuinty government been doing? What are they doing? The answer is, "Nothing." Other than the appointment of the $8-million member from Vaughan as the tourism czar to go out and do a study, which may be beneficial long-term, certainly it's not going to do anything for this summer.

We have seen a very concrete proposal from the leader of the Conservative Party, John Tory, to take off the retail sales tax for this year, which would be a boost for this upcoming season. It would be something that would make a positive difference. Once the season is over, it's too late; you can't get that business back. So I think that the government should act on the proposal put forward by the PC Party.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Just in response to the comments made by the honourable member, I think the issue for us is that, first of all, as New Democrats we support the intent of the legislation. I had a chance earlier to do my leadoff speech and talk about why we're here, and the somewhat overreaction in the United States to what has happened, as far as how they've adjusted themselves after 9/11. But that's another debate.

This is one of those pieces of legislation where we need to make sure we get it right, right off the bat. I note that the parliamentary assistant agreed with my leadoff speech in that this bill is going to need some time in committee. It may not be a lot, or it may be a lot; I don't know. It depends on how much interest there is, but we need to talk to experts to make sure we get this right. There's a whole issue around technologies. These chips that are going to be inside these particular photo IDs can be accesses. Is it going to be an open system or a closed system, in the sense of how the technology is going to work? Either way that information, that little chip that transmits a signal, which has the personal information of the individual on the card, could be picked up by somebody and hacked if they're able to figure out the encryption, if it is an encrypted system.

If it's not an encrypted system, that's even worse, and God only knows what people are going to do with that kind of information. So I think it's important that we speak to the technical people at committee to make sure we get that right. Also, the whole issue of privacy needs to be really taken seriously, because we're going to be putting a lot of information on these cards that people probably would love to get their hands on for all kinds of marketing reasons and whatever else it might be.

We support the bill; we think, however, that it needs to go to committee. It has to get some proper time in committee in order to look at some of the concerns around technologies, making sure that it's secure and also the issue of privacy. We need to get our privacy commissioner, obviously, at committee in order to take a look at this as well. I look forward to time in committee.

Mr. Jeff Leal: The member from Pickering-Scarborough East certainly highlighted some of the very positive aspects of Bill 85 and the card.

In my riding of Peterborough I have two very active seniors' groups: Marion Batten is president of the Maple-ridge seniors' group, located on Erskine Avenue, and Shirley Shaw is the executive director of Activity Haven on Barnardo Avenue in Peterborough. Both of those groups, when you're talking to them, have talked about the need to have a comprehensive photo ID card in Ontario that they can use. One of those two organizations runs bus tours from time to time, not only throughout other parts of Ontario, but there are some tours to upper New York state and Michigan. Anything we can do to assist those seniors when they go on their travels, to facilitate access across the border, to make it as easy as possible, is a very positive thing to do.

Minister Bradley has been a real champion on this issue. I know he spent considerable time in Washington, DC, as tourism minister, and now as Minister of Transportation, working with Louise Slaughter, who is a Congressperson from upper New York state. Minister Bradley has had those discussions as to how we can facilitate cross-border travel.

The member for Sarnia talks about people getting through Sarnia. We welcome that, because eventually they make their way to Peterborough to fish in the Kawartha Lakes. We see that as a very positive thing.

Mr. Mike Colle: Chemong Lake.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Chemong Lake and Rice Lake. I know in Rice Lake, American fishermen come, particularly in May and June, to take advantage of the bluegill, which is in abundance in Rice Lake. We welcome them to come in because they do a lot for the economy locally.

We see that Bill 85 is a very positive step. We look forward to it moving through the Legislature.

Mr. John O'Toole: The member Pickering-Scarborough East is right on. I followed some of his comments and I look forward to adding some comments in a few minutes on that. I think it's an issue that we all endorse. It's a matter of taking time to get the perspective on this.

There was an earlier opportunity, which I'll explain in some detail. I worked with three or four ministries on that side of the House in 2003 and 2004. I just want to thank one of my constituents, Joseph Beshara, who wrote to me in early 2004. I met with him. I have the correspondence that I sent to the various ministries, some of whom did not respond. I think the idea is sound. I'd like to give Joseph Beshara most of the credit for bringing this up.

This is already in place in New Brunswick. So we're not inventing it, and this is not rocket science. This is just making it convenient for the people of Ontario, whether they're seniors or persons who simply don't have a driver's licence, to be more mobile in our economy and to have secure identification. So it's the right thing to do.

It's a timely thing to do as we're entering the tourist season. To make it easier for people to cross the borders, for their own convenience and their own mobility in Canada, is something a government should be doing, while at the same time securing their identification. I'll be speaking in a few minutes in more detail.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): The member for Pickering-Scarborough East has two minutes to reply.

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: I just want to extend my thanks to the members for Parry Sound-Muskoka, Timmins-James Bay, Peterborough and Durham, who responded. I think the theme of the discussion this morning, as we've gone through this, has been focused on two or three principle areas, which will get reflected during the committee debate. I think comments around the need to ensure matters of privacy, and the co-operation and input that we'll continue to receive from the privacy commissioner, are going to be exceedingly helpful. I think issues around protection, the type of technology, the need to have that technical expertise made available to members of the committee—to ensure, in my view, that there's a comfort level with the technology and at the same time garner a higher level of understanding of other opportunities of technology that may not be a part of this particular legislation but may find their way into the processes that we use—are going to be exceedingly helpful.

I would just comment if I could, because a number of people have talked about tourism and the driver's licences related to that and gas prices. It was interesting—this is a sidebar. I was listening to the radio on my way in this morning, and the newscast was commenting on comments made by Cam Woolley, the OPP officer who we all know for his work on traffic and traffic safety. He was commenting about the high prices of gas and what that appears to be influencing on the roads. What it appears to be influencing are speeds on our 400-series highways and other related highways. They are actually seeing a reduction in average speeds on those highways, something closer to what the speed limits are—probably more in tune with what we're going to talk about on another bill, and that's speed limits with speed limiters on trucks—closer to those kinds of speed ranges, even on our 400-series highways now. They're actually seeing a very substantive reduction in—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Thank you. Further debate?

Mr. John O'Toole: In the very few minutes that I have to make a couple of comments, I just want to review for those listening. Bill 85 was brought in on June 3, 2008, by Minister Bradley. I think it's important to be clear here:

"There are three kinds of photo cards: basic, enhanced and combined. A basic ... card contains the holder's name and photograph and other prescribed information about the holder. An enhanced ... card contains the holder's name and photograph, a notation to indicate that the holder is a Canadian citizen and other prescribed information about the holder; it also has security and other features that may allow it to be used for travel. A combined photo card is one card that constitutes the holder's enhanced photo and driver's licence." In fact there are three separate cards here, and I think that's very notable and very convenient.

The key here is, in today's world of technology and privacy issues, ease of accessibility for the user, but it's also for others to perhaps access. It's important to get the security part correct here. I have a bit of a systems or computer-type of background at one point in my career, some years ago, I might say. The idea today, though, is a smart card, similar to a card when travelling on the 407. In fact, some countries already have them. It's not just a passport; it's all of the information that is pertinent to your needs.

We all complain today of having so many cards in our wallet, and different identification things that come up with that. We have now the health card. We also have another card that the province just issued, which is this card here; it's the prescription drug benefit card. I'm concerned that they're hurrying to get these things solved one piece at a time. True smart technology would be much more efficient and much more uniform, whether for reading or processing, if they could just slow it down here and get the right card. The right card could be your health card. It could be your driver's licence. It could be your hunting card or gaming card. It could be any kind of card at all—one card. That would be a smart card. So I think it's going to be neat to have another card in our wallet. You'll have a stack of them like this.

If you want to make sure it's secure, and you put your resources into having the right information available to the right people at the right time at the right price, I think we'd be on to something that was quite innovative here. I don't see any innovation in this at all. It's quick and easy. I can tell you, without getting too emotional, let's not get on the bandwagon here and sing the national anthem and give out some kind of an award, because this is anything but that. Okay?

Why am I a bit perplexed about this? Why did I want to speak? Well, I have a list here. I wrote to Minister Bradley, I wrote to Minister Watson, I wrote to Minister Takhar, and I wrote to other civil servants as well. This was back in 2004. It was brought to me, and I have the correspondence with me. My staff Sheryl, Peter and Fern have done a great job hustling out this information this morning. This is a letter from Mr. Joseph Beshara, who came to visit me. He moved from New Brunswick. He had a travel card, and the card was also an ID card, an official, provincially issued identification card. He said that his issue was, he didn't drive. Without a driver's licence he was scuppered. I wrote to the government in good faith on his behalf with his words from Mr. Beshara—it's nothing that I innovated. I could give you the log. We track pretty well all the correspondence; we write a lot of stuff to ministers, I will say that—maybe more than any member in the House. But I have very involved and engaged constituents. I'm still waiting, in 2008, for some of the responses to those letters which I have in front of me.

Here's a little bridge to the past: I'm going to presume that Mr. Beshara's letter from four years ago resulted in this bill today. I would like to move a small amendment to call it the Joseph Beshara legislation. He thought of it. And all these high-paid bureaucrats, or whatever you call them—we've talked about smart cards for 100 years. A smart health card would actually tell my blood type and you could put it in a machine and see who my doctor was and some of the disclosed information that I wanted on my record in case I had allergies or some other thing. I won't go too far down the road. Let's not go too far here.

Another statement: I'm looking at the remarks made by the minister. It's a speech that was written by civil servants that he read. I'm not trying to be smart; that's how it works. In it, he said—I'm reading right from Hansard, page 2250 on June 3, when he introduced it. It says:

"We are proposing to introduce an enhanced driver's licence card that would include citizenship information. This would become an acceptable travel document, a passport alternative, for US land and sea cross-border travel."

What he doesn't say is that it doesn't include air travel. If I'm travelling by air through any part of that route to Vancouver over the States, I'd have to have ID, and this doesn't pass. It's by the omission that it's not fully informing the consumer.

Interjection.

Mr. John O'Toole: Another thing that's important if I go on to read here—let's not become emotional. We're trying to understand the bill, which I'd encourage you to read. One of them here is that it implies that it would help tourism. In fact, it's in the speech. It will do nothing of the sort to help tourism. Nothing of the sort. This is not being issued to US citizens. This is being issued to Ontario citizens for their ease of access to leave Ontario.

So what we're saying is we have a catastrophe in Ontario in the economy because of the price of gas and some other tinkering. People now aren't going to be able to go to the States. That's actually good. They can stay in Ontario and spend their money closer to home for tourism. If they wanted to go to Buffalo, it's now going to be easier for them to go to some American destination. But if an American comes over here, they're still going to need their own passport, their own identification issued.

Do you understand? So it's not going to make it easier for visitors to Canada at all.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: Wrong.

Mr. John O'Toole: The member from Algoma-Manitoulin, I believe it is, is taking issue. I'd ask you to get up in your two minutes and show me the part of the speech that shows how it actually helps American tourists. This has nothing to do with American tourists.

Mr. Mike Colle: They're doing the same card as we are.

Mr. John O'Toole: That's not this bill. If they do or do not do it, I've not seen it. But that's all I'm saying: A bit of clarity here actually goes a long way in that respect.

We could switch the topic because I think it's timely, but it doesn't come into effect until 2009. That's when this American border issue will be responded to. And that issue, I believe, is important. Border security and the whole security issue with respect to these enhanced cards is very, very important. I would not want to underplay that, but this combined photo card will meet the applicable rules set out by the United States western hemisphere travel initiative, which is good.

Initially, there was some idea that this was an Americanization issue, but I congratulate the minister on the fact that he did push the issue with the border state governors and those people he met, those officials. This is all good.

What it does for the Ontario citizen and the Ontario business person is to make it easier. Some people go across the border weekly, or daily, even. This is all good. It's actually going to be good for people who don't have a driver's licence. They will now have a convenient card. I'd like to see it be a real smart card as opposed to just another card outside of the new visual health card, the new prescription card and all the other cards we have. I think it is a step forward. In that respect, I would be happy.

Now, tourism, and where would you go this summer? I'm switching the tone here a bit, in the last few minutes I have, to say that Durham is a great destination for anyone, whether it's an American or people from other parts of Ontario, indeed Canada. It's going to have a couple of events that I think are important, and I want to give a few people a bit of credit.

We have an excellent destination in the township of Uxbridge; in fact, it's in the community of Leaskdale, which is sort of the northeast part of Uxbridge. That was the home of a very famous Canadian, Lucy Maud Montgomery, and this year is the 100th anniversary of Anne of Green Gables. I thank Councillor Pat Mikuse, who is, I believe, the council appointee to the archives, museums and the cultural part of the community of Uxbridge. I would recommend that. It's a wonderful destination. I believe the ministry has given them money to celebrate this very significant anniversary. I believe it's this Saturday on my schedule, a big celebration. Let me just check on my schedule here. It's the Anne of Green Gables street festival and festival garden tour in Uxbridge, and it's on Saturday, June 14. There you go. There's an invitation to an easy destination. Even though the price of gas is nearing $1.50 a litre, it's still convenient to go there. It's just a short drive just out of York region, and you're right there in Uxbridge.

Another anniversary that's being celebrated this summer—in fact, the celebrations will be starting very soon—is the 150th anniversary of the town of Bowmanville. It's actually my hometown, the centre part of my riding. I'd like to thank members from that committee for the work they've done. It's a wonderful historic downtown. I believe it was built in 1858. Unfortunately, they had a tragic fire a few weeks ago, as you may have heard, and one of the historic buildings was completely demolished. It's quite tragic, actually.

Kevin Anyan has worked tirelessly to promote this, and it will be a great celebration. Ron Hooper, the councillor there, is a chairperson of that committee. Willie Woo is also very involved, along with Rowlie Coombes.

Sher and Roger Leetooze—now, there's an interesting couple. She's a writer and has published several books, and she's recording significant events and the record of 150 years of Bowmanville. I would recommend that to people as well.

Martha Rutherford is the historian and archivist for the museums in our area, Clark Museum and the Bowmanville Museum and couple of other museums around as well.

Dan Brock is going to organize the parade. Cheri Smith is doing marketing. Steve Coles is doing the opening, and John Fowler is look after advertising. There's a broad citizens' committee trying to make tourism and the destination of Bowmanville on their 150th anniversary a real success.

There is good news among the many critical things I may have said, but don't forget that I was the transportation critic for a period of time. I'm happy that this is here; I'm disappointed by how long it's taken, all the way back to my comment in 2004 when I wrote several ministers. I think I was ignored, or maybe I didn't get an answer because they were so overwhelmed by what a neat idea this was from Mr. Beshara that they sent it on to Minister Bradley. Minister Bradley has been the Minister of Tourism and Minister of Transportation, so maybe he has moved on an issue thanks to my constituent's writing the letter.

But it's always interesting when you have the opportunity—all of us, Mr. Speaker, you included, because I know the gentleman in the chair right now, the member from Wellington-Halton Hills, is the tourism critic, and made some very excellent remarks. I have those copies of his remarks from Hansard. He made the comparison with the idea of this card and what's missing here—I'm not really sure; I think the critic or the parliamentary assistant may have said in his remarks how much it was going to cost. The first thing I want to do is this hand-in-your-pocket business—that ad. Is this another opportunity for the government to get their hand in your pocket?

Mr. Bill Murdoch: The banks are in your pocket.

Mr. John O'Toole: Premier McGuinty is doing a fairly good job at it as well with the health tax, and they still have no doctor. What's going on here?

Mr. Bill Murdoch: He's in with the banks.

Mr. John O'Toole: I only have to stick to the topic at hand: What is it going to cost? Is everybody going to have the new special reader to read this secure card? Are there going to have to be millions of dollars of these readers at the borders so they can read this card, or is it integrated technology where it's readable anywhere? Is it secure technology? There are a lot of unanswered questions. I trust that the minister and the privacy commissioner, Ann Cavoukian, will certainly make sure it meets the very strongest and stringent tests.

Our member for Wellington—Halton Hills, Mr. Arnott, said, "I'm pleased to have this opportunity to respond.... When I got my Canadian passport a couple of years ago, my recollection is that I paid $75 for it, if I'm not mistaken, and it was for five years. I don't think the minister or the parliamentary assistant has indicated ... how much this ... is going to cost."

He's wondering if the cost of—for instance, I just renewed my driver's licence and I think for two years it was $150; that's about $75 a year. There's more and more of this nickelly-pickelly, nickel and dime, into your pocket, another card, you can't go anywhere, don't leave home without it.

I think we need to sit down and rationalize all of these cards. A special committee—we're not doing anything here, really. We're mostly filibustering this bill. There are several bills that I think are kind of being rushed through. Yet look at this; the attendance here is almost scary.

Mr. Bill Murdoch: It's the new rule changes that have really brought the people in here.

Mr. John O'Toole: I think the new rule changes mean nobody has to come any more. The member for Bruce—Grey—Owen Sound probably has a few things to say on this bill because he has a great north part of Bruce riding; it's wonderful. His favourite area, I think, is the Niagara Escarpment. He just loves that tourist area, the scenic value. He's been a big supporter in many ways—not in all ways; I would not like to impugn motive here. I know he's always had a lot to say about the Niagara Escarpment; we'll put it that way. At the same time, he lives there and he loves it. It's the vistas in Ontario; it's a great place to visit.

In the very few minutes I have left I just want to leave on a reasonably light-hearted note. I've watched with interest the discussions here—question period and that, which will be here in a few moments. The main issue I see is the economy. It isn't all Dalton's fault, but he's not helping very much. One of the main factors within that file is fuel and energy costs; they're going through the roof. For people on fixed incomes, young families, a holiday this summer will be a drive to Canada's Wonderland; they're not going anywhere else. They can't afford it with the price of gas and the taxes we're paying at our homes, the price of electricity, the air conditioning. It's starting to trouble me.

When I look at the young pages here, we need to leave them with a stronger province, not a weaker province. In that climate, I'm concerned about the tourism implications of Bill 85. But I am somewhat relieved, because there's—

Interjection.

Mr. John O'Toole: I might go to Peterborough this summer a few times; probably every weekend, really.

I'm reassured because the travel czar of Ontario, Mr. Sorbara, has been given $8 million—I wish I could travel with him in the limo—to kind of bring up a strategy for tourism. He was a fairly respectful Minister of Finance. I think he's being underutilized over there and I think this is just a free, go-anywhere card. Eight million dollars—I want to see the report. In fact, he should get that report on the table now because the economy is in trouble now. I'd be one who would be right here in this forum. I'm willing to work in a non-partisan, co-operative way to get it right with Mr. Sorbara because I think he's a decent fellow and really does want to find it, but he needs to work with our critic, Mr. Arnott, and he needs to work with all parties—the NDP as well—and find the right answers at the right time for the people of Ontario now. We don't need to wait for 2009 or some flashy announcement in the election in 2011. So let's get down to serious—I'm looking for responses to some of the comments I made. Maybe the parliamentary assistant will clarify the issue of how this card actually helps American citizens who visit Canada. It doesn't, okay? Unless he can refute that, that's what this debate's about. It's not a personal criticism of any sort, but I'm pointing out a few things that could have been done in 2004. It could be smart cards. How much does it cost and how does it help the people whom we want to come into Ontario, not leave Ontario? Thank you for the opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Questions and comments?

Mr. Gilles Bisson: The member from Durham raised what I thought was an interesting point, one that I'd not thought of, and that is, why don't we utilize or at least look at the possibility of utilizing this process in order to consolidate a number of pieces of ID on one card? It's not a bad suggestion, and it speaks to what we often, I think, do a disservice to when we do legislation in this House: that you would think that what's really supposed to happen is that we're listening to each other's points of view on a piece of legislation. We send it off to committee, and if somebody's got a decent idea that's doable and manageable, we move forward.

This particular suggestion's not a bad one, because we all have it. You have the health cards, your driver's licence, your Outdoors card and various pieces of ID and cards from the provincial government, and if we're really going to move by the way of smart card technology, that's not a bad idea, quite frankly. All of us, I think, would be very happy to have that much less stuff to carry around in our very heavy wallets, because we know we're not weighted down by the amount of money in the wallet; we're weighted down by the amount of plastic that we carry in it. Sometimes, the limit on that plastic is a little bit more than we should have.

I think the member makes a good point. I don't know if it's doable. It's one of those things where you'd have to talk to the experts who do this kind of thing. But I think that it's not a bad suggestion.

The other point that he makes in regard to what this really means as far as tourism—yes, I can understand part of the comments that he's making there. But we're in a box, right? At the end of the day, the Americans are going to ban Canadians from going into the United States without proper identification, being a passport, and this legislation, although I don't like the idea, at least gives Ontarians a chance to do something that's a little bit less onerous and a little less expensive than having to purchase a passport every five years. That's the context by which we go into committee, and I look forward to that suggestion being taken seriously.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I just wanted to thank the member for Durham for his speech, and I look forward to having these discussions in the committee that will happen shortly.

Mr. Bill Murdoch: I'm glad to be able to comment on the honourable member from Durham, Mr. O'Toole. You turn the television on in the morning and there he is. You turn it off at night and he's the man up there speaking. He's the man of the hour; there's no doubt about it. He does his research so well that almost no one else has to speak here.

I must congratulate the government on their new rule changes. It has enhanced the attendance in this place so greatly. I'm so impressed. There are so many people in here to listen to it. It's just amazing that when they changed these rules, we got so many people in here to listen to anyone who dare speak.

Talking about the card that they're going to come up with that allows us to go to the States—it's something, I guess, coming from this government, but the unfortunate part is that they have no plans over there. We have an economy that's going into the toilet. We have the tourist trade going to go into the toilet next time, and they've done nothing. This little bit of having a new card—now, my wallet will be heavier again because we already have a whole lot of cards in our wallet. Sure, there's some way that they can combine a new card with our health card or our driver's licence card, something like that. But here will be another card, and this is all that they can come up with. I guess, if you own a plastic factory, you may make some money now because they're going to make a bunch of new cards. But that's about all they're doing. It's unfortunate that they have no idea of what is happening in the economy, what is happening in tourism. At least over here we come up with an idea to help out the tourist industry. But no, they couldn't do it. They just have no idea. They're on a cloud, and they're floating along.

After their four years of inability, now they're floating along, hoping they can float through four more years.

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: I won't take too long. I appreciated the comments from the member for Durham. I know he has two minutes to wrap up. I hope he'll take that little bit of time to tell us a little more about the Anne of Green Gables festival. I presume it's going to include the homestead of Lucy Maud Montgomery as part of that tour. I particularly appreciated his comments, about half-way through his speech, on a bill that he's supporting at second reading that he was using the opportunity to filibuster.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): The member for Durham has two minutes to reply.

Mr. John O'Toole: I want to thank, in sort of reverse order here, the member for Pickering-Scarborough East. Yes, the Lucy Maud Montgomery homestead in Leaskdale will be available this weekend. In fact, it will be featured this summer at the Toronto CNE. So it is a significant event for all Canadians. We should be very proud and share the heritage. We each have those stories. This is one story in my area.

The member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound is always entertaining and direct. But I think he was true when he talked about the number of cards. It's like, pick a card. Those are all Ontario cards, right here. I don't want to show them because of the privacy issues. But if you had a smart, secured card, I think we'd be on the right track.

The member for Algoma-Manitoulin: I look forward to committee hearings on this bill; again, another bill that has unanimous consent. We could go to committee of the whole and solve this right here, right now, today, and have everybody involved in that debate. That's the way we should be doing things here. It's just a process, but we all agree with the objective. There's no question about it.

The member for Timmins-James Bay made the most non-partisan comment with respect to listening to each other's ideas. It's an extremely positive and productive thing to do, not just for the young people here but for those viewing. That's how they want Ontario to serve them: They want their elected members to work co-operatively to do the right thing.

There are several bills—the Pesticides Act, as well as the cruelty to animals bill and the speed limiters. Most of these bills are kind of neutral bills. We want to get them right. We don't want to have them tested in the courts, as we are now. The street racing bill was hastily drafted, and it's being challenged in the courts.

We need to work together in this forum. We don't have to slip off to some committee. Half the days, the House is not utilizing the full time correctly.

Mr. Frank Klees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I feel that I must point out that when the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound referred to the large number of people here, it was really his attempt at sarcasm. It shouldn't be misunderstood.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): I don't believe that was a point of order, but I appreciate the information.

Further debate.

Mr. Paul Miller: We are hoping to continue debate on this matter. It's obviously of great importance, and we do not want to end debate on it. We're looking forward, after question period, to continuing this at the next convenient time. I'm sure we're now close to the moment for question period.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I appreciate the intervention and look forward to taking this bill to committee at the earliest possible time.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): It being almost 10:45, this debate stands adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Good morning, members and our guests.

On behalf of the member for Hamilton Centre, in the west members' gallery, I'd like to welcome members of Canadians for Properly Built Homes: Mary McAllister-Diks; Karen Somerville; Brigitte and Terry Mark, and daughter Amanda; Alan and Cindy Griesse; Bruno Pisani and his son, Sam Pisani; Joe West; Avi Dan; Christine Ballard; and Nora Herridge.

On behalf of the member for Kingston and The Islands, a group of grades 7 to 12 students who recently participated in the Canada-Wide Science Fair in Ottawa are here for the Sci-Tech Ontario celebratory event to recognize their achievement and promote science among youth. Members can visit them today in committee room 228-229, starting at 4 p.m.

On behalf of the member for Toronto-Danforth, in the west members' gallery: Chantal Sundaram, Saima Mohammad, Beenish Gaya and Mariya Asrar.

On behalf of the member for Sarnia-Lambton, in the west members' gallery: Christopher Chopcian and his dad, Michael Chopcian, are here as well with the Sci-Tech group today.

On behalf of the member for Richmond Hill, in recognition of Brain Injury Awareness Month, in the east members' gallery: Kent Basset-Spiers, Corinne Kagan, John Kumpf, Hedy Chandler, Teri Czajka, Judy Moir, Angela Colantonio, April Ferguson, Jan Fisher, Maria Hundek, David Hundek, Robert Stephens, Rachel Sa, Mariana Perez, Cindy Bailey and Travis Bailey.

On behalf of page Chris Rayment, I'd like to welcome in the west public gallery his father, Ian Rayment.

On behalf of the member for Newmarket-Aurora, I'd like to welcome, in the west members' gallery, Robin and Diana McComb.

ORAL QUESTIONS

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: To the Minister of Economic Development, who is gradually getting to her seat: It's about your government's flawed auto investment strategy. Despite the spin the government tried to put on last week's announcement of the Oshawa truck plant closure, it's quite clear that they failed to get a firm jobs guarantee when they handed out two hundred thirty-five million tax dollars to General Motors. A month ago, when GM first announced job cuts at the truck plant, they also said they were looking for another $140 million in government funding for Oshawa and St. Catharines.

In the wake of GM's cuts of 2,600 jobs in Ontario, what decision have you made with respect to their latest request for more money?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it's important to note that the Next Generation of Jobs Fund was announced this year in an effort for us to reach out not just to the automotive sector but to many sectors, to look at the next generation of products that can be made right here in Ontario, for sale around the world. It is a program that incorporates our climate change agenda, looking at green, clean energy efficiency, higher levels of productivity, innovation, higher levels of innovative technologies; that's the Next Generation of Jobs Fund.

We do have companies that are applying to this program. We know that General Motors has made it public that they too have been interested in this program for the future of product and activity at General Motors. The Premier made it very clear again yesterday in this House that we are very much in favour of working with our automotive sector partners to see that future investment comes to Ontario.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I'm not sure from that answer if there has been an application from GM in a formal way or not. The minister said about a month ago that there was a 45-day window on GM's request—so, 15 days and counting.

I hope the minister appreciates that Ontario taxpayers, and GM workers in particular, are going to be paying close attention to what you do when another automaker comes looking for a partner. In fact, a Nanos poll released today shows that almost half of Ontarians oppose the government's financial support of the auto sector. I think that's understandable. They want to know they're getting value for their tax dollars.

Minister, will you commit today to making a clear-cut and firm jobs guarantee one of the conditions to GM if indeed they do formalize that request for one hundred and forty million tax dollars?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it's important to note that we expect that all members of this House will be supportive of companies coming forward to invest with us as partners in Ontario. We hope that the Next Generation of Jobs Fund will be a huge success.

Let me just quote someone who is quite well known right here in the House: "I think in the auto sector, especially with the rapidly advancing technology in the auto sector and what we see with energy prices, getting involved in the investment side of new technology and innovation I think is an appropriate role for government." That was Bob Runciman, June 5 of this year.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I don't see anything contradictory in that quote.

Minister, Ontarians want and—I think you would agree, or should agree—deserve transparency, particularly when it comes to handing out half of a billion tax dollars to auto makers. If you're not going to be straight with taxpayers about what this money is going to achieve for them, why not? In the past, you've said you won't release the details in these contracts. I want to ask you: Will you make a clear and unequivocal commitment here today to getting a jobs guarantee from General Motors and any other auto maker on a funding request that comes forward in the future?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it has been very clear—over the last several weeks, which have been difficult weeks, the workers at General Motors have worried very much about their future, and we too on this side of the House are worried and want the very best for the workers who work at General Motors and their families.

General Motors itself, as a company, made it very clear that their latest announcement regarding the truck plant may affect the contract and may put them in a position to have to repay the loan that included job commitments. They made that clear themselves. It's very apparent to the people of Ontario that there were commitments that General Motors made to the government of Ontario and that they will live up to that agreement, as will the government of Ontario.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE CONTROL

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: My question is for the Minister of Health. Despite our repeated calls over several weeks now for an inquiry and also an immediate review investigation into what we know to be at least 260 deaths related to C. difficile—and that's just in seven hospitals—you have rejected those calls.

You have said that you've conducted three separate reviews into this very lethal killer. This is a new strain, as you know. Minister, can you explain why, after three separate reviews, you did not make C. difficile a reportable infection during the last four years?

Hon. George Smitherman: I want to thank the honourable member for acknowledging that there is a broad array of information available that allows us the benefit of taking action. The Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee has been one of those parties involved in offering advice to the ministry with respect to reporting or not reporting C. difficile.

On this matter of inquiry, our point would be that the coroner has said that the matter has been investigated at the Soo hospital, which gave us good advice about steps forward, alongside the work that Dr. Gardam has done, and that it's more appropriate that we ask Dr. Baker to focus on instituting this broad array of patient safety reporting, which will be initiated on September 30 of this year and will provide a variety of substantial new information to the public about patient safety indicators in all of our hospital environments.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: It's very interesting that the minister references Dr. Baker, because Dr. Baker has twice now advised the minister to start public reporting. He did so in June 2007 and again in February 2008.

This minister has said on many occasions that it's up to the hospitals. The reality is that it isn't the hospitals that have the authority to mandate public reporting; it is the minister—not the hospitals, not the health care workers, not the experts. But you have refused, despite the mounting evidence since 2004, to mandate this.

I ask you today: Why did you not demonstrate leadership and ask for this to happen during the past four years? Why have you waited—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, member. Minister.

Hon. George Smitherman: The honourable member should be able to see right in the action itself that we are following the advice of Dr. Baker. To mention that the first letter that Dr. Baker sent was at the point contradicted by the Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee—there was no consensus from the clinicians about what was most appropriate with respect to reporting. But it's somewhat of a separate matter.

The honourable member wants to make people believe that public reporting is the thing that's responsible for people working in the environment to take the appropriate precautions and to wash their hands or to take the appropriate steps as administrators in hospitals to ensure that steps are being taken to clean them as appropriate. The point is, that's an element of the arsenal that we add to all of those steps that have been taken prior. It's not a one-off; it's not singular. It's about further progress on the issue of controlling the spread of superbugs in the hospital environment, around which much is known and much responsibility borne and much action taken already.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: Certainly, the actions of this minister stand in very stark contrast to the actions of the minister in Northern Ireland, who, earlier this year, when he discovered that 51 people had died from C. difficile, immediately got on the job and set up an expert panel to do a comprehensive three-month review. I say to you today: Reporting is important, because at least it would have made us aware of the extent of the problem, which we don't know about today. And do you know what? If you take a look at the 260 people who have died from C. difficile, if you take a look at what happened at Joe Brant, where the CEO said that the only information he ever received about the C. difficile outbreaks was through the media, you ask yourself the question: How many lives could have been saved if you had taken control and asked for mandatory reporting? So I ask you today: Why did you not do your job, as the minister in Northern Ireland—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister?

Hon. George Smitherman: It seems that it's the honourable member herself who only now has awakened to the reality of C. difficile. It seems that it's only in the last month or so that the honourable member has been aware of this issue, but that's not the circumstance for hospitals. If a CEO of a hospital has said that, he stands in contradiction to a wide variety of initiatives that have been undertaken by the ministry, by the Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee and indeed by the Ontario Hospital Association.

This situation is a well-known challenge in health care. It's not something that has arisen only of late, and that's why: because of the investigations that have been done, as an example, by the coroner, who themselves have concluded that further investigation is not what's necessary, but rather taking our actions to the next level, which is instituting, on behalf of the public, this wide variety of new patient safety indicators, which will be initiated on September 30 by Dr. Baker, acknowledged by the honourable member to be a leader in this field.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: My question is for the Deputy Premier. Over the last week or so, we have learned that the McGuinty government gave General Motors $235 million of the people's money. General Motors was supposed to sustain jobs in Oshawa with that money. Instead, 2,600 workers at the truck plant are losing their jobs. But today we learn that there are more layoffs, that in fact close to 100 workers in General Motors's regional engineering centre in Oshawa have been given their layoff notices and were immediately escorted off the property yesterday. These are highly skilled engineers and technicians; the so-called $235-million Beacon funding was supposed to sustain their jobs and sustain their projects.

Can the Deputy Premier tell us why the very engineers and technicians who were supposed to be at the core of the $235-million cheque are now also being laid off?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it was said very clearly by General Motors on day one of this announcement several days ago: They recognized their relationship with the Ontario government through this contract meant that with this announcement, they may be putting themselves in a position to prepay loans that were made payable to them under our OAIS program. We understand that. We are working with General Motors to determine, if in fact that will happen, when that will happen. There were markers laid out in that contract, as General Motors has acknowledged. We're hoping that as these world changes happen to the automotive sector, and as these challenges are being addressed by the many companies that have made investments in Ontario, the likes of which we have not seen in any other jurisdiction in North America—we want our companies to be strong. This side of the House is planning to work with our automotive companies so they will be strong again.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The McGuinty government talks about corporations and their close friendship. I want to know about jobs. I want to know about all the workers who are losing their jobs.

I happen to have the photo op from the Premier's announcement on March 2, 2005—you know, the photo op that the Premier often holds, promises this and that, and then it turns out to be false. This was what was said at that photo op: The Beacon project, as it's called, aims to strengthen automotive engineering and manufacturing capabilities as well as research and development and commercialization in order to build the auto sector of tomorrow.

Well, the very engineers who were talked about in your photo op are now being ushered out the door—the very engineers who have done so much of the research work, who designed this hybrid-powered half-ton which is now going to be manufactured in Mexico.

I ask again, how could you let this happen?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think if there has ever been a government in Ontario that has been supportive of the automotive sector, this frankly is the government. This is the government that's prepared to stand behind the automotive sector, which for many decades has fed the nation, because we know how vital it is to our manufacturing sector. We are prepared to work with that sector to see that it stays strong well into the future.

We know right now they are facing challenges, and General Motors in particular is facing challenges that we want them to get through. That means that in this day and age, when we have to compete with other jurisdictions, the Ontario government has to be at the table, as do our federal counterparts. We think that perhaps some of them may have seen the light lately. We hope that may be true.

We know that our automotive sector will be strong again, and it will be because of the significant investments that have been made in Ontario over these last three years as a result of the OAIS—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Final supplementary.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I think I heard what the minister had to say. I don't think she mentioned workers once in her response. I want to tell you about these workers. Not only do these workers do the engineering, design and development—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Stop the clock. Sergeant-at-Arms, would you please collect the prop that the member from Renfrew has? Can I see the back of that, please?

Leader of the third party.

Mr. Howard Hampton: Not only did these workers do the engineering, the design and the development of the hybrid-powered Sierra half-ton, which is now going to be built in Mexico, but they also did the engineering and design of the Chevy Equinox and the GM Torrent. They were involved in the design and initial construction of the innovative wind tunnel at the Ontario Institute of Technology. These are the very kinds of high-level engineering and design jobs that were supposed to be sustained and added to by your $235-million cheque to General Motors. I see how General Motors has got the $235 million, but I ask again, why are so many of these talented, experienced, knowledgeable workers going out the door under the McGuinty government?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: The member opposite purports to be supporting workers. I ask the member, have you checked with the leader of the CAW about his opinion of the provincial government and our participation in landing investment in Ontario? The member opposite doesn't seem to be on the same page with the one leader who is acknowledged by most—CEOs of the auto sector included—as one of the most modern union leaders in the western world.

In contrast to the federal government's inaction, the Ontario government has been doing its best to support auto investment and employment. That's real jobs. "Without provincial support, including its participation in GM's Beacon project, the situation facing the industry today would be far, far worse." Who said that? Buzz Hargrove, the leader of the CAW.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Deputy Premier again: I take it that the McGuinty government is okay with these engineering jobs going to Warren, Michigan, and not staying in Oshawa.

But my question is to the Deputy Premier: Yesterday we learned that almost 10,000 laid-off forestry workers in northern Ontario will not be eligible for this government's much-boasted-about Second Career retraining program. That's on top of the 175,000 laid-off manufacturing workers who lost their jobs before June 1, 2007. We see how the government has bungled its $235 million to General Motors with all the workers being laid off, but I ask again: How can the government promote a so-called retraining strategy that leaves 10,000 workers out in northern Ontario and 175,000 manufacturing workers out elsewhere?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities.

Hon. John Milloy: Once again the question from the leader of the third party is mischievous. The workers of northern Ontario have not been left out of this province's employment supports program. Under Employment Ontario, we invest over $1 billion a year to help 900,000 laid-off workers, including those in northern Ontario. Supports range from everything from resumé writing to job counselling, all the way to short-term training. Several days ago, we announced through the second-career strategy, in addition to that, longer-term training for workers who have been recently laid off—laid off in the last year or those who will be laid off, if that happens, in coming weeks. It's wrong for him to stand up today and to suggest that supports are not available to workers across the province. The second-career strategy is available to recently laid-off workers in any part of this province, and for him to stand up and be so mischievous is a misfortune for those workers who are looking for supports from the province.

Mr. Howard Hampton: Apparently it's creating mischief when you ask questions about government programs that don't help laid-off workers. At least the minister now admits that the much-boasted-about second-career program isn't going to help workers laid off before June 1, 2007. But what he also needs to know is that this other program that he refers to, the Ontario skills development program, is also only available to workers who are receiving employment insurance. Most workers who were laid off before June 1, 2007, have exhausted their employment insurance, so they can't get second careers and they can't get the Ontario skills development program.

I ask again: How could the McGuinty government design and promote and boast about a job retraining program that isn't available to most of the hard-pressed laid-off workers in Ontario?

Hon. John Milloy: This is quite frankly outrageous. In Ontario, we invest $1 billion a year in terms of support for laid-off workers. As of January 1, 2007, federal programs were transferred to the province, and we began an integrated service known as Employment Ontario.

When we have word of a layoff, within one hour we are in contact with the factory or workplace that is affected. We work with the employer and we work with the union, we work with the workers and the community to make sure that we have an action plan to get those workers back to work. In northern Ontario, in many instances, we have established job action centres which work with the workers in the workplace to make sure that they get the supports they need. Right now, we have centres in White River, Dubreuilville, Wawa, Red Rock, Thunder Bay, Atikokan, Nipigon, Mattawa, Greenstone, Dryden and Kenora, all part of the investments that this government is—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Final supplementary?

Mr. Howard Hampton: The minister is right about one thing: This is certainly outrageous. The so-called retraining program that you promote, second career, isn't available to those workers laid off before June 1, 2007. I'll tell you: The longer you've been laid off, the longer you've been unemployed, the harder it is to get back into the workforce. So they're not eligible for that.

1110

Yesterday you stood here and said that they were eligible for another program, but they're not. In order to be eligible for the other program, they have to be receiving employment insurance benefits. They're not receiving employment insurance benefits; most of them have exhausted their employment insurance benefits.

The McGuinty government is so good at photo ops. You're so good at doing announcements. I ask again, what is supposed to happen to those 185,000 laid-off workers who aren't eligible for your much-boasted-about job retraining programs? What are they supposed to do?

Hon. John Milloy: Every year the government of Ontario invests $1 billion in support for laid-off workers across this province. We support workers who are eligible for employment insurance; we support workers who are not eligible for employment insurance. We have a range of services which are offered through the Employment Ontario network and we have set up action centres in factories and communities where there have been layoffs to work with workers and get them back into the workforce as quickly as possible.

I think the results speak for themselves. Since coming to office, 450,000 jobs have been created in this community, and most recently we've added to our suite of services through the second-career strategy, which will be a service available to recently laid-off workers whether they are eligible for employment insurance or not.

Once again, we are working to support workers in the province of Ontario, and it is mischievous for the honourable member to stand up and claim that these programs and services are not available.

HOG INDUSTRY

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. As you know, in February the federal government launched a program to shrink the nation's hog herd. To qualify, the pigs sent for slaughter must be perfectly healthy. When questioned, a spokesman in your office said that the Ontario Independent Meat Processors, Ontario Pork and the Ontario Association of Food Banks approached you about processing these pigs to feed those in need as soon as the program was announced. Minister, that would have been in February. Why did you wait until the Toronto Star started asking questions before you did anything?

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: I would say that it's very important that I have this opportunity today to correct the honourable member. When the article appeared in the Toronto Star, when I was interviewed by the reporter, I was able to say that indeed we have been working with industry partners. We said that we would very much want to participate in the effort to direct what meat is appropriately directed to food banks for food consumption. We asked them to assist us to put a plan together and to come to us with what they believed the cost would be, and when they did that we provided $110,000 to achieve that end. We believe that we have acted responsibly. We have—

Interjection.

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: The member from Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke says we've done nothing. If he's suggesting that providing $110,000—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary.

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: The province of Alberta put in $330,000, the province of Saskatchewan put in $440,000, and that was when the program started. In the time it took you to organize, to get this plan in place, to announce $100,000, some 2,500 surplus pigs were slaughtered that could have gone to the people in need, to the food banks and food kitchens. Instead of pork being fed to pets, people in need could have been eating great Ontario pork. Greg Haskett, a pork farmer in my riding, said, "Putting animals into the pet food chain or fertilizer or meat and bone meal goes against all the principles of a farmer."

Minister, if other provinces could respond quickly enough to process all the pigs for the food banks, why couldn't you?

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: I believe our response has been the responsible response. We didn't just simply identify an amount of money. We asked the partners who would be involved in the cull, as well as the partners at the food bank, what they would need. They were very happy to take that task and they came back to this government and said, "We need $110,000."

I would like to offer the honourable member this remark that has come to us through the Ontario Independent Meat Processors. The processors indicate that they appreciate the efforts of myself in securing financial support to allow as much as 40,000 metric tonnes of culled sow meat to be processed and sent to food banks. What we do know is that the dollars that have been provided will ensure that some—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

Ms. Andrea Horwath: My question is for the Minister of Government and Consumer Services, and it's a pretty basic one. Who does the minister actually have in place to cut through the bureaucratic runaround at Tarion to ensure quicker compensation and better satisfaction to new homeowners who have been victimized by shoddy home builders?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: I'm pleased to respond to the question opposite and to just share quickly some of the things that Tarion and our ministry have done over the last couple of years to enhance the relationship. We've doubled the total compensation payable for warranty claims from $150,000 to $300,000. A homeowners' survey, an independent survey, was done, and 87% of the homeowners surveyed thought that the results of Tarion's service were very good. I know that there are some political leaders in this House who would take 85% in a minute for their satisfaction. But I'm pleased to announce today that in consultation with Tarion over several months, we can announce today that we will assist Tarion in setting up an independent in-house consumer advocate to handle—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary?

Ms. Andrea Horwath: The minister weaves a really good tale, but the Canadians for Properly Built Homes are here today and they have the real story. When a family dream home becomes a nightmare because of shoddy building practices, Tarion has failed to deliver, and it's accountable to no one, not even this minister.

Will the minister today commit to Ombudsman oversight of Tarion to bring real accountability—not in-house accountability, real accountability—and real solutions regarding the systemic problems experienced by Ontario's new-home-buying public?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: As you know, Tarion is a private, not-for-profit corporation that administers the act.

Interjection.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: Well, that's another question. But I just want to go back to our conversations with Tarion. I made, back in early March, some seven requests of the Tarion corporation. We've been in some serious discussions with them about how to enhance the service to get the 87% satisfaction rating even higher, and we will be working with them to set up the independent in-house consumer advocate. This is a huge step forward towards greater accountability and will give new home buyers the satisfaction of knowing that their concerns will be listened to even more intently.

I would just add that the Consumers Council of Canada report recently said that the Tarion program was the best home warranty program in the country.

RESEARCH AND INNOVATION

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: My question is for the Minister of Research and Innovation. Preston Manning has suggested that "any and all MPs, especially newly elected ones"—and I would think MPPs—"should acquaint themselves with the impressive work being done to engage youth through Let's Talk Science and the Canada-Wide Science Fair, organized by the Youth Science Foundation Canada."

I'm proud of students from my riding, Devin Howard, with his project You Are Not a Beautiful and Unique Snowflake, and Mackenzie Carter, with her project, the Coanda Conundrum, who, as a result of winning awards at the Kitchener-Waterloo Science Fair, were able to go and compete at this year's Canada-Wide Science Fair.

Also with us in the House today is Daniel Burd, a Kitchener-Waterloo Science Fair award winner and platinum award winner for his project Plastic Not Fantastic, isolating micro-organisms that can break down plastic.

The government has a role to play in engaging youth in science—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister of Research and Innovation.

Hon. John Wilkinson: I want to thank the member for the question. I want to assure her that we too are proud of Devin, Mackenzie and Daniel, who are visiting today. Our economic future depends on our ability to engage our youth in the wonders of science and technology. I want to encourage all members to visit the Sci-Tech Ontario awards presentation, which will be in rooms 228 and 230 later on this afternoon. I want to thank the Minister of the Environment, our colleague, for sponsoring that today.

Our government and our partners are working together to increase the level of awareness of our young people in the key role played by science. In recognition of that, my ministry is sporting Youth Science Foundation Canada and the work of Sci-Tech Ontario with an investment of some $3.5 million, and an additional investment of some $1.5 million to Let's Talk Science.

I want to quote our friend Mike Lazaridis, chairman of RIM: "We need to change our culture so that science and technology are seen to be the 'in' thing."

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: Canadian astronaut Roberta Bondar has said that as a result of her encounter with the Ontario science fair—she participated in the science fair and it was an experience that ultimately defined her life.

Last week I had the pleasure of joining Mike Lazaridis, where it was announced that he donated an additional $50 million to the Perimeter Institute in Waterloo, on top of the $100 million he donated in 2000, for a total of $150 million. The Perimeter Institute began in the summer of 1999 when Mike Lazaridis, founder and co-CEO of Research in Motion, maker of the successful BlackBerry, found himself in a position to foster research and innovation in Ontario. Yesterday afternoon, I attended a dedication to the Mike and Ophelia Lazaridis Institute for Quantum Computing where the Premier announced nearly $18 million in funding.

Would the minister please explain what his ministry is doing to foster research and innovation so that the next generation of youth can, as Roberta Bondar did, reach—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister.

Hon. John Wilkinson: Our ministry has committed some $3 billion over an eight-year period for research and innovation. Mike Lazaridis believes, and I agree with him, that to invest in fundamental research is to invest in the development of knowledge that can have staggering long-term societal and economic benefits.

Ontario has invested some $151 million in world-leading experimental and theoretical physics research, both at the Institute for Quantum Computing and the Perimeter Institute in Waterloo. Scientists believe that this technology will aid many discoveries, such as unbreakable cryptography, unparalleled high-precision measurement devices, computers with mind-boggling power, and a better understanding of the microscopic world. These will be the jobs of the future for our children and grandchildren.

I would hope that all members would join me in expressing our personal appreciation of the amazing generosity of Mike and Ophelia Lazaridis and the $150 million—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

SCHOOL TRUSTEES

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: To the Deputy Premier: The minister yesterday stated that checks and balances are in place and, “Public dollars are spent in the public interest and for the benefit of our students.” She also stated that the Toronto Catholic District School Board trustee situation is “a cautionary tale.”

TCDSB spending has increased by 167.5% since we were in office. The $67,000-a-year increase per trustee is not a cautionary tale, it is more than the average Ontarian makes. Clearly, your government has lost sight of the average Ontarian. Why did the Minister of Education allow increase after increase to proceed unchecked under your watch?

Hon. George Smitherman: It seems the honourable member has herself confirmed that our government has been dedicating ourselves to enhancing the capacity of our education system in the province of Ontario. That’s why test scores are up. That’s why more students are graduating. That’s why there are more books in our libraries. That’s why there are 9,640 more teachers.

When information arises about circumstances that are unsettling to people, when trustees are saying perhaps this is the way to get to the bottom of it, when the heads of parent groups are saying it’s necessary to take these steps, that’s when we conclude that this is an appropriate measure to protect every dollar, to ensure that it’s allocated and making a difference for the children, and that’s what this initiative is all about. The honourable member knows that very well.

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: Let me make it clear to the Deputy Premier that the 167.5% was an increase in expenses for trustees, not for school programs. The minister’s failure to establish priorities and take action in advance of this public outcry has made it acceptable for trustees to demand increases in gas funding under the threat of classroom cuts. Seven boards are now suddenly under the microscope, and despite her former colleague’s attempts to switch the focus from her inaction, we are not going to take that bait. So the minister should put her house in order so we can focus on the real needs of students and ensuring that people like school bus operators are able to keep pace were the rising cost of fuel. Deputy Premier, why has your government allowed these increases in trustee expenses to increase unchecked for four—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you.

Hon. George Smitherman: We sure did see the dedication to the real needs of students embedded into the policy platform of that party and that member in the last provincial election. The people of the province of Ontario know that this is a government that dedicates itself to the purposes of enhancing the performance of our schools. We put serious money out there to back it up.

But on the matter of expenses, before 2006 there were no guidelines at all for school trustees with respect to expenses. So we brought in the guidelines. Through the actions that we have taken, that we do not apologize for—with respect to the Toronto Catholic District School Board, we will take action on behalf of these students to ensure that the dollars allocated get to the place where they are most desired and most purposeful. We’ve made progress on behalf of these students, something that stands in sharp contrast to all the actions of that honourable member and her party.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Mr. Peter Tabuns: To the minister of corrections: Last week, I asked the minister twice about the cruel treatment of Fahim Ahmad, Zakaria Amara and Mohammed Dirie, who have languished in solitary confinement for over two years. You told me, you told this House that they have “the right to daily ... exercise.” Their family says they have not been out for exercise for over two months. You told this House that they had the right to reading materials from the library. The family says they have not had access since last September. I’m told that Zakaria Amara has had an untreated toothache for over two months.

Will you act as a minister, will you protect prisoners, will you make sure that minimum standards are met and that they are moved out of segregation?

Hon. Rick Bartolucci: Inmates who are placed in segregation are entitled under law to just and humane treatment and receive specific services and activities. That includes, and let me repeat: the right to daily outdoor exercise; access to legal counsel, services and materials; access to clergy and spiritual advisers; visitation with family members, relatives and friends; access to correspondence and telephone services; access to library materials, institutional programs and the opportunity to buy items from the institutional canteen with personal funds.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: So, if you are the minister, why are you not enforcing those rights? Why are you abandoning those men? Why are you not meeting the standards set by Corrections Canada and the United Nations? Why are you not representing those rights? Have you abandoned your responsibilities as minister?

Hon. Rick Bartolucci: Listen, the member opposite knows full well we’re not going to comment on specific cases that are before the courts, because we’re not allowed to do that. He knows that full well. But we have very high standards to ensure the safe care, custody and control of all inmates. They have those rights. Those rights are theirs to use. I am very, very confident that the correctional services people are very much aware of the rights of inmates and grant them those rights.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

Mr. David Zimmer: My question is for the Minister of Government and Consumer Services. Purchasing a house or a condo is one of the most important financial decisions Ontarians make. My riding in Willowdale attracts many new condo owners and home buyers, especially along the Yonge-Sheppard corridor in the Bayview Village area. Purchasing a house or a condo is a complex process. Ontarians rely on real estate agents, real estate brokers, lawyers, friends and family for advice and guidance.

Nevertheless, real estate fraud is a huge issue. I'm especially concerned about the act of so-called phantom offers, which cheat hard-working and honest Ontarians out of a fair chance at home ownership. I'm also concerned about grow ops. I'm concerned that home buyers aren't getting the information they need about whether their purchase might have serious risks associated with it. What are you doing about this situation?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: I want to thank the member from Willowdale for his question. The practice of phantom offers is a breach of the code of ethics under the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act. Any broker or salesperson caught can be fined up to $50,000. Any person with knowledge of a phantom offer should contact our ministry's consumer protection branch.

On the issue of grow-ops specifically, a real estate agent failing to disclose that a property was a grow house is also in breach of the code of ethics and is subject to administrative fees and possible licence revocation. In addition, the Law Enforcement and Forfeited Property Management Statute Law Amendment Act addresses the proliferation of indoor marijuana grow-ops and mandates additional requirements by municipal officials.

Mr. David Zimmer: Recently there have been several high-profile stories about families almost losing their homes because of real estate fraud. It's tragic to hear about families threatened with losing their home because of title fraud, falsified mortgages or other types of real estate fraud. This is a serious matter. It's incomprehensible that a family could lose its home even if they've lived there for years and years, and even if the mortgage has been paid, if title fraud occurs, and even if the mortgage was obtained with false ID. I also have great concerns about what we're doing to protect homeowners from losing their homes from fraud associated with these kinds of activities. What are we doing specifically to protect Ontario families from real estate fraud?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: The member opposite is right. It is a serious matter, and I want to be clear: Our government will not tolerate real estate fraud in Ontario. Our Consumer Protection and Service Modernization Act ensures that ownership of a property cannot—I repeat, cannot—be lost as a result of the registration of a falsified mortgage, fraudulent sale or a counterfeit power of attorney. It also implements a streamlined and expedited land titles assurance fund and provides additional safeguards through fines and suspensions—fines which, by the way, have been increased from $1,000 to $50,000. We have new rules, we have stronger standards and, most importantly, we have a ministry that is committed to working with our stakeholders to consider additional measures to fight real estate fraud.

ELECTRICITY SUPPLY

Mr. Frank Klees: My question is to the Minister of Energy and it relates to the Ontario Power Authority's proposal for a new gas-fired power plant in northern York region. I've expressed my concern regarding the process to the minister. I wrote him a letter not too long ago. Specifically, my concern is that it all started off well. There was a working group that was constituted; there were some 25 members involved in that working group. The result was a consensus conclusion regarding the size of that plant of between 60 and 100 megawatts.

Last Thursday, the Ontario Power Authority released an RFP for 350 megawatts of power. There's a serious disconnect between the conclusions of the working group and the RFP. I would ask if the minister could explain the reason for that rather large discrepancy between the working group's conclusion and the RFP issued by the Ontario Power Authority.

Hon. Gerry Phillips: I appreciate the letter from the member, and I might say that I've had advice from three different members in the area there. I do appreciate it. I did meet with the organization called the Ontario Power Authority, which has the responsibility for this, and I indicated the concern of three of our members about communication and the need for a better public awareness of the plans. I had suggestions from all three.

What the OPA is suggesting—and I agree with it—is that they, along with an organization called the IESO, the Independent Electricity System Operator, are going to hold public meetings in each of the communities there to provide a more fulsome explanation of the need for the power that I hope will be helpful to your community.

I think that is the next step, I say to the member. I'm satisfied that the need exists there and I'm satisfied that they're going to take the appropriate steps to give the community an opportunity to—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Frank Klees: We welcome that additional initiative on the part of the minister to direct those information sessions to take place. I would ask the minister to consider, however, to direct the Ontario Power Authority to invite specifically the members of that original working group, which had representatives from municipalities—they represented citizens—as well as representatives from the industry. These are individuals who have memory of the process that was in place and would also be able to ask specific questions relating to that process and the rationale. Will the minister then ensure that the members of that original working group are invited to these information sessions so that the knowledge they have can in fact be brought to bear in those information sessions?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: It seems like a reasonable suggestion, and I will make the suggestion to the OPA.

I'd just say to all of us that the most effective way of dealing with these challenges is conservation, and that's where we started up there. I would say to the member for Newmarket–Aurora that the Newmarket utility is one of our leaders in Ontario in conservation efforts, so I just wanted to salute them for the work they're doing there. I appreciate the advice from all three of our members from the area. I'm satisfied that we have a significant demand there. I think the demand is growing at four times the average for the province up there; it's a very dynamic community. The Ontario Power Authority's job is to ensure that people understand the rationale and they feel comfortable with the background for that. I'm satisfied that that process will take place.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

M<sup>me</sup> France G  linas: Ma question est pour la ministre des Services    l'enfance    la jeunesse—children and youth. In March of this year, the Manitoulin-Sudbury District Social Services Administration Board, better known as DSSAB, wrote to the Premier asking that the government not eliminate the back-to-school and winter clothing allowances for Ontario children. To the Manitoulin-Sudbury DSSAB's credit, they've promised to provide this much-needed assistance, since the government won't.

Can the minister tell us why the government refuses to fund the back-to-school and winter clothing allowances for Ontario's poorest children?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: This, of course, gives us an opportunity to talk about the Ontario child benefit. The Ontario child benefit takes a number of programs and wraps them into one cheque per month for low-income families regardless of the source of the income of the parents. What that means is that a child who has a parent who is working will, for the first time ever, receive benefits that will go to low-income families, not just those on social assistance. It's a very exciting initiative, it is historic, and the cheques will start to roll this July.

M<sup>me</sup> France G  linas: We are very much in favour of the child benefit, but why take away the clothing allowances and the other benefits? The winter allowance and the back-to-school allowance need to stay. A few weeks ago, the Federation of Northern Ontario Municipalities called for the province to cover the back-to-school and winter clothing allowances. Recently in Sudbury, at the poverty consultation, the minister appeared surprised to hear that the northern municipalities were stepping in to cover what should be a provincial responsibility.

Why is the government punishing Ontario's poorest children by cutting the allowances and forcing the struggling municipalities to fund them?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Let's be really clear: I'm very happy that you're supporting the Ontario child benefit. You did vote against it; I'm happy you're now supportive of it.

A single mom with two kids on social assistance is today 27% better off—a 27% higher income now—than when we were elected.

Mr. Howard Hampton: What a load of BS.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: We are committed to better outcomes for kids.

Interjection.

1140

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The leader of the third party will withdraw, not the second comment, but his first comment, please.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I withdraw, but it's still horse feathers.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: As I was saying, a single mom with two kids on social assistance has 27% more income now than when we were elected. That is before the full implication of the Ontario child benefit. That will take it up to 34%. That's a significant improvement in the income of all children in this province. The Ontario child benefit will extend support—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. New question.

WINE INDUSTRY

Mr. Bruce Crozier: To the Minister of Small Business and Entrepreneurship: The Ontario wine industry is a vital economic driver that contributes to job creation, preserves valuable agricultural land and has made my riding of Essex a vibrant tourism destination.

In 2005, I had a private member's bill passed that created Ontario Wine Week, which will be celebrated for its third consecutive year next week. Ontario Wine Week recognizes and celebrates the importance of our wine industry and the people who work so hard to make it successful. Wine is big business in Ontario, and many of my constituents are small and medium-sized wineries. While the industry has made great strides, many Ontario wines are given scant attention in the global wine world. It's imperative that we help Ontario's wine industry continue to take steps to build what is truly a made-in-Ontario success story.

What is the Ministry of Small Business—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister.

Hon. Harinder S. Takhar: First of all, I want to thank the member from Essex for joining me on Friday to make the announcement for the VQA wine support program. We have about 125 wineries in this province, and they make a large economic contribution to our province—about one million visitors come every year; 6,000 people employed in this industry—and they deliver about $500-million worth of retail sales. We introduced the VQA wine support program three years ago, and I was very pleased to make the announcement for the third year, for $3.1 million to about 38 wineries. The idea here is to increase the sales of the VQA wines through the LCBO, and I'm pleased to report that in the last two years the sales have actually gone up by—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Bruce Crozier: Wine has been associated with its point of origin for hundreds of years and is often referred to as an expression of place. VQA Ontario regulates claims of origin on wine labels as part of its role in maintaining the integrity of Ontario wines of origin and ensuring the claims of origin are truthful and meaningful to consumers. Ontario is a much younger wine-growing area than other parts of the world and has so far identified four primary viticultural areas, including the Niagara Peninsula, Lake Erie North Shore, Pelee Island and Prince Edward county. The combination of experience, modern innovation and palatable passion drives the wine industry in my community and other communities across this great province.

Given the growing demand for Ontario wines, in addition to this funding, what else has our government done to support this industry and ensure it becomes even stronger in years to come?

Hon. Harinder S. Takhar: I will refer to question to my colleague the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: I think it's important that we take a little bit of time and talk about how we partner with the wine industry. The first thing I will say is that our government is committed to promoting a Pick Ontario Freshness strategy. We are committed to that, and we're hearing many, many positive comments about the impact that is having on communities and for producers right across Ontario. In January 2004, our government also announced $6 million for the Ontario wine strategy, and an additional $2 million over five years was added to that strategy. I would also remind folks that we provided $1 million to the grape growers of Ontario for the advancement of grape production in Ontario. Finally, and most recently, we have invested $25 million at the Vineland Research Station and Innovation—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. New question.

FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. John Yakabuski: My question is for the Minister of Natural Resources. The forest industry is in a real crisis in this province, yet the McGuinty Liberals are content to whistle past the graveyard. At a time when fuel and electricity costs, as well as market conditions, are dealing it a crippling blow, the Liberals decide that it's a good time, after months of discussions, to go back on their word, on the promise they made to the industry, committing that the Endangered Species Act would not supersede what is already the platinum standard, Ontario's Crown Forest Sustainability Act.

Minister, why would you turn your back on this industry when the sector can least absorb the body blow that you're dealing? Why would you break your word to them?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: I'm more than pleased to be able to respond to the member. If anything, this is a government that has not turned their back on the forest industry.

Interjection.

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: Excuse me. We put in place an energy rebate for three years. We have a prosperity fund. We have a loan guarantee. We have worked consistently with the sector to remove the barriers that exist.

Yes, we now do have an Endangered Species Act; it is the first time in 30 years that it has been revamped. It even provides more flexibility than ever before to be able to work with industry, such as the forest industry, to incorporate the Endangered Species Act into the forest management plan. The Premier was very clear that it's exactly what we're going to do. The difference is that we'll do it together with the industry.

Mr. John Yakabuski: The industry leaders would disagree with what the minister is saying with regard to consultations and working with them. Minister, people in my riding are already being laid off in the forest industry. I was speaking today to Dean Felhaber, president of Hokum's lumber. He told me it is the worst they have ever seen in their 52 years of business—the worst they've ever seen.

When the sector is being bombarded by you and forces beyond their control, why would you go back on your word, inflicting even more harm by piling on more regulatory burden? Why would you turn your back on them in the time of their greatest need? When is your government going to step up to the plate and do something to help forestry, the industry that is such a good steward of our forests, in this province? When are you going to do something to help them instead of trying to ensure that they become an endangered species?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: Again I'm more than pleased to be able to respond to the member. For the first time in many years we've had the industry at the table. The CEOs of the companies have—

Interjection.

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: Excuse me. I thought it was my opportunity to respond to the member, but maybe he likes the sound of his own voice so much that he prefers just to continue to chat rather than listen to the answer.

The answer is that in fact the industry CEOs have been at the table. We have been working through: What are the challenges? How do we transition into a new economy for the forestry strategy? We've been doing it by working together. What are the barriers? What is the red tape? How do we deal with wood supply? How do we work through the fact that there is a dollar that is the same and a housing market that has collapsed in the United States? What are the challenges around the world, that are actually in every industry in the forest sector, virtually in every province as well? But the difference is that we will work together with the industry as we transition into a new strategy for the forestry sector.

PETITIONS

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Bill Murdoch: I have petitions that have been sent to me from all over my riding: Just some of them are from the Chesley Community Church, Betty Duncan in Hanover and Fred and Lynda Helwig in Neustadt.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition: It is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I have signed this.

PROTECTION FOR MINERS

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people at Copper Cliff.

"Whereas current legislation contained in the Ontario health and safety act and regulations for mines and mining plants does not adequately protect the lives of miners; we request revisions to the act;

"Lyle Everett Defoe and the scoop tram he was operating fell 150 feet down an open stope (July 23, 2007). Lyle was 25 years and 15 days old when he was killed at Xstrata Kidd Creek mine site, Timmins....

"The stope where Lyle was killed was protected by a length of orange plastic snow fence and a rope with a warning sign. These barriers would not have been visible if the bucket of the scoop tram was raised. Lyle's body was recovered from behind the scoop tram...."

They ask that:

"Concrete berms must be mandatory to protect all open stopes and raises;

"All miners and contractors working underground must have working communication devices and personal locators;

"All equipment involved in injuries and fatalities must be recovered and examined unless such recovery would endanger the lives of others; and

"The entire act must be reviewed and amended to better protect underground workers."

I fully support this petition and will affix my name to it and send it with page Doaa.

GARDE D'ENFANTS

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde: I have a petition from concerned parents and grandparents from the St-Albert area.

« À l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario :

« Nous, citoyens de la province de l'Ontario, méritons et avons le droit de demander des modifications à la Loi portant réforme du droit de l'enfance, de façon à faire valoir l'importance des relations qu'ont les enfants avec leurs père et mère, ainsi qu'avec leurs grands-parents, comme le prévoit le projet de loi 33, 2008, présenté par le député provincial Kim Craiton.

« Attendu que le paragraphe 20(2.1) de la Loi exige que les père et mère et autres personnes qui ont la garde d'enfants ne doivent pas faire déraisonnablement obstacle aux relations personnelles qui existent entre les enfants et leurs grands-parents;

« Attendu que le paragraphe 24(2.1) de la Loi exige qu'un tribunal qui décide de la garde ou des droits de visite d'un enfant applique le principe selon lequel un enfant doit avoir le plus de contact possible avec ses père et mère et avec ses grands-parents, compte tenu de l'intérêt véritable de l'enfant; et

« Attendu que le paragraphe 24(2.2) de la Loi exige qu'un tribunal qui décide de la garde d'un enfant prenne en compte la volonté de chaque personne qui demande, par requête, la garde de l'enfant de faciliter les contacts entre celui-ci et ses père et mère ainsi que ses grands-parents, compte tenu de l'intérêt véritable de l'enfant;

« Nous, soussignés, adressons à l'Assemblée Législative de l'Ontario la pétition suivante :

J'appuie cette pétition.

WYE MARSH WILDLIFE CENTRE

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I have here about 4,000 signatures from folks up at the Wye Marsh support group.

"Whereas the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre, located in the township of Tay, manages approximately 3,000 acres of environmentally sensitive land which is owned by the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas over 50,000 people visit the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre each year; and

"Whereas over 20,000 students from across Ontario visit the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre each year, receiving curriculum-based environmental education not available in schools; and

"Whereas the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre receives no stable funding from any level of government;

"We, the undersigned, petition the province of Ontario to establish a reasonable and stable long-term funding formula so that the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre can continue to operate and exist into the future."

I'm pleased to sign it and give it to Aaron to present to the table.

CHILD PROTECTION

Ms. Andrea Horwath: My petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas Ontario is one of the few provinces that does not have independent oversight over child welfare administration; and

"Whereas eight provinces now have independent oversight of child welfare issues, including child protection; and

"Whereas all provincial Ombudsmen first identified child protection as a priority issue in 1986 and still Ontario does not allow the Ombudsman to investigate people's complaints about children's aid societies' decisions; and

"Whereas people wronged by CAS decisions concerning placement, access, custody or care are not allowed to appeal those decisions to the Ontario Ombudsman's office;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we support the Ombudsman having the power to probe decisions and investigate complaints concerning the province's children's aid societies (CAS)."

I agree with this petition. I've signed it and sent it to the table by way of page Megan.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mrs. Laura Albanese: I have a petition from the residents of York South-Weston that reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the government is proposing to remove the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature;

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature each and every day since the 19th century;

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message is one of forgiveness, of providing for those in need of their 'daily bread' and of preserving us from the evils we may fall into; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict;

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"We, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I agree with this petition and affix my signature to it, and I will hand it over to page Radhika.

PESTICIDES

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: I have a multi-page petition today from a number of my constituents and those of my friend across the way from the Ajax-Pickering riding. It reads:

"All lawn bowling clubs in Ontario in general, and Pickering Lawn Bowling Club in particular, hereby petition for an exemption to Bill 64.

"Because of the nature of the sport, lawn bowling greens will be adversely affected, possibly to the point of making it impossible to play on the greens. Golf courses have already been granted an exemption to Bill 64. Lawn bowling greens have the same type of unique monoculture of grass that is used on golf course greens and tees. Pesticides would be applied by a professional integrated pest management certified applicator.

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to grant lawn bowling clubs an exemption under Bill 64 as long as the pesticides are applied by an integrated pest management certified applicator."

I agree with this petition and will sign it accordingly.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mrs. Julia Munro: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the early 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message is one of forgiveness, of providing for those in need of their 'daily bread' and of preserving us from the evils that we may fall into; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena for conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

As I'm in agreement, I have affixed my signature, and will give it to page Taylor.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: I have a petition here that was sent to me by Anthony Schmidt. The signatures are from all over the province, but the petition was taken in the Heritage Netherlands Reformed church in Burgessville. It is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition: It is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I thank you very much for the opportunity to present this petition, Mr. Speaker.

ONTARIO SOCIETY
FOR THE PREVENTION
OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Ms. Helena Jacek: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

As I agree with that petition, I will be affixing my signature thereto.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Bill Murdoch: I have some more petitions sent to me by Regina Schmidt from Mildmay, St. Paul's Presbyterian Church in Warton, D. and S. Garland in Hanover, the Sauble Christian Fellowship church in Sauble Beach and Mrs. Thompson from Chesley, Ontario.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition: it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I have signed this.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of the daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I am pleased to sign it and give it to Aaron to present to the table.

ONTARIO SOCIETY
FOR THE PREVENTION
OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: I have a petition here signed by a number of my constituents.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Provincial Animal Welfare Act calls forth the Ontario SPCA, a private charity whose 'object' is to facilitate and provide for the prevention of cruelty to animals and their protection and relief therefrom; and

"Whereas section 11(1) of the Provincial Animal Welfare Act grants 'every inspector and agent of the society ... any of the powers of a police officer'; and

"Whereas there are allegations of abuses of police powers and grave charter violations by inspectors and agents of the Ontario SPCA; and

"Whereas Bill 50 seeks to grant additional independent police powers to the Ontario SPCA, among them the right to warrantless entry;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

(1) that the Legislative Assembly direct the provincial government to recognize the seriousness and consistency of allegations against Ontario SPCA inspectors and agents;

(2) that the Legislative Assembly direct the provincial government to amend Bill 50 to include an independent external mechanism of accountability for the Ontario SPCA; and

(3) that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario direct the provincial government to ensure proposed changes to the Provincial Animal Welfare Act are not in violation of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms."

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mr. Bill Murdoch: I have another petition:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas, without appropriate support, people who have an intellectual disability are often unable to participate effectively in community life and are deprived of the benefits of society enjoyed by other citizens; and

"Whereas quality supports are dependent on the ability to attract and retain qualified workers; and

"Whereas the salaries of workers who provide community-based supports and services are up to 25% less than salaries paid to those doing the same work in government-operated services and other sectors;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario address, as a priority, funding to community agencies in the developmental services sector to address critical underfunding of staff salaries and ensure that people who have an intellectual disability continue to receive quality supports and services that they require in order to live meaningful lives within their community."

I have signed this.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The time for petitions has ended. This House stands recessed until 3 p.m. this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1204 to 1500.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mr. Norman W. Sterling: Yesterday, the Minister of Community and Social Services told this Legislature that severely developmentally disabled residents of regional centres are not being moved into long-term-care centres. In February 2006, one long-term-care facility in Ottawa published a story about a former Rideau Regional Centre resident who was in that long-term-care home. I've been told that more than 20 former residents have moved to long-term care, and the parents of some of the remaining residents tell me that long-term-care facilities are in the plan for their adult children as well. That's because of their very complex health and developmental disabilities.

I have to wonder whether the minister knows what is happening to the vulnerable people for whom she is responsible. The minister also says that residents are not being forced out of regional centres. The centres are closing in March 2009, so residents aren't being given the option of staying. The families' members tell me that they feel they are being intimidated into accepting placements. If that isn't forcing people out, I don't know what else I could call it. The minister says I am fear-mongering. These families are scared for their loved ones, because they don't believe they will have the same services in the community that they have at Rideau Regional Centre. I am giving voice to their fears and I will continue to stand in this Legislature for them.

FIREARMS CONTROL

Mr. Mike Colle: Due to a gaping loophole in federal gun control laws, firearms intended to be used in films are winding up in the hands of criminals. An intelligence report from the RCMP says that due to the lack of federal controls, everything from AK-47s to assault rifles that are supposed to be used in films are now ending up on our streets.

Ottawa gives out special permits that allow film companies to purchase large quantities of firearms internationally and import them to Canada for use on movie sets. Canadian firearm legislation states that firearms must be registered as soon as practicable, but there is no exact time for registration. Because of this, frequently these firearms are sold on illicit markets in the streets.

Hopefully, the federal government will listen to the RCMP and close the cross-border loopholes that allow these weapons to come into Canada without any controls. Why in the world would they need real firearms on movie sets in the first place? That's the question I ask. The federal legislation on guns has multiple gaps and loopholes. The RCMP intelligence report states that penalties for possession of firearms, as currently applied, "do not act as a sufficient deterrent" for criminals. We join the RCMP in calling upon the Harper government to take immediate action to plug these gun loopholes before more innocent Ontarians are killed with these guns that come across our borders with no federal controls.

PREMIER'S FARM INNOVATION AWARD

Mr. Bill Murdoch: Today I would like to acknowledge the farmers and agriculture businesses in my riding that were awarded the Premier's Farm Innovation Award. Blue Water Black Calf Producers Association of Lion's Head is a group of Bruce Peninsula farmers who created an alliance among themselves to sell large herds of unified calves to specific markets. Allan and Kathy Taylor of County Meadow Meats of Owen Sound developed a process of buying only local products to sell in their retail shop, while producing their own lamb on the farm. David and Lynn Freeman of Meaford developed a freeze-dry system so that they can freeze local agriculture products to be shipped throughout Canada. New-Life Mills of Hanover installed automatic lights on their poultry farm, allowing lights to dim on bright days. These automatic lights help to reduce their energy use. Scotch Mountain Meats Inc., in Meaford, following the US border closure, developed all-natural meat products to be sold throughout Ontario. David Harper and Barbara Kay of Stoneyfield Elk Farm, of Meaford, developed a marketing and distribution strategy to provide meat for all seasons to the local area.

I was encouraged to learn that the Liberals actually had interest in my riding and the local agriculture business that they've abandoned in the past. I planned to attend the award ceremony on May 20, but the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs refused to release the names of the winners. It wasn't until after the ceremony started that the minister's office finally shared information with my office. I was further disappointed to see that the Liberal members for Huron-Bruce and Perth-Wellington had prior knowledge of the winners from my riding, even providing words of congratulation in the minister's news release.

It is sad that the Minister of Agriculture turned a good event for my riding and my constituents into a political game.

SCIENCE FAIR

Mrs. Carol Mitchell: I rise in the Legislature today to congratulate four outstanding students from my riding on a wonderful achievement: Ben Underwood from Turnberry Central Public School; Jacob McGavin from Brussels Public School; and Danielle Appavoo and Kaitlin Fisher, both from Colborne Central School. All received awards for their projects at the Canada-Wide Science Fair in Ottawa.

These four were joined by 38 of their colleagues in Ottawa who did Ontario proud by bringing home 249 awards and scholarships, including the fair's top honour, the platinum award, as well as 17 gold, 26 silver, 28 bronze, 31 honourable mentions and 146 special sponsor awards.

This year's successful projects ranged from Ben Underwood attempting to make a green chicken barn through the use of methane gas in anaerobic digesters to Jacob McGavin testing the efficiency and environmental friendliness of biomass pellets for heating. Kaitlin Fisher attempted to find out if, as some experts suggest, left-handed people are on average more creative than right-handed people, and Danielle Appavoo sought to find a way of reducing the amount of petroleum products wasted by using non-biodegradable surgical gloves by creating biodegradable gloves.

All four of these students are also in attendance today for the annual Sci-Tech Ontario Queen's Park Science Fair. I ask this House to join me in congratulating these exceptional young people on their recent achievements.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. John O'Toole: I'm pleased to rise in the House to inform the members that General Motors workers in Oshawa, Durham region and in fact the city of Kawartha Lakes and Peterborough have not given up on protecting their jobs and our community.

Our community supports GM workers and has not given up. We want to see Oshawa's award-winning assemblers continue to build quality vehicles beyond 2009, and we want to keep the 2,600 jobs lost just recently. I urge the government to act, to show some leadership. Not giving up means this government must have a plan for GM and the auto sector, as well as all of Ontario, given the loss of over 200,000 manufacturing jobs.

When pressed in question period, this government hasn't shown that it even has a plan, nor is this government willing to hold an emergency session of this House to address the crisis in manufacturing in the province of Ontario. Premier, I would urge you to bring together the leadership of business, labour and the community to respond to the devastating consequences in our economy.

Regrettably, it seems that this government has given up on decent manufacturing jobs that support families, build communities and in fact affect the lives of our young people. I appeal to the House not to give up because the citizens of Durham and the regions around it have not given up. Who has given up here is the Premier of the province; he's given up on hard-working, decent people, and is not providing manufacturing jobs in this province.

JUSTICE SYSTEM

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: Recently, I heard a very interesting statistic regarding our justice system. With 600,000 charges entering our criminal courts every year, saving just one minute per charge could save some seven years of court time. That's quite something, especially when you realize that it now takes an average of 9.2 court appearances to complete a criminal case, compared to 1992, when it took an average of only 4.3 court appearances.

It was with these statistics in mind that the Attorney General, Chris Bentley, announced Ontario's new justice-on-target strategy. The strategy, the first of its kind in Canada, sets targets to reduce court delays and appearances by 30% over the next four years, because this government knows that lengthy court delays are unacceptable. The province is also making criminal court statistics available to the public for the first time through the Attorney General's justice-on-target website, allowing the public to monitor the progress of the strategy in their own communities.

With a team led by Regional Senior Justice Bruce Durno and Senior Crown Attorney Kenneth Anthony, the first two initiatives for this strategy include putting legal aid application offices in 17 additional high-volume courthouses and the implementation of a dedicated prosecution system which allows small teams of crown attorneys to make substantive decisions earlier in the court process, reducing the time needed to complete a case.

I know that my constituents will be pleased to hear that government is moving ahead with such an important initiative that will ultimately improve Ontario's justice system.

PUBLIC HEALTH

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I rise today to highlight the importance of supporting public health units. Public health units are so important that on May 28 the Minister of Health finally announced that hospitals "will be required to report C. difficile outbreaks to their local health units so that medical officers of health have the information they need to monitor and respond to emergent outbreaks."

However, according to the Association of Local Public Health Agencies, about one third of Ontario's medical officer of health positions are still vacant, part-time or led by acting directors. This is despite the fact that, six years ago, the very first recommendation from the Walkerton inquiry stated that "the Health Protection and Promotion Act should be amended to require boards of health and the Minister of Health, acting in concert, to expeditiously fill any vacant medical officer of health position."

Twenty-seven OPSEU members who work at the Grey-Bruce health unit in Owen Sound have been on strike since May 1. These workers keep people safe from rabies, bird flu, West Nile virus, contaminated tap and beach water, and much more. I don't know how the mosquitoes are elsewhere, but in my riding they are ferocious.

A public health unit is dysfunctional without key staff, and the Ontario Medical Association has said that a single dysfunctional health unit could incubate a national epidemic.

More must be done to support our local health units so they can continue to protect us.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

Mr. Bill Mauro: I was quite pleased yesterday to see that the Payday Loans Act passed third reading here in the Legislature, thanks in no small part to the great leadership provided by the Minister of Government and Consumer Services. It is also extremely important that I point out that for the first time in the history of this Legislature, our government has stepped into an area that heretofore was not regulated.

The outcome of this bill is very important to a number of my constituents who take out payday loans, as I'm sure it is to many of those in the ridings of my colleagues. It is clear that major improvements must be made to ensure that there is a fair and balanced approach to regulating the payday lending industry here in Ontario.

The Payday Loans Act will bring in new regulations, including the requirement of lenders and brokers to be licensed. It will prohibit back-to-back and concurrent loans and it will impose serious penalties for lenders who break the law. The legislation will also lead to the establishment of the Ontario payday lending education fund, aimed at educating the public and providing consumers with information about financial management as well as how they can protect themselves and their rights.

It has been said in this House before how important it is to provide helpful education to the public about important issues such as this, so I'm quite pleased that this is part of this legislation.

This government knows that Ontarians who are trying to improve their circumstances face many challenges along the way. This bill is a reflection of that recognition, and I look forward to seeing the bill receive royal assent in the very near future.

RICHARD LEARY

Mr. Dave Levac: In Afghanistan on June 3, 2008, troops from the second battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, marched on foot patrol across the Panjwayi district just west of Kandahar. Moving towards a safer area in the Taliban-intense region, a Canadian soldier was killed, exactly four weeks to the day.

Enemy fire scorched ablaze the horizon of the volatile Kandahar flatbeds, fatally wounding a Canadian soldier, Captain Richard Steve Leary, known as "Stevo" to his fellow troop members.

The death of Captain Leary brings Canada's death toll in Afghanistan to 84 soldiers since the mission began in 2002. Another soldier has been regrettably added.

Captain Leary, born and raised in Brantford in the riding of Brant, is survived by his wife, Rachel, sister Brandi Leary, and his parents, Richard and Gail Leary.

Captain Leary's parents have tied a yellow ribbon around a tree in front of their Brantford home in memory of their brave son.

It's heartbreaking when those we love die in defending freedom for people who face tyranny. It is on the bravery and sacrifices of such men and women as Captain Leary that our very own country was founded. These brave men and women deserve our respect and support.

I confess to only imagining what the family of Captain Leary is going through. I will join them for only a brief moment when the family holds the service in Brantford tomorrow, in which I will be able to extend my heartfelt sympathy to them in their time of sorrow. My thoughts and prayers are with them, and I'm sure that all of us here in this House share the same thoughts and prayers.

We still our minds and our hearts for a moment of silence. Let us remember all who have made the ultimate sacrifice and especially remember Captain Richard "Stevo" Leary, a brave soldier, a loving husband, a proud brother and a beautiful son. Rest in peace.

I seek unanimous consent that we stand for a moment of silence in honour of Captain Richard Leary.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member seeks unanimous consent to a moment of silence. Agreed? Agreed.

I ask all members and our guests to please join us in a moment of silence.

The House observed a moment's silence.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I beg to inform the House that today the Clerk received the report on intended appointments dated June 3, 2008, of the Standing Committee on Government Agencies. Pursuant to standing order 107(f)(9), the report is deemed adopted by the House.

Report deemed adopted.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Pursuant to standing order 38(a), the member for Nickel Belt has given notice of her dissatisfaction with the answer to her question given by the Minister of Children and Youth Services concerning clothing allowances. This matter will be debated today at a late show at 5:45 p.m.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING ACT, 2008 LOI DE 2008 SUR LA NÉGOCIATION COLLECTIVE DANS LES COLLÈGES

Mr. Milloy moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 90, An Act to enact the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, to repeal the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act and to make related amendments to other Acts / Projet de loi 90, Loi édictant la Loi de 2008 sur la négociation collective dans les collèges, abrogeant la Loi sur la négociation collective dans les collèges et apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The minister for a short statement.

Hon. John Milloy: I will make a statement during ministerial statements.

PUBLIC VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT (IMPROVING BICYCLE MOBILITY), 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES VÉHICULES DE TRANSPORT EN COMMUN (AMÉLIORATION DE LA MOBILITÉ À BICYCLETTE)

Ms. Horwath moved first reading of the following bill:
Bill 91, An Act to amend the Public Vehicles Act respecting bicycle racks on public vehicles / Projet de loi 91, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les véhicules de transport en commun en ce qui a trait aux porte-bicyclettes sur les véhicules de transport en commun.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: The bill amends the Public Vehicles Act to exempt public vehicles equipped with bicycle racks or carrying bicycles on racks from the general restriction against carrying or transporting a load that extends beyond the body limits of the vehicle. It has been a problem for inter-regional transportation particularly. I hope to correct that with this bill.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

COMMUNITY COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Hon. John Milloy: I'm pleased today to be introducing some very important legislation for Ontario's college system. The proposed Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, represents a significant revision of the collective bargaining regime in this sector. It would represent important changes for colleges and workers and bring more ownership over the collective bargaining process to the workplace parties. It would, our government believes, lead to a strengthened and more stable college system better able to focus on the needs of students, better able to deliver the high-quality education that the people of Ontario need.

This proposed legislation would mark the first significant overhaul of collective bargaining in colleges since current processes were established in 1975. I'm very happy to say that our bill, if passed by this Legislature, would give part-time and sessional college workers the right to bargain collectively for the first time in Ontario.

This is a commitment our government made last August and one that I am proud to see included in our proposed legislation. Our government believes that this is the appropriate thing to do and we want to ensure that it is done right. We believe that this bill will establish a new era in labour relations in Ontario colleges by ensuring a more stable, effective process for negotiations covering both full-time and part-time college workers—an era where the workplace parties have greater ownership of the process. That is why our government took the time to ensure that proper consultations were held with all parties in our college system and that's why we appointed Ontario Labour Relations Board Chair Kevin Whitaker to conduct a thorough review of collective bargaining in our colleges.

Mr. Whitaker is with us here today, along with his daughter. I would like to take this opportunity to thank Mr. Whitaker for his hard work.

After receiving written and oral submissions from all parties involved in the college system, Mr. Whitaker produced a report this past February 1. He provided me with comprehensive recommendations relating to collective bargaining in our colleges.

One of those recommendations was, of course, to extend collective bargaining rights to part-time college workers. But the report went further: to describe how this should be done to ensure the interests of all parties are balanced and that changes ultimately benefit students through a stronger, more stable college system.

This would be accomplished, if this legislation passes, by allowing for the establishment of two new bargaining units for part-time college workers: one for part-time and sessional faculty and another for part-time support staff. Bargaining unit members would then be free to pursue the certification process.

But this bill would make some other important changes to how collective bargaining takes place in our college system, changes that our government believes would make collective bargaining in colleges more effective by bringing it more in line with accepted collective bargaining principles that work well in most other unionized workplaces in Ontario. By making the collective bargaining process work better, we believe that we would be strengthening the college system in general to the benefit of all parties, especially students. Changes to the bargaining process would encourage more stable, predictable labour relations, so that all parties could continue to focus on providing the best education possible for students in a productive learning environment.

That is what we must focus on when considering this legislation: our students. We must ensure the proper balance between ensuring an effective collective bargaining process for college workers and ensuring the best possible learning experience of our students.

Our government believes that our proposed legislation would offer this balance. Some of the proposed changes include:

- creating a new employer bargaining agent to represent all colleges in collective bargaining. This would replace the current government-appointed agency that acts on behalf of the employer during negotiations involving full-time workers;

- providing roles for the Ontario Labour Relations Board and the Minister of Labour consistent with their roles under the Labour Relations Act;

- streamlining the timelines for collective bargaining to encourage more proactive engagement by the bargaining parties;

- allowing for the appointment of a conciliator to work with the workplace parties at their request, eliminating the current fact-finding exercise, which is more cumbersome.

Essentially, we are proposing that collective bargaining processes in colleges for both full-time and part-time staff be made more consistent with the Ontario Labour Relations Act, while still recognizing the unique working environment in colleges. This is an approach that would give workplace parties more responsibility for the outcome of collective bargaining. It would streamline processes, bringing in the best of what works in other workplaces while still providing a separate framework that addresses the needs of the college sector. We believe that this approach is the best for colleges. We believe it would address the needs of workplace parties while still keeping the needs of students front and centre.

Our government remains committed to building Ontario into a true knowledge-based economy. Our $6.2-billion investment by 2010 through our Reaching Higher plan is already helping people across this province work toward their dreams and build a strong future for themselves. By investing in our people, investing in our students, we are all building an Ontario strongly positioned to excel in the global economy. Ontario's strength is in our ingenuity and in our drive to succeed.

This legislation, if passed, would strengthen our college system not only by enhancing the quality of education, but by providing the framework for stronger labour relations. It would ensure a strong learning environment for our students, and it would help turn Ontario into a true knowledge economy able to compete globally.

Our government believes in the people of Ontario. We believe that by giving college workplace parties the proper tools to negotiate collective agreements, we are helping to build a better learning environment for Ontario students.

PORTUGUESE CANADIAN COMMUNITY

Hon. Michael Chan: Ontario is strong and vibrant because of our diverse communities. Today, I want to recognize the Portuguese community for its contributions to the cultural, economic and social development of the province.

June is Portuguese History and Heritage Month, a celebration first proclaimed in the Ontario Legislature in 2001. It gives us the opportunity each year to show our gratitude to the Portuguese community for enriching Ontario's history, arts, language and culture.

For example, in June, the Portuguese honour the Lusiads. These are epic poems about the history of Portugal, including the era of exploration in the 15th and 16th centuries. They were written by Luís de Camões, who died in 1580, one of Portugal's greatest poets. This month is also an opportunity to commemorate the anniversary of the poet's death.

The Portuguese played a pioneering role in the exploration of the new world in the 15th and 16th centuries, including arrival in Canada 500 years ago—people like Pedro da Silva, who transported and delivered mail by canoe when postal service was first established in Canada in 1693.

1530

But it was in the 1950s that Portuguese immigration began to gain momentum in Canada. When immigrants from Mariland, Portugal, Azores and Madeira, Angola, Mozambique, Cape Verde, Guiné-Bissau, Goa and other Portuguese-speaking countries came to Canada, they came to make a new life for themselves and contribute with their hard work. More than 350,000 people of Portuguese descent now live in Canada—a quarter million in Ontario. The majority immigrated here between 1961 and 1990, helping to make our province one of the best places in the world to live.

The skills of many Portuguese who joined the labour force in construction and manufacturing helped to build this great province, and Ontario continues to benefit from the arrival of newcomers whose native language is Portuguese. Newcomers include skilled technicians and business people, artists in many forms, and scientists.

Ontario is unique because of its diversity, with outstanding Portuguese Ontarians like Dr. Kim Vicente, founding director of the University of Toronto's cognitive engineering laboratory, recognized by Time magazine as one of 25 Canadians under the age of 40 who is a leader for the 21st century; Superior Court Justice Maria T. Linhares de Sousa, chair of the Family Law Information Centre and the Ottawa courthouse; and our own Peter Fonseca, Minister of Tourism and one of Canada's top marathoners, who represented our country in the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta.

There is a Portuguese proverb that says, "Everything has its time." Now is the time to recognize the important role of Portuguese Canadians here in Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Responses?

PORTUGUESE CANADIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Peter Shurman: I rise today in this Legislature, in response to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario to speak on Portuguese Heritage Month and today's special celebration of the Portuguese national day. Indeed, as we speak, the Portuguese flag is being raised on the flagpole outside of this building.

Today marks the death of celebrated Portuguese poet Luís de Camões on June 10, 1580. Camões wrote the Lusiads, Portugal's national epic celebrating Portuguese history and achievements. The poem is about 16th-century Portuguese explorations and is considered to be one of the finest and most important works in Portuguese literature. It is a symbol of Portuguese determination, strength, industriousness and courage. Indeed, they were the explorers of their day.

Those are the same attributes that can describe our Portuguese community here in Ontario today. But of course Portuguese contributions to Canadian life are no recent development. Gaspar Corte Real, a great Portuguese explorer, was one of the earliest explorers of Canada. In 1501, he reached the coast of North America and explored the northeast coast of Terra Nova, or Newfoundland, and named Conception Bay and Portugal Cove. He sailed up the coast of Labrador and named the land Tierra del Lavrador, in honour of John "the farmer," who was a Portuguese explorer credited with being the first explorer to land in Labrador. In fact, Newfoundland and Labrador are described in old cartography as the "Land of Corte Real."

When mail service was first established in Canada in 1693, it was a Portuguese man, Pedro da Silva, who transported and delivered mail by canoe between Montreal and Quebec City. He was the first officially commissioned courier of New France in 1705.

Of course, Portuguese Canadians continue to make vital contributions to our province, and indeed hold key positions in this Legislature; for example, the Minister of Tourism, Peter Fonseca, who was himself born in Lisbon.

On this, the 428th anniversary of the Camões's death, I wish all Portuguese Ontarians a happy Portuguese national day, and I wish them the best of luck as Portugal competes in the Euro 2008 championship.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I'm pleased to respond today to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities on behalf of my colleague from Simcoe-Grey, Jim Wilson, who couldn't be with us today. First of all, I look forward to this debate. I understand there will be some debate in the House, probably in the next couple of days, and we'll be taking this bill to committee over the summer months. We'll get a chance to listen to all the stakeholders.

Many of us in our ridings have met with representatives of the part-time and seasonal workers who have requested this type of legislation over the last three or four years. I've heard it fairly carefully and I look forward to those debates.

However, one of the things that's interesting is that today I thought maybe the minister was coming forward with even better news. We've had a lot of money flow from the federal government to the Ontario government, with a lot of it—over $1 billion—in retraining money. That's retraining money that's not going to help the forestry workers who were laid off prior to June 2007. This year alone, as of April 1, you've received $311 million additional money from the federal government under the labour market agreement. We thought some of that money might have flowed to some of our literacy councils that help some of the most vulnerable people in our communities.

This whole issue around ratios—I thought maybe you might be bringing forward some kind of bill that would establish the ratios, so that we would actually have 1-to-1 ratios instead of being the only odd person out in our whole country, that being the 3-to-1 ratios that exist today. We've brought it up over and over again in this House, because we face huge deficits of people in the construction and manufacturing trades, and this government refuses to listen to any of our comments and to the key stakeholders.

We look forward to the opportunity to debate this bill, but there are many more things we need to do. If and when this bill is passed and implemented, it's obviously going to cost the Ontario government more money, and we're already the lowest-funded per capita college system in all of our country. We're going to need a lot of additional money. I hope this government is prepared to come to the table with additional funds to implement this legislation, as well as all the other things that I've mentioned at the same time.

PORTUGUESE CANADIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I'm happy to stand here and say that I celebrate with the Portuguese community their history and heritage month. I'm happy to say that I grew up about 10 minutes away from here in the heart of what is still the Portuguese community. While I understand a lot of Portuguese, I don't speak it, but I speak Italian, I speak French, and for those of you who are unilingual, I speak Spanish not too badly. I say to those who are unilingual, it's curable. You can work on it.

Having grown up in the area with Portuguese Canadians, I am very proud to have represented this community for a long, long time. I tell those of you who have not been part of the Portuguese parade, which happens every June, usually in the second week, it's the most successful parade in Ontario, the biggest and the most exciting to be part of.

I say we celebrate proudly Portuguese Canadian roots each and every year. And I celebrate the contributions of the pioneers who have been here for 55 years and more, they who have made tremendous sacrifices in this country. Because of the sacrifices they have made, their sons and daughters have benefited in ways that we see—socially, culturally and economically—because they are integrated in every aspect of Canadian society. I'm one of those who say thank you for the contribution you have made to this province and to this country.

I congratulate them for the 2-0 soccer victory the other day. Just yesterday, a number of my Portuguese friends commiserated with me as an Italian Canadian. I took the criticism humbly and I agreed with them that they didn't deserve to lose 3-0, but they got beaten, and beaten badly. There's still time to make up for the loss. But I wanted to congratulate Portuguese Canadians on that victory and I know how exciting it has been for them.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Moving on to the other matter, which is of great importance to New Democrats but particularly important to the part-time workers who have been lobbying this government for two long years, I want to congratulate OPSECAAT president Roger Couvrette, who is here, because not one word was said about OPSECAAT and the work that they have done—not one word.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Stop the clock. I remind the members on the government benches that the opposition was respectful when the minister was delivering his statement. I would just ask that that same respect be given to the speaker.

Interjections.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Hang yourself a little bit; stretch it up a little bit.

You need to thank the people who have been working hard on this; they have, for two long years. What they've been saying is that the part-time workers have been denied the right to organize, denied the right for collective bargaining, for two long years. Prior to that, part-time workers, college teachers, have been working hard like many full-time staff and been denied the privilege of the work they do. It's wrong, and it has been wrong for two years. It's not just college teachers but the other support staff, seeking the same right. I wanted to mention them in my two or three minutes that I had, and to mention the OPSEU president, Warren Thomas, who is here, otherwise known as Smokey, with other OPSEU members who have been working alongside OPSECAAT, working hard to represent them. They deserve some praise, too.

I was looking forward to a simple bill that simply gave part-time workers the right to bargain collectively. Look what we got for one simple bill that I expected. Can you see this, Speaker? This is thick. What is in here? I don't know. We asked, with some courtesy, and humility as well, the minister and his staff: "Could you send us a copy so we could look at what you're doing and what you have to say?" They said no, they couldn't, and that they would give it to us at 3 o'clock. That's when we got this pile—you see, Speaker? You understand how complicated it is to comment on a bill of this size.

Tomorrow morning, we're going to get an opportunity to speak to it. We will look at it very closely, because we don't want to give a right to part-time workers while taking another right away, which is what I fear may be contained in this bill. We'll have an opportunity to read it tonight and debate it tomorrow morning.

Thank you to those workers who fought hard to get this bill.

OPPOSITION DAY

INFECTIOUS DISEASE CONTROL

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I move that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario calls upon the McGuinty government to restore public confidence in Ontario's health care system by immediately initiating an independent investigation into the sad and tragic deaths caused by outbreaks of C. difficile in Ontario hospitals and report back to the Legislature in 90 days; and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario calls upon the government of Ontario to hold a public inquiry to determine what steps can be taken to reduce the risks of outbreaks and prevent further deaths related to C. difficile.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Mrs. Witmer has moved opposition day number 5. Mrs. Witmer.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: We have put forward this motion calling upon the government to do what they can to restore public confidence in Ontario's health system. That public confidence, I can tell you, has been seriously eroded by their handling of this crisis related to the outbreaks of C. difficile and the number of known deaths that have occurred. Regrettably, the McGuinty government has, during the past four years, totally ignored the threats to public health and safety from an increasing number of C. difficile outbreaks in our hospitals, and they have ignored the fact that there have been escalating numbers of deaths, and also those who have become infected, from this preventable infectious disease.

Of course, that's one of the keywords when it comes to C. difficile: It is preventable. This government, if they had taken action earlier, as, say, Quebec and Manitoba did after 2004—the outbreak in Quebec—many of these deaths, including the 62 recently that came to light at Joseph Brant in Burlington, could have been prevented.

We now have a disease, a preventable disease, that has claimed, in just the seven hospitals, six times the number of lives claimed by SARS in 2003. You would have thought that this government would have learned a lesson from SARS. In fact, it was interesting. When we had the SARS outbreak and when we had the 44 deaths, this was said by Dalton McGuinty on May 6. He stood in the House, he demanded a public inquiry, and he said: "Public inquiries give us facts on what happened in the past, and they give us valuable recommendations for the future. They give the public the answers that they desire and to which I believe they are entitled."

We believe that we can learn from the past. We believe that the information we have can help us to prevent and contain outbreaks in the future, and that's why we want a public inquiry. We also agree with Mr. McGuinty, who said at that time that it gives the public answers. We agree. The public is entitled to answers. We've heard from many of the families of the 62 people who died as a result of C. difficile at Joseph Brant hospital in Burlington, asking for answers. Why did the government not take action? Why was there not a concerted, coordinated effort on the part of the Minister of Health to communicate the extent of the outbreaks, the number of deaths, the number of those infected? If only we had known. It's interesting that so far, the minister and the government of Dalton McGuinty have stonewalled our attempts to put in place a public inquiry and an investigation into what happened so that we can learn for the future.

The Minister of Health as well, who has been somewhat negligent in his duty since 2004, despite the information that he had, also spoke passionately on May 6, 2003, about the value of public inquiries, public inquiries which he now says aren't necessary. And what do you think Mr. Smitherman said? He said, "We owe it to ourselves and to the society that we are part of to make sure that we do learn all of the lessons that can be learned from a review that allows all of those people to have a voice."

And then he said, "I do think it's critically important that at a time and age where we know that there will be more complex situations like this that confront us"—and don't we know that—"we take every advantage that we can, that we reach out to all those who have a voice and we hear of their problems and we take them seriously and we act to address those concerns, not in some review...." So he doesn't just want a review where nobody knows who's asking what questions, but under the commission of an inquiry that is independent, thorough and transparent. That's what we're asking for.

In 2003, he thought that that was what was absolutely necessary. He was passionate. He goes on to say, "Only then can we be certain that all of the lessons that are to be learned have been learned to ensure that our capacity to protect our citizens is enhanced to the greatest extent possible." That's what we're calling for: a public inquiry.

The good thing is that we had, in 2003, a government in the province of Ontario, under the leadership of Premier Ernie Eves, who responded—actually listened to the opposition, listened to the voices of the public, listened to the voices of those who were involved in the SARS outbreak, the SARS crisis—and who immediately did put in place an inquiry in order to get to the bottom of what had happened. There had been only 44 deaths, and I say "only" because that is a big number, and those were sad and tragic deaths, but the reality today is that we know that in seven hospitals—only seven—there were six times the number of deaths. We don't know about the other hospitals and the death rate in those hospitals. Yet this government refuses to learn from the past in order that we can prevent mistakes in the future. How irresponsible.

That's why this government has lost the public's confidence. There is concern about the fact they've known for four years that there was a threat to public health. Why did they know? Because in 2003 and 2004 there were outbreaks in Quebec that killed about 2,000 people. After those outbreaks, there was action taken. Both Quebec and Manitoba started public reporting.

In fact, after those 2,000 deaths in Quebec, the Canadian Medical Association stepped up to the plate. They released a report that said that we were going to have C. difficile outbreaks in all the other hospitals in Canada eventually. Now is the time for all the provinces—and I stress all the provinces—to develop and implement plans in order that you can recognize it, which means that you've got to report it. You've got to know about what's happening in your hospitals, you've got to take the steps in your plan to reduce the risks of the outbreaks and you've got to do mandatory reporting.

The McGuinty government in 2004 ignored those experts, the Canadian Medical Association—unbelievable. They ignored the fact that 2,000 people had just died in Quebec. Then, in 2004, the Canadian Union of Public Employees issued a news release accusing the government of underestimating the threat of C. difficile. Then we had two deaths at Cornwall Community Hospital. The Ontario Council of Hospital Unions called on the government to take steps to implement mandatory reporting. They made the same plea again in 2007, after we had about 26 deaths related to C. difficile in Sault Ste. Marie. Again, the McGuinty government and this Minister of Health ignored the advice.

It gets worse. Last summer, the minister decided that he was going to ask Dr. Michael Baker to give him a report about C. difficile. Michael Baker is physician-in-chief of the University Health Network, a most respected doctor. He did write a report for the minister, stating that “my first priority would be to have reporting to the minister and the public” on C. difficile. Dr. Baker also stated last summer that the families of the patients who died from the infection were outraged that Mr. Smitherman had not issued public warnings and failed to act on years of evidence about this lethal infection.

Believe it or not, he asked for advice, but he didn't move forward with the advice. He ignored the advice he got from his own medical expert—unbelievable. Then, in February of this year, Dr. Baker was asked for his advice again. He restated that “my first priority would be to have reporting to the minister and the public” on C. difficile. Again, this government took no action. After repeated calls from the opposition, he suddenly decided, “Maybe we'll start public reporting at the end of the year.”

In the meantime we've had deaths, deaths everywhere in this province. In fact, we learn of new deaths all the time. Most recently, we learned of some at the Alliston hospital; we learned of some at St. Michael's Hospital. This is happening all over the province.

I would say to you, the actions of this government and this minister stand in stark contrast to those of the Minister of Health in Northern Ireland. We know there are people who, when they see what's happening, take decisive and strong action. They take control. They don't ignore the warnings. The Minister of Health in Ireland earlier this year learned that 51 people had died of C. difficile. This is as a result of the same new lethal strain that, by the way, we now have in the province of Ontario.

Do you know what he did? He immediately set up an expert panel. That's what we're asking for. They were to do a three-month comprehensive review. And do you know what else he did? He invested money. He took control of the situation. He did not blame the hospitals and the front-line workers and say, “Well, it's up to them.” No, he recognized that there was a need for strong action and a coordinated approach from the ministry of health and the government. So he invested in special measures to fight and control the disease—and I would say successfully. He is also probably going to follow this with a public inquiry.

That is what we are asking the Liberal McGuinty government to do. That is what they asked us to do in SARS. We agreed. We recognized the importance. We want an interim report within 30 days. We want a final report within 90 days, followed by a public inquiry to address this urgent issue of concern to Ontarians. I can't believe that the government is stonewalling this request. I would hope that they would vote with us today. Surely they share the concerns that we have: families who have lost loved ones and cannot understand why it happened in a province like Ontario that should be a world leader when it comes to health and the prevention of infectious diseases.

We've had four years of warnings. We've seen inaction on this particular situation. We've seen this government trying to deny that there is a problem—being very dismissive—and that's why public confidence in our health system has been undermined. We need an inquiry. We need to make sure that we get answers as to why this happened in the province of Ontario. How did it happen? How widespread is it? Well, the minister gets up every day now and tells us he doesn't know. Can you believe this—doesn't know? I'm not sure that is totally accurate. It could be that he knows but doesn't want to tell us.

Interjection: It's a cover-up.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: Some people have suggested that there is a bit of a cover-up, because perhaps the numbers—I once said that maybe there have been 5,000 deaths; he has never disputed them.

But if you don't know what the problem is, how can you solve it? They refuse to acknowledge that there is a problem. He has behaved totally differently than the minister in Northern Ireland. Even if you take a look at what the minister in Quebec did years ago, he behaved differently. Both of them took decisive action. They took control. They focused on making sure there was coordinated communication with the people in the province of Ontario—clear, concise, well-understood communication. We have the CEO at the Burlington hospital telling us, "Nobody ever told me about C. difficile. I heard about it through the media." That is not how you communicate with your hospital CEOs.

So do you know what? We see a government that has not listened to the warnings and the advice of the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Ontario Council of Hospital Unions and their own medical expert, Dr. Baker. They've failed to take action. They have been in denial about C. difficile for four years. They have been in denial of the risk to public health and safety.

Ontarians deserve better. They deserve answers. I urge the Premier to support our resolution today. Appoint an independent investigator to look into the crisis. Report back with the findings. The public deserves to know the truth. This government cannot continue to shirk their responsibility. This is a matter of public confidence in our health system. The reality is that the public has lost confidence. This is a matter of life and death. It's time that this government finally recognized the gravity of the situation. I would urge all members of the government today to stand up and be counted. Listen to the voice of Ontarians, as we did with the request for a SARS inquiry, and support us. Let's get to the bottom of what happened and why, and make sure that nobody else dies as a result of C. difficile.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Further debate?

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I am pleased to rise today to talk about the inquiry into C. difficile requested by the member for Kitchener–Waterloo. Hospital-acquired infections are the fourth-largest killers in all of Canada. Each year, about a quarter of a million people—that's 250,000 people—will pick up an infection while hospitalized; of those people, between 8,000 and 12,000 will die. Those are people who probably would still be here with us if they hadn't picked up those superbugs in hospital. For Ontario, we're looking at about 2,000 Ontario citizens who will die from infections acquired in hospitals this year alone.

There are different types of superbugs. We talk about MRSA, we talk about VRE, but we also have to talk about Clostridium difficile, better known as C. difficile or even C. diff. So far, as my colleague has mentioned, 260 Ontarians have died from C. difficile in just the nine out of 150 hospitals that have made their figures public. One can't help but do the math in one's head. If nine out of 150 hospitals report 260 deaths, what if all hospitals were the same? Does that make 3,700? I hope this is not the case, but as she mentioned, we don't know this because the Minister of Health has been asked numerous times to tell us the scope of the problem and no answer has been forthcoming. He does not have this information. Not knowing this information is scary for all of us.

In Quebec, the infection has killed 2,000 people since 2002. But Quebecers learned from that experience. They have put changes in place to protect their citizens. That leaves us to believe that if our neighbours next door, in the next province over, have been able to learn a hard lesson from 2,000 deaths, why is it that we in Ontario haven't learned a whole lot? Why is it that over the last four years Minister Smitherman has not made C. difficile a reportable infection? It seems like a long period of time for something as drastic as 2,000 deaths in hospitals due to one single strain of bacteria, C. difficile. But none of this has happened. We are told that it will happen in the future, that it will happen in Ontario this fall. That's a long period of time.

C. difficile is a very serious disease. There are some fact sheets that are circulating for all health care settings that say that C. difficile is the leading cause of health-care-associated diarrhoea. Outbreaks of C.-difficile-associated diarrhoea—we call them CDAD—have occurred in a variety of acute-care, long-term-care and community settings. It has been known to cause associated diarrhoea for about the last 30 years. It's not that new, is it? C. difficile is a spore-forming, gram-positive, anaerobic bacillus that produces two endotoxins—toxin A and toxin B. Basically, it is a common cause of antibiotic-associated diarrhoea and it accounts for about 12% to 25% of those cases.

There is also a list of risk factors for people who could be considered at risk for C. difficile. Those too are pretty easy to come by. We've talked about exposure to antibiotics, having gastrointestinal surgery, about people who have been in the health care setting for a long period of time, people who are seriously ill, people who have immuno-compromising conditions, where your immune system is not working properly, and people of advanced age. All that tells us is that it is fairly common, that it has been there for a long time. There has been tragedy and there have been lessons learned, but Ontario is a slow learner.

In severe cases, C. difficile will cause critical illness and death, but it is highly preventable. People don't have to get infected with C. difficile. People don't have to die. The single most effective way to prevent the spread of C. difficile, I think everybody in this House should know by now, is to wash your hands: Wash your hands before you go in, wash your hands after you leave, wash your hands before you leave the long-term-care facility, wash your hands before you eat or drink.

The motion calls for a province-wide inquiry into how people died. We of the NDP think this is a reasonable request but we also realize that it will take time. It is not very forward-looking. An inquiry is always what it is: It's backward-looking. You look at what happened, you get some lessons learned, you get some best practices and protect yourself so that it doesn't happen again. What we're suggesting is that you not only look back through an inquiry, but you also take immediate action. There are immediate actions that Minister Smitherman and the government can take now to protect us.

Quebec has had mandatory reporting since 2004. We don't have to reinvent the wheel. We can do mandatory reporting, and we can do it now. Ontario has been far too slow in adopting mandatory reporting and that has led to people losing confidence in their health care system. Mandatory reporting is required in five US states and there are at least another 30 states considering similar legislation.

Mandatory reporting would provide patients with the rate of hospital-acquired infection at a specific hospital or a specific health care community. It would also give us important information on how widespread the problem of infectious disease in hospitals is and where funding and human resources should be increased to help us deal with this. The government needs to implement mandatory reporting now, not in four months when God knows how many more Ontarians will have contracted the disease and how many more Ontarians will have died.

System-wide reporting also allows the province to set benchmarks and to measure the progress that is being made to curb the infection. But even more needs to be done. The government also needs to take action to hire more hospital cleaners—and we would add to this— forbid the contracting-out of hospital cleaning and force hospitals to urgently review their infection control practices. Clean hospitals are the backbone of infection control. When you don't have enough people to clean the place regularly and thoroughly, you put everybody at risk of infection.

Hospital support workers: If you're interested, there are about 50,000 hospital support workers in Ontario. They keep our hospitals clean. But over the last 30 years, every hospital that has tried to balance their budget has done it partly through cutbacks to their cleaning staff. Cleaning staff, not surprisingly for some, are the lowest-paid workers in the hospital. In general, in hospitals, they make less than the average industrial wage. Of the 50,000 people who are hospital support workers and cleaning staff, the majority are women.

Spending on hospital support services has fallen and declined. The Canadian Institute for Health Information—CIHI, we call it—reports that hospitals have cut the dollars spent on support services in recent years. Housekeeping spending cuts, on average, have been about 1.8% per year; material management cuts, 2.2% per year; patient food services, 3.1% per year. Rather than keeping pace with the demand, keeping pace with the increased costs, those programs have actually seen a decreased amount of resources allocated to them. Indeed, since the mid-1970s, hospital spending on support services has dropped. It used to be 27% of the hospital budget; it now stands at 17%. CUPE and the Ontario Council of Hospital Unions have, since 2004, drawn attention to inadequate funding of hospital cleaning staff, given the increased number of patients and increased acuity of illnesses.

Look at some of the lessons learned from Quebec. Quebec doctors indicated that hospital sanitation is the main culprit in spreading C. difficile, and it is the key to preventing the spread of the bacteria. Pretty basic stuff here; we're not talking high technology that we're not too sure works or not. We're talking about basic sanitation: cleaning toilets, cleaning floors, cleaning all surfaces, wheelchairs, beds etc. We have the technology to do this. Now, do we put our money where our mouth is? This is a different question.

In Quebec, the lack of proper hygienic cleaning that resulted from the budget cutbacks that dated, on their part, to the 1990s has resulted in toilets that are not clean, sinks that are not disinfected enough or not even clean. They ended up with C. difficile. I'm guessing that when the inquiry is called and we look at the hospitals that have been struggling with C. difficile, we may very well point the finger at the same culprit: sanitation in our hospitals.

In some of the Montreal hospitals, the housekeeping staff were stretched so thinly that they were given 37 seconds to clean a toilet. Well, things have changed. They don't do this any more. They realized that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and it's a lot easier to keep your hospital facility clean than to deal with the superbugs. Once it hits, it spreads; it becomes an outbreak, people get infected and people die.

Dr. Mark Miller is the head of infection control at Montreal's Jewish General Hospital and a specialist in hospital-acquired infections. He told the Gazette that hospitals are just not clean enough: "It's the general sanitation in the hospitals that is under the microscopic eye right now.... You've got fewer housekeepers. You've got less cleaning of patient rooms and less intensive (cleaning)." That was at the time when Quebec was struggling with their outbreak of C. difficile. They certainly did not point toward a high-tech solution. They pointed toward keeping our hospitals in good shape, and clean.

Hospital-acquired infection costs a lot of money to treat and costs a lot of heartache for the families that are touched, that get infected, that lose loved ones. Former New York state Lieutenant Governor Betsy McCaughey argued in a June 6, 2005, editorial in the New York Times that when hospitals invest in prevention and precaution, "they are rewarded with as much as a tenfold financial return." In their state, hospital-acquired infections have added "about $30 billion ... to the nation's"—sorry, not the state; the whole United States—"total health costs. This tab will increase rapidly as more infections become drug-resistant."

Back in Canada, researchers estimate that the total attributable cost to treat MRSA infections is about $14,360 per patient. Again, they point out that part of the solution lies in the meticulous cleaning of equipment in hospital rooms. Researcher Kris Owens, who recently demonstrated that MRSA can live on surfaces for weeks, told the media, "The results of this study clearly demonstrate the need for frequent handwashing and environmental disinfection in health care settings."

In sum, lack of cleaning support puts the sanitation of hospitals at risk and increases the risk of outbreak of hospital-acquired infections. OCHU has long called for the government to bolster cleaning in hospitals and long-term-care facilities. Unfortunately, the number of workers cleaning Ontario hospitals is still dropping steadily because of years of cutbacks to their particular departments.

C. difficile can spread quickly throughout an institution from patient to patient or from caregiver to patient. The problem is compounded by patients being transferred to multiple institutions and the huge number of part-time staff who are forced to work at more than one facility to make a living. This is particularly true in the long-term-care system, which relies heavily on part-time staff. Front-line health care workers are the backbone of infection control. The government must recognize that fewer staff to disinfect and clean hospitals will open the door to increased hospital infection rates.

Thirdly, the government needs to legislate Ombudsman oversight of hospitals and long-term-care facilities. Did you know that Ontario is the only province in Canada whose Ombudsman does not have a mandate to oversee hospitals? The role of the Ombudsman has evolved over the years; it has evolved in Ontario, and it has evolved throughout the provinces and territories of Canada. But for some reason unknown to me, this government still refuses to give Ombudsman oversight over hospital complaints.

In the May 10, 2008, edition of the Hamilton Spectator, our Ombudsman, Mr. Marin, criticized the province's response to the C. difficile outbreak and said—and this is the Ombudsman of Ontario whom I'm quoting: "This is exactly the kind of systemic issue which our office would be poised to handle if we had jurisdiction." He recognized the C. difficile outbreak as exactly the type of situation that calls for his office's jurisdiction over hospitals.

Ontario Ombudsman André Marin's office receives many serious complaints regarding hospitals that he cannot investigate. In 2007, there were 228 of those complaints. Giving the Ombudsman oversight of hospitals and long-term-care complaints would be one important step in restoring confidence in our health care system.

I've said before that health care is just as much an art as it is a science. At the core of it all, you have a provider who needs to establish a trusting relationship with the client. Once this trust is gone, the opportunity to provide best-quality care is also gone. Once our trust in our hospital system is shaken and weakened, it's a direct attack on the quality of care that those hospitals can provide. Giving Ombudsman oversight of hospital and long-term care would go a big step toward restoring people's faith in our health care system.

Don't get me wrong; I am proud of the health care system we have in Ontario. We have a very good health care system. We have good hospitals that provide good care to hundreds of thousands of people every year. When there's a complaint, your first line is to talk to your health care provider. If the complaint cannot be resolved, every hospital has a way to handle complaints and they can help to bring a resolution.

When that doesn't work, then people want a neutral third party to hear their complaints and give them closure. This is what Ombudsman oversight would do. We don't wish for any more C. difficile outbreaks; I hope there are not going to be any more. When a family has to live through those difficult times—we had Mrs. Linda Del Grande with us last Friday talking about the horrific experience of her father in one of Toronto's hospitals. That was a healthy elderly gentleman who went into the hospital because he had a urinary tract problem. He caught three bouts of C. difficile and ended up dying in hospital. That was a tragedy for this family. Our best wishes are with this family.

When Mrs. Del Grande came and talked to the media, what she talked about was that this had shaken her confidence in the hospital system. When you lose this confidence, it's important to have access to a neutral third party which you know will be there to defend your rights. When you bring a complaint to a long-term-care facility or a hospital, there's not an equal relationship there; there's a power imbalance. The hospital or the long-term-care facility tends to be a lot more powerful and knowledgeable than the complainant. To have a neutral third party such as the Ombudsman listen to those complaints gives people an opportunity to be heard, to bring closure and to restore confidence in our hospital system for those families where the system has let them down.

In conclusion, an inquiry is important, but it doesn't go far enough. The government needs to implement mandatory reporting immediately, increase funding for cleaning staff and extend the Ombudsman's oversight responsibility to include hospitals.

I will save a few minutes of my allocated time for my colleague MPP Andrea Horwath. Thank you.

Ms. Laurel C. Broten: I am pleased to rise and join in the debate. I want to start by expressing my personal sympathy, as all of us on all sides of the House, for any families in the province whose loved ones might have suffered the effects of C. difficile. I want to share with Ontarians, and those families in particular, the actions that our government is taking to make sure that we as a province respond appropriately to this outbreak and circumstances in the province—something that is a challenge across the health care system.

We listen to the advice of experts in the area of disease management, infectious disease control initiatives and public health when we make determinations as to how we should take action and move forward in an aggressive and concerted manner to make the fastest progress we can in response to this.

Some of those experts include the chief medical officers of health and the coroner's office, who have both stated that a public inquiry would not help us move any faster to public reporting and would not provide any new information to health care providers. There have already been three independent investigations into C. difficile:

the Sault coroner's jury, the Joseph Brant hospital investigation and the Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee recommendations.

As I have said, now is the time to act. It is not the time for more theatrics. It is not the time for more discussions. It is the time to take action, and that is exactly what we are doing.

I think the words of Dr. Richard Schabas, the medical officer of health for Hastings and Prince Edward counties, ring very true when we consider the debate we're having in this Legislature today. He said in an interview with CHCH TV on May 26, and Dr. Schabas knows what he's talking about because he was the province's medical officer of health during the SARS outbreak: "I'm not sure a public inquiry is necessarily the next logical step. They often make for good theatre but they don't get us where we need to go, which is to address the problem in a vigorous and effective way, and I think largely we already know what the underlying problems are with C. difficile."

I would say that it is the commitment of this government to act on what we already know, to take those critical initiatives, because it is important that we move forward in meeting the needs and maintaining the confidence that Ontarians should have, and do have, I would suggest, in their health care system.

We've announced full public reporting on eight patient safety indicators as part of a comprehensive plan to create an unprecedented level of transparency in Ontario's hospitals. We will be requiring mandatory public reporting of C. difficile by September 30, in line with what hospitals and health care providers—give them some time to get ready for this mandatory reporting.

I think all of us who are standing here on June 10 know how quickly September 30 will be here, but we're not waiting until September 30 to take action. We'll also be requiring mandatory public reporting of MRSA, VRE and individual hospital mortality rates by December 31, and we'll be requiring mandatory public reporting on central line infection, ventilator-assisted pneumonia, surgical site infection rates and hand hygiene by April 30, 2009. Dr. Michael Baker will be our executive lead in patient safety, and his first task will be to work with the experts in the field to address infectious diseases. We have launched the Just Clean Your Hands campaign. We funded 137 infection control practitioners. We formed the Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee. We've created 14 infection control networks.

I think you can see we take this very seriously. We've taken concrete, aggressive action. We're moving forward with the knowledge base that we have to make sure we best protect Ontario patients and make sure they have the health care system they need and deserve and, frankly, the health care system that they voted strongly in favour of in October last year, when they put our government back in office, a government that has worked very hard to return public confidence to a system that was very devastated under the previous Conservative government.

I thank you for the opportunity I've had to speak to this issue today and look forward to continued debate.

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: It is with a heavy heart that I rise today to speak on behalf of all the people who have been afflicted, in some cases numerous times, with C. difficile, and the families who have lost loved ones to the outbreak that this government is unwilling to acknowledge. It is an absolute outrage and an insult to our seniors who have worked hard to build our communities and have paid into this health care system. For generations they've paid, to be left vulnerable to this devastating disease.

Seniors are one of the highest-risk groups for contracting this disease. They and their surviving family members deserve to know why they have suffered so horribly for so long without any answers. The Minister of Health has failed these families, to the extent that they are coming to this Legislature and facing the minister in an attempt to be heard and to avoid watching other families experience this tragedy in their own lives.

I'm going to share with you the stories of the survivors of C. difficile and the families who have lost loved ones to this tragic circumstance.

Jack Elliott: Jack Elliott was a spry man, enjoying the fruits of his labour with his lovely wife, Dorothy. He wanted to have knee surgery. Why? So that he could keep up with her on their travels as they went to countries where there were cobblestones, which were slowing him down. Jack entered the hospital for elective knee surgery and contracted C. difficile, which led to a subsequent heart attack. Jack Elliott never came out of hospital. Jack knew that there was an infection control expert in the hospital. Jack asked to see this person. He was told that the infection control expert only visits you after you have contracted the disease for a second time.

This is where I must interject into Jack's story. I believe that it is the role of an infection control specialist to avoid contracting any disease—it is things like this that make me wonder how the Minister of Health can stand in his place in this Legislature and tell us that he is doing everything he can, because clearly his ministry-appointed infectious disease staffers are not. Jack asked for a doctor. He knew he was dying. When the code blue rang over the loudspeaker, the doctor did come, but he came to pronounce Jack dead. Jack Elliott did not look like the man his wife had married 40 years previously. His abdomen was distended; his hands were so swollen that he could not wear his cherished wedding ring on his finger any longer. His family, who were unable to comfort him with their touch in his last days, deserve answers now.

Similar tragedies have taken place in hospitals across this province on the Honourable George Smitherman's watch. Fern Merchant, Jack's daughter, brought his picture here a few weeks ago to show the minister that victims of this terrible bacteria have a face and the families left behind are mourning their loss, and they have a face too. Survivors and their families have been emailing me from across Ontario. They know that C. difficile is not confined to just a few hospitals, and today the PC caucus is standing in support of their pleas for a province-wide inquiry. Our seniors are entering hospitals throughout Ontario for elective procedures, and they are not coming out.

C. difficile is an ugly bacteria and an agonizing death. Those who are fortunate enough to have survived are left a shell of their former selves. One victim, a strapping former football player with many active years ahead of him, has been decimated by C. difficile. At the height of his infection, he could barely lift his head off the pillow. He had shed 80 pounds and could not bring himself to eat. The medication that saved his life is only covered by the Ontario health insurance plan while he is in the hospital. Once released, he was forced to pay $740 for a 30-day supply of this life-saving medication. What is that about? I would argue that this is one of those points that both an ombudsman and a provincial inquiry would point to as inexcusable. If you contract a disease or bacteria in a hospital in the province of Ontario, I would expect that your treatment would continue to be covered by OHIP once you leave the hospital.

On behalf of my constituent, I suggest that the Minister of Health absorb the cost of the drug Vancomycin for any patients who have contracted C. difficile in the province of Ontario. These survivors do not have the time and they do not have the energy to fight the Minister of Health in the courtroom over drug coverage. Given the lack of attention paid to this issue by the Minister of Health, it is, in my opinion, the least he could do.

Victor Ansell: Victor Ansell was a healthy 84-year-old man. He was an RAF bomber squadron pilot who actually survived the perils of World War II only to have the misfortune of breaking his hip. He contracted C. difficile during or after his surgery. Mr. Ansell never left the hospital. He was not on any medication, he was an active man and he leaves behind a grieving son and his family.

Where are the answers for these families? How many families need to experience similar tragedies before the minister takes action and gets to the root cause of the problem? We are all elected to serve the needs of our constituents, but the minister has taken an oath to protect the health and well-being of every Ontarian.

In a post-SARS world, you have stood in this Legislature and told us on that side that your ministry is ready for whatever infectious disease comes our way, and then, when it happens, nothing happens—nothing for the families who have lost loved ones, nothing for the survivors struggling to regain their health.

This government has given us pat answers, empty platitudes and rhetoric, but little else. In fact, there was a cowering of the minister behind the coattails of a staffer when faced with the prospect of being confronted by Mrs. Elliott and her daughter Fern, until the media pressured him to face up to his obligations.

There is a slim chance that the minister may want to grant the survivors of C. difficile and their families the closure they deserve. Is it possible that the Premier's office is forbidding anybody from taking that action? Well, that would be a grave mistake, because the PC caucus is serving you notice today, here in this place, that we will not forget the survivors, we will not forget the families and we will not let the Ontario public forget that you have failed to protect them.

I implore the minister to take action now, if not to provide closure to those who have suffered through this disease, then at least to preserve his own legacy. Regardless who is withholding this final decision, make no mistake, it is the minister who will be saddled with this shameful record.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: I appreciate the opportunity to talk a little bit about this issue, the C. difficile motion that was brought forward by the Progressive Conservative caucus to try to get the government to see the wisdom of having an inquiry into this tragedy that occurred in Ontario.

I felt it important to be able to get up and make a few comments, because the face of this tragedy played out in my local newspaper day after day. Of course, the city of Hamilton is a sister, a neighbour, to Joseph Brant hospital. You just kind of jump over the Skyway Bridge and there you are. Not only was it very close in terms of proximity to my community, but many of the people who live in Burlington once lived in Hamilton and vice versa. It's quite a well-connected set of communities, if you will. So as the horrifying details of this infection were relayed to all of us in Hamilton through reading our newspaper, many of us were just stunned by the pain and suffering that was being revealed.

The pain and suffering of the families, I think, is something that we can never forget and that we can never put aside as we debate these issues and as we try to determine what steps need to be taken. I think it's important that we acknowledge and recognize that inquiries are called for a certain purpose, and that purpose is to actually do the learning. I know the minister has risen in his place a couple of times saying, "We don't really need to do that learning; we already have a lot of information."

I think it's actually incumbent upon the government and the minister to have the conversations with these families through the inquiry, to talk to them about what their experiences were. I think we would all agree that we feel extremely sorrowful for their loss, for their pain and suffering, and also for the families who didn't lose someone, the 177-odd families that were affected at Joseph Brant. We know there were about 62 deaths, but there were others who managed to escape that sentence during this crisis. The reality is that we need to speak to those families. We need to talk to them in the context of what they saw going on in hospital when they and/or their loved ones were being affected—or infected—by C. difficile.

Yes, this is about the health care system. This is about the problem that we have in managing infectious disease in the health care system, and in hospitals particularly. But this is also a human issue. This is about trying to have the humanity to engage in the conversation and make those people feel and know that their government, the people who make the laws in Ontario, are interested enough in their everyday experience, in the layperson's perspective on what happened, to have the inquiry and to get those voices into the mix when it comes to deciding what to do to make things better in Ontario with regards to C. difficile and other infectious disease.

It's about making things better. It's about making things better so that people who go to hospital to get better know that that's what's going to happen when they're being cared for in hospital. Nobody in Ontario, nobody at all, I think, expects that when they go to hospital, whether it's for a minor procedure or a major procedure, they're going to come out worse off, or that they may not come out of the hospital at all as a result of contracting a disease within the hospital that made them worse and not better, that made them sicker and did not heal them.

That is the problem we have now. There's a lack of confidence in the hospital system. That lack of confidence will continue until we get to the bottom of what happened and then put that into the perspective of how we fix it for the future. That, I think, is key.

It's key, because overlaying all of this, we have the context of the health tax that this government put in place. People are saying to me, "Here we've been paying extra dollars in our health tax, being assured by the government that this money is all going into health"—which we know it isn't—"yet, lo and behold, after the health tax is implemented"—a very unfair health tax, by the way, one that unfairly financially burdens lower-income families in comparison to higher-income families. Nonetheless, people say, "Well, hold on a minute. We're investing more. The government tells us they're investing more in health care. They're certainly taking more and putting it in the government coffers. Yet we have a disaster like what happened at Joseph Brant hospital and other hospitals in Ontario, taking place—what?—two, three or four years after the implementation of the health tax." That's why this situation cries out for real action from the government.

The member for Burlington did a good job of describing some of the situations that occurred, some of the horrifying realities that people either watched their loved ones deal with or tried to survive through, as well as the people who are actually having those symptoms when they are in hospital with C. difficile, which they contracted there.

I can tell you, I have my own personal story of a loved one. She did not contract C. difficile in a hospital but she contracted MRSA in a hospital. That person was my own mom. This happened about two years ago. She went in for maybe not a routine procedure, but for surgery. She was told that if they can do this laparoscopy, this procedure, she'll be in and out within three days max. Well, of course, surgery gets scheduled, Mom gets put out, goes into the operating room and, lo and behold, they can't do the surgery laparoscopically, so they have to do quite a more invasive procedure with my mom. Fine. We're told that she'll be in for about five to seven days, depending on her recovery. After three days, she was starting to look a little better; she was starting to heal. Major surgery for a woman who is about 70 years old is difficult no matter what. She has borderline diabetes—okay, Mom, I'm not going to tell everybody your whole health history; I promise. But the reality is, there were some complicating factors. After three days or so, she was looking better, and on the fourth day, all of a sudden, she took a turn for the worse.

She suffered enormously day after day after day. My sister and brothers and I really did not know what to do or where to turn. It was not something where the hospital came out and said, any time early on in the process, that she had MRSA and that she had contracted it at the hospital. We didn't find that out until well into the process, after much grilling, how this could have gone so terribly wrong and what exactly the problem was. She spent over six weeks in the hospital. And we were lucky, because near the touch-and-go point, when we weren't sure whether she was going to make it through or not, some of the doctors were suggesting that maybe they should open her back up again. But everybody knew that if they did that, the chances of her survival were going to go even further down.

Although I certainly wouldn't suggest that the experience I had and my mom had is the same as what has happened with the C. difficile situation, I can tell you that these infectious diseases that are running rampant in our hospitals in Ontario have to be dealt with. And so, yes, New Democrats are going to support the motion put forward by the official opposition, because we think that not only is it important to do the investigation, to get the inquiry going, but we think it's important to hear the voices of those families and people who were affected. We don't think that there's been a lot of that. It's been done through the media, but we think the government needs to take responsibility for hearing from those families and understanding what they were going through and how to make it better from the perspective of the customer, if you will, of our hospital system, which is the people of Ontario.

What we also need is the government to speed up the implementation of the immediate reporting of these situations in hospitals. There's nothing at all to stop the minister from tomorrow sending out a directive to the Ontario Hospital Association and all of the hospitals of Ontario that says, "Starting June 15 or July 1, you have to start reporting on your websites and reporting publicly the incidences of MRSA, C. difficile and VRE." What would be so hard about that? But no: "We're going to drag our feet. We're going to stretch it along." We're sorry, but we just don't think that's good enough. We think there are things that have to happen immediately, and one of them is the immediate reporting.

My colleague from Nickel Belt, our health critic, put on the record very clearly what we see as a systemic problem within the health system. And mark my words, it's going to get worse with the implementation of more P3 hospitals in the province of Ontario, where the cleaning function gets hived off to the lowest bidder as part of their amalgam of contracted services, which get put together as a model for private sector hospital services. I've got to say, I'm worried about that. We know already that housekeeping and cleaning are a major part of this problem. We know that quality control in that area needs to be upgraded significantly. But we also know that when you're trying to save a buck, you're cutting corners. You're cutting corners and you're cutting staff. We are very, very concerned that this government's penchant for privately operated hospitals is going to cause a great increase in these kinds of incidents. So we need to rethink that.

I would hope that as the auditor looks at these issues in time, he's going to find a recommendation strongly against the hiving off of these services to separate and totally different entities from the main operation of the hospital. It's going to be a huge mistake, and it's going to be on the backs of this government and the one before them that took us down this road in the first place.

Finally, we believe that there is an office in Ontario that can help us right now to start providing the kind of transparency, the kind of accountability, the kind of oversight that we just don't see with hospital boards in communities across the province. Different boards are different and some very respected, well-renowned people sit on hospital boards in hospital jurisdictions or in the cities and LHINs across the province. But I've got to tell you, people don't have any clue who those people are, generally speaking. There's very little accountability. There's very little public participation in hospital boards. They're not elected bodies.

Quite frankly, one of the things that this government can do immediately is expand the scope of the Ombudsman of Ontario, a place where there sits already the expertise, the ability, the proof of the office in terms of getting into the systemic problems that exist in large organizations and in small organizations. We know we have an Ombudsman. Let's use the Ombudsman.

Yes, we will support this motion, but we believe there are a number of things that we need to do and that this minister needs to do today to begin to deal with this crisis in Ontario.

Mr. David Oraziatti: I'm pleased today to have the opportunity to speak to the opposition day motion with regard to this issue. On this side of the House, we take this issue very seriously, contrary to some of the comments that are coming from the opposition benches about our government being not interested in acknowledging or being concerned about this particular issue.

I want to highlight a couple of the things that we've done that I think very clearly demonstrate our commitment to ensuring patient safety in the province of Ontario and highlight some of the investments we've made around this issue, as well as the work by many of the experts in the field who have made recommendations that in the case of the particular hospital in my riding, the Sault Area Hospital, have already been implemented and have been validated by the Office of the Chief Coroner.

First of all, I want to say that the Conservative motion is not going to help us deal more effectively with this issue because this investigative process has already taken place. Certainly, in the case of Sault Area Hospital, a full and thorough investigation by the chief coroner's office has been followed through on and those recommendations have been made available for all hospitals in the province of Ontario to review. I think it's very clear by our government's record that we're certainly continuing to move forward with openness, transparency and accountability when it comes to infection control in the province of Ontario.

As I hear the opposition members talking about another study, another inquiry, more recommendations, more reports—that's not what we need. People need action. They need these recommendations implemented. The recommendations are out there. We're all very much aware of how this disease is spread and how we can prevent it, reduce it, and those recommendations are being implemented. In the case, as I've said, of the Sault Area Hospital, they've certainly been implemented.

The chief medical officer of health and the coroner's office have stated that a public inquiry would not help us move any faster to public reporting and would not provide any new information to health care providers. So, while it makes for good theatrics here in the Legislature to have the opposition members suggest that this is important to do because they feel it's convenient to do this, it really does not add to the importance of the dialogue and the moving forward effectively with recommendations that need to be implemented to improve patient safety in the province of Ontario.

I'm certainly taking my advice from medical experts in the field and not from other members in the Legislature when it comes to these types of decisions. Politicians should not be making these decisions. Experts in the health field should be making these decisions that will help us move forward with better patient infection control. I think that's important to recognize.

There have already been three independent investigations into C. difficile: the Sault coroner's jury, the Joseph Brant hospital investigation and the Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee recommendations. Let's get on with the implementation. Let's work to build capacity in our hospitals, to build the capacity for the reporting processes that we are moving forward with, with eight additional areas of reporting for hospitals in the province of Ontario. Let's not get bogged down and tripped up on further investigation, further inquiries and further studies, because we know what the recommendations say. We know what the coroner's office is saying.

Interjections.

Mr. David Oraziatti: I see that members in the opposition aren't interested in supporting what the coroner's office is saying in terms of how we should move forward. That's the message that I get today. The motion, I think, in many ways is redundant, because we know what we need to do to help prevent these types of infections in the province of Ontario.

In my riding in Sault Ste. Marie, the Sault Area Hospital has taken steps to protect patient safety. In fact, the chief coroner's observations were consistent with SAH's findings at the start of the outbreak and support the plan that the hospital has in partnership with the Ministry of Health. The plan, which was developed with the assistance of Dr. Michael Gardam—I'm speaking with respect to the Sault Area Hospital experience. Dr. Michael Gardam is an infection control expert who made 29 recommendations dealing with a wide range of changes, which have all now been implemented.

I'm very pleased that we're moving forward in this regard. I also think it's important to recognize that in Sault Ste. Marie we're providing funding for a new hospital, and in the new hospital, we're going to have double the single-bed room capacity that we had in the old hospital—about 25% of the beds were single-room beds, and in the new hospital, about 50% of the beds are going to be single room. Everyone knows that there is a correlation between overcrowding in hospitals and availability of single rooms. The opposition party had eight years to move forward on a new hospital in my community. It didn't go anywhere. I'm not sure how many hospitals the NDP built, but I don't think it was very many, if any at all. Frankly, I don't know what a $3-billion cut to health care funding is going to do to help us move forward with the additional infrastructure and resources that we need to improve health care in Ontario.

So I will not be supporting the opposition motion. I'm going to be listening to recommendations from medical health experts in the province of Ontario.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to join in the debate today that an independent investigation into the sad and tragic deaths caused by the outbreak of C. difficile in Ontario hospitals be done by the McGuinty government and reported back to the Legislature in 90 days.

It's regrettable that it's now June 10, and an opposition day motion is needed to bring attention to this matter that this Premier and the Minister of Health have known about since 2004. Four years and over 260 deaths later, the minister still has no desire to grasp the importance of this issue. Just a few short weeks ago in this chamber, we discussed how the Minister of Health Promotion isn't doing her job of protecting the health of Ontarians, and today we're debating the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care's same style and approach.

Yesterday, I asked the Premier in the Legislature here about an investigation into the deaths of at least 260 Ontarians due to C. difficile. He referenced an investigation into this matter as "good theatre." I see that his Liberal colleagues are reading their scripts and they're also calling it "good theatre." I've heard other Liberal members say that this afternoon. This is a Liberal Premier who has broken more promises than anybody else in the history of Ontario. He has the nerve to refer to an investigation into the deaths of four times as many people as died from SARS as "good theatre." You guys should hang your heads in shame.

Let's talk about theatre here for a couple of minutes. You let those deaths happen under your watch, when you knew better in 2004. You knew better. You were told—and you didn't. Now, let's refer to some of the people in the Legislature, the Liberals, who have used good drama in the past. Let's take the House leader, Mr. Bryant, whose theatrics are unmatched. We've all seen him. We know he practised this many times. In June 2003, he said that the only way to get to the truth is to have a public inquiry. So, I say to the Liberal House leader, what's the problem? Why aren't we having a public inquiry? Was that just play-acting?

Let me see. Here's some theatre: When referring to a public inquiry, a Liberal MPP stated that "anything less than this would amount to nothing more than an absolute cover-up and stonewall on the part of the government of Ontario." This was Dwight Duncan in 2000.

Let me add another one. The finance minister's profound yet theatrical opposition pointed out more than 10 years ago that "there is no compelling reason why the government cannot and should not call a public inquiry." Despite the insincerity of the member, I can't disagree with that statement. What I can agree with is the fact that, like so many of his Liberal caucus colleagues, he said one thing while he was in opposition, and now he feels he doesn't need to be responsible to the people of Ontario.

Let me see: another Liberal member, referring to 30 deaths from SARS. "It is perfectly reasonable for you to call a public inquiry. Do it in the name of the people who did die. Do it in the name of the health care workers who were on the front line," said the now Minister of Economic Development and Trade in 2003. Wow. Isn't it interesting that she doesn't feel the same way today, despite the fact that nearly 10 times more Ontarians have died from C. difficile.

But hang on; she wasn't done. Let me quote her again: "These are significant, tough questions.... The only way that we will get to this is through a public inquiry." And today? She's nowhere near as dramatic. As a matter of fact, she's silent and she's not being accountable to the people of Ontario.

There are more encore performances by the members opposite. We've waited long enough; we deserve to hear some theatrics from Mr. McGuinty: "Public inquiries give us facts on what happened in the past, and they give us valuable recommendations for the future. They give the public the answers that they desire and to which I believe they are entitled." This is the Premier that, when in opposition and after, passionately discussed the fact that 23 deaths occurred from SARS. He went on to say, "We all share a very heavy responsibility to learn from this tragedy.... The holding of a public inquiry will help us do just that.”

In case you missed it, I will repeat again—and you can look in Hansard—yesterday he said a public inquiry was “theatre.” What a change in the Premier’s passionate view. His accountability changed the minute he walked across the floor. The difference today—and his Minister of Health is being held to the fire on accountability in Ontario—is that nearly 10 times as many deaths have occurred from an infectious disease he has known about since 2004 as occurred during the SARS scare. So today I say to the Premier and the Liberal members I’ve mentioned, if you truly believe in what you’ve said in the past, you will support today’s motion.

I want to close quickly by saying that the dramatic statement from the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care, the minister whose level of concern for the care of elderly Ontarians is summed up by the fact that he said he would wear a diaper—there’s no good excuse to reject the call for a public inquiry, said Mr. Smitherman.

The show’s over, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on this motion. At the outset, I’d like to state that I will be voting against this particular motion.

Before I get into the reasons that I will be voting against the motion, let me start by thanking our health care professionals—our doctors, our nurses—who work very hard to ensure that our hospitals are places where people go to get the best medical care in the world. Despite all the difficulties, despite the cutbacks from the past, from the Conservative government, they have always banded together to provide the best service possible.

I speak from experience. Not that long ago, my father had to go to the hospital in Hamilton due to a heart emergency, and given that he had recently received some treatment in a hospital in another country, the hospital staff were extremely careful to ensure that he was properly quarantined and other patients were not being put at risk due to what he may have been exposed to. I was extremely impressed by the precautions and various steps which were taken by the hospital staff.

We are looking at a situation in Ontario where a number of investigations have been undertaken in order to determine the causes of C. difficile in our hospitals, and this is not the time to have more public inquiries and investigations and that sort of stuff. That is not going to solve the issue at hand. What we need to do is act. We need to ensure that we provide our hospitals and our health care workers the proper tools necessary to ensure that public health is properly maintained. That is why we have seen the requirements for mandatory public reporting, starting by September 30, in terms of C. difficile, MRSA, VRE, and other steps which have been taken by various hospitals.

If I could just talk about the Ottawa Hospital and the steps they have taken in terms of infection control, Ottawa Hospital is nationally recognized for its leadership in infection control. They have a very effective infection prevention and control program, which is a key component to their quality patient care. The program helps ensure the protection of patients, health care workers, staff and visitors from preventable nosocomial disease, through surveillance, education, consultation, outbreak investigation, research, and the development of policies and procedures. There are a total of eight infection control practitioners in the Ottawa area in various hospitals ensuring that infection such as C. difficile is properly controlled.

To combat this global rise in infection rates, the Ottawa Hospital has also implemented several measures to address infection rates, including hand hygiene programs with increased access to alcohol gel; screening patients in admissions for silent carriage of resistant organisms; use of single rooms, gowns and gloves to control transmission; renovations to patient care areas; increased housekeeping resources; and education awareness campaigns for patients and health care providers.

These are the kinds of initiatives that we need to ensure and provide the essential tools necessary to our health care providers, not to mention to keep investing in our health care system, which very much has been a key mark of this McGuinty government. Since 2003, in Ottawa alone we have spent millions and millions of dollars in our health care system.

Just this morning, I’m very proud that Premier McGuinty announced an addiction strategy for our youth in Ottawa, dedicating $5.5 million in a whole addiction strategy, providing treatment beds for youth 13 to 17 years old, making sure that we provide for outreach and prevention of substance abuse in our schools for kids, and supportive housing to ensure that we continue to build a healthy community, a healthy Ontario.

That is why infection control in our hospitals is important, and that’s why we don’t need more investigations. What we need is to provide tools to our health care providers so they can continue the excellent job they do. In Ottawa, we have seen some very positive results in that regard.

Mr. John O’Toole: I want to put some context into the debate this afternoon on the opposition day motion. The remarks pretty well summarized by our critic, Elizabeth Witmer, are something that the public should be aware of. She’s been leading the fight on this and it’s being ignored by the McGuinty government. That’s basically the context, but the history here in these rash outbreaks in the health care system—you have to look to the history to know the future, because the best predictor of future behaviour is past behaviour.

But this is a real contradiction, because if you look at 2003 and you look at Mr. Smitherman at the time in opposition in the SARS outbreak—I think it was 44 lives at stake, and a very short timeline ramp-up to it. Little was known about it by anyone, including the medical officers of health. It was difficult, yet defined—but there was an inquiry called and quick action was taken under the leadership of Elizabeth Witmer. That’s the history.

Now, what provoked that? I have to give the opposition of that day, Mr. Smitherman, some credit when, on May 6, he called for the inquiry, and we responded. So if you look at our motion today, that's really all we're talking about. It was two or three weeks, but the point is, in these things they should drop the political rhetoric and do the right thing.

I'm concerned now because with C. difficile there's no information available to the public. There are no reporting requirements. There's no accountability—a typical failure of leadership here, a failure to report to the people of Ontario on a threat to families. I'm going to bring a specific case to this, but 14 hospitals have voluntarily reported and we have 306 deaths. What are we doing? Nothing. Yes, they've had an expert, Dr. Michael Baker, and he has reported and has called exactly what Mr. Smitherman should be doing, and he's not following his advice.

But I want to put a real human face to this tragedy. I have a constituent I haven't seen for some time whom I used to work with at General Motors. His name is Vic Humphreys. Mr. Humphreys sent me an e-mail and also gave me full permission to use the sad statement that I'm about to read. His mother died in March. She contracted C. difficile, was diagnosed at Oshawa General Hospital and died on March 15, 2008. It's a tragedy and I express our sympathy. It reminds me of our need to express sympathy to the families and groups of people affected by C. difficile. Are they getting the proper supports today? That's my first instinct.

It isn't political jabber that's going on here. And Mr. Humphreys took the time to bring the tragedy of this whole thing. Here's the case: His mother is since deceased. I'll read it because I want to get it right.

"My father who is 94 and currently a resident in a nursing home"—in Port Hope, in long-term care—"is suffering from what can only be described as 'chronic C. difficile.'"

His mother got it and, I believe, infected the father—he was sent to Scarborough Centenary Hospital, where he contracted it—C. difficile. They discharged him from there to the long-term-care home where his mother was. The mother had it, he had it, and they're in long-term care. How many other people in that Port Hope long-term-care facility might have the same problem? Because he contracted the virus at Rouge Valley. He was given a drug in the hospital. This is the most important thing: "The hospital deemed him to be ready for discharge and he was sent to a nursing home. At this time he has been given three courses of Vancomycin...." He did not have to pay for it and yet, when he was sent home, he had to pay $1,000 for it—not covered under any plan. This is two-tier health. Those who can afford it stay alive and those who can't, die. That's what the minister is doing. It's not just the actual C. difficile issue; it's the treatment. Modalities are very expensive. They're not covered. Those who have plans can pay for it and might live longer, and those that don't—and by the way, the rest of the people are affected for the rest of their lives.

I have other cases and the member from York North has a similar story. This is about people's lives. We're calling for an inquiry to put a stop to this and bring some accountability to this important health care outbreak.

Mrs. Liz Sandals: I am pleased to rise and speak to this item today. I think it's important that we recognize that as we're here this afternoon having this debate about C. difficile, everyone in this chamber is agreed that it is a very important issue, that it is a serious health care issue and that we need to address it, that we need to support Ontario's hospitals in addressing the problem of C. difficile and other infections that are spread in hospitals.

Where the point of disagreement comes is on what is the most effective way of getting on with addressing the problem of C. difficile. We in the government believe that a public inquiry is not necessarily the best way of getting on with it. What a public inquiry would do is give us a very lengthy process when we discuss what the problem is and what we should do with it. In fact, that has already happened in this province three times; we don't need to do it a fourth time. So my colleague from Sault Ste. Marie talked about the fact that there was already a coroner's inquest in that city concerning hospital deaths related to C. difficile. That was a very public process, and the coroner's jury presented recommendations on how we should address it which are quite public. There was an investigation into some C. difficile deaths at the Joseph Brant hospital. Again, the information is public; the recommendations were public. I did note that the member from Kitchener-Waterloo has referenced several times today the actions of the health minister in Northern Ireland, who I take it—and I have no reason to disbelieve her—appointed an expert panel to look at the issue in Northern Ireland. This is a worldwide problem. I would point out that essentially the same thing has already happened here in Ontario. If anything, we are ahead of the much lauded minister from Northern Ireland, because in fact we have already appointed a Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee, and that advisory committee, made up of experts—an expert panel, if you will—has already provided us with the recommendations.

So we do in fact have a good idea of what needs to be done. What we need to do is work with hospitals to make sure that we get on with getting those infection control measures in place in each and every hospital in Ontario.

There's also been considerable comment about how many deaths there have been, what we know about the problem, and whether we need more information and how to get at that. I would like to point out that, based on the recommendations of some of these previous investigations, that process is already in place. The Minister of Health has already advised hospitals all around Ontario that they need to provide public reporting of C. difficile infections in each and every hospital, and that reporting will become mandatory by September 30.

While it hasn't been mentioned here this afternoon very much, there are actually some other infectious agents that are often associated with infections that people pick up in hospitals. One is often referred to as MRSA. The third is the VRE. Again, because in different areas we've had different problems, with different germs and hospital mortality rates, all of those will be reported starting December 31, 2008. So in fact the request to provide information and to make that mandatory, and I would add to make that information public, we have already set that in place.

In addition to that, we will be requiring mandatory public reporting for central line infection. Again, sometimes you find infections that occur in hospitals when people get intravenous injections, ventilator-assisted pneumonia, surgical-site infections and hand hygiene. All of these will be reported by April 30, 2009.

I would just say that we are already addressing the problem, and that's what is important, to get on with the implementation of control.

Mrs. Julia Munro: In the moments I have, I want to leave a couple of messages. We've already looked at the fact that for many of the members opposite it's a question of, "That was then, this is now," in terms of the kind of quotes they provide when we look back at the requests they made for an inquiry into SARS.

But I want to talk about a family in my riding. It was one of those classic cases of someone who went into the hospital, in this case to be treated for a quadruple bypass, and having successfully survived the surgery, was then a victim of C. difficile. One of the things that struck the family—and we had a conversation about this—was the kind of inconsistency within the hospital in terms of isolation, whether people approached him gowned or not gowned.

It struck me as a contrast to the time of the SARS outbreak in Toronto. Not only is there the question of the years of this government ignoring C. difficile, as opposed to the prompt reaction we had towards SARS, but also the protocols that were put in place. I certainly remember that everyone who came in contact with anyone was gowned, masked and gloved. This government is now saying, "We're going to act, yes. We don't need an inquiry," but then you can have patients who can tell you that there isn't a protocol. Some are gowned, some aren't.

It just speaks to the fact that this government has come late in this process. They have allowed all of the reports to go unchallenged and unmet. They have allowed people in this province—200 or more, frankly—to lose their lives. It's really a question of supporting this motion today.

Mr. Bill Mauro: Let me begin today by also extending my sympathies to the families who have been affected by C. difficile and find themselves obviously in some very difficult circumstances.

But I do appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion today, although I must say I'm a bit surprised by what seems to be a bit of an odd choice to me for a motion from the official opposition—which is the second consecutive odd choice, I might say. Last week we saw the official opposition bring forward a motion dealing with rural school closures in Ontario. This, coming from a party that—at the end of their mandate, we found ourselves in a situation with about 15,000 fewer teachers working in the system at a time of increasing enrolment. Of course, during our period, where there is declining enrolment, we are seeing an incredible level of investment in rural schools on top of what was already there before. And yet under that circumstance, they brought forward that motion; a bit of an odd choice, I would expect.

Today we see ourselves here today with another motion that's interesting: a health-care-related motion brought forward by the member from Kitchener-Waterloo, coming from the official opposition—again, a party which is interested in taking $3 billion out of the health care system. I guess there's a link between $3 billion and an ability to fix these kinds of issues, as they see it. I'm not quite sure how those two things connect.

I have to tell you, it is a bit difficult for me as a member from northern Ontario to sit here and watch the official opposition bring forward motions related to health care. As someone who comes from Thunder Bay, I had first-hand experience of how that party, when they were in government, dealt with health-care-related issues as part of a whole host of issues that they dealt with.

I can go back to the Northern Ontario School of Medicine. I can tell you, when I was a member of city council, that member who brought forward this motion today, who was the health minister at that time—and I remember being a member of city council who came down to have a meeting with that particular minister, and the dismissive attitude that we received when we were trying to achieve a medical school campus for Thunder Bay. I remember it very clearly. I also remember the former member whom they had appointed to lead the charge on that—Jim Gordon, I think was his name; a member from Sudbury who used to sit in this chamber beside Mike Harris. What did that guy do when he made a recommendation back to them? I was attending those meetings on behalf of the city of Thunder Bay while we were trying to get a medical school campus for our community. I remember it very clearly. On behalf of the mayor, I attended those meetings, and then I would leave those meetings and I'd go back to the mayor and I'd say, "This gentleman's a snake oil salesman; we're not going to get the medical school campus. This guy's selling snake oil." Sure enough, what happened a short time later? Jim Gordon, on behalf of that minister who brought this motion forward today, announced publicly that the city of Thunder Bay was not going to get a campus for the medical school. That's how they attended to health care issues in northern Ontario. That's what they did: publicly announced it. And yet today if you talk to them about what they did when they were in government, they'll tell you that they supported the Northern Ontario Medical School and that it was they who are responsible for the establishment of the medical school in Thunder Bay when just the opposite was the case. They publicly announced that they wouldn't do it, and yet today they crow and they walk around and strut around this place like they attended to the issues in Thunder Bay and northern Ontario.

The same thing with the new hospital; they do it on the new hospital as well. They publicly announced that they wouldn't build a new hospital for us. They publicly announced that they wanted to retrofit a 50-year-old building—that's what they wanted to do when that member was the health minister—and eliminate 200 to 300 acute care beds in our community. That's the reaction we got from them, and yet still they come here today and they bring forward, as their idea for an opposition day motion, a health care issue when they dumped all over the people of Thunder Bay and north-western Ontario when they had the opportunity to address these issues. And today, somehow, I'm supposed to figure out rationally in my mind how a party that wants to take $3 billion out of health care wants to address issues like C. difficile. We've had it already: a Soo coroner's jury—

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I'm rather shocked at what I'm hearing. I guess the first thing: I would certainly ask the member to withdraw what he has just said. It was our party that made the announcement about the new—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): I appreciate the information.

I'll return to the member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan, who still has the floor.

Mr. Bill Mauro: Thank you, Speaker. Unbelievable. She continues to stand up in her place and mislead the people in this—

Interjections.

Mr. Bruce Crozier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I heard the word "lying" across the floor. Perhaps the honourable member would consider that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): I didn't hear it.

I return to the member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan, who has the floor.

Mr. Bill Mauro: They publicly announced, that government, that there would not be a campus for the medical school in Thunder Bay; publicly announced that they wanted to retrofit a 50-year-old hospital in Thunder Bay and not build a new hospital and take 200 to 300 acute care beds out of our community. That was the point of your Health Services Restructuring Commission, which visited Thunder Bay before it visited other communities in the province. That's exactly what they did.

On this particular issue, calling for a public inquiry—why? To slow things down even more so that we can't implement what has already been implemented?

Mrs. Julia Munro: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I would just ask that the debate be on the motion that is before us.

Interjection: It is.

Mrs. Julia Munro: I haven't heard "C. difficile."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): I appreciate you drawing that to the Speaker's attention, and I would caution the member—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): I would ask the member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan to please take his seat.

I would ask him to make his comments with respect to the text of the motion. I return to the member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Bill Mauro: Thank you, Speaker; I appreciate that. The text of the motion is connected directly to a party that brings forward a motion and is talking about trying to address health care issues in Ontario when they want to take $3 billion out of health care. Perhaps it's too bad their clock has run out, or they could explain to the people of the province how they could do that.

Speaker, my time is almost up. Three independent investigations into this issue already; we've already begun implementing the recommendations coming from most of those investigations—more to be implemented. A public inquiry would do nothing but slow this down.

I appreciate the time.

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: I also have to stand and speak against this motion. It's very clear in the words of the chief medical officer of the province and the coroner's office when they state that an inquiry will not move this further or faster along, and I absolutely agree with that.

One of the members talked about "good theatre." There is a place and a time for an inquiry, but I also think that the public has become very wary about the cost benefit of inquiries, especially when the answers and the solutions are there and we need to move with them rather than slow things down by having inquiries.

Hospitals do provide the primary control on this. They are the ones who know the risks, and they have been trying to develop strategies and implement infection control strategies and processes for their hospitals. I want to take two of my own hospitals in my riding into consideration when I talk about that, and those are the two hospitals within the Middlesex Hospital Alliance. They're both small rural hospitals. They've been recognized by the Ontario Hospital Association for the work they've been doing on infection control. They've been partnered in the last five years with 3M through infection prevention services to conduct a complete assessment and analysis of prevention and control of infection.

I want to bring into the record what their data is. Their data is already published for the public to see on their hospital website. On that site, they have the distinction of having below the Canadian and Ontario averages for infection control. They are working with three hospital-acquired infections that they report on, and as it happens they are MRSA, VRE and C. difficile. In Strathroy, one of the two hospitals, their C. difficile record for 1,000 patient admissions in 2005 was 5.5%. In 2006-07, they had it down to 2.89%, which brings them below the Ontario average. The Ontario average is 7.4%. Newbury Hospital, a Four Counties Health Services hospital, per 1,000 patient admissions was 6.5% in 2005 and in 2007-08 was 6.38%—again below the Ontario average. They are benchmarking. They have recognized the need to do this. Everyone in my riding can see this information on the website. This is public information.

This hospital has acted. They have set the best practices for this type of thing. They know what to do. They don't need an investigation. They don't need an inquiry. They're already reporting to our constituents. All we're saying is that by September 30 we will have mandatory reporting from all hospitals. But I'll tell you right now that my hospitals are ready to do it tomorrow, and I know a number of the hospitals in this province are that far along. So why would we slow this down with investigations and unnecessary inquiries?

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: It is a pleasure to stand here today and join the debate on the opposition day motion, which requests that we have a public inquiry on this issue. I think, right from the start, all members from all parties of this House express their condolences to the family about the tragic circumstances. The tragedy of a death in the family is something that I think we have all experienced in some way and is something that we don't wish upon anybody, regardless of the cause, regardless of the way that that death has occurred.

I think we're being asked today whether we want to do something or talk about something—two very distinctly different things. What the opposition motion says to me is that there has been an issue within the hospitals, and I don't think there is any argument about that. I think we'd all agree that that has been the case. The question that is being put before us is, what do you do next? What have you done, and what will you do next? What the opposition party is asking us to do today is, in my opinion, to think about it some more and talk about it some more to see if some sort of a discussion is going to make this better. That may be a good idea if it had the support, I would think, of the chief medical officer of health or the chief coroner. If you take an analysis of the motion that has been put forward today and the responses that we've received to date on this issue, you will find that the people whose expertise we rely on, whose expertise has been relied on in the past by the opposition parties on both sides, have said, "No. A public inquiry in this case is not what you want to do. What you want to do is take action." What they are doing, what both gentlemen are doing, is supporting the efforts that are being made by the current Minister of Health to deal with this very, very important issue.

I think many of us in this House have been touched, and certainly I have been touched, by a very similar issue. I had a close relative in a hospital in Mississauga who contracted MRSA. I don't know if anybody else in the House has been through that experience, but certainly at a time when somebody is at their sickest, when somebody is at a time in their life when they've got a very serious illness, to have to go through the quarantines, to have to go through the isolation, to know that you cannot go and visit that person because they are suffering through this infection, is something that I don't think any of us in this House would downplay at all. It's something we all treat very seriously. It certainly was not a pleasant experience for us to go through, or for the relative who found themselves in that situation.

I really don't think we should be using this to further any political agenda. What we should be doing is what we think is the right thing to do next. Whom do you rely on for that type of information? As I've said, it's very, very clear that the chief medical officer of health and the chief coroner's office have stated that a public inquiry simply would not help us move any faster. Surely that's what we all want in this House: to move quickly, rapidly, on this issue. I believe that would be a sentiment that all members would express, and it would not provide any more new information to our health care providers within the province of Ontario. As has been said by other speakers, we've already had three independent investigations into C. difficile. The Sault Ste. Marie coroner's jury, the one in a neighbouring municipality to mine at Joe Brant and the provincial infectious disease advisory committee recommendations have all come forward and have all been able to provide advice and some learning to the government of the day and to the opposition parties. But surely now is the time to act. It's time to implement those recommendations, and it's time to move forward on a practical, day-to-day basis within the health care system in Ontario.

Hospitals have a primary obligation for controlling their own environments. They have this information as well now. As a result of the investigations, this information is now in the health care system in a fashion that simply wasn't there before. Some of it is very simple: things like rigorous hand washing. Some of it is just an increased dedication to things like sanitation and cleanliness. Dr. Richard Schabas, who was the provincial medical officer of health during the SARS outbreak, has commented on this, and I will quote him: "I'm not sure a public inquiry is necessarily the logical next step. They often make for good theatre but they don't get us where we need to go, which is to address the problem in a vigorous and effective way, and I think largely we know what the underlying problems are with C. difficile."

I say that I share that sentiment. I say that I think all members of the House would want us to act on behalf of those members of the public who have experienced a tragedy in their own lives as a result of this infection. Surely they would want the government to act quickly and rapidly and move to put an end to this type of infection occurring in the hospitals that has caused such a tragedy to these families. It's time to move on.

I think that the opposition motion that is being debated today, I don't believe—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Thank you very much.

Mrs. Witmer has moved that the Legislative Assembly calls upon the McGuinty government to restore public confidence in Ontario's health care system by immediately initiating an independent investigation into the sad and tragic deaths caused by outbreaks of C. difficile in Ontario hospitals and report back to the Legislature in 90 days; and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario calls upon the government of Ontario to hold a public inquiry to determine what steps can be taken to reduce the risks of outbreaks and prevent further deaths related to C. difficile. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1736 to 1746.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): Mrs. Witmer has moved opposition day motion number 5. All those in favour of the motion will please rise one at a time and be counted by the table staff.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): The member for Nickel Belt has given notice of her dissatisfaction with the answer to her question given today by the Minister of Children and Youth Services on the matter of clothing allowances. The member has up to five minutes to debate the matter, and the minister or parliamentary assistant may reply for up to five minutes. I recognize the member for Nickel Belt.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): I'd ask the House to come to order. I have to be able to hear the member for Nickel Belt make her presentation. Would the House please come to order.

I recognize the member for Nickel Belt.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: This morning I asked a question of the Minister of Children and Youth Services about a winter clothing allowance and back-to-school allowance for people on Ontario Works. The minister said, "A single mom with two kids on social assistance is today 27% better off—a 27% higher income now—than when we were elected." I quote from the Hansard.

That number is rather surprising to me and certainly requires some explanation. So I would ask the minister if she could please explain this figure as follows: What are the ages of the children she is referring to? Ontario Works varies depending on the age of the child. What are the dates that this 27% is calculated from, and was the period of time included in there? Also, does that 27% take into account inflation that took place during that period of time she is referring to? Also, does this take into account the child benefits that are supposed to increase on July 1, 2008? That has not taken place yet, given that we are in June. Does it also include federal programs such as the child benefit and the GST credit that the federal government gives to low-income families in Ontario? Does it also include the increase to the federal child benefit that the province has allowed to go through?

When we look at it, our most recent figures—and those are also shared by the income advocacy centre—for a lone parent with one child under the age of six go as follows: In 2003, which is when she got elected, when the government came into power, the maximum social assistance for a single parent with one child aged 6 or under, adjusted for 2007 figures, was $11,492 a year. In 2007, the maximum social assistance rate for a single parent with one child under the age of 6, here again adjusted for 2007 figures, is $11,458. So our calculation shows a decrease, a percentage change of 0.3 lower than when they came into power, a far cry from 27%.

When we take into account all of the above changes but we also take into account inflation, changes to the federal benefits, the Ontario child benefit, then we come to a real increase of 4%. So to hear the minister say, "a 27% higher income now" and "27% better off"—it's very misleading to the public to suggest that social assistance recipients are far ahead, in real terms, of where they were in 2003. It leaves the wrong impression of the situation of people on social assistance.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Do you think so?

M<sup>me</sup> France G  linas: Yes, I do think that it leaves the wrong impression. It also gives the wrong impression of this government's policy. Like, 27% sounds pretty good—

Interjection: Sounds substantial.

M<sup>me</sup> France G  linas: —sounds substantial. The reality, in our calculation, is far less; it's between a minus 3% real increase or, if we take into account the federal benefits and the new Ontario child benefit, we are looking at 4%. So where is the discrepancy coming from? How can she justify using, "A single mom with two kids on social assistance is ... 27% better off—a 27% higher income now—than when we were elected"? I would need some explanation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): I recognize the parliamentary assistant, the member for Lambton—Kent—Middlesex.

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: The McGuinty government is fully committed to helping all Ontario children reach their full potential. That is why our government committed $2.1 billion in new investments over five years in the form of the Ontario child benefit. This historic investment is strengthening families and providing children with the opportunity to achieve their full potential, and it is a significant turning point in Ontario's fight against poverty.

For the first time ever, the Ontario government is providing support to all low-income families, regardless of whether their parents are working or are receiving social assistance. The ongoing support provided by this program will help parents to make the transition to work and financial independence because they will continue to receive the OCB after leaving social assistance.

Beginning this July, eligible families will receive up to $50 per month per child. When the OCB is fully implemented in 2011, this figure will grow to $91 per month per child, or $1,100 per year per child. With the OCB, a single mother with two children on social assistance will receive 27% more compared to when our government took office. When the OCB is fully implemented in 2011, this number will rise to 34%.

I refer the member for Nickel Belt to page 50 of the Ontario budget for 2008, where we have an indication that talks about—the member asked about the age of the children. If you look at page 50, you will see that this is a single parent with two children ages five and seven. This is annualized income since 2003-04.

If we take that further, we will see that the McGuinty government recognizes that Ontarians' extraordinary costs are more than twice a year. They need support year-round. That's why we're incorporating the back-to-school and winter clothing allowances into the monthly OCB. Over the course of the year, all families will receive more than these amounts of the allowance through the OCB payment and the full national child benefit supplement, which will no longer be deducted from social assistance payments. Any family receiving social assistance who feels they are experiencing significant financial challenges should speak with their case worker about help that may be available to them.

The OCB will not only benefit Ontario's families; it will also benefit municipalities. Because the OCB is funded 100% by the province, social assistance costs for municipalities across Ontario will decrease by $15 million this year. For the Sudbury region, in 2008-09, that's a saving of $210,000.

We have already seen examples from some communities using these savings to provide additional support for the vulnerable citizens in their communities. We've also increased social assistance rates for four consecutive years, for a total increase of 9%, after more than a decade of frozen and slashed rates.

That's not all. The McGuinty government has been busy improving supports for vulnerable Ontarians since we took office. We have increased the minimum wage from $6.85 to $8.75, and it's on its way to $10.25, which is more than a 50% increase. We've created 22,000 child care spaces and funded 18,000 affordable housing units and 35,000 rent supplements. More recently, in the budget we doubled student nutrition program funding to $32 million over three years and added $135 million for a low-income dental program and $100 million to repair 4,000 affordable housing units.

We know that while we have made great strides, there is still more to be done to support our most vulnerable. That's why Premier McGuinty, for the first time in the province's history, created a cabinet committee focused on poverty reduction. That is where our minister is today. She is doing consultations in Scarborough at this time. By the end of the year, this committee will have developed a comprehensive strategy, with targets and indicators to measure our progress.

Our government is fully committed to ensuring that Ontarians have the opportunities and the tools they need to reach their full potential, and that is the intent of our minister and our government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ted Arnott): There being no further matter to debate, I deem the motion to adjourn to be carried. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

The House adjourned at 1800.

COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LA NÉGOCIATION COLLECTIVE DANS LES COLLÈGES

Mr. Milloy moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 90, An Act to enact the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, to repeal the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act and to make related amendments to other Acts / Projet de loi 90, Loi édictant la Loi de 2008 sur la négociation collective dans les collèges, abrogeant la Loi sur la négociation collective dans les collèges et apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Mr. Milloy.

Hon. John Milloy: It is with great pleasure that I stand today to lead off the debate on Bill 90, which deals with the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act. At the outset, I'd like to give notice that I'll be sharing my time this morning with my parliamentary assistant, the member from Richmond Hill. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a minute to thank him for all the work he has done as my parliamentary assistant and all the work he has done on this piece of legislation and will continue to do as it's debated here in the House. The member from Richmond Hill has a long academic background, I think, having been involved in academic life in three countries, and he has certainly brought a great deal of his experience and wisdom to my ministry. So I want to thank him for his work to date and the work that I know he'll be moving on with.

One of the opposition members yesterday pointed out that Bill 90 is a somewhat lengthy and complex, even technical, bill. Although that is true, I think its contents can be boiled down to two main things. First of all, it gives part-time and sessional college workers the right to bargain collectively. Second, it modernizes the collective bargaining system in our community colleges. Those two pieces of the puzzle are really what Bill 90 is all about. I'm very proud to be bringing it forward today here in the Legislature.

I think the best way to explain its contents and to give a bit of context is to go back to the mid-1970s, when the province of Ontario put into one act the whole system of collective bargaining within our community college system. Members, of course, are aware that it was in the mid-1960s that Bill Davis, as Minister of Education, brought forward Ontario's network of community colleges. It was in the mid-1970s that how labour relations would proceed was enacted.

One of the surprising anomalies of that piece of legislation was the fact that part-time and sessional workers, those who were part of the academic staff and those who were part of the support staff, were actually expressly forbidden from organizing; that is, from coming together collectively and, if they chose, from being represented by a union in their negotiations with management. As a government, we have recognized that that was quite frankly unfair and inappropriate in this day and age. In August of last year, our government made the commitment that we would extend bargaining rights to part-time college employees. That commitment was made last August, and at the same time we said that we wanted to get the best advice on how to proceed by seeking out expert consultation, by engaging with stakeholders and coming forth with a plan.

To do that, we engaged a gentleman by the name of Kevin Whitaker, who actually was here yesterday; he brought his daughter along, I think, to witness democracy in action and to see the fruits of his labour. Mr. Whitaker may be well known to many members of the Legislature and perhaps to many Ontarians who are involved in the labour relations field. He, in fact, is the chair of the Ontario Labour Relations Board, and someone who is very knowledgeable when it comes to labour relations and collective bargaining. We asked Mr. Whitaker to take a look at the act, to take a look at this anomaly, the fact that part-time workers were not allowed to bargain collectively, and to come forward with a plan.

He did yeoman's service. He went out and consulted with all sides. He consulted with the college sector, with students, with those involved in unions which in fact represent full-time college workers. He did a great deal of research into the history of collective bargaining in the academic sector here in the province of Ontario. In fact, I would encourage all members, if you're interested at all in this bill, to read Mr. Whitaker's report, because not only does it contain his recommendations, it contains a wonderful summary of the history of collective bargaining in this important sector over the last number of years.

On February 1 of this year, Mr. Whitaker produced his report, which we immediately made public. It was put on my website, and I in turn had an opportunity to go out and consult with the same groups of people, the same stakeholders involved in the college system, and talk to them about his recommendations.

Mr. Whitaker's report, the thrust of which was to extend these bargaining rights and at the same time modernize the collective bargaining system, I think was greeted favourably by all sides. Of course, in meeting with stakeholders, there are always differences of opinion over this matter or that item or this technicality, but I think overall everyone recognized that Mr. Whitaker had done an outstanding job in terms of finding that balance and finding that middle ground of hearing both sides and finding a way to move forward. As I mentioned, he talked a lot about modernizing the whole system of collective bargaining at the college level, of making it more effective, of making it more in line with what goes on in other sectors, more compliant with what goes on in the current Labour Relations Act, which governs, of course, so much of the collective bargaining that goes forward.

As I say, Mr. Whittaker brought forward a very solid report, and after consulting with the various stakeholders, the decision was made that we would take his report and use it as the thrust of the legislation that we have before us. I want to commend Mr. Whitaker, not only for his hard work but, I think, for his wisdom and the good advice he has brought forward, and simply say to this Legislature that we're going to follow that advice with the bill we have before us.

I just want to spend a minute or two on the details of the bill. Obviously, the most important part is the fact that it would extend the right of collective bargaining to part-time workers. Beyond that, as I said, it moves to modernize the system of collective bargaining at the community colleges, which I think has fallen out of line with what is going on in other sectors of our society.

This legislation, if passed, would create a new employer bargaining agent to represent all colleges in collective bargaining. Members may be surprised to learn that right now we have a government-appointed agency that acts on behalf of the employer during negotiations involving full-time workers. We simply think that's outdated. It's high time that the colleges themselves, who of course are involved in the negotiating, actually represent themselves and not have this intermediary.

The act further provides roles for the Ontario Labour Relations Board and the Minister of Labour, consistent with their roles under the Labour Relations Act; as I say, an effort to modernize and bring this act more in line with what is happening in other sectors of society. It streamlines the time lines for collective bargaining to encourage more proactive engagement by the bargaining parties. It allows for the appointment of a conciliator to work with the workplace parties at their request, which eliminates the current fact-finding exercise, which is more cumbersome.

Essentially, we're proposing that collective bargaining processes in colleges, for both full-time and part-time staff, be made more consistent with the Ontario Labour

Relations Act, while still recognizing the unique working environment in the colleges. I think this is an approach that would give all parties more responsibility for the outcome of collective bargaining, lead to a strengthened system of collective bargaining in our colleges and, I stress, allow the right for those part-time workers who are excluded right now to come forward and bargain collectively if they choose.

As I indicated, I want to share my time with my parliamentary assistant, but I'd be remiss if I didn't spend a minute or two talking about the college system in general. I believe the passage of this act is going to strengthen the college system across the province. It's going to strengthen collective bargaining for those workers who right now are represented in unions and will provide an opportunity for others to come forward if they wish.

Strengthening our community college system, and strengthening our whole post-secondary education system, has been a hallmark of this government. I've been very proud to have the privilege of serving as the new Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities under the leadership of a government and a Premier who believe so much in post-secondary education.

Community colleges perform a vital role in our province. They provide the skills and training that people need in order to enter the workforce. They've been very involved, for example, in the development of the second-career strategy that the Premier and I had the opportunity to announce the details of last week. This is a longer term training opportunity for recently laid-off workers, where they can come forward and, if they identify a job or career that requires longer term training, we will provide them with support. We will partner with them and allow them to pursue their studies at a private career college or at a community college.

The Premier and I went to Seneca College to make the announcement. It was welcomed very warmly. Once again, I want to highlight the important role that community colleges will play in terms of welcoming these laid-off workers and providing them with the skills they need to move on to a stable, long-term job. I must say that one of the highlights and one of the strengths of our community college system is that there is a degree of flexibility, a degree of being able to welcome people into the training program, of being able to work with them individually and make sure they go on their way. In our work with the community college sector throughout the development of the second-career strategy, they said, "We want to show the flexibility, we want to show the leadership to bring forward these laid-off workers."

That's just one example of the type of impact that community colleges are having across our province. They're one of the key parts of our post-secondary education system. I think all members of the Legislature recognize their important role.

What we're proposing today is, first of all, to modernize the collective bargaining system in which employers and employees reach agreements on their employment circumstances and, at the same time, extend it to a group that has been excluded for too long. I'm very proud of the work that has been done by Mr. Whitaker. I'm very thankful for the important input we've heard from stakeholders involved in this issue, everyone from students to administration; faculty, both part-time and full-time; support staff, both part-time and full-time; those in the labour sector; and other interested people who come forward.

I think Mr. Whitaker has come up with a very sound road map for moving forward; we've used it as the basis of this legislation. I look forward to hearing from all members of the House, but I also look forward to all members of the House supporting this bill, which, if passed, would modernize a system that quite frankly is in need of it.

With that, thank you very much. As I indicated, I'll be sharing my time.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I would like to begin by thanking Minister Milloy for his kind words. It has been a great pleasure for me to work with Mr. Milloy to serve our post-secondary education system.

Today we are discussing legislation that, if passed, would mark a significant step in the modernization and strengthening of Ontario's college system. Ontario's 24 colleges of applied arts and technology are a vital cornerstone of our post-secondary education system. Overall, our colleges serve about 250,000 students from all walks of life in every corner of this province. We anticipate college enrolments will continue to grow as more and more Ontarians choose our colleges as an excellent option for a high-quality education that will lead to a strong career, or for career development and personal growth opportunities with countless options in leading-edge technologies, the latest in arts and humanities, and many more important and innovative programs. From our young people just graduating from high school and seeking an exciting career, to older workers looking for career development or a new career; from seniors taking night courses, to the next generation of computer animators creating the blockbuster movies we bring our grandchildren to see, our colleges offer unique, world-class opportunities for post-secondary education.

Some examples of the excellent programs available include Sheridan's world-renowned computer animation program, developing animation in demand around the world and establishing Ontario as a leader in this field; George Brown's culinary arts program, producing great chefs and restaurant entrepreneurs; the veterinary technology and wildlife rehabilitation program at Northern College, teaching a one-of-a-kind course in Ontario for people who want to work in natural resources, zoos, wildlife refuges and conservation societies. All of these programs and the thousands more offered by colleges across the province help our students prepare for a strong future career.

Our colleges train students to use the most modern equipment and techniques, and employ a knowledgeable academic staff, often directly from industry. Many of these academic staff work part-time, splitting their time between their own careers and helping students prepare for theirs. Many staff are sessional workers. These arrangements have proven to be extremely beneficial to all involved, and we want to ensure that this type of flexibility can continue. It benefits the colleges by providing access to teachers directly from industry with the latest knowledge and skills and with strong name recognition in their own fields. Most importantly, these arrangements benefit the students, ensuring a good mix of full-time and part-time, or sessional, instructors providing high-quality education along with insight into the dynamics of the workplace.

These arrangements also mean that students can benefit from the valuable contribution of support staff who help enhance the learning environment. We believe that the modernization of collective bargaining processes we are proposing will help ensure that colleges are able to continue to attract and retain the best talent possible for the benefit of our students. Our colleges must continue to be able to offer innovative programs, as well as various options for education, including full-time or part-time courses, continuing education, co-op education, apprenticeship opportunities, training programs and retraining for second careers. Providing such a wide range of options for post-secondary education means it's more likely that our young people will continue to pursue their education. In today's emerging economy, this is vital. It's estimated that 70% or more of new jobs in Ontario over the coming years will require some kind of post-secondary education. In order to ensure that all Ontarians are able to succeed, our government is committed to ensuring our post-secondary institutions are able to provide the best possible education and training for students.

That is the basis of our unprecedented $6.2-billion Reaching Higher plan. The proposed Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, is a key part of delivering Reaching Higher to our college students. This legislation, if passed, would provide the first major modernization of collective bargaining in the college sector since 1975. It would give part-time and sessional college workers the right to bargain collectively for the first time in Ontario. This is an important commitment our government made last year, and I'm proud to see this as a cornerstone of this bill.

Further changes in this proposed legislation would continue the modernization of collective bargaining in colleges, providing greater ownership of the processes for the workplace parties. We believe that our proposal would lead to improved labour relations for colleges and to an overall better and more stable learning environment for students. This is the focus of this bill. Some of the ways we believe that this would be achieved include:

—Moving the collective bargaining responsibility of the College Compensation and Appointments Council, the government-appointed agency that currently represents employees in bargaining, to a new body composed of representatives of college boards of governors, allowing the colleges to bargain directly with the union through the new body.

—Creating two new bargaining units, one for part-time academic and sessional staff, and one for part-time support staff.

—Establishing a process for certification of employee organizations applying to represent the members of college bargaining units.

—Continuing existing managerial and confidential exclusions from collective bargaining, as well as exclusions for students in co-op work programs.

—Empowering the Ontario Labour Relations Board to assume the same role it has with respect to collective bargaining in other Ontario workplaces.

—Allowing the Minister of Labour to appoint a conciliator or mediator, as is currently the case with respect to collective bargaining in most workplaces, and eliminating the current fact-finding exercise. This would help streamline the bargaining process and encourage negotiations.

—Removing fixed expiry dates for collective agreements, which would allow the parties to negotiate expiry dates that make sense for them.

—Reducing notification periods for bargaining from seven months to 90 days.

—Removing deemed strike or lockout provisions in the current act, bringing the new legislation in line with the Labour Relations Act.

Various other details of the current legislation would also be changed or deleted, making the college bargaining process more similar to the collective framework for other workplaces in the province.

These proposed changes would represent an important modernization of labour relations in this sector. We believe in these in no small part because we took the time to conduct a thorough and transparent review of the current legislation. We wanted to ensure that it was done right. Labour Relations Board Chair Kevin Whitaker was appointed to conduct proper consultations with all parties in our college system. After receiving written and oral submissions, Mr. Whitaker produced a comprehensive report this past February 1. He provided our government with wide-ranging recommendations covering collective bargaining in our colleges.

One of those recommendations was, of course, to extend college collective bargaining rights to part-time college workers, but the report also went on to make recommendations on how this should be done to ensure we can create a stronger and more stable college system that benefits all parties. We thank Mr. Whitaker for his efforts and for the constructive recommendations he provided. We believe this recommended approach is the best for colleges. We believe it will address the needs of workplace parties while still keeping the needs of students front and centre.

This proposed legislation is based on his recommendations. We believe that by giving college workplace parties the proper tools to negotiate effective collective agreements, we are helping to build a better learning environment for Ontario students and a better, stronger, more prosperous future for all of us.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Questions and comments?

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll be given an opportunity in a few moments to speak on Bill 90 as well. There are a few things I want to put on the record, but, generally speaking, I think everyone in this House is very supportive of our college system here in Ontario.

We on this side of the House are very proud of it because, of course, it was established under the Bill Davis government and it's something that I think many communities and many citizens of Ontario have taken advantage of over the last 40-some years. I will be looking forward to putting a few things on the record in a few minutes.

Although I have a copy of the review by Mr. Whitaker, I haven't really had an opportunity, because I'm speaking today on behalf of our critic, but I will look forward to those kinds of comments and to seeing this bill go to committee and getting all the details worked out, as well as the funding issues around the bill. I look forward to that, Mr. Speaker. Give me a few minutes and I'll be speaking to it.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I want to welcome the citizens of Ontario to this parliamentary channel. I am convinced they are awake. I am convinced that they have had a couple of coffees—just ready, tense and eager to listen to the debate in this Legislature. I will be speaking in a little while, for those who are awake to follow the proceedings of this place, and I will have a lot more to say to the minister and the government members in approximately half an hour from now. So tune in.

Mr. Mike Colle: I would just like to thank the minister and the parliamentary assistant for the work they have done in bringing Bill 90 forward. Essentially, it extends collective bargaining rights to the part-time workers, the part-time college teachers in our community colleges across this province. It has been done as a result of a comprehensive analysis by Mr. Kevin Whitaker, chair of the Ontario Labour Relations Board, and it stabilizes the working conditions and the labour relations in our colleges, if the bill is passed. So it is essentially something that will benefit the workers but will also be of great benefit in terms of bringing stability to labour relations in our colleges and, as a result of that, will make things better for our students.

We sometimes look at our community colleges as sort of an afterthought in many cases in terms of our universities and colleges partnership. But those of us who have had some contact with our community colleges know that right across this province, from Humber College to George Brown College to Seneca College to Durham College—especially Durham College; they do some exceptional work out in Durham. Not enough people talk about the great work done in Durham at the college. I hope the member from Durham does applaud the professors and the students at Durham College, because we don't speak enough about Durham in this House. I hope he will do that and that all members from Durham will.

Mr. John Yakabuski: I too want to congratulate the colleges in this province for the work they do. I particularly want to talk about one college, Algonquin College, particularly Algonquin College in the Ottawa Valley. With the minister in the House here today, I'm encouraging him again to get up and have a look at this facility in the Ottawa Valley, which has made application to build a new college campus right along the banks of the beautiful Ottawa River, in the city of Pembroke. I'm hoping the minister will take the time to come up to see what we've got there, see the tremendous work they're doing in a very antiquated building, some parts of which are over 100 years old, so he can understand how important it is for post-secondary education in my riding of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke that that application in the Upper Ottawa Valley gets funded by the ministry. It is paramount to growth and development in Renfrew county. We all know that we're trying to ensure that each and every area of this province has a fair opportunity in which to be the very best it can be and provide that post-secondary opportunity to the citizens of that area and all of those who may come into the area. It's not just about the education, but the entire economic health of the riding. There's a program going on right now where people are working to raise the necessary funds locally to convince the ministry and the minister that that would be an appropriate thing for them to do, to fund that college.

A couple of weeks ago I was at the convocation, and my predecessor, Sean Conway, was honoured by Algonquin College with an honorary diploma. I was pleased to see that. Mr. Conway spoke, as he always has, very eloquently, and hit all the right points. I'd hope this minister would hit the right point with Algonquin College in the Upper Ottawa Valley.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, you have two minutes to respond.

Hon. John Milloy: I want to thank all my colleagues for their comments. I also want to join with them in acknowledging the strength of our community college system. I can't resist taking a few minutes out of my remarks and respond to my friend from Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke. College and university infrastructure has been a major part of both the fall economic statement and our most recent budget, both of which the opposition voted against. He is standing up today and asking for more funds for a community college. There are many good projects across this province, and my colleague the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal and I have been working to identify priorities and move forward. But again, perhaps the member should be telling some of his colleagues that when they stand up and ask for tax cuts, tax cuts and government spending are not consistent.

I think it's more important today to deal with the bill in front of us. As I've said in my remarks, the first thing it does is modernize the college collective bargaining system, and the second, equally important matter is that it extends bargaining rights to part-time workers at colleges both in the support staff and those in the faculty, those who teach. Sometimes at Queen's Park you can fall into the trap of forgetting about individuals, forgetting about the people who are affected by this piece of legislation. Several weeks ago I had the pleasure of going to meet with a number of college workers who had come here to Queen's Park to meet with a number of MPPs. I met a number of part-time college staff who came up to me and expressed their frustration with the fact that they had been excluded under this act, that they couldn't exercise their rights, and just had one simple question to me: "Are you going to change it?" I made a commitment there and then that we were going to introduce this legislation this spring. This is about these individuals; it's about giving them an opportunity that others have, and it is an outstanding way to move forward.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate?

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: May I have unanimous consent of the House to defer the leadoff speech from Mr. Wilson?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): The member for Simcoe-North has asked for unanimous consent that the leadoff for the official opposition be stood down. Agreed? Agreed.

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the fact that you've allowed me to defer the leadoff. Mr. Wilson would have liked to be here this morning, but he had to take his dad to the hospital.

I appreciate being able to speak to Bill 90, An Act to enact the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, to repeal the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act and to make related amendments to other Acts. I understand the short title of the bill is the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008. I've just seen this bill for the first time this morning and I look forward to making a few comments on it. I can tell you that over the last three or four years we've certainly been lobbied by the part-time college sessional teachers. Roger Couvrette has visited a lot of our offices—I know he came up to my Orillia riding office. He's president of the Organization of Part-time and Sessional Employees of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology. I think Roger made a lot of sense, and we'll be looking forward to the debate in this House; we'll be looking forward to the committee hearings and listening to impact that this legislation will make on the college system, but of course funding will be one of the key areas of the impacts.

I mentioned earlier in my two-minute hit about the college system here in the province of Ontario; it's something that I think, when it originally started, there were some people who were skeptical about it. I think being the brainchild or the dream of Premier William Davis at the time made it very appealing to the citizens of Ontario.

I want to put on the record a few things about the college system in our riding, in particular Georgian College. I can tell you that in the 40 years Georgian College has been in existence in Simcoe county, particularly with its main campus in Barrie, Orillia, Midland, Owen Sound, and now in Gravenhurst etc, it has become a real institution in our community and something that all levels of government, including the federal government and all the municipalities, are very, very proud to associate with. I can tell you it's one thing that I'm always proud to do: At least once or twice a year I get invited out to speak to classes of students at Georgian College. Usually it's at the Orillia campus and usually it's a day that I really enjoy, to see the optimism of our young people and the great ideas that they have as they ask questions and want to be part of our process.

I don't think there's any question, the part-time instructors have become a very important part of the whole college system. My only fear with this legislation is, when this bill is passed—and I suspect it will be passed—there will no doubt be additional costs; I wouldn't think that anybody would want to form a collective bargaining unit unless they wanted more out of the system. I suspect that it will cost the government of Ontario more money, and I'm hoping that the government will be there for the college system when they actually require this money.

I want to talk a little bit about Georgian College. In Simcoe county, we've got three campuses of Georgian College: the Barrie campus, the Orillia and the Midland campus. I want to put on the record a little bit about the three campuses and some of the things that both governments have done, since I've been the MPP, to enhance the work that they've done there. The Barrie campus was the main campus built in the county of Simcoe. I can tell you that I was very, very proud, five years ago, to be part of the opening of the new SuperBuild program buildings that they built at Georgian College in Barrie, when Dianne Cunningham came up for the official opening. I think about a $24-million grant was given to Georgian College—federal, provincial and college money—to see this program proceed. It's something that I believe has been very, very beneficial to that community.

The president of Georgian College, Mr. Brian Tambllyn, has been a real leader, as college presidents go, in the province of Ontario. When I first got elected in 1999, I sat down with Brian and we had a chat about Georgian College in the area, the lack of funding and all of those kinds of things that occur when you have discussions with the presidents of organizations. I can tell you that Brian made a commitment to me at that time that he would help my riding, the riding of Simcoe North, enhance our two campuses, in Barrie and Orillia. At that time, in 2000, we had about 600 empty spaces at the Orillia site of Georgian College. Today, those are full. We've got an expanded veterinary technician program at Georgian College. They're working in co-operation with their next-door neighbours, the Ontario Provincial Police and the Ontario Provincial Police Association, who are both strong advocates of the college system in our community.

The Midland campus, back in 1999, was behind the radio station in a strip mall in Midland. Today, seven or eight years later, we've got what we call an Ontario skilled trades centre. It is something that we are extremely proud of. In our area, in Simcoe county, all the tradespeople used to have to travel to Kitchener, Toronto or maybe to Durham College to get their apprenticeship training. As apprenticeships are near and dear to my heart—because I come from a construction background—I was so pleased when Brian Tambllyn and his team at Midland purchased the Industrial Research and Development Institute from that organization and now have an Ontario skilled trades centre in that facility. They train people in electrical, plumbing, recreational vehicles and marine mechanics, along with a few others as well. But what it has meant is that young people in our community don't need to travel to other communities, especially when many of the people are young and they've got young families, or with the high cost of gasoline, that sort of thing. It's has been very, very beneficial to our whole community. We want to plan on expanding on that. In fact, I've already made some inquiries into some work around heavy equipment. I think heavy equipment would be something that could be operated out of the Ontario skilled trades centre, along with sheet metal, carpentry and other trades like that. So again, we're quite proud of what is taking place there.

The colleges have been blessed with great staff. It's just a pleasure to go to the colleges and to speak to the students. I'm always impressed with the staff who meet me at the door, take me to the classrooms and let me speak to the students. I can tell you that one of our young pages here today is Murray Fallis. Murray's dad is an instructor and one of the key people at the Georgian College campus in Orillia.

I also want to point out that some of the colleges have really expanded their programs under other areas as well. Both the Orillia campus and the Midland campus of Georgian College in our community have an expanded university partnership program with universities such as York and Laurentian. Just a week ago, I was at a graduation class of about 30 who got their bachelor of science, I believe, from Georgian College in Orillia. They're building on that program, both at the Orillia campus and the Barrie campus. I believe there are now over 1,000 students who are taking part in the university partnership program on those two campuses. That is allowing our young people in the region to take a university program fairly close to home, although that's not to say they're not drawing people from all over the province and all over the country, as well as some people from outside the country who have come from international programs.

One thing I want to point out, in trying to impress upon you the importance of one community college in Simcoe, Grey and Muskoka, is that Georgian College is the largest college in Canada for students with work experience on graduation. For over 10 years, over 90% of the graduates of Georgian College have found work within six months, and in seven of those 10 years, Georgian College has been in the top two. Last year they were number one, with 94% of graduates finding work within six months. They're very proud of that, and I applaud the efforts of both Brian Tamblyn and his team and the board of directors of Georgian College, which year after year tends to draw key people in the community who are interested in steering the college in a very positive manner, in a very positive direction. It just amazes me, year after year, the people who come to the board and give their time and effort in making this a key college in our community college system.

I wanted to say a word about Arch and Helen Brown, from Barrie. Arch and Helen are two very important people who have been business people in our community. They have continually donated and been key supporters of programming and the construction of facilities at the college. I can tell you that it means a lot to the whole community when you've got patrons of the community behind the college. When we need important help or support, they're there as key fundraising people to help the college out of some of the dilemmas they get into at times with new and expanded programs and the facilities they need. Arch and Helen have always been there, and I know they are two key friends of Georgian College in our community.

I also want to pay compliments again to our board of directors at the college. I know John is just finishing his term as chair of the board. Eric Broger will be taking over very shortly; I believe some time in August or September. Eric is a very successful engineer and business person. Sharon Bate, a former director of the Simcoe county board of education, and Gwen Strachan, a former deputy commissioner with the Ontario Provincial Police, are the kinds of people who are being attracted to sit on the board of governors. Day after day, week after week and year after year, they tend to lead the college in a very positive manner, and I'm proud of that. When I speak to them, they're always keen to point out the funding issues—the challenges they face as a growing university. I can tell you that each and every year it seems to grow. The government brags about putting billions of dollars into the college system; however, the college system in the province of Ontario is still the lowest-funded college system in the country. We are number 10 of the 10 provinces, and that needs to be corrected. If additional money is required as a result of Bill 90, I hope the government will be able to answer in committee hearings questions about where they intend to find the money for Bill 90.

I also want to point out the other issues that I find are problems in the college system, which I believe need to be corrected. The minister, in his comments, talked about going to a photo op about the second-career strategy. Of course, we've lost a tremendous number of manufacturing and forestry jobs in Ontario. The hope of the government is that the second-career strategy will be led by the community college system and will be able to train people for other jobs in the future. I applaud the federal government for putting, I believe, about $1.5 billion of new federal money into this year's budget to help with retraining of individuals across our province. I can tell you that although the Ontario government never gives the federal government any credit for it, they're using every penny of this federal money for their second-career strategy.

On top of that, I also want to point out that the $311 million I mentioned yesterday, new money from the labour market agreement, which has come into the system as of April 1 this year—I'm very curious where that money is being spent and how it is being spent. I mentioned yesterday that I'm getting a lot of correspondence, and I've had a few meetings with some of the literacy councils in Simcoe county whose funding has been frozen for 10 years. They're wondering how much of the new $311 million they can receive for actually helping volunteers help people learn to read and write. If you're going to retrain somebody, I think that teaching them right from the very beginning how to read and write is a key step. I'm requesting the Ministry of Training, Colleges and Universities to take it upon themselves to quickly come to the rescue of literacy councils, to help them increase their funding so they can help train more people in our province and in our communities who are unable to read and write. As I mentioned earlier, they're doing this with volunteer assistance and their funding has been frozen for about 10 years. They need to have some increases to carry on.

I also want to put on the record that the apprenticeship training programs are a very important part of our college system. I know that for both elementary and secondary schools apprenticeship training is becoming more and more important. However, we do have that roadblock of the ratios in front of us. It's easy to give an employer a tax credit, which I applaud the government for bringing forward; I thought it was a good idea at the time. But when there's a blockage in front of apprentices after they take a pre-apprenticeship program or go through the Ontario youth apprenticeship program—they're blocked by the fact that employers need a three-to-one ratio of journeymen tradespeople to apprentices—it's really having an impact on a lot of young people wanting to enter the trades.

We'll be continuing to lobby for that. In fact, I'm making a commitment; I don't want to stop on this. I believe it's important that we even go as far as having a stand-alone ministry of training, apprenticeship and skills development. I feel this is one end of the college system, or that particular ministry, that is kind of letting down our young people. I don't think there's nearly enough emphasis put on trades, especially construction and manufacturing trades, which are faced with this ratio issue. If we are still here next Thursday, I know that Laurie Scott will be debating a resolution to bring the one-to-one ratio back to the House, and I'll be here to try to support that as well.

As we go forward with Bill 90—and I appreciate the time to put on the record today the nice things about community colleges and I really appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the fact that you've allowed me to say these few words today. We look forward to caucusing Bill 90. We haven't had a chance yet to get out there, but I can tell you that I'll be looking forward to the comments by other members today. We need to be careful that we do this right and that the funding is in place to handle the impact of Bill 90 when it is finally passed. I appreciate that.

Once again, I want to thank Georgian College and all the folks up at the Barrie, Orillia and Midland campuses for the great job they do, and Brian Tamblyn and his team for the great job they do in training and being the top college in our country. Thank you for this opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Questions and comments?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I have to say that the member from Simcoe North talked a lot about apprenticeship programs and his interest in them, from a personal point of view. I think a lot of us share that same view. I just don't believe that the government, or governments in general, are taking that issue very seriously. They pretend to, in the language they use, but I think there's so much more that could be done and needs to be done.

In the context of so many job losses, in the context of the need for so many tradespeople in Ontario and in Canada, our response, as governments, and this particular government's response, I think is not that great. It's okay—and I will speak to it in a few minutes—in terms of what the government has done; it's hardly historic. Yes, they've put in a few dollars, and again, I'll speak to that in about seven minutes. So those of you happy citizens who are awake, alert and eager to follow the proceedings here, in about seven or eight minutes I will expound a little bit on the issue of apprenticeship in terms of what the government is doing or not doing and what we ought to be doing in relation to apprenticeship programs. But I do believe the efforts so far have been completely inadequate and we need to do a lot more.

Mr. Reza Moridi: I would like to begin by thanking our colleagues who spoke before me on this act. Ontario colleges are making a great contribution to our post-secondary education system. I had the opportunity to visit three colleges since I became a member of Parliament and the PA for the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities: Georgian College, Sheridan College and Seneca College. Actually, I attended one of the meetings of the board of governors of Seneca College.

Being a former academic and educator myself, I appreciate the great work that colleges are doing in this province. Some of our colleges, particularly some of the programs in colleges, have gained an international reputation. These are very crucial to the economic progress of our province in terms of training manpower for the future, for the years to come.

In our colleges, 250,000 students are studying. There are very many programs already in place in our college system. Stability is the key in any institution, particularly when it comes to educational institutions. The current collective bargaining act which we have goes back 30 years, and it hasn't been touched in the past 30 years. It is time that this act be modernized.

Also, I must emphasize the contributions that the part-time staff and part-time and sessional faculty have been making to the progress of our colleges, and in training and educating our young people. These people—the part-time staff and also the part-time sessional faculty—need to be given the right to bargain. This is another focus of this bill. So this current bill which is in the House now has two main focuses: one is to modernize the old one, which is over 30 years old and hasn't been touched since then, and the second is—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Thank you. Questions and comments?

Mr. John O'Toole: I always like to hear the member from Simcoe North, who at the last moment was able to respond and bring some reference and respect to the college in his community. I'd like to say the same about my riding of Durham, which has been mentioned by a few people. I'm happy to have in my riding one of the very successful colleges, Durham College, which is in a partnership with the University of Ontario Institute of Technology.

I would say that just recently we had a little change. Leah Meyers, who was, I believe, one of the deputy ministers in the Ministry of Education, became the president about two years ago, and has just left that position. I wish her well. Don Lovisa is the new interim president of Durham College. He's been with the college since 2008, and he was acting as vice-president of academics. He actually came from the school of business, hospitality and media arts at Confederation College in Thunder Bay. I wish the new president well as well. But I should always pay respect to the citizens who represent us on the board: Phillip Simmons, Gerry Warman, Joanne Burghardt, Rhonda Christian, Aileen Fletcher, Carlee Fraser, Pansy Goodman, Karen Hodgins, Deborah Kinkaid, Doug McKay, Michael Newell, Charlie Peel, Bill Robinson, Darrell Sewell, Michael Seymour and Frank Wu. Frank Wu, the last fellow, is the director of planning for the municipality of Clarington. So you can see the very high level of people who try to add their value to the college system.

There was a very important initiative in the last budget, the second-career opportunity, the $1.5 billion for training. Some of that will certainly flow to the colleges. So this is an important bill. I am in the midst of reading Kevin Whitaker's advisor's report and look forward to the debate.

Mr. Joe Dickson: I rise to speak in support of Bill 90, presented quite capably by Minister Milloy this morning. So popular is this bill that we're fortunate enough to have the minister's sister-in-law, the popular MPP from Kitchener-Conestoga, here with me to cheer him on.

When I think of special colleges and this bill and what is going forward, I can only think about Durham College, with several other adjacent colleges around the perimeter of Durham region. I think of the communities that take advantage. Our residents have the full advantage of Durham College, from Ajax, Pickering, Whitby, Oshawa, Bowmanville, Clarington—and you can go throughout the entire region.

Durham College, as most of you know, has evolved from an old chocolate factory. At Durham College, everything is sweet: Education is sweet, the learning process is most generous and we're going a long way.

I have to tell you that I know a lot of teachers, lecturers and several friends of mine are at not only Durham College, but other colleges too—people like Mike Ryan, George Tripp, Randy Rainthorpe and Joe Bowdring, whom we lovingly call Newfie Joe, who focuses on skilled trades and works with several of the unions.

In addition to this new legislation that will make things better for both college employers and college employees, I have to tell you—my friend from Durham mentioned the immediate past president, Leah Myers. The member from Pickering–Scarborough East and myself have met with her many times and she continues to praise this government for the expansion that has gone forward and that hopefully, with this, will continue to go forward.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Member for Simcoe North, you have two minutes to respond.

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I'd like to thank the members for Trinity–Spadina, Richmond Hill, Durham and Ajax–Pickering for their comments. I want to sum up by saying three quick things. One is that when we get a chance to caucus Bill 90, we'll be looking forward to the committee hearings and the impact that Bill 90 will have on the overall budgets of the community colleges. We absolutely have to make sure that their funding is increased to handle any additional costs because, as I mentioned in my comments earlier, we are already the lowest-funded community college system in the country per capita. For the great work they do, that's not acceptable. So the funding has to be in place.

Second, I appreciate the comments by the member for Trinity–Spadina, who talked about apprenticeships and skills development. Again, I think it's an area, though, where we all talk a big story and think it's so important to do a good job; I really and truly don't think we're doing enough yet. Changing things like the ratios and taking the stigma attached to apprenticeships out of it and making the people feel more proud of the fact that they are in apprenticeships is important as well.

I want to sum up by thanking, as I mentioned earlier in my comments, the chairman of the board of directors, John McCullough, and his board, Brian Tamblyn and all the staff at Georgian College for the great job they do up in our communities. We're very proud of that.

I want to sum up by thanking everyone for the opportunity to speak to Bill 90.

In the audience today—I didn't get a chance to do this earlier, but I want to introduce a good friend of mine,

Grady Cragg, and my assistant, Gaggan Gill, and Shane, who is Grady Cragg's little brother.

Thank you very much for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: It's good to speak to Bill 90 as the NDP critic on post-secondary education issues.

Welcome to this political forum. We are on live. It's 10:05, and I am convinced that people are indeed awake, have had their strong coffee and/or espresso in the morning, and are eager to listen to us. That's why the government changed the hours in this place. They must have realized, the government members, that people at home were bored, that they must have been really bored and were looking for something exciting to get up to in the morning at 9 o'clock. I know there are a lot of eager beavers, out-of-town Liberal MPPs who have apartments in downtown Toronto, and they're so bored they want to get here at 9 o'clock. They even want to get here at 8 o'clock, because they don't have anything to do, so alone are they in downtown Toronto, the members from outside Toronto.

It's possible that these are the people who persuaded the House leader to change the hours, because 1 o'clock or 1:30 is just too late. We needed to get up early and work hard and harder so that you could get to your morning meetings at 8 o'clock, because what would you be doing at home except sleeping, right? Those of you who really wanted to work must have persuaded the House leader that we need to get up really early, because you were tired of being bored and alone in your apartments. So it's possible that some of these members were the ones who persuaded the House leader to change the hours in this place. God bless them.

Anyway, if some of you are awake and watching, just drop me a little note telling me how excited you are that the Liberals changed the hours. I would be happy to know how you feel about this particular topic.

In the beginning I thought, how are we going to be able to speak so early in the morning? It's like singing in the morning. I used to sing. I used to imitate Tom Jones when I was a young man, but I can tell you, I could never, ever sing in the morning—I couldn't. You need to warm up. It's just like speeches; you need to warm up. You need the whole hour to speak, because you can't just do it in two minutes here. You understand, Jim, what I'm talking about. Yes. So I thought, how are you going to have the excitement to be able to speak, the ability to be still awake, or be awake, at 9 o'clock in the morning and be rational? But I know we make an effort around here. We do, Herculean; no doubt. But we do our best, and that's what people like me do in the morning when we are here to do the business of the House.

I'm here as a speaker today on Bill 90 and to say it took a long, long time. The Liberals rationalize it by saying, "We have to get it right," and then they can appear like getting it right really does take two long years. It doesn't take that long. I'm going to tell you in a couple of moments why it takes that long.

To hear the member from Richmond Hill and the minister and even the member for Ajax-Pickering and all that, you get the impression that they really had to take time. You've just got to do it right and you appoint people—Mr. Whitaker, a nice man indeed. Of course he did his report and the government had that report in their hands for months and months, but the minister needs to reflect on it because you've got to do it right and you've got to take your time. Correct, member from Richmond Hill?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yes.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: That's a silly rationale, right? We all know it, and the citizens who are awake this morning know that as well. Those who are paying attention know that it's a political gain. Instead of just being frank and saying, "Why are we delaying?" which I will explain in a moment, they simply use subterfuge; they dissimulate as well as they possibly can in order to be able to get a different kind of political message. The message clearly is, "Delay, delay, delay as long as you can," because what this bill will do is increase the cost of the colleges, which eventually will increase the cost to the government.

This is not a bad thing. We believe college workers need to be better paid, need to have better services for the work they do. That's not the problem. The government understands that the reason for the delay is that it's going to create some problems for the government. It'll create some headaches for colleges, and directly and indirectly it will create a headache for le gouvernement. They may be able to deal with that, because now the bill is before us. They've had to take their lumps, as it were, and they will deal with it, but make no mistake about it: The delay has all to do with greater cost, and that's what the government was trying to avoid for a long time, until they could no longer avoid it.

OPSECAAT president Roger Couvrette has been working for two long years with his members to try to give them the right to organize and bargain collectively; a right that has been denied to them for 33 years. That's a long time. Governments can wait, but part-time college teachers couldn't wait that long. We made them wait a long time, and if not for the pressure, this Liberal government would have made them wait much, much longer. Roger Couvrette: I give him a great deal of praise because it was he, with the organizing drive and OPSEU behind them, who was able to mobilize not just public opinion but the 17,000 part-time college workers and support staff in order to gain the right to bargain collectively. They pressed and they pushed and they understood that governments are about political pressure. Governments are not necessarily innately good; they're not. They become good when pressured by people to do good. Otherwise most governments, especially Liberals, will avoid dealing with any particular issue because they don't want any trouble with anyone. That's why they sit so happily in the middle as often and as long as they possibly can, so as to avoid headaches on the right and on the left. So they quietly, surreptitiously slither under that carpet as best they can for as long as they can.

Governments, especially Liberals, are not innately good, but we have to force them year after year to do some good. Eventually they deliver, as you see them today, where they say, "We're finally delivering"—not "finally"; they wouldn't say that. They're praising the college system and college presidents; they're praising anybody they possibly can. Before this bill there was not a peep about college presidents, about colleges, about funding—not a peep. They were as silent as you could possibly imagine. You couldn't hear a word from any Liberal before this bill. Now that the bill is before us, they're saying how wonderful the government is, how wonderful the colleges are, all the great work they're doing together and how much more they need to do. Correct?

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: The member for Richmond Hill is going to get two more minutes in a moment to say the very same things I'm repeating right now. The story isn't new. The script is already written, has been written for years and years, and they recycle the same script over and over again. There is no creativity in governments whatsoever.

The Minister of Transportation knows this because he's been in government, in opposition, in government. He loves this thing. He criticizes governments and, once in, he criticizes the opposition. It's just the way it goes. I think that's why people don't like politicians too much. If anything, we should review why people hate us. There's never been a study by any political group that asks, "Why do people hate politicians?" We avoid that as much and as best and as long as we can, but that's a real problem that we have in this place: People do not like politicians. In the afternoon, when I'm given the opportunity, I hope, to speak to the bill that will look at how we reform elections and so on, I hope to be able to say a few more words on that topic.

That is a topic we should have a select committee on, to review the reasons why people seem to hate the political process and politicians of all stripes. They don't just hate Liberals or Tories, they actually hate all of us. That dislike is equally distributed. Nobody looks at the reasons why, and all I'm saying to my Liberal colleagues is that we should. I'm saying this not for myself, but we should do it for ourselves and look at the reasons why. But that's another matter for another bill, for another afternoon.

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Yes, of course, there's so much to say.

I was saying that people like me want to praise Roger Couvrette from OPSECAAT for the organizing drive, because it took two long years to persuade Liberal MPPs that they should present the bill. They were cagey for a long, long time. The minister would constantly say, "We're doing it, we're doing it and we're doing it." You understand, Speaker, because you're part of the Liberal caucus. How long can you delay before you look bad? So finally the minister said, "I was at a reception just a month ago"—I was at the same reception, by the way. He leads us to believe that that was the moment when he decided he could no longer wait and that bill had to be presented; that moment of lucidity, that moment where people are speaking to you and you say, "My God, I've harmed someone. It isn't good. I have been touched by the college teachers." On that particular day—no other day, because he never met any other college teacher before—when OPSECAAT had a reception and he was able to speak one to one, he was touched at that particular moment, so he could no longer deny or delay.

Do you believe that? Come on. It's such a sob story. How can you believe stories like that? How could you even say it? Come on. I don't believe it, and if I don't believe it, do you think anybody else is going to believe it? If you delay for two years and you had the Whitaker report in your office for so long, you then have a moment of eureka when you meet the OPSECAAT staff? Please.

I'm just raising that as a way to help the minister out. Don't embarrass yourselves in that way. Just don't say it. Simply say, "This is an historical moment," which you always say, right? "This is historic"—you didn't use that word, by the way. I was a little bit surprised. How come you didn't use the word "historic"? I was waiting for that, and none of you used it. Maybe the member for Richmond Hill will use it after my speech. Just say that. Don't say this other stuff that makes governments look silly at times.

Look, governments used part-time teachers as cheap labour. They did that through the college system, through the colleges. Colleges, not having enough money from governments, have to resolve their financial problems in all sorts of ways. So rather than hiring full-time workers, they hired more and more part-time workers for the longest time. In fact, if there wasn't any pressure, you would hire—you government; you colleges—more and more part-time workers. Do you know that half of the college teachers are part-time? That fact ought to startle you a little bit. Half of the college staff are part-timers. How could that be? And about 20% of university teachers are part-time. It varies from university to university. Why do they do that, do you think? To save pecunia; it's all about the pecunia. Cheap labour is about making sure people don't get the benefits that they're entitled to, making them work harder than they would like because they have to have one job or two, or one full-time job part-time in that college, or two jobs in that college and another college, or possibly three colleges, in terms of being able to make ends meet and having full-time hours. Part-time college teachers have been exploited for a long, long time, and there were more and more of them every year to exploit.

Even the ILO, otherwise known as the International Labour Organization, ruled that such workers be given the legal right to bargain collectively and urged the McGuinty Liberals to let this happen. This is the International Labour Organization getting involved in this particular issue, the International Labour Organization saying to McGuinty that they should have a right to bargain collectively. That was a couple of years ago; that was at least two years ago.

You understand that there have been a number of people pressing. It wasn't just the International Labour Organization; it was also the Supreme Court of Canada who waded into the issue, where they confirmed a year ago that the right of freedom of association is a right in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That was yet another pressure point for the McGuinty government. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the right of freedom of association is something that is embedded in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and therefore part-time college teachers have the right to bargain collectively. And they haven't had that right for 33 years. So you have the International Labour Organization, you have the Supreme Court of Canada and you have college teachers through OPSECAAT. You had even little people like Marchese, who introduced a bill in this Legislature twice, Bill 13, urging the Liberal government to pass a bill that would give part-time workers and support staff the right to bargain collectively. They dismissed my bill, of course. There's no reference by the member for Richmond Hill or the Minister of Education that I introduced a bill here twice, speaking to the same right.

I had hoped we would have had the government move on that a little more quickly—not too much, of course, because we wouldn't want to tire the Liberals out too much, but just a little bit.

We had hoped that the bill would not be so complex. You remember that yesterday I showed you three documents that pertain to this particular bill. It was thick; it was a thick document. We had asked the minister, "Could we have a copy of the bill so that we could see it in advance?" The ministry staff said, "No, we can't give it to you." We asked for the courtesy of seeing the bill before 3 o'clock, when the minister was about to announce Bill 90. We were given no such courtesy to be able to view the bill. I'm talking about courtesy here. Why would it be such a big deal for the government to allow the critic, and the critics, to see the bill in advance—an hour in advance, two hours in advance, in the morning, the day before? Why would government deny the opposition that basic courtesy, not to speak of rights, to see the bill, which would allow us to prepare ourselves more effectively? And they don't do it. Why do they do that continually? Why do governments do that as a way of punishing the opposition? It's not as if it's going to change your bill in any way. It's not as if, by allowing me to read it, I'm going to be able to prevent your bill from happening. You have a majority in this place. It's not as if I could do anything to undermine you as a government. Yet you refused to allow us to see the bill.

So, good folks, good citizens of Ontario watching this program, sometimes I am as frustrated as you. You have your reasons for not having great affection for us, and sometimes I have similar reasons for not having much affection for us as well. Sometimes the reasons are very similar. Make no mistake about it: The government delayed because they wanted cheap labour. They considered part-time college teachers as part of the way you do business: You underfund the college system and the university system. Colleges do not have any money, do not have sufficient dollars, and therefore they have to continue with the practice of having part-time workers unable to collectively bargain. That's what that was about.

The context of this is very simple, and I want to put to you the context, if I can, as a way of explaining the seriousness of the underfunding of our university and college system. I'm reading from a document called the CAUT Almanac of Post-Secondary Education in Canada, published by the Canadian Association of University Teachers. They have some interesting things to say about financing of universities and colleges. I know that this will be dismissed by the Liberals, and I'll explain why they will try to do that. But it's hard to alter the facts. "Provincial expenditures on post-secondary education"—they do a comparison in terms of what they got, in millions, in 1992-93, when the NDP was in government, with what they're getting in 2005-06 from the Liberal government. Ontario was getting $4,393 per student, and in 2005-06 they were getting $4,649. Understand the difference here: 1992-93 and 2005-06; there's a difference of 12, 13 years there. The difference between what we were giving and what the government is giving today is minuscule. So over the 12-year period, financing has not grown very much. That's how bad it is.

Here's another statistic from the same document: "Provincial expenditures on post-secondary education as a share of total provincial expenditures". In 1992-93 in Ontario it was 5.8%; in 2005-06 it was 5.2%. So on expenditures on post-secondary education as a share of total provincial expenditures, we're getting less today than we did in 1992-93.

Hon. David Caplan: Okay, we'll cut health care, then.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: No. You'll have an opportunity, Mr. Caplan, to speak shortly. It's not what I want; it's what the facts are.

Another statistic, provincial expenditures on post-secondary education as a share of provincial gross domestic product: In Ontario, in 1992-93, it was 1.20; in 2005-06, it was 0.86—much less today than in 1992-93. You often have Liberals standing up saying, "We're giving more money than any other government in the history of this province."

Applause.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: They delude themselves so badly, because when I read the facts, they pretend not to hear them. So the minister claps to this delusional kind of statistical information and forgets to listen to the facts.

The other fact, mon ami monsieur le ministre, who is able to listen to these numbers: Provincial government transfers to colleges and universities per FTE student enrolment, in 1992-93 versus 2004-05—in 1993, Ontario was giving $10,346, and in 2004-05, it was $7,080.

Mr. Minister, does this give you a good sense of the problem that we are in and the serious underfunding of our college and university system? Because if the facts don't help you, I don't know what will. I know you can make it up; I know you do. I know you will have an opportunity—

Interjections.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: You will have an opportunity to be able to state—

Hon. John Milloy: Tell us about the NDP bill. Why didn't you pass it?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: No, no. I'm talking about you, Minister, because you have the wheels today. You've had the wheels for four long years, and you still have the wheels today. They call it the limousine today, or some other car, maybe a hybrid. But when you've got the wheels, you are the one in charge. Now it's your job to simply say—

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: "Where was Bob Rae then?" He's in the Liberal Party. That's where he is. Bob Rae has joined your ranks, a bright man who has decided to join the ranks of the Liberal Party. So if you want to attack somebody, be careful how you do it, because he's now in your ranks.

But, Minister, if you look at the funding that I just quoted, because you heard some of it and you didn't hear the other part, on all ways of determining funding, in 1992-93, we were giving more than you were, and we were just getting over a recession. You have had 10 or 12 good economic years and you're giving less today than we were giving in a recessionary period. That's nothing to be proud of, and we did that with Bob Rae. Yes, then we did it with him. So you have nothing to be proud of. In fact, it's almost embarrassing, but that's okay. You don't have to talk about the facts. It's not a big deal. You can talk about something else. Make 'em up. Do what you like, and you do.

So we have OPSECAAT to honour. We have OPSEU president Warren "Smokey" Thomas to honour because he's taken on this fight to represent the workers. In fact, OPSEU have signed union cards and the union applied to the Ontario Labour Relations Board to be certified as their bargaining unit in April, and you know what, Minister? You may not know this—oh, sure you do. The government's lawyers argued against the college workers' right to bargain collectively. That was the Attorney General, the same man who used to be the minister of post-secondary education. He sent his lawyers to argue against the college workers' right to bargain collectively. It was a moment of embarrassment for the Attorney General, and why wouldn't it be? As a former minister of post-secondary education, to have to send a lawyer to argue against OPSEU, against the right of workers to bargain collectively, was not a happy moment for the Liberal government.

We pointed that out in one of our questions in this Legislature, and I am sure the minister tried to contain his embarrassment as best he could, pretending it didn't even exist, pretending the question wasn't even asked. He even pretends now, while he's in this Legislature, not to listen to my points. That's okay. I understand that. I would have been embarrassed too.

Hon. John Milloy: Are you going to vote for the bill?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I'm waiting for you to talk about the facts again, Minister. I'm looking forward to you and the member for Richmond Hill talking about the facts.

I wanted to point out, Attorney General—I think you're listening again—that you must have had a very unhappy moment at that particular time, when OPSEU went in front of the Labour Relations Board and you sent in your lawyers to fight against them. You understand what I mean. I wanted to point it out to the good citizens of Ontario who are watching this political channel on a regular basis. Rain or shine, day or night, they are there, ready and alert and awake, having their popcorn and their beer and wine in the afternoon and coffee in the morning, because they are so excited to watch this parliamentary channel. Yes, siree. So much for the Attorney General and this fight against OPSEU; so much for the current minister.

Hon. Christopher Bentley: How did I get involved in that?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Hey, ho. Hark, he's awake. Hark ye, he awakens. I knew that he was listening. All it took was the right stimuli to get him going. There, you see, I stirred him up. He's awake.

Hon. Christopher Bentley: Is this about those workers you ignored for five years?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Attorney General, careful. The Speaker's going to say you're not in your seat, so just be careful. But I want you to have two minutes.

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Oh, Speaker, don't do that publicly.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): The member for Trinity-Spadina would know that heckling is out of order no matter where you're sitting.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I understand that Liberals need a helping hand. I understand that. I don't heckle. This is a discussion and a debate with my Liberal friends to the left, behind me, in front of me. It's a constant debate, which I enjoy.

We dealt with the underfunding of the college system. Here is another document. It's called A Highly Skilled Workforce: Strengthening Ontario's Economic Advantage, from Colleges Ontario. They say: "However, despite the new investments provided by Reaching Higher"—that historic money that addresses all of the underfunding injustices for a long time; that very funding that still keeps Ontario last, in spite of that very funding—"Ontario colleges continue to operate with less per-student revenue from operating grants and tuition fees than colleges in other provinces."

In spite of your Reaching Higher plan, you Liberals are still proudly number 10 in the country. You should stand up and say that, that your Reaching Higher has put you at the bottom of the heap, and you're proud. You should say that.

Hon. David Caplan: Rosario wants to cut health care.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: David Caplan, you should say it. Get up, you. Get up and defend the minister of post-secondary education and defend the Reaching Higher plan, that $6 billion that puts you at the very bottom rather than, dare I say it, the middle.

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: No, I want to tell you about you and I want to tell you about your government. I want to tell you, you've been in power for two terms. It's not about me; it's about you. It's about you and your limousine, not about me and my car. It's about accountability of governments, not about accountability of the opposition. Governments run the show; we don't. We merely push you to do good from time to time, as much and as best we can. We pressure you as best we can to do good whenever we can get you to do good. That's about all we can do.

1040

Here's another quote. I'm doing my best here. Here's another quote from the same document from Colleges Ontario, where they say this is what they need.

"This year, Ontario's colleges require:

"A $120 million increase in core operating funding"—$120 million. Write that down, or I can just send you a copy.

"A $40 million increase in funding for labour market programs and services;

"A new investment of $6 million for applied R&D and innovation;

"An additional investment of $90 million for the renewal and maintenance of facilities and instructional equipment."

Jeff, did you get that?

Mr. Jeff Leal: Got them all.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I can send that to you and to the minister. I know how hard he works and he doesn't have time to read all the documents sent to him by the colleges. So I can send him a copy. I can send you a copy.

College students have been going to colleges year after year in greater numbers than ever before and receiving less and less money than ever before. That's the context in which we find ourselves and in which we debate this bill today. So we're happy for those part-time college teachers who now get the right to bargain collectively.

But there is one provision that people are very nervous about. The removal of deemed strike and lockout provisions is a serious problem. The new bill removes the deemed strike and lockout provisions in sections 59(2) and 63(3) of the old bill. I want to read for the record what this means:

"These provisions determined that, when a bargaining unit was on legal strike or lockout, all employees were deemed to be on strike or locked out and, as a result, no employee would receive any pay or benefits for the duration of the strike or lockout.

"This provision effectively dissuaded any bargaining unit employee from crossing the picket line and prevented the employer from hiring employees from the unit during a lockout."

OPSEU president Warren Thomas, said: "It is pretty outrageous that this government thinks that recognizing the charter rights of one group of workers means that another group of workers must give something up."

"In the event of a strike or lockout, removal of the deemed strike provisions means having 180,000 students walking through picket lines, potentially mixed in with scabs. This change will only serve to increase picket-line tensions and picket-line confrontations."

That is a serious worry for us and for the unions. We believe that was a right contained in the old bill, the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, and that is being removed today. The question is, why are you doing that? Why give a right and then take another right away? Why couldn't you just let things be? If they work, why change them?

It's typical of Liberals that they always have to mix up the rights, to confuse the public, to divide people of all sorts, to divide the unions. Michael, you understand what I'm talking about. It's about a strategy of division. It's about a strategy by Liberals, not being able to give something without causing greater conflict in society. That's what Liberals do on a regular basis. Why do they do that?

I know you Liberals are happy-go-lucky types. You are so happy to be in the middle; you don't have to do a thing. It is a beautiful political advantage you have, to sit on that fence and not worry about a thing. It's a pretty lovely luxury you have. It's a luxury not to have to take a stand. Speaker, you'll let me know when the time is up. It's a luxury not to take a stand—what a happy luxury that is—versus those of us who take a stand on the left or the right and get beaten up by so many people. Not Liberals; Liberals want to go slow, as not to offend anybody. Liberals want to do little, as not to offend anybody. Liberals want to avoid doing anything for as long as they possibly can, not to offend anybody. God bless.

Speaker, I'll have another opportunity to regain this debate tomorrow morning. Thanks very much.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. This debate stands adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd like to take this opportunity to welcome a number of guests to the Ontario Legislature today.

On behalf of the member from Don Valley East, in the east members' gallery, from the lung cancer society:

Laurie Bass, Sarah Nass, Betty Jacoby, Ralph Gouda and Mary Jane Reese.

On behalf of the member from Essex, we'd like to acknowledge the 40-plus visitors who are joining us today from the insurance industry and the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

On behalf of page Kelvin Chukwu: his father, Roxton; his mother, Gloria; his sister, Roxanne; and his sister, Janet, are in the public galleries.

On behalf of page Jocelyn Topp: her mother, Alison Topp, and a friend of their family, Karen Allen, in the public gallery.

On behalf of the member from Hamilton Centre: Sally Palmer, the chair; and Anne Newbigging, member of the social action committee of the Ontario Association of Social Workers in Hamilton; and Rosemarie Chapman, a Hamilton resident, are in the west members' gallery.

A special welcome, on behalf of the member from Etobicoke Centre: I'd like to welcome Mr. Robert Bateman, renowned artist and naturalist. He is in the east members' gallery.

To all of our guests: Welcome to Queen's Park today.

ORAL QUESTIONS

AIR QUALITY

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: My first question is to the Premier. Premier, during the 2003 election, you spoke passionately about the 1,900 deaths in Ontario each year caused by smog-causing pollutants. That's how you justified your promise to close the coal plants by 2007. Of course, we all know that you broke that promise not once, but twice.

This week, the Ontario Medical Association reports that smog-related deaths in Ontario have increased by five times since 2003, to 9,500 a year. At this rate, by 2014 the death rate will rise to over 20,000 per year. Given your passion five years ago, what are you going to do to prevent these thousands of premature deaths?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I certainly welcome the question. I know that there is a strong consensus and shared determination for us to continue to keep working together as hard as we can to improve the quality of our natural environment here in Ontario.

I am proud to confirm once again that, to the best of my knowledge, we are the only jurisdiction on the face on this planet which is actually phasing out its coal-fired generation. That is a serious undertaking. We've already reduced our coal-fired generation by one third. We have legislated the remaining phases of that entire reduction. It's something that we are proud of; it's something that we will continue to pursue on behalf of Ontarians. There is more that we can do beyond that, and I'll be delighted to speak to those other options momentarily.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I didn't witness the passion that the Premier expressed in 2003. I asked him specifically about the next six years and the thousands of people who are going to die in that period of time. Your inaction means that there are now more smog days per year in Ontario than in the entire eight years before the 2003 election. You made irresponsible promises you knew you couldn't keep. That's what's so appalling: The Premier sat back and did nothing to mitigate the consequences of his broken promises. Premier, are you prepared to accept responsibility for these thousands of smog-related deaths caused by your lack of a backup plan?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Just to expand a bit further on the beneficial impact of phasing out coal-fired generation: We'll have reduced coal generation by two thirds by 2011; that now has the force of law. This will be the single largest reduction of greenhouse gas emissions in Canada. It's equivalent to taking seven million cars off the road.

Just by way of contrast, in China they're putting out a new coal plant every seven to 10 days. We're going in the other direction.

In addition to that, we are making billions of dollars of new investment in public transit to give Ontarians an alternative, to take advantage of new transit that is affordable, that is convenient and that serves as an attractive alternative to using the comfort and convenience of their own car.

Those are two new approaches, by the way, which were both shunned by the previous Conservative government.

1050

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: The Premier, when he was the Leader of the Opposition, laid at the doorstep thousands of deaths in Ontario because, he said, we weren't closing coal plants fast enough. We're the only party that actually did close a coal plant.

It boggles the mind to hear this Premier say they're working on reducing coal emissions when they recently paid millions of dollars to Dofasco to get them to switch from natural gas to coal.

The reality is that this government can't afford to shut down coal plants by 2014. That's because once again they dithered, and by 2014 there won't be an affordable, sustainable supply of energy to replace what the coal plants currently supply.

Premier, Ontarians can't wait until 2014 to see if maybe smog deaths start to decline. What are you going to do today to put a stop to what is really a dramatic increase in deaths due to smog?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Well, in an ideal world, we'd be able to shut down the coal-fired plants yesterday, but we can't. It's taking some time, but we're making some real progress.

Let me tell you a little bit about our plan to double the use of renewable energy. We used to have 10 wind turbines in the province of Ontario. Now there are over 700 that are either under construction or completed. The largest solar farm in North America is going to be built outside of Sarnia. We're expanding capacity at Niagara Falls; we're going to generate enough new power there to power 160,000 more Ontario homes. We're building new nuclear generation because, notwithstanding that there are some challenges associated with that and we want to be mindful of those, they don't produce greenhouse gases. We are bringing online new, clean, renewable energy. We've got a dramatic plan to drive conservation in Ontario, and we're investing heavily in new public transit.

If you put that all together, I think Ontarians will conclude it is a modern, progressive approach.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I guess those thousands of deaths were only a passionate concern during the election campaign.

A second question to the Premier: On June 15 last year, the Toronto Star reported that in preparation for the upcoming provincial election, the Liberal-friendly Working Families group was being reformed, and a final decision would be made the following week. What do you know? The following week, two key players in Working Families met with your Minister of Finance in his office in the Frost Building, but no minutes were kept.

Premier, this is a serious issue where election finance laws may have been breached. Would you commit to securing information on details of that secret meeting and tabling them in this House?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I am proud to say that we have an open, continuing dialogue with every so-called group in the province of Ontario. Whether that's labour groups, whether it's heads of banks, whether it's charitable organizations, whether it's business organizations, chambers of commerce, doctors, nurses, teachers and the like, we are proud to say that we are an open government, that we have an ongoing dialogue with all Ontarians. We don't pick and choose as other governments have before. We don't divide and pit one group of Ontarians against the other as other governments have before. We believe in working with all Ontarians, and we're proud of that record.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: It's another question the Premier wants to avoid, obviously. I suspect the Premier has to appreciate the seriousness of a third party coordinating its activities with a registered political party. The meeting I referred to took place in the office of the Minister of Finance, not Liberal Party headquarters. One of the unions represented at the meeting with the minister received a $3.3-million grant the very next week, and that same union went on to donate $150,000 to Working Families. Premier, this meeting took place on government property in a minister's office. Election laws may have been breached and funding decisions taken inappropriately. I ask you once again to reveal the details of that meeting in a government office and the decisions that flowed from it.

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I can say, for example, that I've personally met with heads of nursing organizations.

They've asked me to hire thousands more nurses, and I wouldn't be surprised if some of them took credit for that. I've met with environmentalists who asked us to save the greenbelt. We've done that, and I wouldn't be surprised if some environmentalists took credit for that. I've met with business organizations. They've asked me to reduce capital taxes. We've done that. I wouldn't be surprised if some of them took credit for that. It's not a surprise that we meet with a number of groups on an ongoing basis. They ask us to do certain things. If we believe that those things serve the greater public interest, then we're only too proud and too pleased to move in that direction.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: I wish I could say that was informative, but it was anything but. I'll go back over this again. The individuals who attended that meeting with the Minister of Finance in his office were Pat Dillon, a principal of Working Families, and Mike Gallagher from Local 793 of the operating engineers, who donated $150,000 to Working Families, a Liberal-friendly organization—again, a meeting with no notes, memos or minutes. Subsequently, a week later the operating engineers had received $3.3 million—$5 million in grants over the next six months. These are very serious issues, Premier, and questions that arise out of this. I ask the Premier to release copies of Local 793's grant applications and provide details of the June 18 meeting. Will you do that?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: The leader of the official opposition says that we shouldn't have given that money to this particular organization when he himself provided, on behalf of his government of the day, that same organization with two million public dollars. At the time, he seemed to be very proud of that. He said, "Developing a skilled workforce is key to a strong economic future. Upgrading skills of employees in the heavy equipment industry is vital for the sector. Skilled workers strengthen the competitiveness of business and industry in Ontario, improve productivity, create jobs and contribute to the growth of our economy." Bob Runciman said that when he provided that organization with $2 million. He was right then and he's wrong today.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: A question to the Premier: Over the past few weeks we've witnessed how the McGuinty government handed out a cheque to General Motors for $235 million without getting any product or job guarantees, and the result is that 2,600 autoworkers at the Oshawa truck plant are losing their jobs. Then we saw how 100 of the very engineers at the Oshawa GM engineering centre are being laid off as well. Now there are reports that the demand for the new Camaro model to be built at the Oshawa car plant could be less than 40,000 units, only a third of what was originally predicted. My question to the Premier is this: Can the Premier assure us that there won't be layoffs at the GM car plant after layoffs at the GM truck plant have already happened?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I welcome the question. I'm sure the leader of the NDP is prepared to recognize that we have a very competitive North American auto sector environment. We have come to the table, we have rolled up our sleeves and we have scored, I think, some major victories. The distinct impression that the leader of the NDP leaves with us on a daily basis is that we should do nothing; we should not strive to compete, we should not strive to enjoy any kinds of successes on behalf of our auto workers. If we hadn't come to the table, I am confident that we would not have landed, for example, a new Toyota plant. There are 2,000 jobs associated with that Toyota plant. Is the leader of the NDP saying that we should not have proceeded with that kind of partnership? Every single day he seems to be saying that we should allow the car industry to unfold as it might otherwise do and not roll up our sleeves and not make real and genuine efforts on behalf of Ontario families, especially on behalf of autoworkers. I reject that approach. We will continue to find ways—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Howard Hampton: The Premier seems to be saying two things. He seems to be saying it's okay for the McGuinty government to give General Motors $235 million and for General Motors to lay off thousands of workers. And he seems to be saying that laid-off General Motors workers from Windsor and Oshawa should move to Woodstock. He seems to be saying that's the answer. My point is this: If the McGuinty government is going to hand out hundreds of millions of dollars to GM and other companies, the McGuinty government should get job or production guarantees, something the McGuinty government has consistently failed to do.

But I want to ask now about Chrysler's Bramalea plant. The McGuinty government handed out a cheque for $77 million to Chrysler. Some of that money was supposed to ensure a new model at Chrysler's Bramalea plant. The so-called new model is the Dodge Challenger, a muscle car which is not selling well at all—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Premier?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I think it's probably helpful to hear from the one individual charged here in Canada with representing the interests of the auto workers, and that's Buzz Hargrove. Let's hear what he has to say on this score, because I think it's helpful. He says, "Ontario's auto policy ... leveraged over $7 billion in badly-needed auto investments. Every automaker in the province received support for major projects, that helped make Ontario the leading automotive jurisdiction in North America." He goes on to say, "Does anyone possibly believe the Ontario government could force GM, through a one-time $235-million investment, to keep spending $20 billion per year making vehicles that it cannot sell? Get real."

I would say the same thing to my friend opposite. I'm with Buzz Hargrove; I'm with the CAW. I'm for continuing to find ways to work together and to strengthen the auto sector in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The Premier conveniently skips over the reality. Yes, some of the engineering and development was done at Oshawa, but the new investment and the jobs are moving to Mexico. The Premier seems to think that's okay. I want to tell him, for the workers at Oshawa, that's not okay.

But the Premier missed the second part of the question. Chrysler's Bramalea plant also has a problem. Their new model, the Challenger, is a muscle car that's not selling well at all. So I'm given to ask, did the Premier get any job guarantees there or are we going to see the same thing: layoffs at Chrysler's Bramalea plant? Chrysler gets the money; workers get the layoff. Can the Premier give us any assurance that we won't see more layoffs there?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: The assurance that I will give auto workers and the auto sector generally is that we will continue to work as hard as we can. I'd love to live in a world where you could lock everything down and we wouldn't lose a single auto sector job here in the province of Ontario, but that's not something that we can guarantee. It's certainly not something that US governments have been able to guarantee, and more recently, even Mexico has not been able to provide that guarantee, as we saw a plant close there.

Again, I want to make reference to Mr. Hargrove and something that he had recently published, when he said that the "attacks of ... Hampton on Ontario's auto strategy are anything but informed. They are an attempt to make cheap political points, at the expense of the tens of thousands of hard-working auto workers in Ontario who quite rightly fear for their future. Myself and my members are deeply offended."

HYDRO RATES

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Premier. If the Premier thinks losing thousands of jobs in Windsor and thousands of jobs in Oshawa is a "cheap political point," then I invite the Premier to come to the Windsor demonstration tomorrow at noon. I'll be there talking with the workers.

But I want to ask this question of the Premier. About four weeks ago, we met with the auto manufacturers of Ontario. One of the points they made to us, something that is within provincial control, is the escalating cost of industrial hydroelectricity for manufacturers in Ontario. Yet the McGuinty government is set to announce huge, big nuclear plants. Can the Premier assure us that these nuclear plants will come in as budgeted and not cost manufacturers even more on their hydro bills?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I know that the Minister of Energy is going to want to speak to this shortly, but let me just say this: We have decided, as a government—and I know that Ontarians want us to move in this direction—understanding that about 50% of our electricity now comes from nuclear generation, we're going to have to modernize our existing fleet: renew some of those and build new generation. It's not a decision that we've taken lightly, and there are real costs associated with this; there are significant costs associated with this. I'd like to be able to say that we can nail down all those costs today, but not even the leader of the NDP knows what the price of oil is going to be 10 or 15 years from now, or the price of steel or the price of labour. We'll do everything we can to contain those costs, but we must move forward with the construction of new nuclear generation in Ontario, and we will not shrink from that task.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I didn't hear an answer to the question. What I do know is this: The history of nuclear power in Ontario is a very expensive history. No nuclear plant has been built in Ontario that has come in on budget. They've all been over budget—billions of dollars over budget. Darlington was supposed to cost under $4 billion; it ended up costing almost $15 billion. The latest nuclear plant being built in Finland by Areva is now two years late and $2 billion over budget.

I ask again: Can the Premier give manufacturers in Ontario any assurance that his backroom decision to move even greater into nuclear power will not cost manufacturers huge hydro bills in the future?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: To the Minister of Energy.

Hon. Gerry Phillips: For the public's information and maybe the leader of the third party, just to set the record straight on industrial prices: Since 2003, the all-in industrial price in the province over those four years has gone up well less than inflation. We, the government, are very conscious of the need for an affordable electricity plan in the future.

I would also say—you use terms like "secret" and whatnot. We've published our plan. It is a 20-year plan. It's out there for the public and, in fact, is now before the Ontario Energy Board. There is nothing secret about it; it's extremely public. It starts with conservation, and that's where we put our focus. We are going to: reduce our use through conservation by roughly 20%; double renewable energy; and maintain our nuclear fleet.

I'd just say to the member: Be cautious with the language you use. There's nothing secret about this. It is a public—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Final supplementary?

Mr. Howard Hampton: What is appalling about this argument is that this is a government that, in the backroom, changed the Ontario Environmental Assessment Act so that your nuclear scheme would not have to undergo a full-fledged environmental assessment. This is a government, if you look only a year ago, that had a backroom slush fund just before the election. This is a government that has handed out $235 million to General Motors and got no jobs guarantee. Now this decision is going to be made in the backroom as well. I ask: Can you give the manufacturers—the forest sector, the auto sector, the steel sector—any assurance that this is not going to drive hydro rates even higher and kill more jobs in Ontario?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: You throw mud indiscriminately. I'd just say to the member: Be a little cautious and try to deal a little bit with the facts. This has been a public process. We released a request for proposals publicly. It is out there on the website. We invited applicants to come forward. We have evaluated them. We will be issuing another request for proposals—all public. The contract that we will sign with the winning proposal will be public. You can indiscriminately try to throw mud, but you should try to deal with the facts periodically as well.

I would say to the public: What we're determined to do is to ensure that, going forward, we have an electricity plan that is reliable, affordable and done in the most environmentally sensitive way. It's public for all the public to look at. I would tend to discount a fair bit this language that does not bear a relationship to what's actually taking place.

SCHOOL SAFETY

Mr. Frank Klees: My question is to the Premier. I want to bring a matter to the Premier's attention that I'm sure he'll be very concerned about as well. On March 4, a 6-year-old grade 1 student was assaulted in the washroom of a York region Catholic school by two 13-year-old students. Although the principal was made aware of the assault, she did not report it to the parents. The parents found out about this from the boy's sister, who attends the same school. The 6-year-old had been beaten with a belt. When the parents confronted the principal and asked if she would contact the police, the principal said no, and that she had no intention of reporting the matter. The parents called the police, who charged the two 13-year-old boys with assault and assault with a weapon. To this day, the parents have yet to receive a formal acknowledgment from the school board or the principal of a failure to act responsibly.

I want to know from the Premier, will he agree to intervene to ensure that the school board takes—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Premier?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: It's the first time that I've been apprised of these facts. They are, to say the very least, disturbing. I will certainly undertake to bring this to the attention of the Minister of Education so that she can move on this as quickly as possible and learn more about it herself and then take the appropriate steps. Obviously, our thoughts are with the parents of the child involved, and I think we have a very high accountability to them to keep them informed and to ensure that these kinds of things are, in fact, reported at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Frank Klees: I have been working with the parents over the last number of months in the wake of this incident. I wrote a letter to the director of education. Her response to me showed that the director of education was misinformed about this incident. In response to that letter, the mother said this: "The letter shows nothing but the board having any desire for reaching a satisfactory resolution to this matter in the near future, but only reinforces the efforts made by the school and board to downplay and conceal the assault and the mishandling of it under their direction."

What we don't want to have happen here is that parents lose faith in the safety of the schools their children are attending. I welcome the Premier's willingness to direct the minister to look into this matter personally. We all want to be assured that parents have the confidence that their children will be safe in their schools and that principals will deal properly, as well as teachers—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Premier?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: Again, I can't speak to the facts because I'm not familiar with them myself. I will have the minister look into this as soon as possible. I think that's the responsible thing to do in the circumstances. But let me just second the sentiment expressed by my colleague opposite. If there's one thing that I think we are legitimately entitled to expect of our publicly funded school system, it's that our children will, at a minimum, be safe there. Notwithstanding quality-of-education issues and challenges associated with learning, at a minimum, we expect that our children will be safe in the schoolyard and within the school building itself. That's a legitimate expectation. I fully endorse the sentiment expressed by my colleague. As I say, I will ask the minister to look into these facts and report.

SEVERANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is to the Minister of Labour. Here we go again. Premier Wire in Alexandria, Ontario, is shutting down permanently later this month. More workers will be out of work. Many of them put decades into this company. To add insult to injury, the company is playing hardball and refusing to sit down with the workers and discuss fair severance. My Bill 6, which I brought before this House before Christmas, would have dealt with these types of situations, when thousands of people in this province are losing their severances. That government shot it down, wouldn't even read it, wouldn't even look at it and wouldn't even discuss it. When will this minister agree that Ontario's labour laws need to be overhauled to protect workers all over this province?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I thank the member for the question. Let me begin by saying that Ontario is the only province in the country—and the member should know this—that has statutory protection for severance pay. That's important. So we are there and we are protecting workers across this province.

Where the member is correct is that there are issues that have to be dealt with, with regard to the protection of severance pay, but they need to be dealt with in Ottawa. We've made sure that we've been in touch with the Minister of Labour federally; in fact, we have the support of a number of provincial Ministers of Labour, as we seek leadership in Ottawa to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act and provide a greater level of priority to severance and termination pay.

We have taken leadership on this issue. We're being joined by other provinces across the country, and we're determined to continue to work with Ottawa to encourage them to change that act.

Mr. Paul Miller: Pass the buck again; blame somebody else.

Minister, our labour laws do nothing for the workers of Premier Wire because a layoff of this size does not qualify under your existing legislation. But it doesn't feel like a small-scale layoff to the workers, their families and the tight-knit community that has been struck hard by this. This is yet another example of why we need better protection for workers facing layoffs, regardless of how many, or how large or how small their workplace might be. Why doesn't this minister move on this? Stop blaming other governments. You have the power to change it.

Hon. Brad Duguid: Once again, let me be clear. Ontario is the only province in the country that has statutory protection for severance pay for workers. That's important.

Unfortunately, what the member didn't say in his question is how he wanted to fund his program. What he wanted to do is tax workers and businesses across this province with a payroll tax. Is that what we want to do during this time?

We have taken away the taxes for manufacturers with regard to the capital tax. We've contributed to helping grow this economy through those initiatives. The NDP say they care about workers, yet they want to tax manufacturers to pay for that program. That is not the way to go. We will not contemplate doing that. We're here to help manufacturers. We're here to help workers keep those jobs, not to take them away, and that's what the NDP policy would do.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. Bob Delaney: I have a question for the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. Last week, the minister and the Premier launched Ontario's $355-million second-career strategy, which will provide long-term retraining to recently laid-off unemployed individuals. This is going to help a lot of laid-off workers get long-term training and high-value jobs.

The second-career program covers people who have been laid off since June 2007. My question for the minister is, what are we going to do about all the people who lost their jobs before June 2007?

Hon. John Milloy: I welcome the question from my colleague. It gives me a chance to correct the record. Unfortunately, I think the opposition have sown a bit of confusion here in the Legislature about supports that are available to all Ontarians anywhere in this province who find themselves without a job.

On January 1, 2007, the suite of federal training programs was transferred to the province, and together we put forward a network of over 1,200 agencies throughout Ontario that form the Employment Ontario network. Through this network, they provide support to any Ontarian who's looking for a job. Not every Ontarian needs retraining. Oftentimes, it's about help with job search techniques, information about the local labour market, and resumé writing. We also offer them literacy and skills upgrading. For those workers who are eligible for employment insurance, we offer access, through the Ontario skills development program, to training opportunities.

Mr. Bob Delaney: The minister mentioned the Ontario skills development program, which is part of Ontario's $1-billion Employment Ontario program. However, the leader of the third party alleged yesterday that people who have run out of their EI cannot apply for this training.

Would the minister please clarify whether workers who have lost their jobs and exhausted their employment insurance benefits can access retraining through the Ontario skills development program?

Hon. John Milloy: Once again, it's a wonderful opportunity to clarify the record for everyone. Since the transfer of federal programs on January 1, 2007, some 37,000 Ontarians have participated in training programs through the Ontario skills development program. As it is a federal program, it's open to those individuals who are currently receiving employment insurance or who received regular employment insurance benefits up to three years ago. In fact, records indicate that 15% of individuals who have participated in this program had seen their employment insurance benefits run out. So I think I want to correct the record of what was said yesterday to say that on top of the other suites of services that are offered by Employment Ontario, we offer the skills training opportunity for workers who have been on employment insurance. As has been discussed, for recently laid-off—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question?

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: My question is to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. The Liberal government's method of shovelling money out the door with abandon is catching up with them.

The auto sector is in real crisis, and they need a responsible partner in government. They need a partner that can help the whole industry, that protects workers and that encourages innovation with a competitive tax structure. That might mean that the cricket clubs won't get $1-million handouts anymore, and that's too bad. Instead, it means that corporate subsidies will come with conditions. They'll come based on good research and careful planning, not on the whim of the Premier and his minister.

Minister, recent events have clearly revealed that your auto sector investment strategy is simply not working. Ontarians are concerned that $650 million of their hard-earned tax dollars have vanished into thin air, yet all you can do is sing your own praises. If you are so confident in your program, will you commit today to calling on the Auditor General to perform a special value-for-money audit—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I find it very interesting that one member of the Conservative caucus says one thing but another says something else. I would just like them to come together as a caucus, perhaps involve their leader, and decide what position today they're going to take on support for the automotive sector.

The member from Oshawa says one thing; the member nearby in Ajax–Whitby says another. “I wouldn’t dismiss (another provincial investment) out of hand, especially where I come from. General Motors is the primary employer.” That’s Christine Elliott, last month, 2008. “I think it’s important that they be given whatever support that they can give.” Again that’s Christine Elliott.

Please pick a side. Are you on the side of GM, are you on the side of workers, or are you just an irrelevant party with an irrelevant position?

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: The fact is, we can’t believe what this minister says anymore. You can be as loud as you want, give us mean looks and point your finger everywhere you want, but that won’t change the fact that this Liberal government’s deals with GM and other manufacturers are very suspect. It won’t change the fact that on your watch, thousands of auto workers have been left out in the cold. You’ve been secretive about this for months, and your figures regarding contracts and job guarantees are in constant flux.

Whether you’re in front of the media, at committee or answering questions in this House, you continuously demonstrate that you do not fully grasp the complex details of your portfolio. All you can do is stand there with anger in your eyes and decry the opposition for opposing you.

Minister, you’re clearly in over your head. It is time to seek guidance. Will you call for a special audit of your automotive investment strategy today and give Ontarians the satisfaction they deserve?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I guess it does continue, because the leader in the House for the Conservative Party said that “getting involved in the investment side of new technology and innovation I think is an appropriate role for government.” Bob Runciman, June 5. That was just the other day.

So let me say again: Which half of the caucus are you on? Are you on the half that is opposed to the auto sector? Are you on the half that is supporting the automotive sector? I would like to say to this member in particular: We have had investment programs that are working, and in fact they’re working in this member’s own backyard. I would encourage this member to look in his own backyard for real jobs that have come to Halton as a result of the programs of this Ontario government. I will be sending your voting record to the very people you purport to support.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Premier: Today, as the Premier watches the Prime Minister apologize to First Nations, will the Premier apologize for the McGuinty government’s failure to properly consult and accommodate First Nations before allowing mining exploration companies to stake mining claims on First Nations’ traditional lands? And will the Premier apologize to First Nation leaders from Kitchenuhmaykoosib Inninuwug First Nation and Ardoch First Nation when those leaders were jailed because of the McGuinty government’s failure to properly consult and accommodate First Nations?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: I’m disappointed. I don’t think I’ve ever said that before, but I just can’t think of a better expression. There’s something really important that’s going to take place this afternoon in the House of Commons in Ottawa. The Prime Minister and I are on different sides on many issues, but on this side I’m squarely in his camp, because I think it’s the Canadian camp.

He’s going to offer a very important apology on behalf of the people of Canada for a painful period in our history which we must acknowledge and come to grips with. This apology, I hope, will serve as part of an ongoing effort to reconcile ourselves to our past, to our present, and to lay the foundation for a stronger future, especially for our aboriginal community. So I just don’t know why the leader of the NDP would want to —

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Premier. Supplementary?

Mr. Howard Hampton: I believe every member of this Legislature supports what the Prime Minister of Canada is doing today. But it seems to me, given the recent history of Ontario, that this Premier has something to apologize for. The fact of the matter is that innocent First Nation leaders were jailed in Ontario under the McGuinty government. Why? Because they stood up for their treaty, their constitutional and their aboriginal rights.

They said, “We want the McGuinty government to observe the constitutional law of Canada,” which requires the McGuinty government to properly consult and accommodate First Nations before you allow mining claims to be staked in their territory. They asked that the McGuinty government use section 35 of the Mining Act to exempt their traditional lands from mining staking. I agree, I support the Prime Minister, but will the Premier apologize for —

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Premier?

Hon. Dalton McGuinty: There is undoubtedly more work to be done here in Ontario. I look forward to building on the foundation of reconciliation that will be further strengthened by the Prime Minister this afternoon.

But I'd like to think we have moved somewhat here in Ontario. I think, in comparison to the previous decades, we've moved at a rather fast pace. We've got a new ministry; we have a minister. We have a budget devoted to aboriginal issues. We've resolved the Ipperwash matter. We have a new gaming revenue sharing agreement. We have a new partnership fund that we put in place. I think those are significant milestones that we have just put in place ourselves.

Again, today, I would like Ontarians and Canadians to understand the significance of the event that will take place this afternoon, the importance to all of us to establish that spirit of—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Premier. New question.

ONTARIO ARTISTS

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: My question is for the Minister of Culture. This past weekend, I was pleased to join the Minister of Culture in Kitchener to launch the Spotlight festival, Ontario's first Celebrate Our Artists weekend. Many constituents in my riding of Kitchener-Conestoga were treated to a weekend filled with free events, including literature, movies, theatre, dance and performing arts. We also enjoyed unique behind-the-scenes workshops, lectures and artists' talks. It created a vibrant atmosphere that's truly reflective of our province and our people.

Our culture defines us. Can the Minister of Culture please explain what action the government has taken to acknowledge the importance of Ontario's artists?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: Ontario's artists not only enrich our lives, they also give expression to who we are, where we come from and where we want to go. The McGuinty government is pleased to support our artists, because we recognize that they contribute to our economic prosperity and to our social vitality. That is why we formally recognize the valuable contributions that artists make to our province.

As part of this recognition, we committed to celebrating the importance of Ontario's artists in communities right across this beautiful province. That is why we proclaimed the first weekend in June as Celebrate Our Artists weekend, a time when we shine the spotlight on their valuable contributions.

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: I'm pleased to hear that the government recognizes the valuable contributions our artists make. I can tell you that in my riding of Kitchener-Conestoga, artists and arts organizations have created a vibrant community for residents and families to enjoy. Indeed, Ontario is fortunate to be the home of many talented artists, not just in my riding but in communities throughout the province.

Can the Minister of Culture please elaborate on what else the government has done to celebrate our artists in communities across Ontario?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: My colleague from Kitchener and I had a wonderful time together, and my colleague behind me as well.

Kitchener wasn't the only community where we celebrated our artists this weekend. We also held festivals in Waterloo, Stratford, Guelph, Cambridge and surrounding areas. These festivals shone the spotlight on 250 artists, and more than 100 free activities were held by these artists and art organizations. Many of the activities provided local residents with a chance to explore the arts first-hand and get involved in community participation.

Through these Celebrate Our Artists festivals, we hope Ontarians will gain a broader appreciation for the arts and for the artists themselves. I use as an example one of Ontario's most pre-eminent and highly regarded artists, Robert Bateman, who has joined us here in the west gallery this morning.

TOURISM

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: My question today is for the Minister of Small Business and Entrepreneurship. The tourism industry has been warning this government for weeks that it needs immediate action from this government. In fact, for five years now, resorts in Ontario have seen a steady decline in vacancy rates.

On Tuesday, the North Bay city council called on your government, the McGuinty government, to consider the PC Party's summer tax relief plan to cut PST on hotels and attractions this summer so they can support their struggling tourism industry. What is your answer to the North Bay city council? Will you help them out this summer? Will you, Mr. Minister, support our summer tax relief plan?

Hon. Harinder S. Takhar: To the Minister of Tourism.

Hon. Peter Fonseca: I thank the member for the question. One thing I could tell the member is that this government is committed to a sustainable, vital and viable tourism sector. That's why we are not moving on poor Band-Aid measures like the Tory party has come up with.

What we are doing is working with all our partners in tourism and making sure that we have a comprehensive strategy. Part of that strategy was a $30-million investment last fall in the tourism sector, making sure that we can help all our partners, especially for this summer season. Our campaign, "There's no place like this," has been hugely successful. The numbers are coming. The member should applaud that campaign, that marketing initiative.

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I would have at least thought that the Minister of Small Business would have actually cared about small businesses in this House when they're suffering so badly. Anybody who would call our plan a piecemeal effort I don't think understands the job of being the Minister of Tourism.

As gas prices continue to soar, the US economy stumbles and job losses are announced almost every day, people cannot afford to take their families on summer vacations this year. Hotel and resort owners need immediate relief, not another study. They don't need a government that's going to wait a year and tell them what they already know, that tourism is already in trouble. Many jobs are at stake. Tourism could use billions of dollars this summer.

Our party has put forward a practical plan, a summer tax relief plan that will give hotel and resort owners like those in North Bay a helping hand. Why won't you consider North Bay's request? Or are you planning on turning your back on another Ontario community?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: The one thing we can agree on is talking about North Bay. I applaud the champion member we have here for North Bay in Monique Smith. North Bay is a four-season destination with a wonderful lake, wonderful attractions, festivals, events, and so many things to do.

Unfortunately, we have a party over there that votes against every tourism measure. They voted against the $30-million injection that helped tourism. They voted against our budget bill, which put $92 million into initiatives and tax measures that will help the tourism sector over the next five years. It is very unfortunate that we have an opposition party that looks to knock our tourism sector, knock our partners and talk poorly about—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question?

STUDENT ASSISTANCE

Ms. Andrea Horwath: My question is for the Minister of Children and Youth Services, and it's about a promise that she made exactly one year ago to members of the social action committee of the Ontario Association of Social Workers, Hamilton and district branch. When is this minister going to ensure that post-secondary students from families that are low-income and receiving social assistance and who live at home and work part-time don't have their earnings clawed back?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I thank the member opposite for her question. Let me just clarify one thing: It is not a promise I made to fix the problem; the promise I made was to look into solutions. I can tell you that the poverty reduction strategy has as its very foundation that every person in this province has the opportunity to fulfill their potential regardless of the financial circumstances of their family. We are, as you know, travelling the province listening to ideas. This is a very important idea.

I will refer the supplementary to the Minister of Community and Social Services as it does relate to our social assistance rule. But let me assure you that the poverty reduction committee is very committed to improving opportunities for all people in this province.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: This minister can refer it to whomever she wants, but it was her promise to the people of Hamilton when she was there consulting before the last election. Her semantics are not going to make a hill of beans of difference to Rosemary Chapman or the advocates who originally raised this question not too long ago. Rosemary saw her monthly disability support cheque cut significantly because her daughter attends university and makes $500 a month at a part-time job, which doesn't go very far, as we all know, with the current cost of living and the high tuition fees in this province. Thanks to the NDP's efforts, those secondary school students and youth enrolled in training programs are already exempt from the calculations of family income for ODSP and Ontario Works. When will the McGuinty government add post-secondary students' earnings to the list of exemptions and stop demoralizing these students and their families?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: To the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities.

Hon. John Milloy: As my colleague mentioned, we're always looking at ways to reform the OSAP system, but I'd like to point out that under our government we've invested $1.5 billion in supports for students and made efforts to try to convince students, especially those from circumstances where they wouldn't normally have access to post-secondary education—to ensure they have it.

In terms of social assistance, I'd like to point out that my ministry's Ontario student assistance program works in partnership with the Ministry of Community and Social Services, the Ontario disability support program and Ontario Works, as well as financial staff at Ontario's post-secondary institutions, to ensure that social assistance recipients enrolled in post-secondary studies receive the funding they need to pursue post-secondary studies. Students with disabilities make—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question?

PROTECTION FOR WORKERS

Mrs. Laura Albanese: My question is for the Minister of Labour. All of us in this House would agree that the nature of work is changing. Many different types of employment arrangements are now the norm, and the rise in temporary help agencies testifies to that fact. In the past, employment through these agencies was mostly short-term clerical jobs that lasted a few days or weeks. Today, agencies supply workers in a wide range of occupations, and an employee of an agency might be assigned to a single-client business for several months or even years. This raises questions about whether temporary help agency workers are being treated fairly compared to permanent or regular employees.

Would the minister tell us what our government plans to do about the challenges faced by temporary workers in Ontario?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I want to thank the member for her advocacy for vulnerable workers. I know she has worked very hard in her own riding and across this province.

Our government is committed to ensuring that employees working through temporary agencies are properly protected under the law. Issues have been raised by a number of stakeholders, and I've had the opportunity to meet with many stakeholders on this issue. They have raised certain concerns about practices that some temporary agencies are engaging in that may be negatively impacting workers employed in this sector. We want to learn more about these issues. We want to determine if indeed changes are required to the Employment Standards Act—not only are changes required, but what should those changes be? So I've asked my parliamentary assistant, Mr. Vic Dhillon, MPP for Brampton West, to engage in a consultation on this process—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mrs. Laura Albanese: I thank the minister for that information. It's good to know that our government is hearing the concerns being expressed by vulnerable workers in this province and is taking them seriously. Minister, can you please tell this House what our government is currently doing to help temporary agency workers?

Hon. Brad Duguid: As I was referring to in my original answer, we've begun a consultation process. It was launched on May 21. It will continue through until July 7. It is being led by my parliamentary assistant. We're inviting the public to assist us by participating in this important consultation. The information that is brought to our attention we'll take very, very seriously. I encourage the public to go to the Ministry of Labour website, where they can, from the confines of their own homes, consult with us, inform us, help us in our efforts to ensure that we make every effort to improve the protections for these temporary workers. I want to thank Parkdale Community Legal Services, the Workers' Action Centre and many other advocacy groups who have been working very closely with us in these efforts.

CHILDREN WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Mrs. Julia Munro: My question is for the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Recently I met with the Child Development Institute. They told me that research demonstrates the need for special programs to deal with behavioural problems in girls, particularly aggression. The institute has created the only gender-specific, empirically supported program for this vulnerable population. Today, 90 sites around the world use their program, started here in Ontario. Minister, have you been briefed on this program, and are you personally aware of the success of this program in dealing with behavioural problems in girls?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: The answer to the question is that I have heard of this. I am actually in the process of researching this issue myself. Some people have given me a book they want me to read, and I've started to read it, about girls and aggression. We are seeing changing patterns of behaviour among girls. So to answer your question, it's an issue that I think we really do have to look into. I see it as both a women's issue and a children and youth services issue and I look forward to learning more.

Mrs. Julia Munro: The Child Development Institute developed the program through donated dollars. Due to the growing need for research and services, these donations are no longer enough. They asked you last month to provide public funding. Will you commit to providing the money they need for this important program?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I'm happy to note that we have another "spend" question today. But I don't want to make light of the issue, because it's an important issue. I am a passionate believer in using the evidence, that our programs should be based on good, solid evidence. Of course I cannot commit today to funding the organization, but, as I said earlier, I will commit to looking more into this important initiative.

POVERTY

Mr. Michael Prue: My question is to the Minister of Children and Youth Services. My question is a simple one: When were the invitations to last night's closed-door, by-invitation-only consultation actually sent out?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I find myself very confused by this member. As a bit of background: He followed me to Peterborough; he followed me to Cobourg; he followed me to Ottawa. Last night we invited the member because it was his community, and he came and stayed for an hour. I was delighted he was there, but I would have thought, if he'd really wanted to be part of it, he could have spent the evening.

Having said that, on the one hand he says, "You don't need to consult; just get to work." Now he says, "Consult more." I wish I knew where this member stood on poverty reduction.

Mr. Michael Prue: For the minister's edification, I stayed at the meeting twice as long as the Minister of Health Promotion did.

Last night there were 25 or 30 people in the room; most of them were either ministerial staff or people who work for social agencies. Only one person could make the claim that they were on social assistance. I don't know, because you didn't answer the question on when you sent out the invitations, but when I asked those who were present, they said that the invitations were received last week or on Monday.

My question: How many people in poverty were invited to last night's meeting and when were they informed of the time, the date and the location?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: To answer the question: The member has raised an important issue, and that is, how do we get the voices of people living on low income? What we have done is, we always invite members of organizations to bring one of their clients, one of their members, with them. We are hearing from them that there isn't a comfort level doing that. That is why I am going out to youth shelters, to transition houses, to women's shelters. I am learning first-hand from people who are living in poverty what they want this government to do.

Let me just take a minute and talk about who was there last night: Tropicana Community Services, CARO, Toronto and York Region Labour Council, Scarborough Community Legal Services, ODSP Action Coalition, ACORN, the LHIN, Metro Toronto Chinese and South-east Asian Legal Clinic, Family Service Association of Toronto, city of Toronto, United Way, Association of Friendship Centres; the—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. The time for question period has ended.

PETITIONS

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Jim Wilson: I want to thank the members of the congregation of St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church in Alliston for sending this petition to me.

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I've signed this petition and I agree with it.

LUNG CANCER

Mr. Phil McNeely: I'd like to acknowledge Mrs. Laurie Bass, who, along with her daughter, prepared this—with Sarah Nass; mother Betty Jacoby, Mary Jack and former Lung Cancer Ontario president Ralph Gouda, who are sitting in the gallery today. These folks worked tirelessly to coordinate the effort to gather the hundreds, if not thousands, of signatures affixed to this petition, a petition originally submitted to the Honourable David Caplan. Congratulations to all of you.

"Whereas lung cancer is the leading cause of cancer death in both men and women in Ontario, killing more Canadians than breast, colon and prostate cancer combined; and

"Whereas there are no standardized screening guidelines for early detection of lung cancer and it receives only a fraction of the funding and support committed to other cancers and diseases; and

"Whereas Lung Cancer Canada is committed to raising awareness while providing support and resources to patients, families and health care professionals;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to officially proclaim and hereforth recognize the month of November in Ontario as lung cancer awareness month."

I will submit this petition.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. John O'Toole: It's my pleasure to read a petition on behalf of the parishioners of St. John's Anglican Church in Bowmanville. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its"—rightful—"place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition: It is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker"—that's you, sir—"in the Legislature."

I am pleased to sign and present this to Ellen, one of the new pages.

PROTECTION FOR MINERS

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people of Cartier in my riding.

"Whereas current legislation contained in the Ontario health and safety act and regulations for mines and mining plants does not adequately protect the lives of miners, we request revisions to the act;

"Lyle Everett Defoe"—a member of my riding—"and the scoop tram he was operating fell 150 feet down an open stope (July 23, 2007). Lyle was 25 years and 15 days old when he was killed at Xstrata Kidd Creek mine site, Timmins.

"Section R-60 ... states that, 'A shaft, raise or other opening in an underground mine shall be securely fenced, covered or otherwise guarded....' The stope where Lyle was killed was protected by a length of orange plastic snow fence and a rope with a warning sign. These barriers would not have been visible if the bucket of the scoop tram was raised. Lyle's body was recovered from behind the scoop tram.

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Concrete berms must be mandatory to protect all open stopes and raises;

"All miners and contractors working underground must have working communication devices and personal locators;

"All equipment involved in injuries and fatalities must be recovered and examined unless such recovery would endanger the lives of others; and

"The entire act must be reviewed and amended to better protect underground workers."

I fully support this petition and will affix my name to it. I will be sending it with page Brianne.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan, subject to public meetings; and

"Whereas it is important to ensure that the new birthing unit at Centenary hospital, a $20-million expansion that will see 16 new labour, delivery, recovery and postpartum (LDRP) birthing rooms and an additional 21 postpartum rooms added by October 2008, will not cause any decline in the pediatric services currently provided at the Ajax-Pickering hospital; and

"Whereas, with the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government, it is important to continue to have a complete maternity unit at the Ajax hospital; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for the Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding; and

"Whereas the parents of Ajax and Pickering deserve the right to have their children born in their own community, where they have chosen to live and work;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service; and

"That our Ajax-Pickering hospital now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain its full maternity unit."

I attach my signature to this, and I will pass that to Jocelyn.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. John Yakabuski: I have a petition for the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and I continue to receive thousands of names for this petition.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition: It is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I support this petition. I sign it and send it down with Charles.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Jeff Leal: I have a petition today to support the Provincial Animal Welfare Act.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I agree with this and will affix my signature to it.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Frank Klees: I have a petition to the Ontario Legislative Assembly relating to the western Mississauga ambulatory surgery centre. It reads as follows:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I have no hesitancy in applying my own signature to this petition.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Bill Mauro: I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario that reads as follows:

"Whereas an all-party committee is reviewing the recital of the Lord's Prayer at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message is one of forgiveness, of providing for those in need of their 'daily bread' and of preserving us from the evils that we may fall into; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena for conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the Lord's Prayer in the Legislature."

I agree with this. I will put my signature to it and I will give it to Kelvin.

COMMUNITY SAFETY

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas crack houses, brothels and other persistent problem properties undermine a neighbourhood by generating public disorder, fear and insecurity; and

"Whereas current solutions—enforcement measures based on current criminal, civil and bylaws—are slow, expensive, cumbersome and not always successful; and

"Whereas safer communities and neighbourhoods (SCAN) legislation is provincial, civil law which counters the negative impact on neighbourhoods of entrenched drug, prostitution or illegal liquor sales based out of homes and businesses and is being successfully utilized in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and the Yukon; and

"Whereas the following have endorsed SCAN legislation: city of Ottawa, city of Kingston, city of Hamilton, federation of Ontario municipalities, Ottawa Police Service, Ottawa Police Services Board, Ottawa Centre

MPP Yasir Naqvi, Ottawa Neighbourhood Watch executive committee, Concerned Citizens for Safer Neighbourhoods, Eastern Ontario Landlord Organization, Friends and Tenants of Ottawa Community Housing, Hintonburg Community Association, Somerset Street Chinatown BIA, Boys and Girls Club of Ottawa and the Dalhousie Community Association;

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, urge the province of Ontario to enact safer communities and neighbourhood (SCAN) legislation in Ontario for the benefit of our neighbourhoods and communities."

I wholeheartedly agree with this petition. I affix my signature and send it to you by way of page Christopher J.

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mr. Bob Delaney: I have a petition to the Parliament of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the legacy of Pope John Paul II reflects his lifelong commitment to international understanding, peace and the defence of equality and human rights;

"Whereas his legacy has an all-embracing meaning that is particularly relevant to Canada's multi-faith and multicultural traditions;

"Whereas, as one of the great spiritual leaders of contemporary times, Pope John Paul II visited Ontario during his pontificate of more than 25 years and, on his visits, was enthusiastically greeted by Ontario's diverse religious and cultural communities;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to grant speedy passage into law of the private member's bill" by Oak Ridges-Markham MPP Frank Klees entitled "An Act to proclaim Pope John Paul II Day."

I'd like to thank Leszek Robak of Emerson Lane in Mississauga for having sent these to me. I'm pleased to sign them and to send them down with page Megan.

EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: This petition is entitled "Fairness for Ontario workers' employment insurance." It is addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and reads as follows:

"Whereas the federal government's employment insurance surplus now stands at $54 billion; and

"Whereas over 75% of Ontario's unemployed are not eligible for employment insurance because of Ottawa's unfair eligibility rules; and

"Whereas an Ontario worker has to work more weeks to qualify and receives fewer weeks of benefits than other Canadian unemployed workers; and

"Whereas the average Ontario unemployed worker gets $4,000 less in EI benefits than unemployed workers in other provinces and thus not qualifying for many retraining programs;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to press the federal government to reform the employment insurance program and to end the discrimination and unfairness towards Ontario's unemployed workers."

Since I agree with this petition 100%, I'm delighted to send it to you.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The time for petitions has expired. This House stands recessed until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1202 to 1500.

FROST CENTRE INSTITUTE

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to rise this afternoon and recognize the inspiration behind a treasure in Haliburton Highlands, the Frost Centre Institute. When the Liberal government and Dalton McGuinty quietly closed the doors to the Frost centre in 2004, a tireless and unwavering effort came forward by thousands of people who understood how important this historic facility is to our community.

Mr. Alan Aubry, along with his wife, Wendy, came out of retirement by making a personal, financial and emotional commitment to reopen the centre as the Frost Centre Institute in the spring of 2007. Last June, I was thrilled to join Al and Wendy Aubry and a number of other representatives to celebrate the reopening of the centre and to celebrate its tradition of excellence in environmental education.

Since that time, what we have seen in Haliburton Highlands, along Lake St. Nora, is the Frost Centre Institute, under Mr. Aubry's leadership, grow into a captivating environmental experience in life and learning. It offers environmental education programs, a summer camp for young people, a water sports program, a visionary arts program, counsellor training programs, and English as a second language.

Just last week, the Frost Centre Institute was one of the many impressive stops that welcomed the review committee in support of the bid for the 2010 Ontario Summer Games in Haliburton.

We are lucky to have the Frost Centre Institute as one of many attractions in Haliburton. Thanks to Al and Wendy Aubry's dedication and self-sacrifice, not only is that vision a reality; it is an internationally recognized environmental school, and it is reinvigorated. It is a treasure in Ontario, and the Frost Centre Institute truly does have a great future.

GARY OSTLER

Mr. Jim Brownell: Occasionally, a community is touched by the presence of an extraordinary individual who serves to support and strengthen its citizens. Father Gary Ostler, who passed away on May 29 at the age of 52 years, was such a person.

A priest at St. Columban's parish in Cornwall, Father Gary was a pillar of the community in my riding of Stormont-Dundas-South Glengarry. A man of great faith, he had a passion for scripture and an unmatched ability to bring it to life for his parishioners.

Beyond his parish, he believed that it was the church's responsibility and privilege to serve the community as a whole. For example, just a month before his death, Father Gary led a memorial service for the Battle of the Atlantic merchant marine servicemen.

While his parish and community were half of his life, the other half was the Canadian Armed Forces. Father Gary, having risen to the rank of major, touched the lives of many of our men and women in uniform, having served as a Canadian Armed Forces chaplain. To quote Master Warrant Officer Jim Devine of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Highlanders, "He was the psychologist, the social worker, the psychiatrist, the marriage counsellor." He also said, "I judge all other padres by how I know Gary."

Father Gary also was a true humanitarian. We saw that in the community, and we saw it throughout Ontario and Canada. He embodied the highest qualities of good citizenship. He will be sorely missed by all those whose lives he touched in my community through his great work.

DALTON MCGUINITY AND DAVID MCGUINITY

Mr. Peter Shurman: This is the story of Dalton and David, two brothers from Ottawa who grew up side by side. They were inseparable. They liked the same girls; they liked the same music; they liked the same cars. Ask each of them which is the best party in Canada and they would tell you, "The Liberal Party." Ask each of them which party was best suited to govern Ontario and they would tell you again, "The Liberal Party."

But something strange happened to the brothers McGuinty one fateful day: Dalton came home to lead the Ontario Liberal gang, the Dalton gang, and David stayed behind and joined the federal Liberal gang. The Ontario Liberals insisted theirs was the best way to combat climate change. The federal Liberals disagreed. "No, it's ours," they cried.

It is here that Dalton's and David's paths diverged. Dalton's Ontario Liberal gang pushes for cap and trade, David's gang for a carbon tax. Cap and trade and a carbon tax—completely incompatible, completely juxtaposed. All was not well at the McGuinty dinner table.

Ah, but no cause for despair. Dalton and David still agree on one thing: Ontarians should pay more.

NIAGARA PARKS COMMISSION

Mr. Peter Kormos: The stated mission of the Niagara Parks Commission is to preserve and enhance the natural beauty of the falls and the Niagara River corridor. You folks who don't know about it, it's the jewel in the crown of Ontario, that Niagara Parkway, and the parklands on the west side of the Niagara River.

Well, under the McGuinty government and his hand-picked appointees to the commission, that valuable natural resource is being desecrated. I tell you, that's a crime to generations of Ontarians to come. McGuinty and the Liberals are hell bent on commercializing, privatizing and Disneyfying that valuable natural resource. They may find it cute that their private partners are going to make huge profits on the asphaltting and the paving over of Niagara parkland, but we down in Niagara think otherwise.

The most recent victim, of course, is Miller's Creek Marina, which was privatized last year. Now, the developer, Warren DAC, wants to build a condo complex and shopping sites on Niagara parkland.

The McGuinty government should be protecting this scarce and valuable natural resource. It talks a big game about tourism, but then slams the door in the face of people who want to be stewards of beautiful attractions like Niagara Parks. I call upon this government to immediately rein in its commission.

CONCESSION STREETFEST

Ms. Sophia Aggelonitis: Concession Street on Hamilton Mountain is home to some wonderful shops and restaurants. It is also home to one of my favourite events.

This past Saturday, I joined over 20,000 other Hamiltonians on the mountain to help celebrate the 15th annual Concession Streetfest. Even the sweltering heat on Saturday couldn't stop everyone from having a wonderful afternoon. There was definitely something for everyone, from Peruvian flutists, face painting and a petting zoo, not to mention the local business owners showcasing their merchandise for all to see.

My community spirit and pride was in full force on Saturday, and their hard work definitely paid off: Concession Streetfest was a huge success. I'd like to personally thank the Concession Street BIA for their hard work and passion in making our BIA one of the best. I would like to thank Debbie Johnson, Betty Toplack, Paul Wharton, Doris Sanchez, Lorne Lozinski and John Woolcott, not to mention the many volunteers who helped make this year's streetfest such a success.

CLEAN WATER ACT

Mr. Randy Hillier: Although this government hides under a green blanket, their real agenda is clear: a total disregard for democracy and property rights.

We all know that if you're a union, a carmaker, a cricket club or a left-wing environmental group, the Liberal trough flows steady. Everybody else is on the firing line.

Earlier this year, source water committees included compensation for landowners victimized by the Clean Water Act. But in a memo dated May 14, the MOE said no to compensation. This exposes the true Liberal environment: a maze led by Toronto bureaucrats who don't give a damn about rural residents.

While the McGuinty greenbelt launders $600,000 to Environmental Defence, $200,000 to Ontario Nature, and $32,000 for the world's largest multicultural salad, they take rural landowners to the cleaners. It is unjust to ask the little guy to bear the cost imposed by society at large.

Clearly, the minister fears that being honest and forthright will damage his status in cabinet. But he must do the right thing, not the easy thing, and compensate those harmed by the Clean Water Act.

EVENTS IN AJAX-PICKERING

Mr. Joe Dickson: The Pickering and Ajax Rotary Club Ribfest at the Pickering civic centre hosted the largest-ever public event in the history of Pickering or Ajax. Some 30,000 residents enjoyed the ribs, music, hospitality and carnival, which was chaired by Lon Harnish. The profits from this event go back into our two communities, including Ajax Rotary's ongoing contributions to their $100,000 new Ajax library pledge.

The 38th annual Home Week also kicked off this past weekend, featuring the Home Week parade, the village jazz festival, the DuPont antique car show, Ajax Lions pasta night, and the 100-day bicycle ride from Scrambles restaurant by Dee Miller on behalf of Renewed Strength cancer survivors. Health Promotion Minister Margaret Best and myself were there at 7 a.m. to wish Dee well on her journey.

1510

Sunday is the biggest day of the year, and we'll see over 10,000 visit the Ajax waterfront for the Rotary pancake breakfast between 8 a.m. and 11 a.m. The waterfront festival, under Wilma Graham, will also feature over a dozen venues for people of all ages. This is the largest finale in Durham's history. It will feature choreographed music fireworks valued at $13,000.

We'd like to thank all of the volunteers; the chair, Peter Hudson; all of the service organizations; Kinsmen, Legion, Lions, Optimist and Rotary; and of course our Ajax mayor and Ajax council.

EVENTS IN WESTON

Mrs. Laura Albanese: This past weekend I had the pleasure of attending the official annual opening of the Weston Farmers' Market. This local tradition signals to all residents of York South-Weston that the summer season is here, and that every weekend they can purchase some good local food and enjoy great entertainment.

It's also a great opportunity for Ontario food producers to showcase and sell locally grown, fresh, high-quality food. This is very significant, because in many cases the foods we eat every day must be transported from thousands of miles away, which has a significant impact on our environment due to transportation emissions. We can all make an effort to enjoy Ontario freshness.

That same morning, less than a block away from the market, I had the opportunity to help unveil a new landmark in the heart of the old village of Weston. A beautifully crafted clock tower was built in the parkette along the intersection of Lawrence Avenue West and Weston Road. Local councillor Frances Nunziata, the Weston BIA and the local historical society have worked tirelessly for the past three years to bring the project to completion. The clock, designed by architect Michael Presutti, bears an inscription indicating that the village of Weston was established in 1796.

I highlight these events today because I think they are an example of how we can incorporate aspects of traditional lifestyles into our contemporary lives today. We should remember that we can come together and work towards a brighter future without ever forgetting the past.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT WEEK

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: I rise today to talk about a great new initiative that will give Ontario's children and youth real-life lessons in responsible citizenship. The very first Local Government Week will be held later this year from October 19 to 25. The week will connect grade 5 and 10 students to the community through activities such as mock elections and council meetings. For our teachers, this is a new opportunity to bring local civics into the classroom. As an MPP and former councillor, I know how important it is to have an engaged community.

The launch of local government week is the result of hard work and support of many organizations and groups. The Association of Municipal Managers, Clerks and Treasurers of Ontario and the Association of Municipalities of Ontario are very committed to this initiative. Through their collective efforts, schools and municipalities around the province will receive resource kits with suggestions on activities on how to make Local Government Week meaningful.

We want the youth of Ontario to learn about the importance of local government and realize that they, too, one day can become leaders in their own communities. I urge all members, many of whom have served at the municipal level as I did, to support this initiative in their communities this fall.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT (CANADIAN MANUFACTURING AND ASSEMBLY OF GOVERNMENT VEHICLES), 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LE MINISTÈRE DES SERVICES GOUVERNEMENTAUX (FABRICATION ET MONTAGE DE VÉHICULES GOUVERNEMENTAUX AU CANADA)

Mr. Ouellette moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 92, An Act to amend the Ministry of Government Services Act to regulate the acquisition of government vehicles / Projet de loi 92, Loi modifiant la Loi sur le ministère des Services gouvernementaux afin de réglementer l'acquisition de véhicules gouvernementaux.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Mr. Jerry J. Ouellette: This is the third in the series of auto sector bills that we've been working on—this one, in particular, for eight months. There's another one yet to come. This bill formalizes the unwritten procurement policy and adds a new dimension of having all government employees, when on provincial or government of Ontario business, who are utilizing a vehicle that is leased or rented go through a procedure which requires that Ontario-made or Canadian-made vehicles be prioritized and used first.

EUGERRY INVESTMENTS LIMITED ACT, 2008

Ms. Horwath moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill Pr11, An Act to revive Eugerry Investments Limited.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Pursuant to standing order 85, this bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Private Bills.

OMBUDSMAN AMENDMENT ACT (CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETIES), 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'OMBUDSMAN (SOCIÉTÉS D'AIDE À L'ENFANCE)

Ms. Horwath moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 93, An Act to amend the Ombudsman Act with respect to children's aid societies / Projet de loi 93, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'ombudsman en ce qui a trait aux sociétés d'aide à l'enfance.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: The bill amends the Ombudsman Act to allow the Ombudsman to investigate any decision or recommendation made or any act done or omitted in the course of the administration of a children's aid society.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon. Michael Gravelle: I seek unanimous consent to put forward a motion without notice regarding private members' public business.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Hon. Michael Gravelle: I move that, notwithstanding standing order 97(g), the requirement for notice be waived with respect to ballot item 37.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF PROVINCIAL ADVOCATE OF CHILDREN AND YOUTH

Hon. Michael Gravelle: I move that an humble address be presented to the Lieutenant Governor in Council as follows:

"To the Lieutenant Governor in Council"—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): You need consent.

Hon. Michael Gravelle: Sorry. May I ask for consent, please, to present this?

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Hon. Michael Gravelle: "To the Lieutenant Governor in Council:

"We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, request the appointment of Irwin Elman as the Provincial Advocate for Children and Youth, as provided in section 3 of the Provincial Advocate for Children and Youth Act, 2007, to hold office under the terms and conditions of the said act,

"And that the address be engrossed and presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor in Council by the Speaker."

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd like to congratulate Mr. Elman and I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the selection committee, who worked so hard in the process: Lisa MacLeod, Andrea Horwath, Wayne Arthurs, Nancy Marling from the Legislative Assembly, and as well to say thank you to the outgoing acting child advocate, Agnes Samler. To everyone involved in the process, thank you very much.

1520

Mrs. Julia Munro: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I'd just like to ask all members to help me welcome the students from Deer Park school in Keswick and their teacher.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): That was not a point of order. We do welcome the students here. I remind everyone that if they have issues regarding the introduction of members when they're supposed to be introduced, to take them to their House leader so they can be discussed at the House leaders' meeting or perhaps this summer when the legislative committee meets to review the standing order changes.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS

Resuming the debate adjourned on June 4, 2008, on the motion for the appointment of a Select Committee on Elections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Further debate?

Mr. Gilles Bisson: As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted by the adjournment of the House—I always wanted to use that line but I wanted to use it in a different context, which, thank God, never happened. Somebody caught on to that.

Interjection: That was Dave Warner.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Exactly, David Warner. There's a little story that he had been in this place, then he had gone by way of an election, and then came back. His first speech when he came back was, "As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted"—

Ms. Andrea Horwath: "By an election that I lost."

Mr. Gilles Bisson: "By an election that I lost." I always thought it was a funny line. Anyway, I digress.

We were speaking earlier to the motion of creating a committee that will look at the Election Act for the next provincial election. A number of members have put forward some pretty good suggestions as to some of the things that I think this committee should look to. I want to review them very quickly so that it's fresh in everybody's mind and that we're able to remember what some of the issues are and what it is we need to do.

Number one: enumeration. The list we are using to identify voters in the province of Ontario is abysmal. In most communities, you're lucky if 60% to 70% of that list is accurate. If you live in areas where there are rural routes and people have post office boxes instead of a physical address, it is even worse. It's really only by way of driver's licence information or other information or interaction that the person has with the government that they actually end up on the list.

I know that the electoral officer, John Hollins, says, "Oh yes, we do actual enumerations in some polls where we know we've got problems," but even then it's not done well. I add, as do other members in this assembly, that there were all kinds of problems in the last election, where people wanted to exercise their democratic franchise to vote and actually didn't get a chance because once they went to the voting station, it turned out they weren't on the voters list. Oh yes, they can work that out once they're inside the polling station, they can speak to the DRO and have that fixed up, but most people, because of the lineup, just said, "To heck with it, I'm out of here."

For all the candidates who ran in the last election—myself as the New Democratic incumbent, and the Liberal, Conservative and Green Party members—we had people who showed up to vote who didn't get to vote because they were not on the voters list.

We need proper enumeration, and I think the way you do that is the old standby that worked for many years before we invented computers, and that is, somebody goes to the door and knocks and says, "Who lives here?" It would be such a simple thing to do. Yes, it costs money, yes, it means that we have to spend a little bit more than we do now, but that's the cost of democracy. It's far better to spend money on enumeration than to have people have their right to vote taken away because they're not on the voters list.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: Totally disenfranchised.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Totally disenfranchised.

The other issue is the issue of First Nations. I want to point something out to you. October is hunting season in northern Ontario generally, but for First Nations, it is a sustenance, it is the way you get meat for the winter and the fall—by shooting goose, caribou and moose, and fishing, whatever it might be. Communities shut down entirely for a week or two or three, depending on the community, so that people can go back to the land and do the hunting they need to do in order to give them the food they need for the fall and winter months.

Election day, being October 10, falls right in the middle of the hunting season, so what you end up with is entire communities where about half of the people are not there on election day. Guess what? We don't have advance polls in First Nation communities. So if you want to be able to vote and you want to exercise again your democratic franchise, you don't have an advance poll. I guess some people in Toronto would say, "Well, just drive to the next community." Excuse me, but where I come from they can't drive because there are no roads. They're landlocked communities. You've got to get on a plane and fly out. There's 90% unemployment. The ticket from Peawanuck to get to Moosonee, where the advance poll is, is over 1,000 bucks return. If you've got six, seven or 10 people in the family who are of voting age, how can you even afford this? So let's do something really novel. Imagine that, having advance polls in aboriginal communities like Attawapiskat, Fort Albany and Big Trout Lake. Would it be so difficult to make that happen? Why don't we do that?

Last election, I had this fight with our returning officer in the Timmins-James Bay riding, and I brought it to the Chief Electoral Officer, and they were not able to fix it. As a result, the turnout in the last election on the James Bay was less than what we've had in previous elections, because the election fell smack dab in the middle of the aboriginal hunting season. Number two, we did not have advance polls. So we need to be able to have advance polls in those communities so people can vote.

We also need to look at, as far as I'm concerned, another issue that is really troubling, and that is where the polling stations are going to be. We had polling stations that were not accessible to people with handicaps.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: Disabilities.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Disabilities. Thank you very much.

I happened to hurt my knee badly playing hockey and I have to use a cane over the next couple of weeks to try to get that back, but there were people who couldn't access their polling station because it wasn't accessible. That is totally unacceptable in a society like Ontario today, in the last election in 2007, and certainly shouldn't be acceptable in the next election. We need to ensure that those polling stations are accessible to all citizens who wish to vote. So we need to have polling stations that are not only accessible but that can be found, which is my next point.

Some of the polling stations that we had were moved from where they had been in previous elections. For example, in the municipality of Hearst, everybody knows that on election day—federal election, municipal election, provincial election—we all go to the same place, les Chevaliers de Colomb, the Knights of Columbus hall, and all the polling stations are there. In the wisdom of those who organized the election the last time around, they moved the polling stations out of there and went and put them in local schools. This created a really interesting situation. Most people don't know that the polling station has been changed, so they walked or they took their cars and drove to the polling station that they had been used to voting in for many years. It wasn't there. So some of them actually didn't go and vote because they said, "To heck with it. I can't be bothered. This is a pain." Some who managed to find out where the polling station was, at the school, showed up there about 8:30 in the morning or whatever time it was to show up and do the vote. When they got there, the buses were all lining up to drop the kids off, the parents were coming in to drop their kids off or pick them up at the end of the school day. It created a confusion of traffic in front of the school like you haven't seen before.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: Dangerous for the kids.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: That's my point. My colleague the member from Hamilton Centre says, "Dangerous for the kids." Right on.

You had all of this traffic coming through, in and out of the school area, in order to have people go and vote. You had buses. You had kids running around. Something could have happened. I'm not saying that we should never use schools, because actually there are some schools that lend themselves to being good polling stations. But we need to take a look at the area where the voting is going to happen and where people are going to park and how they're going to get in and out. We don't want people interfering with the regular process within the school and kids being put at risk.

The other point I want to raise very quickly is, we also need to be careful from the security side. You have had people in the polling stations, and I've heard this from different elections, where people going in to vote got lost in the school and ended up walking in the hallways. That may not be a good thing for reasons—people can draw their own conclusions. I think we have to be a little bit more careful around that particular issue.

The other issue we need to take a look at—the other thing that drove me crazy, and I’m running out of time; I’m not going to have enough time—is that when people were badly enumerated and we had awful polls, we had people voting across town or cross-city or from municipality to municipality.

I’ll give you a little example. I had people who lived in Kapuskasing who had to drive to Moonbeam to go and vote. That’s a municipality a 20-minute drive outside of Kapuskasing. I had other people in Moonbeam who were registered to vote in Smooth Rock Falls, which is almost an hour down Highway 11. Obviously there were a lot of people who did not vote because, they said, “I’ve always voted in Moonbeam all my life, and I’m not about to get in my car and drive to Smooth Rock Falls to vote.”

For God’s sake, please let’s get ourselves together and make sure that people are put on the voter’s list at a polling station that is convenient for them to vote within their own community and their neighbourhood. But in the event that there is an error, we need a system so that the person is able to vote in a polling station, period.

For example, let’s say I’m working in Kapuskasing that day but I live in Timmins, and I’m still in the riding of Timmins–James Bay. That person may have forgotten or not had a chance to go to an advance poll vote. You should have the ability to walk into a polling station, prove your identity, have yourself added to the list and basically vote. That stuff is all cross-referenced at the end.

It was interesting: I met with the Chief Electoral Officer, John Hollins, after the election, and he told me there is very little voter fraud when it comes to people adding themselves to the list.

There are only 20 seconds left. I just say to this committee that there’s this and many other issues that we need to take a look at when reviewing the Electoral Act. We need to take this job seriously and hope it is not a partisan issue, or a partisan thing, that the government is doing in order to help themselves in our next election tryout. We need to have an election act that works for the public and all those people involved.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate? Does any other member wish to speak? The member for—

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: Leeds–Grenville. Thank you very much, Speaker. Sorry, I was in conversation under the gallery.

I appreciate the opportunity to very briefly speak to this. Our party, the Progressive Conservative Party, the official opposition, is supporting the motion. I will be also sharing my time with Mr. Yakabuski, the member for Renfrew–Nipissing–Pembroke.

I did want to take this opportunity to express a few concerns that I think are appropriate for review by the select committee. The major concern we’ve been raising in this Legislature for the past two weeks is the involvement of a group called Working Families in the last two provincial elections and how that falls within the purview of the election expenses act itself, and whether indeed there have been violations with respect to the third party, in this case Working Families, coordinating its activities with those of a registered political party, in this instance the Liberal Party of Ontario. We have serious concerns about that. We’ve raised issues related to that, and a series of what some might describe as coincidences, but we believe they may be much more than that and merit investigation.

I mentioned in this House on a couple of occasions an article that was in the June 15, 2007, edition of the Toronto Star, written by the former Queen’s Park correspondent for the Star, Ian Urquhart. That article appeared, as I said, June 15, and he was indicating that, looking ahead with a fixed election date, we knew the election was going to be in October and that Working Families was looking at re-forming in preparation for that election, and a decision on when to proceed would be made the following week.

The following week—to be precise, on June 18—purely by accident we, through a Freedom of Information request, discovered that the principals and those involved in the organization, Working Families, had met with the Minister of Finance at the time, Mr. Sorbara, who also served as chairman of the Liberal Party election campaign. We subsequently attempted to secure the minutes or an agenda from that meeting and were told that none existed, that there were no minutes of that meeting. No one had any knowledge of what transpired in that meeting.

So I think that if you look at Mr. Urquhart’s column, the meeting happening and then, I think very shortly thereafter, one of the participants in that meeting contributed $150,000 to Working Families; there’s a whole series of issues. This goes back, obviously, to 2003 and the relationship of third parties.

I know the province of Alberta has recently talked about bringing in legislation to ban third party advertising during writ periods. Apparently, some of the people involved in Working Families in Ontario also participated in the recent provincial election in the province of Alberta in an attempt to defeat the Progressive Conservative Party in that province, unsuccessfully.

Also, there’s an organization called Working Families in the great country of Australia. Again, these are unions, primarily made up of private and public sector unions, who spent more than all of the registered political parties in the federal election in Australia. So this is not just an Ontario phenomenon. It’s happening now across Canada, in Australia and in who knows how many other jurisdictions.

It should be troubling to anyone who cares about free and democratic elections. We should be concerned with respect to the select committee’s review of the election expenses act and what they will be considering as part of that review. I think this is a very important issue for the select committee to consider during their deliberations.

I have to point out that almost a year ago now we wrote Mr. Hollins, who was the election expenses commissioner, expressing our concerns and providing him with a very detailed letter with our concerns related to whether the act had been violated and whether Working Families, in coordination with the Liberal Party of Ontario, had collaborated. If they had done such, that activity would be subject to all the controls, contribution limits and spending limits that govern registered parties. If you look just at 2003, that would have meant that the Liberal Party was significantly in violation of the spending limits under the act.

We wrote that letter and followed it up with another letter a few weeks ago to Mr. Hollins, expressing serious concern about their failure to respond to that letter. Mr. Hollins is leaving in two or three more weeks. He is, in his position, an officer of the assembly. In that role he's responsible to all members of this place—to all members of this place. I don't like to be critical of the gentleman, as his days wind down in office, but we believe he has a moral responsibility to respond prior to departure and not leave this on the doorstep of his successor, whoever that may be. It's a very serious issue.

I'm certainly encouraging our representative, who I believe will be Mr. Sterling, the member for Carleton-Mississippi Mills, who is a dean of this place and certainly very knowledgeable with respect to all pieces of legislation the select committee will be reviewing—I'm certainly urging him to take a very proactive role in looking at this whole issue of third parties and ensuring that whoever succeeds Mr. Hollins will deal with this in an effective way, and that all Ontarians can feel comfortable as we go forward that the election laws of this province are not being subverted in any way, shape or form.

Mr. John Yakabuski: My colleague from Leeds-Grenville, the Leader of the Opposition, left me ample time to make the points that I have to make. In fact, I've got 20 minutes now, according to this. I don't think I'm going to need all of that, but I did want to make some comments.

I'm actually pleased that there is some kind of an action on the part of this legislative body. If this select committee is going to be empowered to do what I'm talking about today, I'm going to be even more pleased.

I wanted to talk about the 2007 election. When the government tabled Bill 214, which was the Election Statute Law Amendment Act, 2005, by the then minister for democratic renewal or whatever it was—the Honourable Marie Bountrogianni—one of the premises behind this piece of legislation was to improve the workings of elections and thereby encourage more people to get out and vote. In the 2007 election, after we approved this legislation, we went to the lowest voter turnout in the history of this province. Part of the reason was some of the things that they did in this legislation and how it made it so difficult for people to get out and vote.

Mr. Jeff Leal: Big turnout in Barry's Bay.

Mr. John Yakabuski: No, it wasn't a big turnout in Barry's Bay. I'm just responding to the member for Peterborough. He likes to talk whenever I'm talking. He makes a point of coming in here. I don't think they're giving him enough speaking time.

The percentage in my riding in 2003 was 64%. In 2007, 59% was the voter turnout in my riding—still high relative to the rest of the province, but much lower than it had been in 2003. Part of the reason was some of the changes and some of the enforcement that was done as a result of Bill 214.

Let me talk about this silly notion about the rules that apply in Toronto, where nobody seems to know each other. I live on a floor in an apartment building, and some of the people on that floor I've never even met, but in Barry's Bay, Renfrew, Pembroke, Arnprior or Brockville they know one another.

We had situations in the last election where somebody would go in to vote, and they would be in a room full of people where everyone knew each other, and these would be senior citizens who are intimidated, to say the least, when somebody says, "Where's your photo ID?" "Oh, but you know me." "Where's your photo ID?" That was the kind of thing that was going on at this last election. We'd have senior citizens come in. They almost wanted to turn around; in fact, some people did turn around, and they failed to exercise their franchise. So what did we accomplish in this bill?

We also had other people who went through the process but felt absolutely insulted by it. I had people come up to me after the election and say to me, "John, I voted for you in the last election, but I won't be voting for you again"—and, before those Liberals over there get themselves encouraged, I just want to finish the job here—"because I won't be voting for anybody," is what they said, "because I've exercised my last vote in an Ontario provincial election because of the way you treat people," because of the way you insult them when they walk into a polling place and they have to identify themselves with a picture ID when everybody in that room, every DRO, every poll clerk—sometimes three times they have to—

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: Give your name three times.

Mr. John Yakabuski: —give your name three times, your address, recite it. I went through it myself. I had no problem with it, but I'm going to tell you: People like my mother-in-law, Elma Smith, from Eganville—who turned 75 today, by the way. Happy birthday, Elma. My wife will give me the gears for doing this, but—

Mr. Jeff Leal: She used to support Conway, didn't she?

Mr. John Yakabuski: I don't know—no; not likely.

Look: You tell that member from Peterborough that he's going to get his turn.

Interjection.

Mr. John Yakabuski: I didn't see it.

Anyway, she feels intimidated by that. My mother-in-law was born in Germany. She certainly never went to school in this country. I'm not sure what schooling she would have had in Germany, but she was a war refugee, basically. She never drove a car in her life either, by the way, so she doesn't have a driver's licence picture ID. She had a hard time finding the necessary pieces of identification to go to vote because her citizenship papers were burned when they lost their home in 1975. So there are all kinds of different things surrounding that, but you have to go through that same rigmarole, answer all those intimidating questions. I heard this time and time again from people, and it's all because of voting irregularities in the cities, where people were voting twice, they were voting fraudulently. So now we bring in a system that says everybody is going to have to go through this kind of repetitive process.

I see some Liberal members nodding because the same things went on in their ridings. This is not just about Renfrew–Nipissing–Pembroke. This is for the good of all of the province of Ontario. When you make changes and they turn out to be worse than what you had before—and the best arbitrator of that is the voter turnout. When we go to the lowest voter turnout in the history of this province, it should tell you that something is wrong. I spoke to Mr. Hollins about this after the election, and he agreed: The numbers that we showed were disgraceful.

The fact that we had this referendum and everything else—you would have thought that maybe there might be a higher voter turnout because there might be some people who are more interested in voting because there was a referendum on the ballot that they may be interested in, whether they'd be for the referendum or opposed to the referendum, but it may give them more incentive to vote. But in spite of that, fewer people than ever—not fewer people in numbers, but a lower percentage of people voted in the past provincial election than ever in the history of the province of Ontario.

So you have to ask yourself, "Did we do the right thing?" The answer has to be no. I'm not saying that everything about Bill 214 was wrong or was bad, but clearly, in the final analysis, what it accomplished was more bad than it was good, to put it bluntly. "Bad" and "good" is a pretty stark way of saying it, I suppose, but for the sake of argument, we'll just say it that way.

There has to be something done between now and the next provincial election, because it should be the responsibility and the desire of this chamber to ensure that every person who has the right to vote in the province of Ontario is given every opportunity to do just that. We should not erect obstacles in their way that in fact discourage them from voting.

There's no question about it: We don't want people voting fraudulently, and we don't want people who don't have the right to vote going in and casting a ballot. We don't want any of those kinds of election irregularities. We want the elections to be clean, we want them to be honest and we want them to be fair. But at the same time, we have to find that balance so that each and every person who has the right to vote in this province or any other province, any jurisdiction—the mantra, the desire and what our goal should be is that we see voter turnouts increase continuously in this province, because the best way of ensuring that you have elected the government that is the choice of the people is by having the highest voter turnout; then the most people who can exercise their franchise have indeed done that, exercised their franchise. So the government of the day can at least say they have the support of X number of people. If you extrapolate it, and I haven't done the math, I think the government got about 42% or 43% of the vote in the last provincial election—42-point-something. But if it's 42-point-something of 51, how many people actually voted for the government, or, in my case, how many people actually voted for me?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: This isn't a new problem.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Well, I didn't say it was a new problem—I'm looking at the minister of consumer and business services, or something like that; I got it pretty close there. I'm not even going to try the riding. It's tougher: Ancaster something or other. You know what I mean.

1550

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: Plus they changed the name.

Mr. John Yakabuski: It changed from the last time.

He says it's not a new problem. I'm not saying it's a new problem, but maybe it's time for a new solution so we don't see the 50% or 51% voter turnout in the last election go down to 49%, 47% or 46%.

Hon. Ted McMeekin: Do you want to do what they do in Australia?

Mr. John Yakabuski: The minister is asking me a question. It's not question period, but I'm going to answer the question anyway. They're not used to questions being asked and answered, but I'm going to try.

No, I don't think we should do what they do in Australia. I don't think we should make it compulsory to go out and vote. It should be voluntary, but we should do everything we can to encourage people to vote and not erect obstacles in their way, which is exactly what happened in the last provincial election.

I can't emphasize strongly enough that it should be part of this committee's mandate to ensure that when we go into the election period in 2011, we've done everything we possibly can do to ensure that each and every person who has the right to vote in this province is encouraged to do so and, in fact, may do so.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: It's a pleasure to follow the member from Renfrew–Nipissing–Pembroke, and I'm going to pick up where he left off. I don't think Toronto is a cold and distant place. We have many neighbourhoods and communities where many people know each other quite well. But I do agree that there was a very onerous requirement with photo identification, and I want to speak in part about why that's an onerous requirement for those who live marginalized lifestyles.

We have many people in south Parkdale who live rough, as it's called, who move from room to room, who sometimes are homeless due, in part, to the economic policies of the members opposite. Then, when it comes time to exercise their franchise, another hurdle is thrown their way. People who are thrown hurdles every hour of their existence are thrown yet another hurdle, and the hurdle is photo identification. As the member pointed out, that's often difficult if you don't have a driver's licence. It's very difficult for people who live rough and are homeless, because the first thing that gets stolen is their identification, and there's a continual treadmill to try to get new identification.

Luckily, we knew in advance, and I want to praise those from Parkdale Activity-Recreation Centre, who worked with their clientele. It's a large drop-in in my community. A lot of people go there to eat every day. They serve thousands every year, and they know their clients. They know them really well; they know them on a first-name basis. They were able to help them get the necessary identification, but, boy, it was a struggle. So that's an issue that really has to be looked at going into the next election.

What I would really like to spend some time on is to ask everybody here to cast their minds back to a by-election—my by-election—that happened in 2005. I won an empty seat. It was vacated by a certain man of mystery, Gerard Kennedy. Does anybody remember him? I don't know what he's doing now. For personal, ambitious reasons, he left the people of Parkdale-High Park to go elsewhere. We—all of us—aren't quite clear where, but he went elsewhere. So the riding opened up, and I ran. It was an interesting and eye-opening experience, first of all, for a woman to run, and second, for a United Church minister to run in a riding where, when the Liberal Party found they were losing in the polls, they unleashed what John McGrath called one of the worst smear campaigns ever.

My suggestion for this particular committee is that people look at the ethics of how they campaign. I have to say that I hope things improve, but I suspect that they haven't, because I already see cyber-bullying, for example, on behalf of those across the way. Of course, the same people will stand up very self-righteously and talk about how cyber-bullying is a very bad thing in our schools and for our children, and then engage in the practice themselves against members of the opposition on YouTube.

Why don't we look at the ethics of campaigning? That would be something this committee could look at. In my case, I was stunned, I was outraged to see cabinet ministers at the subways handing out smear campaign material that attacked my integrity as a United Church minister, my standing in my community, my congregation, through me, and my family. That kind of campaigning should be looked at. It is absolutely unacceptable, and they're at it again. Presumably, this is a new move, or certainly a move towards the ugly, seamy side of American politics—not to single out our brothers and sisters to the south; I'm sure it's done around the world, but it was new to me. I was outraged. I had no idea that a political party could sink so low, but they did. So if there's anything that this committee needs to look at, it's the ethics of the way in which political parties campaign; certainly I would point that out.

Second of all, of course what's really important is the way that campaigns are financed. I hold up here some examples of places that do that way better. Federally, each party receives 50% of expenses incurred. If it obtains 2% of valid votes overall or 5% of valid votes, that's better. In Quebec, it's better. If a party receives 1% of votes, the party receives 50% of incurred expenses, to a maximum of 60 cents per elector. Manitoba and Saskatchewan similarly—I could go into those, but suffice to say they're not allowed to take donations from corporations or unions.

There was a very interesting article by Murray Campbell in the Globe and Mail some months back. He described the experience of going to a Liberal fundraiser and then to a Progressive Conservative fundraiser. Interestingly enough, he discovered the same corporations sitting there, the same corporations hedging their bets, donating to both parties. For example, asked why he attended a $10,000-a-plate Liberal fundraiser, developer Silvio DeGasperis said bluntly, "I wanted to speak to Dalton about my [development] issue in Pickering. I knew the reason I was there." That certainly has to stop.

We, in the New Democratic Party, have long called for an end to union donations, corporation donations. This needs to stop. Even Allan Taylor, a former CEO of the Royal Bank of Canada, said, "Financially effective as it may be, the current system of corporate fundraising doesn't help with [the] broader purpose [of] continuing the democratization of our politics." This committee should not only look at the ethics of the way in which campaigns are run, it should also look at the way campaigns are financed.

Another aspect of elections that it should look at is the way our votes are cast and counted. It was quite a travesty the way citizens from this province, who put in hours of their own time, weekends away from their families, to listen to a number of deputants about different systems of voting, had the rug pulled out from them just when they presented their findings, and that of course was the mixed member proportional findings.

Interestingly enough, the bill that was brought in calling for a "yes" vote in at least 60% of all valid referendum ballots cast and a "yes" vote in more than 50% of valid referendum ballots cast in 60% of the ridings—at least 64 electoral districts—was ridiculously high. I mean, this by a government that was elected with 42% of the vote. A government with 42% of the vote demands this of the electorate when looking at the way in which we vote. Along with everything else, it was mixed in with the general election instead of being set apart as a referendum unto itself with the proper explanations given, the proper education offered. It was sad the way that citizens' committee was used and abused. Their findings and their recommendations were treated as if these were the ideas of some crackpot instead of ideas that have led to proportional representation in over 70 countries in the world. Over 70 countries in the world use some form of proportional representation, and yet this idea was not given the light of day, was not given its due merits. Again, I feel sorry for them.

Here are the points that I'm going to make, and my colleague from Hamilton East-Stoney Creek is going to offer his input as well.

Number one: Let's look at the ethics of campaigning. As we all know in this chamber, the campaign started the day after the last campaign was won or lost, as the case may be. Certainly, if what's happening on YouTube with cyber-bullying of opposition members is any indication, this government's ethics have not improved since the last election. That's number one.

Number two: Let's look at the way campaigns are financed. Let's make that fair. Let's bring that in line with our federal brothers and sisters.

Number three: Let's look at perhaps giving a citizens' group their real shrift in terms of taking their ideas seriously about the very election process we engage in.

I might add a subtle fourth one, and that is simply that once you get here, once you get elected, we should be looking at the change in standing orders. The so-called reason given that it's family-friendly, we all know, is absolutely no reason to change when question period happens. That needs to be looked at too. In fact, for most women in this chamber, certainly for most in the opposition, it has added two hours to our day; it hasn't taken away any time at all or given us any more time to spend with our families. It has actually taken that away.

I'll leave some time for my colleague, but again, we will be watching closely what this committee comes up with. I will be watching, only so that we can encourage women in the future to run and not have to put up with and go through what I went through and put up with: the ethics of the campaigning of the Liberal Party of Ontario.

Mr. Paul Miller: I'd like to touch on a few things that haven't been discussed about the election process. One of the things that stood out in my mind during my election was the fact that people were not notified about the changing of polling stations. Some of them were sent to one, two or three different polling stations. By the time they got to the third one, they'd given up and decided not to vote, and they had voted all their lives. That especially is a burden to the elderly population, who find it a struggle to get to the first polling station. I found that very alarming.

Second: questionable identity. I must say that I disagree with the speaker for the official opposition on the fact of identity cards. I believe that those are very important in an urban setting because of identity problems. The opposition person who ran against me from the ruling party—there were even people showing up who weren't Canadian citizens to vote. We caught this on more than one occasion, which I found really upsetting—that someone would pull a stunt like that.

When I went through the process of setting up the election, we were discussing new or future locations of polling stations. I found that people from the three, four or five parties that ran were arguing over location due to a strategic advantage. Some people would prefer to have it at a certain school or a certain church because it was an advantage to them because it was in walking distance of some of their strong support areas, which I find is unfair and not democratic. That has to be looked at also.

I must commend the returning officer, Ms. Joyce Newman, from my area. She did a wonderful job under duress and under stress for lack of volunteers, lack of training time and a host of other problems that cropped up during the election which she dealt with very professionally. Luckily, in my area I had a person with a lot of experience, so she really handled it quickly and efficiently.

I must say that there are a lot of things that are wrong with the process. This committee being struck is a good thing, but I hope that some of the problems that I faced won't fall on deaf ears as we bring it forward through the discussion period.

The outgoing administrator was faced with these problems for many, many years. He did meet with resistance, whether it was from the governing body or other parties, to leave the system the way it was. A lot of them were happy as long as they were on top, but when things changed, they had a problem with it. So he was doing a balancing act all the way through the system: "Should I change this? Should I not? Is the governing party happy? Is the opposition not?" This went on and on for many years. It's long overdue.

I'd just like to touch on the financial aspect. I agree with my fellow member about making it similar to the federal in having non-union and non-corporate donations. The corporate donations in my area favoured the individual from the governing party in reference to developers and builders. They weren't big on donating to our party for whatever reason, but they seem to have had an upper hand on decisions in our community. I don't think that's fair. I think the system should be based on money given back from the government on your percentage, like the amount per voter.

So there are a lot of disadvantages to the present system that can be rectified in an expedient manner. I believe we should move in that direction quickly and make these elections fair and up front.

Identity has been a big problem in our area for people that are eligible to vote. There were even times when taxis were pulling up in front of polling stations with people who weren't even from our area. Because they were so busy, and the polling clerks were so busy, sometimes they didn't ask for ID; sometimes they'd push through. There were people voting who were deceased.

These are the kinds of games that go on. They've got to be stopped. If we run these elections more fairly, and without the personal attacks that my colleague went through, maybe the results will be a little different. Maybe people will have more of a say on the outcome of the provincial election when not being influenced by big money, intimidation and rumours. I think it's just terrible, some of the things that some parties will do to win.

We all want a fair process. We're all, here, decent people trying to do the right thing. But some of the things the people in this Legislature will do on YouTube and other things are below their position, below their moral right.

I hope in the future that this is dealt with quickly, with a lot of thought and a lot of compassion behind it. It's been a pretty cold process for too many years, and I want to see it changed.

COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LA NÉGOCIATION COLLECTIVE DANS LES COLLÈGES

Resuming the debate adjourned on June 11, 2008, on the motion for second reading of Bill 90, An Act to enact the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, to repeal the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act and to make related amendments to other Acts / Projet de loi 90, Loi édictant la Loi de 2008 sur la négociation collective dans les collèges, abrogeant la Loi sur la négociation collective dans les collèges et apportant des modifications connexes à d'autres lois.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Further debate.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I welcome the citizens once again to this political forum. We're on live. It's 9:03. Yesterday I postulated that the House leader changed the rules in order to have debates at 9 o'clock in order to please those who are from out of town and who have nothing to do in the evening except go to bed at 9 o'clock, and get up at 5 or 6 in the morning, and they want to get here to Queen's Park at 7 because they're so bored and they're so sleepy that they need to get here and work. I postulated that. But I could be wrong. Peter Kormos would be here at 3 in the morning if he had to. I think he's that kind of a guy.

I was worried about why it is that the House leader changed the rules. Who knows? It could be that they changed the rules because people at home were simply bored. At 9 o'clock in the morning, they just didn't know what to do, and they were looking for excitement in this place. They said, "We've got something for you." For whatever reason that you might be up in the morning at 9 o'clock—you might have a disability; you might be laid off; you might be unemployed—for whatever reason, people needed an important distraction, people needed to watch something that was exciting, that could turn them away from their boredom. So this is it; this is what they get. Early in the morning, people get up, have a coffee—not a beer anymore. No beer, no red wine; just a coffee to stiffen them up and ready them for the debate. It's 9:05 in the morning; we are on live, in case you're up, ready and alert and alive to watch this political forum.

I'm happy to continue the debate on Bill 90. You will recall that this bill is about giving collective bargaining rights to college teachers who haven't had the rights for 33 years. They've been pushing governments, and they've been pushing this particular government for the last two years. Yesterday I had an opportunity to thank OPSEC AAT president Roger Couvrette and OPSEU president Warren "Smokey" Thomas for their relentless work to persuade the Liberals that they needed to bring a bill forward that finally recognized their right to collective bargaining. Yesterday I pointed out—

Mr. Khalil Ramal: We listened.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: They listened. It takes two long, painful years to listen. The minister yesterday said that when he went to that reception of college teachers, it was at that moment, when he spoke to them, that he finally realized he had to do it and that he had to deliver it for them—because he might never have met a college teacher before. But only at that time, when he met them face to face here at Queen's Park, he was given some revelation, and he said, "I've got to do it. I've got to do it today." That is what he said.

Delay and deny. Then people make reference to what other governments may have done in 1862, 1892, 1940 and so on. You are in government with the four big wheels that take you all over Ontario. You are the managers of this place. Not to say, "What did you do?" We are in opposition pushing you to do something. You are the government who says, "We're doing it." We wait and we wait, and finally when they deliver, they say, "We had to take our time to do it right." Whenever they don't want to do something, they need to take their time to do it right. It takes so long for governments to listen to what people have to say. That's why we introduced Bill 13.

My bill—I introduced it twice in this place. The government never listened to me, never even acknowledged that I introduced that bill or that I had asked questions in this Legislature or that Roger Couvrette, who was in this place, had anything to do with convincing, persuading, pushing this government to introduce this bill. It's okay; we don't need to be acknowledged by the government. The only time the government acknowledges someone is when a Liberal backbencher stands up, asks a silly question and then they say, "What a great member we've got from here and there, doing great things." That's the only time they praise somebody. When opposition members have questions or bills in this House, they dismiss you. That's what they always do. But that's okay. Our job is to do our job, to present the facts, to present the arguments, to help the government every now and then to do something. It takes time, but that's okay. Eventually they deliver.

Here's the point. Remember the context in which I presented these facts. Colleges have been underfunded for a long time. In spite of what the government says about their historic funding, we are still numéro dix, at the bottom of the pack, in terms of funding in Canada. We are number 10. In spite of your Reaching Higher plan, the supposed $6 billion, you are proudly number 10 in per capita funding. I say to you: It's nothing to be proud of. It's a shameful statistic.

Mr. Bas Balkissoon: It's just a statistic.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Exactly. It's just a statistic; $6 billion is just a number. You just throw it out there. You're absolutely right. That's typical of what Liberals do on a regular basis. We have given so much and we are at the bottom of the heap. You can't be proud of those facts; it's embarrassing.

Here's a little fact—it's not a prop, really; it's written by Colleges Ontario, the very groups the Liberals were praising yesterday. They rarely praise them except when they do something that may please them, and then they say—actually, this doesn't necessarily please them all that much.

Here's a stat: Real operating funding per FTE—full-time students—for colleges in 2007-08 remained about 16% lower than in 1992-93. You understand, in 1992-93, when we were in government, in a recession—you're giving less today than we were in a recession. You have faced years of good economic times. In contrast, college enrolment levels were almost 20% higher, you understand. You are giving 16% less per capita than we were in 1992-93—nothing to be proud of; nothing at all to be proud of.

That's the context that I give: that people need to understand the problems that colleges have been facing. They have been cutting back and they have been hiring part-time teachers in order to save as much money as they possibly can. Half of the college teachers in the system work part-time. They're part-time because they're cheap labour. That's what it was: cheap labour in order to save money. Colleges did that because they haven't been getting enough support from this provincial Liberal government for many, many years. Finally, we have Bill 90, which is going to give collective bargaining rights to college teachers and other support staff. We believe it's time they delivered; after denying and delaying, they've delivered something.

Here's the problem: The Supreme Court said they have a right; the International Labour Organization said they have a right. You, Liberal government, should deliver on that right. It isn't enough for the Liberals simply to give the right; they have to give the right by taking something else away. That's the way the Liberals do it. It wasn't simple enough for them to just give the right; they have to give and take at the same time in order to divide labour as best they can, in order to divide the opposition as best they can. That's what Liberals do on a regular basis.

What have they done? The new bill removes the deemed strike and lockout provisions. These provisions determined that when a bargaining unit was on a legal strike or lockout, the employees were deemed to be on strike or locked out and, as a result, no employee would receive any pay or benefits for the duration of the strike or the lockout. This provision effectively dissuaded any bargaining unit employee from crossing the picket line and prevented the employer from hiring employees from the unit during a lockout.

OPSEU president Warren "Smokey" Thomas said, "It is pretty outrageous that this government thinks that recognizing the charter rights of one group of workers means that another group of workers must give something up." He's absolutely right. You just couldn't give a right without having to take something else away. We decry that; OPSEU decries that; many college workers decry that. That is why we want to have the hearings: to allow college teachers and OPSEU members to come and speak to this bill, to either give praise or criticism of this particular bill. After that, we can come back, debate it one final time and deal with the problems that have been raised for the last 33 years.

With that, we have submitted our arguments as New Democrats. We have no desire to delay the hearings. We want hearings to happen. We will not put up other speakers; we feel the arguments have been made. We look forward to the hearings this summer to give the workers an opportunity to speak to Bill 90, after which we can come back, debate those changes and deal with this as effectively and efficaciously as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Questions or comments?

Mr. Reza Moridi: Yesterday and today, the honourable member for Trinity-Spadina spoke quite lengthily, though he spent a good part of his speech on matters that really didn't relate to this bill. He claims that our government delayed in bringing this bill to the House, but the honourable member failed to acknowledge the fact that when his party was in government in 1992, they didn't look into this bill.

I'm proud that our government, under the leadership of our Premier, looked into this bill, looked into this fact that our part-time college teachers need to have the right to collectively bargain. Our Minister Milloy, Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities, took the leadership and looked into the case. He asked Kevin Whitaker, who is one of the most expert persons in labour relations, to review the current act, consult stakeholders and come up with a report.

Changing this bill is not something where you can just look at it, delete some articles and add another article. This is very important legislation before this House. It affects the lives of 17,500 people. We have to look into this very carefully. That's what our government, our minister, has done.

We have asked a very expert person in this area to review the current legislation and come up with a report.

The report is public. This present bill that is before the House is based on the recommendations given by Mr. Whitaker. In our college system, there are 39,000 people working, and 17,500 of those people didn't have the right to collectively bargain. Based on this legislation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Thank you. Further questions and/or comments? Being none, further debate?

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak this morning on Bill 90, An Act to enact the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, to repeal the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act and to make related amendments to other Acts.

I'll begin by saying what other members of the caucus have said, including my colleague from Simcoe North yesterday, that we fully appreciate, as does the PC caucus, the work of all the world-class universities and colleges that we are fortunate to have here in the province of Ontario.

I know that many of our offices have met over the years with the part-time workers at the colleges, asking for this act to be repealed and changes made. In my riding of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock, I had, a couple of times, a great delegation—I believe they were all ladies—who came in to see me about the repealing of this act and the changes they would like to see happening. They do tremendous work at our colleges. All the staff do.

I know that in my riding we have Fleming College, formerly known as Sir Sandford Fleming College. I have the Frost campus in my area, in Lindsay. I also have a satellite campus in Haliburton, which is a school of fine arts, but it does offer many different classes as the years have evolved. They have a beautiful new campus there. In the last six or seven years since it opened, it's been just a tremendous campus to visit. The home campus, Fleming College, is in Peterborough, so I share that with my colleague from Peterborough; Fleming College has branches in both of our ridings. Trent University is in Peterborough, and of course a lot of people from my riding go over to Trent University.

Bonnie Patterson is at Trent University, and we now have the great Tony Tilly as president of Fleming College. The past president, Brian Desbiens, was president for over two decades, and they just dedicated a great technology wing of Fleming College in Peterborough to him for all the work he has done, not just with the college, but he's a tremendous community person—all the committees he sits on that have helped and enhanced our communities. I thank him for that dedication and work. I know that the principal at Fleming College, Blaine Harvey, is doing a great job at the Frost campus.

The college system was the brainchild of Bill Davis, the former Premier. It was a fabulous idea. I myself am a graduate of the nursing diploma program at Loyalist College. The nursing program has evolved; it's now a degree program. But the colleges are still a big part of that. I know that Fleming College and Trent University have a partnership—many others do across the province of Ontario—and the coordinated efforts that both of them make are truly exceptional. Fleming College is always coming to my office and asking, "What do you think the community needs? What courses can we offer?"

Fleming College has an incredible reputation for its environmental wing, which was built within the last 10 years. They have the Centre for Alternative Wastewater Treatment, which promotes constructed wetlands and other innovative forms of waste water treatment, and they have a demonstration site right there where you see the weeds and cattails and everything that's filtered through. They've gone up to northern Canada and instituted that. I know that they've been recognized globally for their awards, and all from a small campus in Lindsay: the Frost campus. They have certainly been great partners in our community. I know that they were working with business incubators, and we'd love to see some environmental businesses come and start up in partnership with them, using Fleming College and other close-proximity properties we have. That initiative is going to expand, and that is just fabulous for our area. The colleges are fortunate to have Linda Franklin as CEO of Colleges Ontario.

I have a November 2007 note from the College Compensation and Appointments Council with respect to the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, which is the topic of the bill we're discussing today, and I want to get a couple of points on the record. In terms of support staff, the college pays 100% of the wages and benefits for the support union bargaining team, which consists of seven members, for every day of face-to-face negotiations, plus seven days' preparation—in 2005, that was increased to 10 days' preparation. The last round of negotiations, in 2005, which was a total of 23 days, cost an estimated $33,651; in 2003, that cost was $43,548. So in terms of academic staff, the college pays the seven members their full wages and benefits from the date that notice is given until the signing of a collective bargaining agreement.

In this case, notice of the last round of negotiations for academic staff was sent in January 2005, and negotiations ended in August 2006, 19 months later—long negotiations. The average annual salary for the seven members of the support union bargaining team was nearly $75,000. The total cost of the negotiation—again, it lasted some 19 months—was $1,007,000. I just want to put it out there that this isn't cheap; collective bargaining agreements cost a lot of money just to get established in the first place. So I'm very interested in what the minister would have to say about the increased cost of negotiations. What are his estimates going to be on this? Have they considered it? I know that we're here today and we want to send this to committee for further discussion, but I'm hoping that the ministry has done some background work on the cost. It's essentially taxpayers' money, and it's only fair that taxpayers know what that money is being used for.

I know that the PCs and the Liberals differ greatly on accountability. It's quite apparent that for the Liberals, accountability only matters once the media catches on, which leads me to this real issue of funding. I know that my colleague just mentioned that Ontario colleges received the lowest per-student government funding of all the provinces. That's a pretty pronounced fact that we can't ignore. The Premier, as has his MO, in fact promised to bring the funding to the national average. He signed a pledge—another one of his MOs; signing pledges saying he would do so. I think it was over eight years ago that he signed the pledge. Extending those bargaining rights would increase the cost to colleges up to the $200-million figure.

If the colleges are to go down this path, they'll have to have financial support from the government. This is going to cost. You can't expect the colleges themselves to bear the full brunt of this; they'll have to have some provincial money. I've already mentioned that they receive the lowest per-student government funding of all the provinces. So I think it's a fair question to the minister to explain this to the people of Ontario.

I want to comment on the apprenticeship-journeyman ratio in this province. I know that my colleague from Simcoe North has been a strong advocate of apprenticeships for many, many years—ever since I've been in the Legislature. He's been a great mentor to me; I'm very passionate about the apprenticeship program. He has brought forward some good suggestions, and I hope we're here next Thursday, because I want to debate my resolution that would establish—

Mr. Peter Kormos: Dream on. The Liberals have run out of steam.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I know. I wish they wouldn't, because they need to change this apprenticeship ratio to one to one, instead of being the odd one out in the whole country. In Ontario today, it's a three-to-one ratio. We want more skilled trades out there. We want the one-to-one apprenticeship ratio. We need it for our province; we need to do this for our children. This motion is being brought forward next Thursday, and I hope the government would support that. The one thing that is highlighted many, many times is the need for more skilled trades in Ontario.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak this morning and brag a little bit about the colleges in my riding: Fleming College and its two campuses in Lindsay and Haliburton. I know that this bill is going to committee. I have raised some questions this morning, and more questions will be raised as we go to committee, so we're going to end this debate from our side. Thank you very much for the opportunity.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Questions and comments?

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I'm delighted to comment on the member from Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock. She spoke about many details. It's important to remind the member that there's been no government in the past that has worked with the colleges and universities like our government has. While we're looking forward to—

Mr. Mike Colle: Dispense.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Your own whip is trying to shut you down.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: It's very important for all of us to—

Interjections.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: Nobody is listening this morning.

It's important to remind the member about our initiative to always support the colleges and universities. I'm happy to go out there and tell the people.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Questions and comments? Further debate?

The member has two minutes to respond. No?

Mr. Milloy has moved second reading of Bill 90. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Second reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Shall the bill be ordered for third reading?

Hon. Michael Bryant: I ask that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on General Government.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): So ordered.
Orders of the day.

PRAYER IN THE LEGISLATURE

Hon. Michael Bryant: I believe we have unanimous consent to put forward a motion respecting the report of the Speaker's panel on prayer in the Legislature, and that each party be allotted up to 10 minutes to speak to such motion, following which the Speaker shall put the question without debate or amendment.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Hon. Michael Bryant: I move that the Speaker commence each meeting day of the assembly by reciting the Lord's Prayer, followed by another prayer, or the presentation of a verse or passage, or call for a moment of silent reflection, or any such other similar activity which, in the opinion of the Speaker, will serve to reflect over time the general demographic composition of this chamber and of the province of Ontario.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Debate?

Hon. Michael Bryant: We are debating a motion the subject of which has not been considered by this Legislature since 1969. It is a motion addressing an important ritual that takes place at the opening of this Legislature—namely, the opening prayers.

This subject and issue, this ritual, the reading of the prayers by the Speaker, is the domain of the Legislature. We are debating a legislative recommendation which is set out in a report unanimously submitted by an all-party panel, chaired by the Speaker, and signed by the committee members, MPPs Balkissoon, Dunlop and DiNovo, and attached to a letter to the Premier from the Speaker of June 11.

The recommendation was—and I'm going to read from the report: "The panel has concluded that it is appropriate for each day of the Legislature to continue to be opened with the recitation by the Speaker of the Lord's Prayer." It goes on to say: "It is not explicitly and unambiguously inclusive of all faiths. To address this shortcoming, the panel recommends that the existing non-denominational prayer be discontinued—that's the prayer that takes place at the immediate opening of the Legislature—and that "the Speaker will lead the House in an additional prayer" following the recitation of the Lord's Prayer. That additional prayer could also be a "moment of silent reflection such that the faith and non-faith demographics of the chamber and of the province would be proportionally expressed over time. It is expected that the Speaker would be assisted in the collection of suitable prayers for this purpose by members of the Legislature and by faith groups."

That recommendation is being effected in this motion. The report was a response to a letter sent by the Premier to the Speaker on February 11—sorry; let me correct that. It was not a letter to the Speaker; it was a letter to the leader of the official opposition and the leader of the third party, Mr. Runciman and Mr. Hampton. In that letter, the Premier stated:

"The last time the Ontario Legislature updated the daily prayer recited in the legislative chamber was in 1969. Our counterparts in other provinces and the federal government have adjusted their customs to reflect the diversity of the population."

The Premier goes on to propose "that we form a legislative committee to be chaired by the Speaker," and then it goes on to propose what the all-party agreement ended up consisting of: one member from the government, one from the official opposition and one from the third party. The Premier then writes, "Based on that advice, [the panel] would make recommendations to the Legislature on a new procedure to open our daily proceedings."

He says in closing, "The members of the Ontario Legislature reflect the diversity of Ontario—be it Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muslim, Sikh or agnostic. It is time for our practices to do the same. That is the Ontario way."

That is the Premier in his letter to the leaders of the official opposition and the third party. Again, we are today debating an all-party committee recommendation. Is it a perfect result? Perhaps not. Is it a consensus recommendation? Yes. Is it the resolution of an all-party committee? Yes. Is it one that certainly members of our caucus and, my understanding is, all members of this Legislature support? Absolutely.

I want to give credit to the members of provincial Parliament—Mr. Balkissoon, Mr. Dunlop, Ms. DiNovo—and the Speaker for forging a consensus and finding a way in which this Legislature would open that not only had the support of the Legislature but reflected the differences of the members of this Legislature and the differences that exist within our province.

I always personally felt that the Legislature opening with a Christian prayer—and it is a Christian prayer. It's one recited in my church; it's not one that I am aware of being recited in synagogues, temples or mosques. It made me wonder whether the members of the Legislature who were not members of the faith that I have, the faith that recites the Lord's Prayer, found this to be an exclusionary moment—in other words, a moment where the official ritual of the Legislature included one denomination's prayer but not another's. The effect of that was certainly not the intention of any members of the Legislature, I know.

In 1969, when this was looked at, the diversity of the Legislature was nothing like it is now. The diversity of the province was nothing like it is now. It was without question an inadvertent ritual, arguably, of exclusion for those people who do not share the mainstream religious faith that is shared, held and worshipped in some cases by a majority of the population here in Ontario.

This is an effort to reflect the diversity not only of this Legislature. I think we can all imagine standing in the shoes of those who do not share the religion to which the Lord's Prayer is attached and imagine what it would feel like if that was the only prayer recited in the Legislature. It might be one of exclusion.

I want to say in closing that I believe this to be a very good resolution, not just because we have addressed the issue of equality and equal liberty and religious equality. Governments must, under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, take a position that is not fundamentally secular but in fact is equal. In other words, one religion cannot be preferred over another.

The Legislature does not operate under the domain, for example, of the Human Rights Code. That has been settled by the courts. The Legislature is governed by the people in the Legislature. By forging this solution, resolution and recommendation, I believe that the province and this Legislature—again, very much to the credit of Mr. Balkissoon, Mr. Dunlop, Ms. DiNovo and the Speaker—have come forward with a recommendation that also reflects our politics.

The religious divisions in the United States, for example, drive into political divisions, and parties form around those divisions. The democratic debate, to a large degree in the United States—perhaps decreasingly so, but nonetheless it is the case that much of that debate is driven by those political divisions based on religious divisions.

We have not done that. We have found in this Legislature a solution. The report has recommended a solution that is not divisive but rather seeks to be inclusive; that does not reflect division within the Legislature but in fact is one that is unanimous of the panel. It is my hope that it will be supported by this House, but it will be for this House to decide.

In doing so, I believe we have not only modernized the ritual of the Legislature but we have also allowed for Ontario and Canadian politics to reflect a unique identity that does not allow religious divisions to drive political parties and to drive political movements but is one that reflects the equality in Canada for which we are very proud; one that reflects political divisions, yes, but is not driven by denominational differences; and one that reflects the multiculturalism of the province and of Canada.

I would say, as the Premier says in his closing words: That is the Ontario way.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Further debate?

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I'm very pleased this morning to respond on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party to the motion that's before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to begin by thanking you for your leadership on running the all-party panel and coming forward with this motion, which I think is a very fair motion for this House to adopt. I also want to thank Mr. Balkissoon and Ms. DiNovo for their input and of course your staff and the legislative staff that assisted us in the drafting of this resolution. In particular, I'd like to thank my leader, John Tory, who asked me to sit as a member of this all-party panel to examine the use of the Lord's Prayer in the Legislature, and I'm very proud to do so. Ms. DiNovo, Mr. Balkissoon and yourself, Speaker, were great to work with, and I think we've come up with something that is very fair.

In particular, I'd like to thank the citizens of Ontario who have come forward with petitions—I believe it's way over 20,000 by now. They're rolling in each day, with 11,000 hits to our website. It was fairly evident from the beginning, particularly in the area that I represent, that 85% to 90% of the people supported retaining the Lord's Prayer to be recited in this Legislature each day. We didn't know this was coming at us to begin with. We had this debate back in 2000, and that followed a court hearing that a fellow by the name of Henry Freitag took against the town of Penetanguishene, which removed the Lord's Prayer from municipal council meetings. It was determined after that that only parliamentary privilege would remove it from this chamber.

As a representative from the riding of Simcoe North back in those days, I can tell you that people were hurt; they were really saddened to see something as powerful and traditional as the Lord's Prayer removed from the municipal council meetings. Many, many councils across this province were opposed to and hurt by this decision. We felt that by bringing a petition into this Legislature at that time, in summer 2000—we actually had another 11,000 signatures back in the year 2000 asking for the Lord's Prayer to be retained in the Legislature.

There are a lot of reasons for it. I have to say, from the beginning back in February, when we spoke to the media, to the Premier's office and to people in our ridings, it was clear from our party's perspective, the Progressive Conservative caucus, that removing the Lord's Prayer was not an option. It had to stay as far as we were concerned, but we were very clear that we were also open to other suggestions and other prayers being added. I know that our leader, John Tory, mentioned it a few times. I think even the Premier got around to mentioning it, along with our member from Oak Ridges, Frank Klees—he mentioned that a second, rotational prayer reflecting multi-denominational faiths would be something that we would clearly accept.

I have to stand in the House today and tell you that we are very pleased with the outcome of this motion. Why? I want to just back up for just a moment and talk about why we are so pleased about having the Lord's Prayer retained. Personally, I, myself, and a lot of people in our caucus—and, I hope, a lot of the people in the House—are very strong traditionalists, and I know they believe in the heritage and culture of this wonderful province and this wonderful country. Our system here in Ontario and in Canada is based on the British parliamentary system, and that of course dates back to the Magna Carta.

I wanted to add a couple of things just for the record. In the British parliamentary system, before parliaments were formed, the original meetings of Parliament were held in cathedrals. We have so many symbols in our Legislature: the carvings, the coat of arms, our flags, our mottoes. The very architecture of these buildings is based on Christianity and on the British parliamentary system.

In our caucus, we're just not prepared to send that out the door. We believe very strongly that the Lord's Prayer is part of that, that Christianity is part of the very foundation of our wonderful country, and we want to retain that. Again, that's why we are so pleased.

On the other hand, I took a walk last night down Yonge Street—I always walk each night or each morning for exercise—and I can tell you, when you look at the culture, when you look at the makeup of our province, when you look at the makeup of the citizens of our cities and our province, it's clear that we are a wonderful, wonderful place in the world to live. Regardless of the political policies that we fight about with each other, you know what? This is a place we should be proud to call home, a place to accept other people into our culture and into making Canada their home.

I think a good example was made yesterday. There were two things that happened yesterday. First of all, I thought that the apology that Prime Minister Harper made to our First Nations people was a very brave move. All people, all Canadians, should be proud of that moment: that our Prime Minister would come forward and say that.

As we move forward with how we perform the prayers in the opening sessions, I think we can accept this well into the future. Obviously there will be years ahead when we will re-examine this once again, but for now, I'm proud to say that, working with our all-party panel, we've come up with a very reasonable solution. The Speaker already has in his hands a number of the prayers from other denominations that have come forward. We'll be happy to see those proceed in the weeks, months and years ahead in this Legislature.

In hindsight, as I said earlier, we didn't expect this to come at us. We thought there were probably more important things to be debating and more important things to spend committee time on, because we believed that the Lord's Prayer was part of this, part of our daily routine. But we have problems. We have issues around smog, around the loss of manufacturing jobs, around poverty, around the declining economy. We have to remember that those are priorities as well. As we move forward, we in our caucus did not want to spend a lot of time debating this. That's why, as we bring the recommendations of the panel forward, we're so pleased to see that we have something that all members of this House can accept and hopefully support well into the future.

Mr. Speaker, with that I want to once again thank you for your efforts. I hope I'm not letting anything out of the bag, but I think you told me originally that you were on a beach in Cuba when you got your first phone call on this. I hope you don't take your BlackBerry and your cell-phone to the beach.

But you know what? It has been a challenge. It was interesting to read through the thousands and thousands of letters and e-mails that we received as we went forward with this motion.

I hope everyone in the House will support this. I appreciate the—

Mr. Peter Kormos: Too much.

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: Once again, I hear Mr. Kormos heckling. I meant to say, Mr. Speaker, that you needed a break. It was good that you got away. The reality is, he mentioned it to us at our committee. He made it clear that he was tired and was there for a rest.

This was a surprise to him. It's something that we didn't really need, but the all-party panel has reported. Our caucus is extremely happy with this. We hope that the members of the assembly will be happy with this and we hope that the citizens of Ontario will be happy with this.

Once again, as I close, I want to thank the citizens of Ontario who have responded in such a positive manner to seeing the drafting of this resolution come forward. We will be supporting it 100% in this caucus. On behalf of John Tory, Bob Runciman and the Progressive Conservative caucus, I'm pleased to make these comments today and to thank Ontarians once again for responding to this all-party panel.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Further debate?

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and indeed thank you for your role in this. I also want to thank Todd Decker and Larry Johnston, and Maggie—I don't know her last name; the assistant to the Speaker. Certainly, everyone worked very tirelessly on coming up with this.

Before Dalton McGuinty started talking about possibly revoking the Lord's Prayer—which, let us be clear, was implied when he said "review the Lord's Prayer"—before he mentioned it, I don't believe I received one e-mail on revoking or reviewing the Lord's Prayer. Here are the top e-mails that I receive: One in six children living in poverty in the province of Ontario; 200,000 manufacturing jobs lost in the province of Ontario; 120,000 households waiting for housing in the province of Ontario; only one in 10 children having a space in daycare in the province of Ontario; and of course the minimum wage in the province of Ontario that keeps people in poverty. That's what I receive e-mails on; that's what New Democrats receive e-mails on—not revoking the Lord's Prayer and the saying of the Lord's Prayer in this place. Not one e-mail did I receive on that.

It's interesting that this move of the government has more of figures than faith in it, more of expediency than ethics in it, because of course what this represents for Dalton McGuinty and the Liberal Party is retreat. It's a retreat in the face of the overwhelming number of e-mails and responses from the people of Ontario. You heard the Progressive Conservatives talk about the sheer number—20,000 and counting—who wrote in demanding that the Lord's Prayer be said, with a small portion asking for the revocation of prayer in this place. That's what this is about.

I wish I could say it were something else. I'm a United Church minister by trade and I'm first and foremost a United Church minister. I am a politician by avocation, not by vocation. Every morning, my husband and I say prayers together. One of the prayers we say is the Lord's Prayer. The other prayer we always say—it's why I'm standing here; it's why I survived one of the ugliest by-elections in the history of this province—is that we pray for our enemies. We pray for those who want to harm us. We pray nothing but blessing and joy upon them for that day. It's prayer that keeps me here. It's prayer, I believe, that keeps us all here. That's what my husband and I do every single morning. For us, it's about faith. For us, it's not a "ritual," to quote Mr. Bryant. It's not an empty ritual; it's something in the very substance of our beings. And for many out there in the province of Ontario, it is as well, clearly.

I love a quote from 1 John. The quote from 1 John defines God for me, where 1 John writes, "God is love." God is love. There's an equal sign there. "Whoever lives in love lives in God, and God lives in them." I used to say that at the beginning of every wedding I performed.

Clearly, out of love, Ontarians responded here. Even those who are humanists and secularists responded out of ethics, out of a real sense of what is right, of what is just. They responded out of love. They didn't make their decision based on the numbers, on polls, on expediency; they made it from the very marrow of their being, from something that really meant something to them.

A year ago, I brought in a motion to this House called "A place for all people." What I asked for in that motion was that there be a place for all people in this place which people of all faiths and of no faith could use for meditation, time out. There is such a place on Parliament Hill. Just about every large institution where people work has such a space. We need such a space here.

I witness many who are Sikh or Muslim running across four lanes of University Avenue to go over to the Hart House chapel to pray because there is no space here for them; none whatsoever. I have the assurance of the Speaker, and I'm delighted in it, that that place will be found, a place that's accessible and open for everyone. I'm delighted about that. I'm delighted that that is a by-product of what has happened here today.

Jesus, when he said the Lord's Prayer, was a Jew; he was a Rabbi. Certainly, Dow Marmur, in his comments in the Toronto Star, highlighted that. Jesus said those words in Aramaic. "Abba" is what he calls "Daddy"; he's saying "Daddy" in Aramaic. It's a very intimate prayer. It's a prayer that he said out of love. It's a prayer that one should never—and, may I just say, and put great emphasis on this—be forced to say. Faith is the antithesis of force. No one should ever be forced, in this chamber or anywhere else, to say a prayer they don't believe in, simply to mouth the words, simply to get along. That goes for all prayer, and I hope that everyone here takes that to heart: that what we're saying has nothing of force in it; absolutely nothing. Those who don't want to pray should leave the chamber and be allowed to stand and not pray, and that a moment of silence should be one of those options. We made sure that we included a moment of silence.

When we're talking about what's right, what's just, what's of faith and ethics and not of expediency and figures, we're talking about something for everyone, particularly something for the minority. Our secular and humanist brothers and sisters made a very good point when they said that human rights is about, in a sense, marginal rights, minority rights, and not just what the majority wants.

Of course, that's not what this government has done here. Again, there is more figures than faith, more expediency than ethics about their move this morning. Because it was very clear what Dalton McGuinty did. It was very clear the move he made when he looked at the possible revocation of the recitation of the Lord's Prayer in this place.

I was delighted to be on the panel; I think we came to a very good conclusion. We came to the conclusion that most Ontarians came to. Most Ontarians—and let us be clear about this—voted with their e-mails, with their deputations, with their letters, against what Dalton McGuinty wanted, against what the Liberal Party wanted. They spoke out of ethics. They spoke out of deep compassion and a sense of justice. They spoke the same way that Jesus spoke: out of love. They spoke out of love, compassion and ethics. They didn't speak because they were frightened. They didn't speak because they were in full-scale retreat. They didn't speak because it was politically expedient to do so.

I'm delighted that the Lord's Prayer stays. I'm delighted that we've opened the door to the prayers of other faiths. I'm also delighted that we will now have a moment of silence as well to acknowledge those who do not share faith.

I'm delighted, again, that Ontarians, like New Democrats, speak out of a sense of justice, a sense of compassion, a sense of what's right and not what's popular—the same sense, we might say, out of which those who embody the spirit, those who embody love of all faith traditions and no-faith traditions speak; that is, out of, at the end of the day, a sense of love.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues who sat on that panel. I think this is a just solution to a problem not of our creating, but a problem of Dalton McGuinty's creating. Finally, finally, we've put that to rest. Finally, we've done what's right.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Mr. Bryant has moved that the Speaker commence each meeting day of the assembly by reciting the Lord's Prayer, followed by another prayer, or the presentation of a verse or passage, or call for a moment of silent reflection, or any such other similar activity which, in the opinion of the Speaker, will serve to reflect over time the general demographic composition of this chamber and of the province of Ontario.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Under the new standing orders, this vote will be deferred until this afternoon.

Vote deferred.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Orders of the day.

Hon. Michael Bryant: I seek consent for the House to recess until 10:45.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

The House recessed from 1000 to 1045.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Please be seated.

Interjection: Pray be seated.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I think only the Lieutenant Governor can say that.

On behalf of the Minister of Health, we'd like to welcome a number of guests to the chamber today as part of the Cancer Care Day of Education: Richard Ling, chair of the board, Cancer Care Ontario; Dr. Terry Sullivan, president and CEO of Cancer Care Ontario; Dr. Carol Sawka; Dr. Bill Evans; Dr. George Pasut; Dr. Linda Rabeneck; Sarah Kramer; and Michael Power. To all of our guests, welcome.

ORAL QUESTIONS

SCHOOL SAFETY

Mr. Frank Klees: My question is to the Deputy Premier. Yesterday, I brought to the Premier's attention a situation where a principal failed to report to the police a situation of student-on-student assault during school hours on school property. The Premier responded by assuring us that he would ask the Minister of Education to look into the matter, to investigate the matter, and he also assured us that the safety of our children in our schools was an absolute priority for this government.

I would ask if the Deputy Premier could advise us what steps the government is taking to ensure that students are in fact safe and that the appropriate reporting will take place should an assault take place.

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Education.

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: I appreciate the member opposite bringing the incident to our attention. Obviously all students have the right to be safe in their schools, and more than that, I completely agree with the member opposite that families have a right to know what is happening in schools and when there have been incidents. My understanding is that the director of the board has indicated that the principal did not follow protocol in reporting the incident. We are actually in the process of reviewing police protocols and we are monitoring those very closely.

Mr. Frank Klees: I appreciate that, and I appreciate the minister following up on that. We'll look forward to the specific reports.

The government must know that currently there is in fact no legal obligation under the Child and Family Services Act for school officials to report a student-on-student assault to the police. Currently the only legal obligation is to report child abuse at the hands of a parent or person in authority, not abuse or violence at the hands of another student.

Given the Premier's assurance yesterday and the minister's assurance now that student safety is a priority for the government, can the minister assure us that the government will bring forward legislation that closes that loophole that does not require mandatory reporting under the law? And will the minister commit to bringing that legislation forward so that we can deal with it before we rise for the summer?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: Obviously these are very serious issues that the member opposite raises, which is why we re-enacted our safe schools action team, led by my parliamentary assistant, the member for Guelph. She is currently looking at both the police protocols and also the reporting mechanisms, because there are various reporting mechanisms and requirements in place. What we want to be clear about is that any gaps in those are filled, and that is certainly what I will be expecting in her report within the coming months.

Mr. Frank Klees: We know what needs to be done. Apart from protocol and reporting obligations, we know that there's a loophole in the law today that can be fixed by this Legislature before we rise for the summer. Given the Premier's commitment for student safety, we, the official opposition, are ready to co-operate with the government to approve that legislation—the amendment to the act that will make it a requirement for school officials to report assault directly to the police when it happens.

My question to the minister is this: Will she commit to bringing that legislation and count on the support of the opposition parties to pass that legislation, so when kids go to school in September, parents can rely on the law and the obligations under law that administrators will look after the safety of their children?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: What's interesting in this situation is, the precipitating event for the member's questions was a situation where in fact the protocol was not followed. I've already said that we are looking at protocols, we are going to be looking for the gaps, and we're going to be reviewing those reporting mechanisms.

The point is that, apart from all the protocols, what we need is good communication. In this instance or in any other instance where there's an incident at a school, parents need to be apprised of that; they need to be apprised the incident in a reasonable period of time. There's a blend of common sense and protocol that needs to be in place in the running of any school. We're looking at the protocols; we're looking at the reporting mechanisms. In this case, it's very unfortunate that the parents were not apprised of the situation. That should have happened.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: To paraphrase Albert Einstein, if you repeat the same experiment over and over again, don't expect different results. The massive job losses that we are seeing make workers and businesses wonder whether this government's investment strategy is caught in a cycle of failure. Minister, will you allow for an independent review of your auto investment strategy so that taxpayers, and especially auto workers, can be sure that they aren't being taken to the cleaners?

Hon. Sandra Papatello: I appreciate this question, because it gives us once again the opportunity to show Ontarians that their taxpayer dollars are working hard to bring investment to this jurisdiction. I would reference the launch of the Flex at the Oakville plant with Ford Motor Co. That was an opportunity for Wayne Gretzky to assist in launching this Flex vehicle that only happened because of the Ontario government's investment with Ford Motor Co., to the extent that Ford Motor Co. is busy hiring 500 people for that Oakville plant. That's an important symbol of investment in innovation to land new investments and new product in this province in our automotive sector.

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: I'm afraid I'll have to take that as a no.

We need to shine a light on these contracts, because we keep getting different answers about what's actually in them. This government doesn't even know whether GM job guarantees have been breached or not. The Premier says, "Yes"; the minister says, "We'll have to wait and see." This confusion does not instill confidence in either workers or manufacturers.

As we hopefully enter into new contracts with GM and other auto manufacturers, Ontarians deserve to know that their tax dollars will guarantee results. I ask again, Minister: Will you allow the Auditor General to perform a value-for-money review of the entire auto investment strategy?

Hon. Sandra Papatello: I would hope that some of the MPPs opposite who actually come from the region north of Toronto would appreciate the fact that our participation with the GM Beacon project meant a $60-million investment in post-secondary institutions to assist in the development of new technologies that will make our auto industry strong. I would hope that people who represent the area around UOIT would understand that $58 million in participation by this government will allow that university to be built up, to grow, to be strong, and that $2 million of that amount going to McMaster allows for the kind of innovative R&D that that sector needs for the future products that will be going into our cars.

This is an important investment through the Beacon project. It's exactly why we may well have an opportunity to land a new car product: because of the Flex system that we helped to develop for that plant. I expect this member in particular to understand the importance of this.

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: The thousands of people who've been laid off at General Motors, Ford and Chrysler may not agree with that answer. The PC Party has always supported creating an investment environment that brings good, sustainable jobs. I remind you of the million new jobs that we created in our term of government. Your auto investment strategy is not achieving this goal.

Make the contracts public. Let the Auditor General review them. Learn from your mistakes, so that any future discussion that we hope you will have with GM and other automakers will bring positive results for businesses and workers alike. Will you do that, Minister?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: What I think we have to acknowledge is that the big mistake that was made was in this very House when members of the opposition refused to support the automotive sector. They refused to be supportive when initiatives came forward, either through the automotive investment strategy, through budget initiatives meant directly to help the sector—the very sector that looks like they're needing the help the most. These members opposite refused to stand up. They don't stand up for the workers and they don't stand up for our automotive sector either.

I would ask this member to call on the very individual who leads all of those automotive workers, Buzz Hargrove. Have you had one conversation with this individual? Have you had one conversation with the very leader who has said, "Without provincial support, including its participation in GM's Beacon project, the situation facing the industry today would be far, far worse"? Those are the words of Buzz Hargrove.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: My question is for the Acting Premier. In 1937, in Oshawa, the historic strike by auto workers against General Motors happened. David Croll, the Minister of Labour in the Hepburn Liberal government, made a difficult decision: He resigned from the Liberal government and issued this statement: "Thousands of working men and women of the province of Ontario have come to look to me as their protector and their champion. I feel that I cannot now fail them. In my official capacity I have travelled the middle of the road, but now ... my place is marching with the workers rather than riding with General Motors."

An hour from now, I and my NDP colleagues will be marching with the workers in Oshawa. My question is: Whose side is the McGuinty government on—General Motors'?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think there will be no mistaking where the Ontario government sits when it comes to General Motors and the thousands of workers who work for General Motors. Not one government has been more supportive of the automotive sector than this one, and not one Premier has been more supportive of the Canadian auto workers than this one.

Last night, we had an opportunity to fete Buzz Hargrove as he celebrated his many years in service, not just to the automotive sector but to this nation. Who was there first in line? It was Premier Dalton McGuinty, to establish the two of them not only as close colleagues but to understand the deep respect we have grown to have for the CAW. I challenge the members of the opposition; I challenge them to ask that very leader if they feel that the Ontario government has been supportive of them.

Mr. Howard Hampton: If the McGuinty government calls the layoff of tens of thousands of auto workers—unprecedented in the history of Ontario—a success, then I would hate to see how they measure failure.

But my question was very simple: Will we see any members of the McGuinty government marching with the auto workers in Oshawa today? I suspect we can conclude: No.

The fact is, this government's handling of the present crisis in Ontario's manufacturing and resource sectors has many parallels with the Liberal government of Mitch Hepburn. The McGuinty government hands $235 million to General Motors but doesn't get a production guarantee that the new hybrid-powered, fuel-efficient half-tonne will be built in Oshawa by Oshawa workers. This is a major setback.

My question is: Will any member of the McGuinty government march with the workers, or are you going to continue—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister?

1100

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I find it a little bit strange that the leader of the third party wants to quote Senator David Croll, the member who actually came from Windsor, Ontario, and understood the automotive sector better than most people in the House even at that time. There are members of this Legislature who have stood up for automotive workers since day one, since their election to this very House. Since this government became one in 2003, there has not been a government that has been more behind these automotive workers than these members of the Legislature right here.

When I ask you today if you will stand up for the automotive workers, you haven't been standing up for these last five years, but this government has.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The McGuinty government wants people to believe that handing $235 million to General Motors, and then watching General Motors break what it promised in a collective agreement and lay off thousands of workers, is somehow the McGuinty government's standing up for workers. Hogwash. Nonsense. No one would measure that as any kind of success.

The McGuinty government has bungled its own auto strategy. It has allowed General Motors to bully not only communities but workers.

My question is: What is the McGuinty government going to do to force General Motors to meet the very things it promised before it signed a collective agreement a few short weeks ago—keeping a product at the truck plant in Oshawa?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: This is the very leader of the political party who was quoted, when talking about the CAW: "You can bash your head against a wall talking to these people. It's just not worth it." That's what the leader of the third party said when it came to talking about the CAW.

I just ask you: If you think that you're going to speak on behalf of the CAW, why is it that the very leader of the CAW doesn't agree with you? Why is it that Buzz Hargrove in fact stands together with Dalton McGuinty to make the automotive sector stronger? Why is it that the leader of the CAW has said, "There's not a leader in the free world who has delivered the way Dalton McGuinty has for our automotive sector"?

Thank goodness we wouldn't leave it to you, because if it was up to you, we would be marching at the back of the parade instead of at the front.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Acting Premier again: The fact is, General Motors signed a collective agreement with the workers just last month. Before they signed that collective agreement, they said that the truck plant in Oshawa would continue to have a vehicle to produce into 2011. Despite General Motors getting $235 million from the McGuinty government, despite what they said before signing the collective agreement, 2,600 workers at that truck plant are now being laid off. That's why they're marching today.

My question is this: Having bungled its negotiations with General Motors, when will the McGuinty government finally show some backbone and do something to force General Motors to at least meet the obligations and the promises they made before they signed the collective agreement?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think, once again, I would like the member opposite to listen to the words of Buzz Hargrove. He purports to support and stand for automotive workers, and here's the one leader who has garnered more support from his own membership than anyone in the history of the CAW. He says, "The attacks of Runciman and Hampton on Ontario's auto strategy are anything but informed. They're an attempt to make cheap political points at the expense of tens of thousands of hard-working auto workers in Ontario who quite rightly fear for their future." Buzz Hargrove says, "My members and I are deeply offended."

You go on and show up at that parade. What we know is, you're an offence to the CAW.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I gather that members of the McGuinty government think that the 2,600 workers are going to be marching today because they're happy about being laid off; they're happy that the McGuinty government gave General Motors $235 million of the public's money and didn't get a product guarantee for the truck plant.

The fact is, this sets a very bad precedent. What will now stop Ford, which received $100 million, from simply going back on its promises and laying off workers? What will stop Chrysler, which received close to $100 million, from simply going back on their promise and laying off workers?

I ask again: When is the McGuinty government going to stand up to General Motors and say to them, "You must keep the promises you made before you signed the collective agreement"? When is the McGuinty government going to stand up for the workers and stop simply toeing the line for General Motors?

Hon. Sandra Pupatello: I think it's very clear. The people who are speaking on behalf of the CAW understand full well where this government has been for the automotive sector. I think it's very clear that General Motors themselves have said they may well be in a position to prepay that loan on the strategy that we signed with them. That's an acknowledgment by General Motors themselves.

What I do know is that we move forward our discussions, on practically a daily basis, with representatives of the auto workers. The very people who may be losing their jobs don't see the NDP as supportive of them. They only see that this Ontario government has been prepared to look out and say: "How do we bring future projects to this jurisdiction? How do we find ways, in the face of a challenge that is worldwide, to bring investment to Ontario?" The only government that has been on this aggressive path has been the Dalton McGuinty government. That is acknowledged by the leadership of the CAW. You, sir, do not speak for the auto workers in this country.

Mr. Howard Hampton: I've been to meet with the auto workers in Oshawa twice now outside GM headquarters. I haven't seen any members of the McGuinty government there. I haven't seen anyone there from the McGuinty government supporting those workers.

My question is this: New Democrats believe that government has an important role in trying to sustain manufacturing jobs in this province. Part of that role is that if you're going to hand out hundreds of millions of dollars to multinational corporations, you get product or job guarantees. The question that those auto workers are now asking is this: Is the McGuinty government going to do anything to require General Motors to live up to the promise they made before they signed the collective agreement to maintain product and jobs at the Oshawa truck plant? Are you going to do anything at all?

Hon. Sandra Papatello: I do find it quite amazing that, perhaps in these last couple of weeks, all of a sudden you're supportive of government participation with the automotive sector. Where were you when our Minister of Finance tabled a budget with the most historic investment available for participation with our auto sector? How did you vote on those initiatives? You said no to the auto workers.

Where were you when we tabled those business initiatives to lower costs for business? The very initiatives that you suggest in this House we should be doing, you voted no to. But when the big camera is on you, you want to march over to Oshawa and stand behind the auto workers. I think it's time that you showed your true colours. You either support the automotive sector or you do not. I suggest that you have never supported the automotive sector, and it's apparent by your behaviour today.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: My question is to the Deputy Premier. Minister, media reports today indicate that the Premier is opposed to federal legislation that ensures that taxpayers' money is not used to finance the production of films that are pornographic, excessively violent or denigrating to identifiable groups.

Minister, your government doesn't fund drugs approved by Health Canada for cancer victims; you've delisted chiropractic services, physiotherapy, eye exams, and on and on. But your Premier is quite prepared to spend limited tax dollars on films that most Ontarians would find offensive. Why is that and how do you justify that?

Hon. George Smitherman: On the matter of the supplementary, I'll be asking the Minister of Culture to comment, but the comments by the honourable member really are not appropriate to leave unaddressed. On a day when courageous individuals who work on the front lines of health care delivering enhanced capacity to support people in our province with cancer—for you to talk up and make a suggestion that back in the day when you were in charge, every drug that Health Canada approved you automatically put on the formulary is phooey.

Since the amendments that we've made to drugs alone, 14 additional cancer drugs have been funded in our province. We've made investments all across the health care landscape. The honourable member's suggestions are to play one thing off against another. I want to see this honourable member stand up in his place, talk about health care and acknowledge that it is his party's plan to cut $3 billion out of health care, rather than playing one group of Ontarians off against the other.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I ask the honourable member to withdraw that statement.

It is well known that only thing we wanted to cut out of health care was him.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): That's not a point of order.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: That's cheap theatrics, with a dose of dishonesty tossed in.

The legislation in question passed the House of Commons with the support of all parties, including the Liberal Party. Five provinces have similar constraints in their film tax credit programs with no problems. It's called spending public money responsibly, and that's a concept you're not very familiar with.

Minister, when you can't find the money to fund cancer drugs, to provide PET scans, to unclog emergency rooms, why are you prepared to pour scarce tax dollars into a pornographic, violent and derogatory film?

Hon. George Smitherman: The honourable member's assertion is incorrect on all points. First off, he says we haven't funded cancer drugs. We've tripled the funding for cancer drugs in the last five years and recently added 14 new cancer drugs. He says we can't find the resources to address emergency rooms, but we've funded $109 million in the last two weeks to enhance our capacity to provide support for Ontarians who go in search of care to Ontario's emergency rooms.

It's unbelievable that the honourable member, who leads a party in this Legislature that holds firm to the position that they would eliminate the health premium and thereby eliminate $3 billion in expenditure for health care, has a lot of audacity to stand in his place and pretend that this is the party that—

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: For months now we have been listening to this false information from the minister that we would eliminate $3 billion from—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): That is not a point of order, and I have ruled on that in the past.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: He's not telling the truth.

Hon. George Smitherman: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order: The honourable member knows that in estimates committee yesterday, I tabled a press release from the finance critic of that party indicating that—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): New question, leader of the third party.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I know it's a Thursday and—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Member from Niagara West and the Minister of Health: If you want to have that discussion, take it outside, please. I know it's a Thursday. It's been a very warm week—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Excuse me. I'd just like some order in the House for a moment, please.

It's a Thursday. It's been a warm week. Everybody has worked hard, but let's end this week. We've got a lot of students here. Remember how we should be carrying ourselves in this chamber. We expect things of these students in their schools. I think we should offer the same thing to them within this chamber. So I just ask members to tone it down a bit.

New question, the leader of the third party.

NORTHERN ONTARIO HERITAGE FUND

Mr. Howard Hampton: To the Minister of Northern Development and Mines: The northern Ontario heritage fund announced less funding in the eight months since the last election than it announced in the four days prior to the last election being called. Can the Minister of Northern Development and Mines tell us how that could be?

Hon. Michael Gravelle: We're very proud of the tremendous job creation opportunities that are brought about as a result of the Northern Ontario Heritage Fund Corp. We're particularly proud about the fact that our government has committed to increasing the heritage fund from a $60-million-a-year fund to a $100-million-a-year fund, and again confirmed in our budget.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: From the party that stole $60 million from the heritage fund.

Hon. Michael Gravelle: Thank you very much for reminding me of that. From the party that indeed took money out of the heritage fund on their way out of office in 1995, it's an interesting question.

We're very proud of the investments that we've made since then. We've created and retained over 9,000 jobs as a result of the heritage fund. We've spent $345 million in new investments in the north, creating jobs once again. We're very proud of how the heritage fund has performed and the difference it has made in terms of job creation in northern Ontario.

Mr. Howard Hampton: The minister talks about jobs. I think the only thing that people have experienced in northern Ontario is a loss of jobs.

What's interesting is that in the eight months prior to the election call last year, the McGuinty government announced $105 million in heritage fund projects. In the week just prior to the election call, more than $31 million was announced. In the eight months after the election, only $29 million has been announced—more in the four days before the election was called than in the eight months since the election. Why is the minister continuing the tradition of the McGuinty government of banking the northern Ontario heritage fund money until just before an election?

Hon. Michael Gravelle: That is simply not true. The fact is that, as the member knows, we have a northern Ontario heritage fund board made up of individuals from all across the north who meet once every six weeks to try to make some decisions related to good projects that are moving forward. We were very, very pleased about the projects. Since I've become minister, we've had three or four meetings, some very good projects have been announced, and we're very proud of the funding that was done in the last government.

The fact is that over that four-year term of the McGuinty government, after we changed the criteria to allow the private sector to once again play a role in terms of job creation, with the heritage fund's help we created over $300 million in new investments, and some 9,000 new jobs were created or retained. I'm extremely proud to be the minister leading the heritage fund and chairing it and I'm very proud of the Ontario government for increasing the amount of the heritage fund from $60 million to $100 million a year. We look forward to more important investments in northern Ontario.

BROWNFIELD SITES

Mr. Charles Sousa: My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. In my riding of Mississauga South, we are blessed with a gem of a lakefront. It's where people live, businesses thrive, and it is famous for its beautiful lakefront. However, some of our lakefront is sitting empty and unused because it is in need of remediation. We have two huge brownfields on our lake-shore corridor. The former Imperial lands on Mississauga Road are 70 acres, and the site of the former Lakeview coal plant has 200 acres. Both sites are prime waterfront locations, and the people in Mississauga South don't want them to sit empty any longer.

I understand that the major hurdle in developing these and other brownfields in Ontario is one of liability. The companies that own such lands would prefer to leave them as is rather than assume the legal risks involved in developing them. Can the minister please inform the House and the people of Mississauga South of what he is doing to resolve the liability issue and facilitate the rehabilitation of these sites?

Hon. Jim Watson: A very good question. I thank the member for Mississauga South.

Reforms passed as part of the 2007 budget included legislative changes that make Ontario the leading jurisdiction in Canada when it comes to addressing liability and regulatory issues with respect to brownfield redevelopment. We're proud of those changes that were brought forward. Let me just give the member a couple of examples of those regulatory and liability changes.

We've increased protection for municipalities from civil suits when they approve plans or issue building permits based on inaccurate information in a record of site condition, allowed the province to take steps to ensure adequate protection of the health and safety of the public on abandoned properties, and increased liability protection provided to property owners who redevelop a brownfield site.

Ontario is a leader when it comes to brownfield redevelopment. We were recognized by the Canadian Urban Institute and will continue to do what we can as a government to ensure that we rehabilitate these brownfield sites for the betterment of all Ontario.

Mr. Charles Sousa: Minister, as you know, Mississauga is preparing for intensification, which will bring more residents and businesses to our city. This means there will be a need to redevelop some residential neighbourhoods, but accommodating intensification could be made much easier if our brownfields, especially on the lakefront, could be put to better use.

This strategy is in keeping with smart growth. For example, the Lakeview visioning project has proposed that the Lakeview site be redeveloped to accommodate a new mix of residential and business, with a boardwalk area on the lake. In addition, proposals abound for projects like a new stadium, an aquarium, or even a university campus. At the Imperial Oil site, residents have high hopes of building recreational and commercial facilities.

The residents and developers are excited about these proposals and want to get started on them as soon as possible. In addition to their aesthetic benefits, these developments would also be a major economic boost to the riding. But as long as these lands sit unremediated, none of these areas and ideas can become a reality.

Minister, can you—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister?

1120

Hon. Jim Watson: I'd like to tell the member that where there's a will, there's a way. I know that Mayor Hazel McCallion, who's a good friend of the member from Mississauga South, is very determined to deal with a number of these brownfield sites. So I will assure the member that I will continue to work with him, Mayor McCallion and the city of Mississauga.

Our ministry is making it easier for cities, developers and environmental leaders to redevelop brownfield sites. Recent changes to the Municipal Act put municipalities in a better position to deal with abandoned brownfield properties. We've removed crown liens and introduced greater flexibility in the tax sale process. Our government's brownfields financial tax incentive program continues to provide tax assistance to landowners in order to encourage environmental rehabilitation, and we have streamlined the administration of this program, making the regional offices of municipal affairs and housing the key points of conduct for program approval. So I can give the member my assurance that we will work with him to get the job—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

TOURISM

Mr. Ted Arnott: My question is for the Minister of Tourism. Yesterday, my friend the member for Simcoe North informed this House that North Bay city council is supporting John Tory's idea to suspend the retail sales tax on attractions and accommodations this summer. This would provide an immediate boost for tourism in its time of need to avert a summer of discontent. Thousands of jobs in communities across Ontario are at stake.

Today, I spoke with Doug Reynolds, the executive director of NOTO, Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters.

He said that this should be a non-partisan issue and that our tax break proposal makes a lot of sense.

Yesterday, the minister dismissed the considered opinion of the duly elected council of the city of North Bay. Today, is the minister going to dismiss NOTO's views as well?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: I thank the member for Wellington-Halton Hills for the question. I ask often about good ideas and ask our ministry staff and everybody in the ministry if we've gotten any calls on this proposal, this poor band-aid solution by the Tories and John Tory: zero emails, zero letters, zero phone calls. It's gotten almost zero support from all our partners in tourism.

Where we've had great success in tourism has been with our marketing campaign, "There's no place like this." That campaign has really bolstered tourism within Ontario, which is 80% of our tourism market. The Tories would like to scrap that campaign. So where we've had success, where our partners are telling us that we're doing the right things, that we're moving in the right direction, the Tories have decided that that is not the—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Ted Arnott: The minister is completely out of touch. Yesterday, in reply to the member for Simcoe North, the minister said that the opposition voted against the government's budget. To that, I say it's our job to oppose your broken promises, your high taxes, your out-of-control spending, your questionable priorities, your slush funds and your cuts to the Ministry of Tourism.

It's unfortunate that some Liberal MPPs whose ridings are dependent on tourism are apparently not even speaking up to support it. For example, a quick search of Hansard shows that the member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan hasn't even mentioned the word "tourism" in this House in the past year. When will this minister start listening to NOTO, to the city of North Bay, to the tourism industry which has expressed their support for this initiative, and to anyone outside of the Premier's office?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: We are listening to our partners in tourism, in all the regions across Ontario. Ontario is a wonderful, four-season destination for tourism.

The member fails to mention that last fall we had an economic stimulus package from the Minister of Finance, a $30-million injection into tourism. That party—those parties—voted against it. In our budget bill—again, $92 million over the next five years in tax measures, in initiatives to be able to help the tourism sector: That party voted against it.

What we are doing is making sure that we have a comprehensive strategy working in lockstep with our partners in tourism to make sure that the tourism sector is strong, viable, and sustainable, today and well into the future.

CHILD CARE

Ms. Andrea Horwath: My question is to the Deputy Premier. Today the Canadian Labour Congress released a report card to rate federal and provincial progress on quality, affordable, accessible child care. How does the Deputy Premier explain the McGuinty government's D grade for child care, the second-poorest rating in all of Canada?

Hon. George Smitherman: I do think that the rating will provide interesting analyses for individuals, but I think everybody would agree that if the federal New Democrats had not killed a government in Ottawa that believed in national child care, all provinces would have been substantially advanced. We always find it passing strange that the party in the Legislature here can conjure up such a sense of excitement about daycare, but when there was an opportunity to build on the strength of national programs and to create a national child care program, they decided that their political interests were more important, that it was more important to get Olivia Chow into the House of Commons than it was for the people of Canada to have a national child care plan.

Notwithstanding that blow, we've created 22,000 additional quality spaces. We think it's important that we continue to build on these sorts of capacities. It would be nice if their actions met their words.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: The Deputy Premier would know very well that the only reason there was a child care plan for the federal Liberals was because Jack Layton put it there. The reality is that the federal Liberals are propping up a government that refuses to fund child care. What's his excuse for that?

The reality, and every child care advocate knows it, is that 75% of mothers are in the workforce right now, but there are only enough regulated spaces for about 12% of children in Ontario.

The McGuinty government is advertising spaces right now—they're sending out flyers with spaces and subsidies being advertised—yet everyone knows that the waiting list for those subsidies and spaces is about one to two years. I have to ask the government, why such poor grades and why the false advertising in terms of subsidy availability?

Hon. George Smitherman: I want to thank the honourable member for her acknowledgment about the expansion of child care programs that is ongoing in Ontario, a part of 22,000 new spaces that are being built, 2,090 of them in the communities of Hamilton and Niagara, where the member comes from.

But I found it curious that the honourable member, who claimed credit for Jack Layton, then went on to basically acknowledge the story that, after he pushed for it, he decided to take the actions to kill it. We know that those party members sign a joint federal and provincial card. Why is it that they bring this tone to the Legislature of Ontario, but when they stand up in the House of Commons, they act to kill national child care? This is the legacy of that party. Notwithstanding that, we've been working to enhance the capacity for Ontarians to access these crucial services.

We're proud of the progress that we've made. We acknowledge that there are opportunities to continue to make improvements. It would be nice if their actions were the same as their words.

CLIMATE CHANGE

Mr. Bob Delaney: My question is for the Minister of Natural Resources. Ontario's climate change plan includes a wide array of initiatives, including the phasing out of coal-fired generation and developing renewable sources of energy, as well as investing in public transit. Trees are also an important component as forests are home to a wide range of biodiversity. Planting trees can assist us in mitigating the effects of climate change.

Having large forested areas and planting trees throughout the province is vital to the health of Ontarians. In southern Ontario, forested areas can be hard to come by due to the lack of foresight in past development practices. To the minister: How does the government's plan to fight climate change address the importance of planting more trees in southern Ontario?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: I thank the member for the question. We have a very aggressive program in place to plant 50 million trees by 2020. I think it's difficult at times to recognize exactly what that might mean, but by 2054 it would mean that the carbon dioxide in the air would be reduced by 172 million car trips between Toronto and Barrie.

I sent a note to every member of this House to help them get involved in Trees Ontario planting and the rural Ontario tree program through the Ontario stewardship program. I encourage each and every one of them to help make a difference as we move forward with this very aggressive tree-planting program. You're right: It can make a difference for the air we breathe, a habitat for a species that might be at risk, and also provide the shade and the energy savings for our homes. I encourage everyone to get involved. You can go to the Ontario "Plant a Tree" website..

Mr. Bob Delaney: The minister mentioned trees being planted in rural regions of southern Ontario, which is great, but I need to ask about urban areas. Urban areas are indeed hot spots for greenhouse gas emissions. This makes cities more susceptible to smog and other pollutants, and this is particularly evident now as the hot weather approaches. Many Ontarians living in urban environments feel that the green space in cities is hard to find. Would the minister describe any initiatives that the ministry has outlined and whether they specifically target urban centres?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: Absolutely. We have Trees Ontario in the rural, and we have Evergreen in the urban. We plan to plant 100,000 trees in 2008-09, and, of course, involving the community. You can get hold of Evergreen, and they will help you in terms of planting some of those trees.

Without question, we know that if we are to make a difference, each of us has to take some responsibility. Encouraging changing, for example, the concrete jungles that we have around some of our schools and ensuring that they become more natural landscape, and going back to our Carolinian forest and planting native trees, can make a huge difference. What we're doing is encouraging everyone to get involved. So in rural Ontario, it's Trees Ontario; in urban Ontario, it's Evergreen. I ask each and every one of you to do your part to make Ontario a little greener in the future than it was in the past.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): New question? The member from Lanark-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

Mr. Randy Hillier: My question was to go to the Minister of Small Business, but after watching the behaviour of the other side today, I choose not to ask a question of this House. There will be no intelligent response.

HEALTH CARE FUNDING

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Ma question est pour le ministre de la Santé et des Soins de longue durée. In the ongoing negotiation with the OMA, will the minister agree to support a 100% salaried model for physicians working in community health centres and aboriginal health access centres so that Ontarians' access to community-based primary care is not undermined?

Hon. George Smitherman: I think it would be highly suspect for me to be leading negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association from the floor of the Legislature. As I had a chance in the estimates committee to identify to the honourable member, we're very proud of the expansion that we've made of community-based models and interdisciplinary approaches, which sees Ontario leading in the reform of primary care delivery across the country.

On the specific matter at hand, it would be inappropriate to comment further, given that we are in negotiations at present with the Ontario Medical Association.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: The minister knows that CHCs and AHACs are concerned. CHC and AHAC physicians deliver some of the most complex and demanding primary care to the most vulnerable populations and patients. The incentive introduced in the 2004 OMA agreement is tearing the CHC and AHACs health care teams apart and eroding the collaborative care that they deliver.

An independent OMA poll survey showed that 98% of CHC and AHAC physicians want to be paid on salary. In the ongoing negotiations between the OMA and the Ministry of Health, the physicians from CHCs and AHACs are asking for your support. Will you support a 100% salaried model for physicians?

Hon. George Smitherman: I understand where the honourable member is coming from, and I think the principles are very good. We had a good exchange on this matter in the estimates process, but I don't think it really is appropriate for me to be taking an issue with respect to something that is being negotiated in the context of our ongoing discussions with the Ontario Medical Association.

Of course, they're part of a section within the Ontario Medical Association. They've been making their views known as well to the OMA side in these discussions. I think we have a really fantastic group from both sides who are working on an agreement which can build on the progress that we made in the last agreement, which resulted in 650,000 more Ontarians enjoying access to family health care. We'll look for progress to occur at the table but not speak more specifically to any matter that is currently a subject of negotiation.

TOURISM

Mr. Phil McNeely: Recently, the state of Canada's tourism industry has been featured in headlines on a national scale. With gas prices soaring, the parity of the US and Canadian dollar, and confusion regarding identification and security requirements for crossing the border between Canada and the United States, it seems that the tourism industry is entering into a summer of economic uncertainty. I know that in Ottawa, tourism is a strong economic contributor during this time of year.

To the Minister of Tourism: How is the McGuinty government working with our partners in the tourism industry to ensure that the upcoming summer months are prosperous?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: I want to thank the member for Ottawa-Orléans. He's quite right, as usual: The issues facing the tourism industry are apparent across the country, not only here in Ontario.

The McGuinty government recognizes that this industry is such a strong economic driver in so many areas across our province. That's why we're implementing a long-term strategy to address these challenges. In 2007, we announced $30 million in funding to enhance our successful marketing and promotional campaigns, like the "There's no place like this" campaign. Just weeks ago, we voted to approve a budget that is going to provide investments and tax measures totalling $92 million to the tourism sector over the next five years. These investments are a vital step in accessing Ontario's share of what is a huge global tourism market.

Mr. Phil McNeely: The government has made investments in the tourism sector that will help promote Ontario and even address the issue of dwindling visitors from the US.

Minister, you made mention of Ontario's current marketing campaign. Recently, the Leader of the Opposition said that this campaign is a waste of money and that it's time for the McGuinty government to stop "misusing taxpayers' money for feel-good ads that don't fill a single motel bed or put a bum in a theatre seat anywhere."

I wonder if the minister would tell us if there's any reason to believe that these ads are making a difference in Ontario's tourism numbers.

Hon. Peter Fonseca: They are make a huge difference. The "There's no place like this" ad campaign, which was launched in March through June 2007 to have Ontarians travel within Ontario—we just got the numbers back from Statistics Canada. In their report, they said that Ontario saw an increase in domestic travel of 5% over that period. That means 21 million visits. Also, Ontarians are spending more money within the province. We saw an increase in that period of 3.7% over the previous year. That's $2.3 billion to our economy. And from April to June 2007, Ontarians made more overnight trips—an increase of 6.2%—and they spent $1.4 billion on those trips. That is a great success.

PESTICIDES

Ms. Laurie Scott: My question is to the Minister of the Environment. It has to do with Bill 64, a bill that makes for good headlines but is not science-based. On Monday, during committee meetings on this bill, we heard presentations claiming that products like 2,4-D are harmful. Government members opposite agreed. It's interesting that over one year ago, Industry Task Force II wrote to your ministry asking if the province took issue with 2,4-D. Your own ministry responded by saying that the decisions on this matter remain with the federal Pest Management Regulatory Agency. This government's very own pesticide advisory committee also responded by saying that there was no need for additional restrictions on this product.

Minister, over the course of a year, who have you spoken to who has convinced you that you should abandoned science-based risk assessment and risk management protocol in this matter?

Hon. John Gerretsen: First of all, I look forward to that party's voting in favour of Bill 64, because it's all about unacceptable health risks to children. That's what the bill is really all about. We want to make sure that those children who play in their front yards, who play in their backyards, at the playgrounds and in parks etc., are not subject to an unacceptable risk. That's what it's all about.

As the member well knows, at the same time that we came out with the bill, we came out with about 80 different ingredients and about 300 different products, which are on a list right now and are going to be looked at. We're going to have consultation on this to determine exactly what should be in the regulations. It may very well be that some of the products and ingredients that are listed there may be taken off or put on the list, but I can assure you that the entire bill and the entire regulatory process will be science-based.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I've been watching very closely to make sure that it is science-based. On Monday, in committee, I asked your members if the Ontario Pesticides Advisory Committee, OPAC, had been consulted on the drafting of the legislation. One of your colleagues said that she couldn't answer the question, but a few minutes later, your own parliamentary assistant said, "My understanding is, the group was consulted with three times during the preparation of the proposed bill."

Given that your own parliamentary assistant couldn't confirm whether or not OPAC had been consulted, why didn't you call on OPAC to testify, or are you choosing to ignore the scientific evidence that OPAC has suggested? I have their letter right here for you.

Hon. John Gerretsen: I can tell you that I've met with the chair of the committee. We intend to involve the committee, through its regulatory process, entirely. We have great faith in the pesticides committee that's been set up. I can assure you that the work that will be done by the committee and the ministry with respect to the 80 different ingredients and the 300 different products that are out there right now in the regulatory framework of things will be based on a scientific basis. We want to make sure that at the end of the day we have a piece of legislation and we have protection for children out there to a much greater extent than currently exists. We believe in what we're doing, and we look forward to the support of both that party and the third party in the passage of this bill as soon as possible.

NORTHERN HEALTH TRAVEL GRANT

Mr. Gilles Bisson: My question is to the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. Minister, you will know that there are a number of communities where people are having to undergo life-sustaining treatment such as dialysis, radiation therapy or chemotherapy. One such community is Hearst. We have people who are having to travel three times per week to get dialysis services because it's not offered in their home community.

My question to you is simply this: Are you prepared to work with myself, Hôpital Notre-Dame and others to find a way to allow the northern travel grant to pay somebody travelling for these types of treatments when they're just under the 100-kilometre limit that's set out currently in regulation?

Hon. George Smitherman: I want to thank the honourable member for the question. I'll address two parts of it, both chronic kidney disease and also the northern health travel grant.

Just last year, we made very substantive improvements to the northern health travel grant, extending by $10 million or $15 million a year the support that's on offer to residents of northern Ontario. We know that it is a very vital lifeline. I'll look at the very specific question that the honourable member asked.

In addition, I want the honourable member to know that under active development at the moment is a chronic kidney disease initiative which also ought to enhance our capacity to provide nocturnal dialysis, as one example, right in the home community. This is something the honourable member from Sudbury has been championing very vigorously, amongst others, and I hope that the combination of these two efforts might allow us to make some progress.

We can understand that it's a big hardship for people to have to make that trip, and I'll try to work with the honourable member to make improvements.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I recognize the work we're doing in trying to bring dialysis services to communities. In fact, Hôpital Notre-Dame, the mayor of Hearst, Roger Sigouin, myself and others have been working towards that in co-operation with the LHIN and the Ministry of Health. But the specific problem is that until we get there, we've got people who have to travel—and it happens to be that Hearst, like other communities, is just under the 100-kilometre number that you need to qualify for a travel grant. In the case of Hearst, they're 98 kilometres, but because they're 98 kilometres, the individuals who have to travel to Kapuskasing for dialysis treatment can't get their travel grants approved.

So I ask again—and I think I got a partial answer earlier: Will you work with us to ensure that we can get these patients to qualify for the travel grant in those types of situations?

Hon. George Smitherman: I think it's important that I acknowledge the issue but not make up policy on the fly. If the 100 number is reduced to 95, then someone who's at 93 asks, "Why not 90?" I think that any time you have a number, it's going to create some difficulties.

But I understand the matter at hand. It's a substantive matter for those individuals who, three, four times a week, are in need of these services. That's disruptive enough when it's in your local community, much less that you have to make the distance. That's why we're opening more satellite dialysis and looking at nocturnal options.

I will take a look at the underlying issue of the northern health travel grant and endeavour to get back to not just this member but all members who represent northern Ontario.

WORKPLACE SAFETY

Mr. Bas Balkissoon: My question is to the Minister of Labour. Every year, about a quarter of a million workers are injured in this province. These hard-working Ontarians are fathers, mothers, uncles, aunts, brothers and sisters and sons and daughters who deserve to go home safe and sound to their families at the end of each shift. Minister, can you tell us about what our government is doing to improve the health and safety of workers not only in my riding of Scarborough–Rouge River but across the entire province?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I'd like to thank the member for Scarborough–Rouge River for his work with injured workers in his community. I know how passionately he feels about injured workers in his community and across the province.

Yes, indeed, yesterday I had the privilege of announcing our Safe at Work Ontario plan, which is our plan to enforce the Occupational Health and Safety Act. This plan builds on what was a very successful four-year strategy brought in by this government to target the bad actors in workplace health and safety as best we could, and it did have good results. We saw a 20% reduction in workplace injuries—significant. That's 50,000 people, 50,000 families, that did not have to suffer the pain and suffering of a workplace injury. That's $5 billion in costs that our business community did not have to incur. That's significant. It's great success, but we've built on that success.

Mr. Bas Balkissoon: I want to thank the minister for that information and to commend the Ministry of Labour for the work they're doing to ensure that Ontario workers are safe at work. Minister, can you tell us more about this new program and what the ministry is doing to build a strong health and safety culture throughout Ontario's workplaces?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I was honoured yesterday to be able to announce our safe-at-work strategy. This strategy focuses on workplaces with higher-than-average lost-time injury rates and claim costs, but it focuses on a number of other items as well, which is very, very important, because we listened to our stakeholders—our employer stakeholders, our labour stakeholders and advocates for injured workers. We listened very carefully to what they had to say, and they wanted us to broaden the factors that we take into consideration when we target those workplaces.

We're considering the history of compliance with health and safety regulations. We're considering hazards inherent to the work itself. We're considering the length of time businesses have been operating. We're considering the size of the businesses. We're considering the incidents, such as critical or fatal injuries, and I know that this is very important to all of us here in this Legislature. We're considering the presence of—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you.

MENTAL HEALTH AND ADDICTION SERVICES

Mrs. Christine Elliott: My question is for the Deputy Premier. This year's Ontario budget noted, "The government will be developing a comprehensive mental health and addictions strategy," but did not mention any timelines or any funding for it. I'm disappointed to see that nothing seems to have been happening today. Deputy Premier, can you please advise us when you intend to start developing a comprehensive mental health and addiction strategy for Ontario?

Hon. George Smitherman: If the honourable member wants to be disappointed, she should look at the history of her party with respect to helping people with mental illness in the province of Ontario. Including during the time when the predecessor member from her very riding was the Minister of Finance, including at the time when the deputy leader of their party was the Minister of Health, community-based mental health services in Ontario received not one single penny for growth.

In the time since our government has come to office, we've increased the support by tens of millions of dollars. She talks about addiction; she misses that two days ago in Ottawa we announced the expansion of youth treatment drug capacity, and more announcements are forthcoming. If the honourable member wants to come and join in the debate at estimates, I'll be very happy to give her much more information about what we've done and about what she didn't do.

PETITIONS

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Frank Klees: I want to present a petition that bears the names of more than 2,500 members of the Greek Orthodox community across Ontario. They were collected and sent to me by His Eminence Metropolitan Archbishop Sotirios, Primate of the Greek Orthodox Church in Canada. It reads as follows:

"Petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Parliament of Ontario to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I'm pleased to affix my signature to this petition, and we trust that the Legislature will do as petitioned.

HOSPITAL SERVICES

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition that goes as follows:

"Whereas the government-appointed supervisor of the Huronia District Hospital (HDH) has recommended a merger of HDH with the Penetanguishene General Hospital (PGH);

"Whereas the supervisor recommended changes to the governance of the hospital to eliminate community memberships and the democratic selection and governance of the hospital board and directors based on an ideology and not on the wishes of the community;

"Whereas the supervisor has also recommended the splitting up and divestment of the mental health centre in Penetanguishene, creating uncertainty in the future of mental health beds and services; and

"Whereas hospital mergers and restructuring under the local health integration network can result in a loss in the total number of hospital beds and services provided to a community...."

They ask the assembly,

"Protect the current levels of beds and services at all the sites in Midland and Penetanguishene; and

"Protect the community memberships and the democratic governance at the new hospital created by the merger of HDH and PGH."

I support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Ellen.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Jeff Leal: I have a petition today—literally hundreds of names.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message of forgiveness and the avoidance of evil is universal to the human condition; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

LORD'S PRAYER

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I'm pleased to present a petition from the Polish community at home given to me by Dr. Andrew W. Caruk.

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I'm pleased to sign this petition along with the 300 others.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Bob Delaney: I have a petition to the Ontario Legislative Assembly. I thank many of the staff at Credit Valley Hospital for having sent it to me. It reads as follows:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I'm pleased to sign and support this petition and to ask page Taylor to carry it for me.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Jim Wilson: "Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I agree with this petition and I've signed it.

HARBORD COLLEGIATE

Mr. Rosario Marchese: "Whereas the Toronto District School Board has decided to close the MID program at Harbord Collegiate and relocate the students outside of their community; and

"Whereas the students have benefited greatly from the program and the involvement in their community;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Minister of Education intercede on behalf of the MID students at Harbord Collegiate to keep the program open."

I support this petition.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network ... board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan.... ; and

"Whereas, despite the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government, this plan now calls for the ill-advised transfer of 20 mental health unit beds from Ajax-Pickering hospital to the Centenary health centre in Scarborough; and

"Whereas one of the factors for the successful treatment of patients in the mental health unit is support from family and friends, and the distance to Centenary health centre would negatively impact on the quality of care for residents of Ajax and Pickering; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service to our Ajax-Pickering hospital, which now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain the badly needed 20-bed mental health unit."

I shall affix my signature to this and pass it to Ellen.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mrs. Joyce Savoline: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Legislature.... ;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I agree with this petition. I affix my name thereto and give it to page Alie.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Mike Colle: I have a much shorter petition here from Sol Mednick and the members of the Forest Hill Lions Club in support of animal protection. It says:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I support this petition and give it to page Aaron.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Norm Miller: I have hundreds of petitions here from the Powassan and Nipissing area to preserve the Lord's Prayer. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Premier Dalton McGuinty has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message is one of forgiveness, of providing for those in need of their 'daily bread' and of preserving us from the evils we may fall into; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena of conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I support this petition.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Bob Delaney: I have another petition, signed by many people in my neighbourhood in western Mississauga, in support of the western Mississauga ambulatory surgery centre. It reads:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-

Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I am pleased to sign and support this petition, and to again ask page Megan to carry it for me.

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Ms. Sylvia Jones: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas many young people with developmental special needs have no meaningful social, recreational or vocational opportunities after high school; and

"Whereas many of these young people have no real options for living independently in the community; and

"Whereas current supports in place are insufficient to meet the needs of these young people;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the McGuinty government allocate an appropriate level of funding to advance a transformation agenda of individualized funding for adults with developmental special needs in the province of Ontario to allow them to live with dignity and to reach their full potential as members of our communities."

I fully support this petition.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Reza Moridi: "Support Bill 50, the Provincial Animal Welfare Act

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I sign this petition and pass it on to page Taylor.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Tim Hudak: In the interests of time, I'll be brief. I want to present a petition to preserve the traditional Lord's Prayer in the Legislature, sponsored by St. Ann's parish in Fenwick. It says:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I affix my signature in support.

LORD'S PRAYER

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: This is a petition that thousands of Nepean-Carletonites have signed, and I have 503 total signatures again today.

"Whereas the" Premier "has called on the Ontario Legislature to consider removing the Lord's Prayer from its daily proceedings;

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer has been an integral part of our parliamentary heritage that was first established in 1793 under Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe;

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer is today a significant part of the religious heritage of millions of Ontarians of culturally diverse backgrounds;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to continue its long-standing practice of using the Lord's Prayer as part of its daily proceedings."

I affix my signature because I am wholly in support of this petition.

Mr. Ted Arnott: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to seek unanimous consent to extend the time for petitions three extra minutes so as to allow everyone to present their petitions today.

Interjections: Agreed.

Mr. Ted Arnott: Thank you.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Can the Speaker say no? Member from Oakville.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: I've got a petition in support of Bill 50, the Provincial Animal Welfare Act.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I agree with this and will be sending it down with page Alie.

LORD'S PRAYER

Ms. Laurie Scott: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the extension of the time.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature; and

"Whereas the recitation of the Lord's Prayer has opened the Legislature every day since the 19th century; and

"Whereas the Lord's Prayer's message is one of forgiveness, of providing for those in need of their 'daily bread' and of preserving us from the evils that we may fall into; it is a valuable guide and lesson for a chamber that is too often an arena for conflict; and

"Whereas recognizing the diversity of the people of Ontario should be an inclusive process, not one which excludes traditions such as the Lord's Prayer;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

This is signed by thousands of people from all the communities in my riding.

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mr. Bob Delaney: Just to be a little different, I'm going to present this petition to the Parliament of Ontario, signed by a large number of people in Mississauga in support of an initiative by my colleague from Newmarket-Aurora. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the legacy of Pope John Paul II reflects his lifelong commitment to international understanding, peace and the defence of equality and human rights;

"Whereas his legacy has an all-embracing meaning that is particularly relevant to Canada's multi-faith and multicultural traditions;

"Whereas, as one of the great spiritual leaders of contemporary times, Pope John Paul II visited Ontario during his pontificate of more than 25 years and, on his visits, was enthusiastically greeted by Ontario's diverse religious and cultural communities;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to grant speedy passage into law of the private member's bill An Act to proclaim Pope John Paul II Day."

I'm pleased to sign this petition and to give it to page Damian to carry.

HUNTER SYNDROME

Mr. Tim Hudak: I'm pleased to present a petition signed by over 500 people in the Pelham community. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Andrew Lanese is a 10-year-old boy who suffers from MPS II, also known as Hunter syndrome, which is an ultra-rare and life-threatening genetic disease. There is currently a drug called Elaprase that is designed to treat the underlying cause of Hunter syndrome by replacing the enzyme which is deficient or absent in people with Hunter syndrome. This is an enzyme replacement therapy (ERT) for the treatment of MPS II. There are currently many MPS II patients in the USA receiving and benefiting from Elaprase. Elaprase is not a cure for MPS II, but it provides physical benefits such as improved airway, increased energy, increased range of motion in joints and reduced liver and spleen size, just to name a few. Unfortunately, the annual cost of this drug is approximately $500,000. Due to the huge cost, Andrew's family has no choice but to ask the province of Ontario to fund this drug for Andrew. Recently, Andrew and his family have been denied funding by the Ontario government to obtain this drug for Andrew, and therefore we are petitioning for the approval of funding of Elaprase for Andrew Lanese.

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to act now to provide funding for Elaprase for Andrew Lanese."

In support, I affix my signature.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for petitions has expired. This House stands recessed until 1 o'clock this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1207 to 1300.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

DISABILITY BENEFITS

Ms. Sylvia Jones: Later this afternoon, I plan to introduce a private member's bill entitled the Social Assistance Statute Law Amendment Act (Registered Disability Savings Plans), 2008.

In July 2006, federal Minister of Finance Jim Flaherty appointed the Expert Panel on Financial Security for Children with Severe Disabilities. The panel submitted its report, entitled A New Beginning, in December 2006. The report provided 16 recommendations, one of which was the establishment of the RDSP, a plan to assist parents, grandparents and other family members to save for the long-term financial security of children with disabilities. The RDSP was subsequently introduced in the 2007 federal budget.

The panel also recommended that the provinces should exempt the RDSP in the calculation of disability benefits to make the RDSP a more effective saving mechanism. At present, the provincial governments of British Columbia and Newfoundland have taken that step. To date, Ontario has failed to follow up on the panel's recommendations.

If the RDSP is not exempted as an asset when determining a person's eligibility for disability benefits, the benefit amount decreases. This removes the incentive for parents to make the investment in their child's long-term financial security.

The purpose of my private member's bill is to implement the panel's recommendation for Ontario by removing the RDSP as an asset when calculating disability benefits. I encourage all members to support this legislation when we debate it.

CANADIAN CANCER SOCIETY

Mr. Khalil Ramal: Today is Cancer Care Ontario day at Queen's Park, and I rise to thank the Canadian Cancer Society for all they have done and continue to do, whether it is in cancer awareness education, fundraising for medical research or giving support to families and friends across Canada who are and have been affected by cancer. It is their mission to educate about cancer and enhance the quality of life for individuals living with the disease.

I am sure there is not a person in this Legislature who has not been touched by cancer in some way, which is an indication of how important the role of this organization is to Canadians. The volunteers and staff at the Canadian Cancer Society follow four important values: caring, courage, integrity and progressive. They show respect and empathy to all those affected by cancer; they have the courage every day to continue their mission to eradicate cancer; their organization is respected not only across Canada but worldwide for the work they do; and they have continued to progress as an organization with cutting-edge research, medicine and treatments.

I am honoured and privileged to stand today to speak in their support. We congratulate all the members who work at the Canadian Cancer Society for the job they do on behalf of all of us in this province.

PHILIPPINES INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. Peter Shurman: It gives me great pleasure to speak in the Legislature today to mark the 110th anniversary of Philippine independence. Today, as Filipinos around the world mark this auspicious occasion, we celebrate the contributions that Filipino Canadians have made and continue to make to the development and prosperity of Canada and of Ontario. Their courage and their entrepreneurship and vision have helped make Ontario the great province it is today.

I had the opportunity to attend the Filipino flag-raising both outside today and last weekend in Vaughan in my riding, and it gave me a true sense of how people from all over the world are drawn to Canada, and in particular to Ontario.

On a personal note, I have had the opportunity to meet a number of Filipino Canadians over the past few years, and I know we shouldn't generalize, but all the Filipinos I know are remarkable and tremendously compassionate individuals. They are the type of people we should want to welcome to Ontario with open arms.

The story of Filipino immigration is a quintessentially Canadian story of newcomers leaving their homes in search of a new life for themselves and their families.

Such determination embodies the spirit of individualism. It is that spirit that we celebrate in the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario. The values of our newcomers—hard work, individual integrity and achievement—are indeed the values of our party.

On behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario, I wish all Filipino Canadians the very best. Mabuhay Philippines.

COMMUNITY COLLEGES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Rosario Marchese: For 33 years, part-time college teachers have been denied the right to organize and collectively bargain as full-time college instructors. It has been a right that has been denied for a long, long time. In fact, the International Labour Organization said a couple of years ago that McGuinty ought to give this right and that they deserve to have the right to bargain collectively. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled in the same manner.

I had presented Bill 13 twice here, urging the Liberals to give this right to part-time college instructors to organize and collectively bargain. It took two long years to get the government to finally bring in Bill 90, and they did so under relentless pressure from people like Roger Couvrette, who is the president of OPSECAAT, and OPSEU president Warren Thomas. We congratulate their work because, without that political lobbying from Roger Couvrette and so many others, this government simply would not have listened.

Unfortunately, they've introduced some other measure that is going to affect our workers. They have eliminated the "deemed" provision, which will effectively allow scabs to work in a strike-out situation. We think that's unfortunate, and we'll hear more from that in the hearings that will be happening over the summer.

PORTUGUESE CANADIAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Charles Sousa: I am pleased that June is Portuguese Heritage Month in Ontario. The Portuguese Canadian community is a vibrant community in Ontario and continues to make many significant contributions to our society. Portuguese Canadians have a rich history, language, culture and work ethic.

In fact one of the earliest discoverers of Canada, Gaspar Corte Real, was Portuguese. In the year 1500, he received a charter from King Manuel of Portugal to discover and claim jurisdiction over lands in the new world. He explored the northeast coast of Terra Nova, now known as Newfoundland, and then Conception Bay and Portugal Cove. He sailed up the coast and named it Labrador, which means "farmer" in Portuguese.

The year 2001 marked the 500th anniversary of the arrival of Portuguese explorers in Canada. For the past 500 years, people of Portuguese heritage have settled and made their homes in Canada. In June 2001, Ontario proclaimed June 10 as Portugal Day and the month of June as Portuguese History and Heritage Month. This year's annual Portugal Day parade took place on June 8. The annual parade celebrates the strength, vitality and solidarity of the Portuguese community in Ontario.

Yesterday, we raised the Portuguese flag at Queen's Park. I'm sure I speak for everyone in this House when I say that we all appreciate the boundless pride that events such as this instill in the Portuguese community and the great benefits they bring to our province. I extend my sincere appreciation to all those whose vision and hard work make these celebrations possible, and I wish all Ontarians a happy Portugal Day.

MANUFACTURING JOBS

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: I rise to make a very short statement today, purposely short, because I rise today to congratulate the Liberal government on an impressive feat. In four years, they have done the impossible: In a spectacular display of incompetence, the McGuinty government has doubled the manufacturing job losses that we witnessed during Bob Rae's reign of terror in the early 1990s—doubled the number of job losses.

Losses out of the NDP: 100,000. Losses out of the Liberals: 200,000. I never thought I would see the day. I never thought that this Minister of Economic Development would ever make Bob Rae look good. She's done the impossible; she made Bob Rae look good. Wow. Congratulations, Premier. Congratulations, Minister. You are now officially the worst economic leaders that this province has ever seen since the Great Depression.

MISSION LEGACY AWARD

Mr. Dave Levac: I wish to recognize in the House today the recipients of the Mission Legacy Award in Brantford. This prestigious award, established by Sisters of St. Joseph of Hamilton, pays tribute to the key individuals who, through their dedication and compassion, have contributed in an exceptional manner to the health care ministry of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Hamilton; the St. Joseph's Lifecare Centre and Hospice in Brantford; and the St. Joseph's Health System and the St. Joseph's Resource Development System, joint organizations founded by the Sisters of St. Joseph.

The Sisters of St. Joseph began its legacy in the 17th century in Le Puy, France, by Father Medaille and six women in reaction to the challenges of the gospel at the time. Their healing ministry included work in caring for the sick—working with them during plague outbreaks—the aged, the orphans and the imprisoned, instructing young women and ministering to the poor.

The recipients of the Mission Legacy Award continue to follow the beautiful tradition of the Sisters of St. Joseph by promoting and providing dignity and respect to the citizens of the riding of Brant in need. I wish to congratulate the exceptional individuals of this award, not present here today, who serve as a leading example to all Ontarians. They are Bob and Jan Kennedy, Dr. Grant Honeyman, Dr. Jay Hill, Dr. Donald Swan, Father Emmanuel Demerah, J. Gordon McMillen, John Quinlan, Karl Kurtz, "Rocky" Rocheleau, Phyllis Rayner, Shirley Martin, Sister Anne Anderson, Sister Kathleen McKenna, Vince Bucci and Vyrt Sisson. We thank them for their unselfish contributions to our community.

PLAY WORKS

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: Last week I was invited to attend a presentation ceremony for the 2007 youth-friendly community recognition program, held by Play Works, the Ontario Partnership for Active Youth, which every year identifies and recognizes communities that are youth-friendly. Play Works began recognizing youth-friendly communities in 2005. Since that time, 25 communities in Ontario have received recognition.

This year, the city of Brampton, the city of Welland, the municipality of Port Hope, the town of Caledon and the town of Whitchurch-Stouffville were all welcomed into the select group of communities that have received the youth-friendly community recognition status. The Honourable Margaret Best, Minister of Health Promotion, was in attendance to present the plaques to each community. The city of Brampton representatives, including my former colleague city Councillor Sandra Hames, were in attendance, along with Donna-Lynn Rosa, Mary Held, Diane Butterworth, Andrew Stangherlin, Liz Van Eysinga and Tammy Reynolds.

It's my understanding that Play Works received over 440 applications for this recognition program. Five were chosen this year, exemplifying the best in communities who demonstrated leadership in creating new youth initiatives. Congratulations to those five communities who were identified as youth-friendly and to Play Works for their leadership in health promotion across Ontario.

VOLUNTEER SERVICE AWARDS

Mr. Vic Dhillon: It is with great pride for the people in my riding that I rise today to tell the House about the Ontario Volunteer Service Awards and the recipients from my riding. With the awards being in their 23rd year, they are one way for the government to publicly thank the literally thousands of volunteers across Ontario for their tireless work and dedication to the community. These awards recognize youth who have volunteered for two or more years of continuous service to an organization, as well as adults who have put in five, 10, 20, 25, 30, 40, 60 and 60-plus years of continuous service.

I was quite proud to see that 33 of my constituents are recipients of a Volunteer Service Award from the province of Ontario. I would like to especially highlight the work of Eric Williams, who volunteers for Malton Black Development Association, and Joanne Watson and Margaret Collins from the 1st Brampton Trefoil Guild, who all received awards for 30 years of continuous service to their organizations.

The theme of this year's awards is Volunteers Build Communities. I think this is quite fitting, especially when you think of how volunteers build our communities from the ground up. They give their time and their energy to those around them. We need to recognize this and cultivate it so that others may emulate this in their actions. I congratulate my constituents and I say, keep up the good work.

REPORT, CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I beg to inform the House that today the Chief Electoral Officer tabled the following: the report on the 39th general election in the province of Ontario entitled Placing the Elector at the Centre of the Process, and the report on the provincial referendum on electoral system reform.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: I beg leave to present a report from the Standing Committee on General Government and move its adoption.

The Clerk-at-the-Table (Ms. Tonia Grannum): Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill 69, An Act to protect children from second-hand tobacco smoke in motor vehicles by amending the Smoke-Free Ontario Act / Projet de loi 69, Loi modifiant la Loi favorisant un Ontario sans fumée pour protéger les enfants contre le tabagisme passif dans les véhicules automobiles.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed? Agreed.

Report adopted.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT (REGISTERED DISABILITY SAVINGS PLANS), 2008 LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT DES LOIS EN CE QUI A TRAIT À L'AIDE SOCIALE (RÉGIMES ENREGISTRÉS D'ÉPARGNE-INVALIDITÉ)

Ms. Jones moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 94, An Act to amend the Ontario Disability Support Program Act, 1997 and the Ontario Works Act, 1997 to take into account funds held in or withdrawn from registered disability savings plans / Projet de loi 94,

Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur le Programme ontarien de soutien aux personnes handicapées et la Loi de 1997 sur le programme Ontario au travail pour tenir compte des fonds détenus dans des régimes enregistrés d'épargne-invalidité ou retirés de ceux-ci.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Ms. Sylvia Jones: My bill would amend the Ontario Disability Support Program Act and the Ontario Works Act to exclude funds held in registered disability savings plans from the determination of assets. It also amends the acts to exclude funds withdrawn from a registered disability savings plan from the determination of income.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY AMENDMENT ACT

(SCENTED PRODUCTS), 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA SANTÉ ET LA SÉCURITÉ AU TRAVAIL (PRODUITS PARFUMÉS)

Mr. Levac moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 95, An Act to amend the Occupational Health and Safety Act with respect to scented products in the workplace / Projet de loi 95, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la santé et la sécurité au travail à l'égard des produits parfumés dans le lieu de travail.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Mr. Dave Levac: This bill, if passed, will require employers to prepare and review annually, in consultation with workers, written policies on the use of scented products in the workplace. It will also require that employers develop and maintain programs to implement the policies. As such, it encourages employers and employees to work out a fragrance strategy that promotes a safe and healthy workplace while recognizing people's desire to wear and use scented products, promoting workplace safety and personal freedoms at the same time.

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PROTECTION ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LA PROTECTION DES RÉGIMES ENREGISTRÉS D'ÉPARGNE EN VUE DE LA RETRAITE

Mr. Leal moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 96, An Act respecting protection for registered retirement savings / Projet de loi 96, Loi visant à protéger les régimes d'épargne-retraite enregistrés.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Mr. Jeff Leal: The purpose of the bill is to protect registered retirement savings plans and registered retirement income funds as well as deferred profit-sharing plans from most creditors. Those plans, however, will still be subject to support orders enforced under the Family Responsibility and Support Arrears Enforcement Act, 1996, and orders respecting the separation of property in family matters.

MOTIONS

CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Hon. Michael Bryant: I seek unanimous consent to present a motion without notice regarding the Chief Electoral Officer.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Hon. Michael Bryant: I move that an humble address be presented to the Lieutenant Governor in Council as follows:

"To the Honourable Lieutenant Governor in Council:

"We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, request the appointment of Greg Essensa as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Ontario, as provided in section 4 of the Election Act, RSO 1990, c. E.6, to hold office under the terms and conditions of the said act,

"And that the address be engrossed and presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor in Council by the Speaker."

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd just like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the committee who worked so diligently on this appointment: Michael Prue, John O'Toole, Greg Sorbara, and as well Nancy Marling from human resources. Thank you.

DEFERRED VOTES

PRAYER IN THE LEGISLATURE

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Mr. Bryant has moved that the Speaker commence each meeting day of the Assembly by reciting the Lord's Prayer, followed by another prayer, or the presentation of a verse or passage, or call for a moment of silent reflection, or any such other similar activity which, in the opinion of the Speaker, will serve to reflect over time the general demographic composition of this chamber and of the province of Ontario.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1323 to 1328.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): All those in favour of the motion will rise one at a time and be recorded by the Clerk.

It has served us well.

I want to take this opportunity as well to thank the committee: Garfield Dunlop, Cheri DiNovo and Bas Balkissoon. I want to thank Todd Decker, from the Clerk's office; Susan Sourial, a committee clerk; Larry Johnston and Carrie Hull, research officers; Sal Crisanti, research assistant from Research and Information Services; and Maggie Head and Ana Pontoni, from my office.

Most of all, I want to thank the citizens of Ontario. As a committee, we received over 11,000 e-mails and letters from citizens of Ontario, and there were well in excess of 25,000 petitions presented here as well. Thank you all very much.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

HANDGUN MANUFACTURERS' AND IMPORTERS' LIABILITY ACT, 2008 LOI DE 2008 SUR LA RESPONSABILITÉ DES FABRICANTS ET DES IMPORTATEURS D'ARMES DE POING

Mr. Flynn moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 82, An Act to make manufacturers and importers liable for harm caused by the unlawful use of handguns / Projet de loi 82, Loi imputant aux fabricants et aux importateurs la responsabilité de toute atteinte causée par l'utilisation illégale d'armes de poing.

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce private member's Bill 82 for the consideration of the House. The reason for this is that the influence of handguns in our society, certainly in the city of Toronto and now creeping out into the suburbs and into many other urban areas in this province, is simply becoming an issue that needs to be dealt with in ways that we haven't dealt with it before.

It seems to me that we have a different approach to the ownership and use of handguns than our great neighbours to the south—two different societies, friendly to each other, but certainly the approach to handguns in the United States is much different than our approach here in Canada. Many of the handguns that are found in the commission of crimes by the police in our cities and by police services throughout the province are found to have originated in other countries, most specifically in the United States.

This bill would allow the victim of a violent crime that has been committed with a handgun to hold responsible the manufacturer of that handgun if he could prove that that manufacturer had been negligent in the manufacture, storage, transportation or security of that handgun.

The reason I'm bringing this forward is that many tragic incidents—any of you who read the newspapers today would have seen on the front page of the Toronto Sun two more young people shot—one in the chest, the other in both legs in Regent Park just yesterday, not very far from here. It seems to me that this is happening far too often, and we need to stem the flow of guns into this country.

There are a number of ways that we could do that. My first preference, obviously, would be a handgun ban. The federal government does not seem to be inclined at this point in time to bring in a handgun ban, so it's left to the provinces, the police services boards, and provincial Legislatures to bring forward ideas that may stem the spate of violent crime in the absence of a handgun ban.

I'm saying that, as a society and as a province, we need to look at where these handguns originate, where they come from, where they're made and how they're getting into this country. Somewhere along the line these guns are leaving the legal system of manufacturers, storage and ownership and are entering the illegal system. All illegal guns begin their life as legal guns. Criminals aren't out there making guns; they're acquiring these guns. They're acquiring them through the legal system; they're acquiring from the legal system. I'm saying that a person who is a victim of violent crime, somebody who has been hurt in the commission of a crime involving the use of a handgun or the threatened use of a handgun, should have the right to hold the manufacturer of that product responsible, should you be able to prove that in the handling of that product, that manufacturer has been negligent.

We have a growing approach to some of the more dangerous products in our society: It's called product stewardship. We do it from an environmental perspective. We do it with such things as toxins. We do it with a variety of things where you have a product that you know can cause harm to your society. What we are saying is that you expect the manufacturers, those that make a good living from the manufacture of those products, to be held to a much higher standard. What supporting Bill 82 would do is allow manufacturers to be held to that higher standard, and it would allow the victims to take action against those people to recover some costs, to recover some compensation for the often tragic circumstances that people find themselves in after having been the victim of a handgun crime.

I want today to read a quote I was able to get from a lady we've probably all heard of who was a victim of a drive-by shooting in Toronto not very long ago. Her name is Louise Russo. What she says is, "I fully support Kevin Flynn's private member's bill, the gun manufacturers' liability act. Too many innocent lives and the lives of their families have been scattered and destroyed by gun violence. No one but authorized personnel should be allowed to have a firearm."

She was an innocent victim, as I said, of gun violence. She was left paralyzed. This was a shooting that took place in 2003. I think it caught the attention of the entire city, to see somebody who I believe was just sitting in a restaurant, living her own life, and suddenly had her life changed by a group of individuals who had somehow found their way to own handguns, and were able to use those handguns to turn this lady's life on its head. At the end of the day, she had no recourse. She was doomed to a life of poverty, she was doomed to a life in a wheelchair, and simply had no recourse against the system that had allowed those handguns to fall into the wrong hands.

She goes on further to say, "This bill is an instrumental part of ensuring that the victims of handgun crimes can make manufacturers or importers"—and I should note here that when I talk about importers, I'm also talking about smugglers—"take responsibility if they are found to be neglectful."

I was really pleased that Louise would step forward on this, because I know she's become a symbol of everything that is wrong with the use of handguns in our society. She's become a symbol of what can happen in a split second when we allow those people who own handguns or have acquired handguns, the criminal element in our society, to change somebody's life in the way that hers did.

All types of firearms, obviously, can be legally possessed by residents in Canada under the terms and conditions that are set out by a variety of forms of legislation. Right now, there are over 600,000 legally registered, restricted and prohibited weapons in Canada. Many legal gun owners actually possess more than one gun.

In 2006, our Canadian police services reported there were over 8,000 victims of violent gun crime, ranging from assault to robbery and homicide. That's a rate of almost one person per hour in Canada who is victimized by violent gun crime. What that says is that by the end of this debate on Bill 82, another Canadian will have been shot, another Canadian will perhaps have been paralyzed and another Canadian will have been touched in a tragic way by handgun use. On average, more than 1,200 Canadians are killed each and every year, and more than 1,000 are injured by firearms each year.

When you look at the Toronto area, and more specifically at the city of Toronto, one quarter of firearm-related victimizations occur right here in the city. A total of almost 2,000 people were the victims of a violent offence related to guns, and that's about one quarter of the national total. According to Stats Canada, in 2006, one quarter of all the firearm-related violent crimes in Canada occurred right here in the city of Toronto. Handguns accounted for 86% of all firearm homicides in Toronto in 2006, and Toronto has almost three times the national proportional rate of restricted and prohibited firearms.

What I'm saying is that these guns are being manufactured primarily in other countries. There's a use for handguns in Canada. I can think of three uses. I can think of sports shooting and target shooting; I have no problem with that. I can think of use by our police services; I certainly have no problem with that. I can think of a use by our armed services as well. There certainly is a use for weapons by our army, navy and air force. But what I don't see any use for is handguns proliferating on the streets of our cities and being used in the commission of crimes. We need to stem that flow. We need to find the people who are responsible for the manufacture of guns and we need to ensure that their products do not enter our province, that their products do not illegally find their way into the hands of people who want to use them with criminal intent. It has become far too common for guns to be used in the commission of a crime.

According to the Canadian Journal of Public Health, firearm deaths have now become the third-leading cause of death among young people between the ages of 15 and 24. Among 26 industrialized countries in the world, Canada ranks fifth in the rate of firearm deaths among children under the age of 14. That's not a high ranking you want; that's a ranking you want to be at the bottom of the pile on. In 2004-05, 49 Ontario children aged 10 to 14 required emergency department visits due to firearm injuries, and a rate of more than three youths per day are accused of a firearm-related offence.

We look at the United States, at the murder rate and the crime rate in some of the urban cities in the United States, and we say, "In the city of Toronto and in the province of Ontario, we do not want to become like that." What I'm saying is that unless we're able to stem the flow of guns into our society, we are going to become like that. I've heard the glib remarks that guns don't kill people; people kill people. I've heard that forever and ever, yet the deaths keep happening. The young people keep dying, the Louise Russos of the world keep getting put in tragic circumstances. It's something that I think just has to end, and the way to end it is to go to the source of the problem.

I'm going to close by reading a quote from Bill Adair, executive director of the Canadian Paraplegic Association. He says:

"For too long, handgun manufacturers and distributors have hidden behind the fallacy that their product was merely for sport. In the meantime, they've saturated the streets with weapons that have been the cause of too many murders and too many spinal cord injuries. The economic and social cost to Ontario has been far too great and it has to stop.

"The Canadian Paraplegic Association of Ontario applauds Mr. Flynn and his private member's bill. We urge all members of the Legislature to support this bill and stop a direct cause of murders and spinal cord injuries in Ontario."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I'm pleased to rise this afternoon and speak on Bill 82, An Act to make manufacturers and importers liable for harm caused by the unlawful use of handguns. I wanted to read the explanatory note, which is very brief:

"The bill provides that when a person is injured or killed as a result of the actual or threatened unlawful use of a handgun, the person (or the personal representative) and his or her dependants are entitled to bring an action against the handgun's manufacturer or importer. The crown in right of Ontario is also entitled to bring an action against a manufacturer or importer of handguns to recover the cost of health care benefits caused or contributed to by the actual or threatened unlawful use of handguns."

I certainly can understand what the member from Oakville is getting at, and I applaud him for his efforts, but I have to tell you this is a bill that is very, very difficult to enforce. He mentioned earlier that guns don't kill people; people kill people. The reality is that there are a number of questions that I would have with this particular bill, and not only this particular bill—other weapons that people might use as well.

For example, when a gun is imported from, let's say, another nation—let's say it's from Africa or a European country or Asia, wherever the gun may come from—who will help the person who's been victimized? Who will help them with their legal costs? That's my first question. It could be absolutely impossible to even consider what the cost of that might be, to actually sue someone in another country who manufactured a gun, probably in good faith, and someone illegally imported it into our country, and someone shoots somebody, like in the case of Mrs. Russo, and in fact they've got a serious injury. Who's going to help them with the lawsuits? That's my first question, and I hope that when the member stands up later and responds, he can answer that.

I also have a question around the theft of guns. For example, he mentioned police and people who target-shoot and practice-shoot with handguns. So what happens if someone has a collection of guns that they use for target shooting, or someone might even acquire by illegal methods—whether it's theft or whatever—a police handgun, and they use that gun to hurt someone or to injure someone? Who will be responsible then? Obviously, the police are required to have guns. Does that mean that if a police gun gets stolen, someone will be able to sue the manufacturer of the handgun that was sold in good faith to the policing community? That's a question I would want to have asked as well.

The other thing that I think we should question here—and I wonder where we're going with this certain line of legislation—is other weapons. It's not only handguns that are killing people; it's not only handguns that are maiming people. We also have people who go at people with a baseball bat. Does that mean the next piece of legislation will sue the manufacturer of the baseball bat because they come forward, because that baseball bat has injured someone? Or someone with a kitchen knife: There have been many people stabbed over the years with a kitchen knife. Are we going to go down that path where, if you're a knife manufacturer and you manufacture knives so that people can use them for cutting bread and carving turkeys, the next thing you know, you're going to be sued because somebody got stabbed with one? That's a problem that I think we have to zero in on.

If the member wanted to really help Ontarians, right now we need about 1,000 new police officers in this province. That's what we require. The policing models of the police associations and the OPP, the Toronto Police Service, all these organizations, right now are about a thousand members short. What we have in front of us right now is $156 million sitting in the hands of the Ontario government that the Ontario government can utilize. It's federal money transferred to the provincial government to actually hire and train more police officers. That's how we're going to eventually eliminate crime and gun violence: by having the resources in the hands of the people that know best, the police officers in our province.

I would suggest that if there's one thing this government can do over the summer months—we're probably going to adjourn here in a few days—it's to push the Premier and the Minister of Community Safety and Correctional Services to hire those additional police officers who are required.

I know right now—I'm critic for community safety and correctional services—I hear from police officers on a daily basis, particularly the OPP, who are in my home riding of Simcoe North at the OPP general headquarters. They tell me, day in and day out, that they need about another 500 officers to fill the complement to properly police the province of Ontario.

I would encourage the member opposite from Oakville to zero in on that as opposed to trying to come up with this type of legislation that's going to be almost impossible to enforce and almost impossible for the individuals to pay for. He did mention poverty for some people—that's why we have the victims' justice fund. Why are we not capitalizing on that more often to help people like Mrs. Russo? If she's actually living in poverty, there's a fund there to help her along. That's what it was put aside for, so that when someone gets injured like Mrs. Russo did, there would be funds set aside so she could live her life better. That would be money through the victims' justice fund.

I appreciate this opportunity. I'll turn it over in a few minutes to Ms. Elliott to continue on.

Mr. Bas Balkissoon: I just want to compliment my colleague from Oakville for bringing forward this particular bill, An Act to make manufacturers and importers liable for harm caused by the unlawful use of handguns.

I wanted to speak to this bill for a particular reason. I'm very concerned about gun crime in the Toronto area, and especially gun crime in my riding of Scarborough—Rouge River. In 2004, before I got elected, I would say gun activity in my riding was rampant. It has dropped lately. I will continue to support and do anything possible to target handguns, because it is the underlying cause of all these problems that we're having.

The statistics today tell you that roughly 2,000 people were victims of violent offences related to gun crimes in just one year, in the year 2006. Handguns have accounted for 86% of all firearms homicides in the Toronto area in 2006. In my own riding, if I remember correctly, in 2004, handguns were responsible for well over a dozen incidents in my area.

It makes me very concerned that something has to be done. I have to say to the members here that in the 20 years that I've been in office, everyone has been talking about doing something about handguns. Handguns have been a problem. But we all seem to sit and wait for that perfect solution. I would say to you that I don't think the perfect solution is out there. What we need is incremental activity to stem this gun problem that we have that is growing in Toronto. It's growing in Ontario, and it's growing in Canada.

Just last month, the people in my community were shocked after a young man was gunned down in front of a high school in broad daylight. The Toronto Police Services had to lock down the two high schools in the area, and the entire community was under siege until they actually conducted their investigation. I don't think I want to promote this. I want to do something about it.

I have to say to you that this government is doing something, but our federal friends have to be at the table to support us to do something about handguns. We've been asking them to ban handguns. They don't really seem to get it. I hope we can continue to pressure them until they get it.

Another good example of work by our government is my colleague the member for Eglinton—Lawrence's recent private member's bill: If anyone is found with a handgun in their vehicle, we can seize their vehicle and take their driver's licence away and suspend it immediately. These are the kinds of incremental things we need to do, and continue to do, until we stem gun crime activity in our community.

We have asked the federal government, and I think police forces around Ontario are saying to the government, that we need to have gun marking in Canada, where all manufactured guns have serial numbers and markings on the parts, so that when there is a problem, the police can trace a particular handgun to where it was manufactured, to who bought it and, if it was lost, to someone else. This would reduce the cost of investigation.

I am in favour of my colleague's bill and will be supporting it. I want to thank him again for taking this action in trying to stem handgun activity in this province.

Mrs. Christine Elliott: I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments with respect to the Handgun Manufacturers' and Importers' Liability Act. Let me say at the outset that the Progressive Conservative Party will not be supporting this bill, not because we condone gun violence and the needless deaths of our young people, but because this bill is simply not going to do anything in reality to deal with this. In fact, if you consider the ramifications of this bill, it could lead to some quite bizarre results. I would like to take a moment to explain why that is so.

Let's start with a few facts. For all intents and purposes, there is a handgun ban in Canada right now. Despite what the Liberal members are saying, despite the hue and cry about calling on the federal government to do something, there already is a handgun ban, except for people who are lawfully allowed to own handguns: members of our police services, our armed forces, and recreational shooters.

I note that in his correspondence with respect to the bill, the member from Oakville referenced a similar law that was passed by the city of New York in 2005. It would appear that the current bill has been modelled after the New York statute. I would say that the situation in the United States is vastly different from the situation we deal with here in Canada. So what we are really doing here is comparing apples and oranges.

If you read the resolution for the city of New York council, which passed this statute in 2005, there is a section that deals with legislative findings and intent. I'd like to quote from that briefly:

"In order to reduce gun-related crime, New York City has in the past two decades adopted a thorough background check and licensing scheme aimed at ensuring the responsible handling of firearms and the registration of all firearm owners in the city. Unfortunately, despite such efforts, the problem of gun crime persists at the alarming rate of approximately one firearm death per day. This fact is largely a result of the proliferation of illegal means of firearm procurement, such as unlicensed importation from other states with less restrictive gun laws, unregistered sales at trade shows and so-called 'straw purchases' in which authorized purchasers buy guns and provide them to unauthorized users, including minors and convicted felons."

The section goes on to state that if manufacturers follow appropriate procedures and practices, the illegal flow of firearms will be reduced and manufacturers will not be liable for damages. That is because the manufacturers will not have been negligent in the manufacture or handling of the handguns, which I think is what is reasonable under the circumstances—they will have taken reasonable precautions.

There is, however, no suggestion in the New York statute that a manufacturer could be responsible for damages relating to illegal use of a gun by someone for whom they're not responsible. That, I believe, is a reasonable position to take.

What we have in the present situation is confusion between the negligent use of a gun—that is, doing something you shouldn't have done or failing to do what you ought to have done—and an actual illegal activity, which is knowingly doing something you shouldn't have done, such as smuggling guns and using them improperly.

What we have in this piece of legislation is an amalgamation of the two, with a result that simply doesn't make sense.

The member already knows that here in Canada we have a handgun ban, for all intents and purposes. We have very strict rules around the manufacture and distribution of guns. So the possibility of negligence in the manufacture of guns here simply doesn't exist. The statute that the member is proposing goes on to say that it's not only negligence with respect to the distribution and importation of guns, it also deals with the design and manufacturing. That is not likely to happen.

What the member is really trying to get at here is to take a product that's actually legal—because the manufacture of guns is legal—and make it into an illegal product. So if it's used for an illegal purpose, the manufacture is going to be responsible, no matter how it's used. That simply can't exist. It doesn't make any sense.

It's very similar to the situation that my colleague the member for Simcoe North mentioned, which indicated that you can't hold a knife manufacturer responsible if it's used in the commission of a crime, or a baseball bat. I would say, very similarly, you can't hold General Motors responsible if someone takes a product like a car, goes out and gets drunk and kills somebody with it. You cannot possibly expect General Motors to be responsible for that. That, in effect, is what the member is proposing with this bill, however, and that is why we're opposing it.

We are all in favour of any reasonable proposal coming forward that's actually going to do something to prevent gun violence. But, yet again, what we have from the Liberals is something that's this wide and about this deep, something that really doesn't have any substance about it but appears to be doing a great deal about it. I propose that the Liberal member should go back and actually try and do something instead of blaming others with respect to this.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I'm delighted to stand up to congratulate my colleague the member for Oakville for bringing such an important issue to this House: Bill 82, An Act to make manufacturers and importers liable for harm caused by the unlawful use of handguns. I've listened to many speakers on this side of the House who spoke before me. They spoke about the protection and safety of our communities in Ontario. As the member for Oakville mentioned, the federal government didn't come to the table, and is not coming to the table, to create safety across this nation.

It's very important to ban handguns and make this province very safe. We hear a lot on the radio, TV, and from reading the newspaper on a daily basis, about how many people get killed or injured during their activities by handguns, by people who are shooting while driving cars, or attacking restaurants, coffee shops or variety stores—many different issues.

I think it's our obligation and duty as elected officials to create laws and mechanisms to create safety for the people who live in this province of Ontario, especially when we read so many different statistics. More than 1,200 people across Canada die on a yearly basis from shootings by lawful guns. Also, more than 1,000 get injured. Some of them cannot work again and cannot walk again. Many different injuries happen on a daily basis across Canada. There's also a big percentage here in Ontario, in our big cities and our small cities.

Not long ago, my colleague from Eglinton—Lawrence brought a bill to make sure that people who get caught by the police with a gun in their car will have their car seized and will lose their driver's licence. All these initiatives come together to create a safety net in Ontario, to protect the people of this province.

I want to congratulate the member for his thoughtful ideas and for thinking about the safety of the people of Ontario. There's no community in Ontario that is safe these days. So many youth watch TV, read the newspapers, and they think it's easy to carry a gun and sometimes use it against their friends, neighbours and different targets. So I think it is our obligation and duty to have some kind of tough rules and regulations.

Since we cannot control the movement of guns across Canada, I think we should go after the manufacturers who produce those guns. I think that's a very important tool to scare those companies from selling guns to anyone at any time. So I think it's a very important step. That's why I'm standing up and speaking in support. Whatever issue makes sure that this province of Ontario will be safe, I'm going to support it. I want to congratulate the member again for his thoughtful ideas and for bringing this bill forward, to make sure that our province and our communities are safe.

Mr. Michael Prue: I'm going to state at the outset that I rise to support the bill—not because I think that the bill is going to work, because I do agree with my Conservative colleagues—to send it to committee, to provide the necessary support in committee to do some other things to help make it work, to strengthen it so that it can actually do something.

My friend from Oakville cited the case of Louise Russo. We all know of her very tragic case in this House.

Those of us who live in Toronto—who saw what happened to her on the way to a sandwich shop to get some nourishment for her children one night, to see her struck down in a hail of bullets—will remember the sadness and anger of the people of this city when that happened. We remember the struggle she had to try to rehabilitate herself, to be in a wheelchair, to try her best as a very brave woman to do everything she could to get her health back into some kind of order so that she could continue to look after her family.

It is in that nature that we are supporting the bill, because no matter how small the provision of the bill and no matter how small the chances of actually taking guns off the streets with this bill, we all know that we need to do something. That's why I supported the member from Eglinton—Lawrence's bill. Even though I understand that it may not have much of a deterrent effect, at least he is trying to do something, as is the member from Oakville.

To use the Louise Russo case: Look at what happened here. It was a tragedy to her and her family. She ended up with some $2 million of compensation from the people who had put her in the wheelchair. This was extremely contentious—not only in the courts but in the court of public opinion in Ontario, the editorial opinion—because in fact a type of plea bargain took place, a type of plea bargain in which the perpetrators of the crime were allowed to plead guilty to a lesser charge. They received only 11 years in jail—which to some might seem a lot, but we all thought they were going to face much more severe consequences—provided that some $2 million went to her, so that she could care for herself and the pain and suffering of her family, and to look after the needs, the restructuring of her household, so that she could reach appliances and things from a wheelchair.

Part of the reason that this happened, that the court case and settlement took place, is because in Ontario we have woefully inadequate compensation for victims of crime. The maximum that anyone can get is $365,000. So there was Ms. Russo and her lawyers going and negotiating a settlement with the perpetrators, that they would only get 11 years, provided that there was $2 million made available to look after her in her time of greatest need. I can understand why the family did it and I can understand why the lawyers negotiated it. But I have to say that I think the system let her down as well, because the compensation of $365,000, which is the maximum allowable by law in this province, was not enough to compensate her.

Having said that, I have to question what would have happened if Mrs. Russo had had this bill in effect at the time she was tragically struck down by the bullet. What would she have been able to do? She negotiated in a court, and her lawyers did what was, I guess, in her and her family's best interests. But what would she have done under this bill?

The first thing she would have had to do was sue for negligence. She would have had to sue for negligence on the part of the manufacturer, the importer, the salesperson or wherever the gun came from. That is what she would've had to do. In the body of this bill, she would have had to prove in a court of law that the "design, manufacturing, marketing, importation, sales or distribution practices could result in the actual or threatened unlawful use of the handgun." That is a mighty tall order in a court of law, to prove that the manufacturer or the importer knew that that handgun was going to be used for that nefarious purpose.

As the member from Oakville correctly stated, all handgun sales, or virtually all handgun sales, at the initial stage are legal. They're legal in the United States and, if they are sold in Canada, they are sold to people who are registered to carry a handgun and are, in themselves, legal. It is what happens to those handguns virtually after that that makes them illegal.

A question has to be asked under this bill, and I'm sure the first lawyer who gets his hands on it is going to ask the same question: Is the maker, is the distributor, is the importer negligent if a handgun is stolen? We know that most of these handguns are stolen. We know they're stolen from private people. We know they're stolen from pawnshops. We know they're not obtained illegally, as the member himself has stated. Is a maker, distributor or importer negligent if someone takes stolen property, not intended for their use, and uses it illegally?

Of course, the second problem and the second question I have to ask is the citizens' resort to the courts, which will be required under this legislation. We know, in Mrs. Russo's case, this was part of a criminal lawsuit that the province of Ontario was prosecuting fully and with full intent to have the perpetrators get jail time, and a deal, a plea bargain, was made. This did not cost Mrs. Russo any money.

In future, if we are to litigate—like we litigate in the United States or like Americans litigate—then you are going to find that those selfsame citizens who are the subject of gun violence are going to have to have pretty deep pockets. We know people have had pretty deep pockets when they took on the cigarette manufacturers, when they got cancer years down the road and the cigarette manufacturers were said not to have released the studies that showed that cigarette smoking would cause cancer. We know the same thing is going to happen here.

You're going to have to have pretty deep pockets before this goes—the gun groups and the gun manufacturers have much deeper pockets, unfortunately, than most citizens. If you're going to put the citizens to this kind of risk, this bill needs to be strengthened so that there is money available to people to litigate. I'm not sure that that's in the bill, but if the bill passes, we can send it to committee and we can look at that too.

We need to look at the entire question of the $365,000 limit—is that why this is being proposed? Is this being proposed as a sop not to increase the limit? What if the limit was $1 million? What if the limit was $2 million? Mrs. Russo could have gone right for compensation and the people who shot her might have had a higher sentence.

She needed the money desperately. Her family needed the money desperately for medical expenses and lifetime expenses, as a result of her being in the wheelchair, unable to work, unable to perform household duties—the whole range of things—and having to reconstruct a house. We know that all took place. She needed $2 million and there was an avenue to get it. What if that avenue was in the criminal compensation fund? Would that not also do the same thing? Then the courts would not have to negotiate or allow the negotiation of a deal, and who knows? The people who committed those crimes might not have gotten 11 years, they might have gotten 20 or 30 years, which is probably more in keeping with what the people of Ontario wanted them to get.

The reality of all of this is that we have to stop the flow of handguns coming into the province. The only, only way I am convinced that this can be done is to interdict them at the border. It means a stronger police presence, a stronger customs presence and a stronger immigration presence at the border. If any of you have gone down to the border, you will see that the flow of traffic is enormous crossing the United States border—Americans coming to visit Canada, returning Canadians coming back after having visited the United States—and it is very easy for people to smuggle.

I am not naive. I worked in the immigration department for some 20 years, along with my customs brothers and sisters, and I saw the amount of contraband that was taken. Most often, people would be trying to smuggle back an extra bottle of booze, or they would be trying to bring in a Rolex watch—or something they thought was a Rolex watch, anyway—from wherever they had travelled, and they were caught. We need the customs officials to be on that border. We need them to search any suspicious person a lot more often, I would suggest, than they do. We need to have the kind of technology that will allow trucks and cars to be X-rayed to see whether there are guns in them, because they do give off an X-ray. They will be shown. The people get out of the car and the car is X-rayed. You can tell pretty soon whether or not there are handguns or other metal objects, other than the car itself, by the shapes that appear on the screen. We need to have that kind of technology, and we need to put the full force of the law on people who insist on smuggling those handguns across our borders.

I recognize that this is a federal responsibility, but I think that this Legislature has an obligation to make the case known that we expect the full punishment of the law. We don't expect that when people are found with illegal handguns in their houses, as happened to a former member of this House not too long ago—that person received a conditional or an absolute discharge. We need to get serious, and it doesn't matter who the person is who has an illegal gun. If they knowingly keep that in their home, in their car, in their possession, then it should carry a mandatory sentence on indictment, and by that I mean at least two years. All indictable offences carry sentences of at least two years. I would suggest that that's the way we need to get serious.

I am supporting the member from Oakville's bill because I want it to go to committee. It needs to be strengthened, and we need to make sure that it is going to have the desired effect. Having said that, I promised my constituents and my former constituents, when I was the mayor, that I would do everything I could to get those handguns off the street. Even though this is a small measure, I still support it.

Mr. Mike Colle: I'm very proud to stand up and support the member from Oakville's private member's bill trying to control the proliferation of handguns by putting the responsibility on the manufacturers and importers of handguns. It's almost laughable to hear the Conservative member stand up and say, "There is a handgun ban in Ontario and Canada. We don't have to do anything." Wake up and smell the coffee. Just tell the people of Toronto about this handgun ban. It's a joke. There probably are more handguns now on our streets than there ever have been and they're in the hands of criminals. The police know it. We've put out more police, and the police are doing an incredible job, but we're endangering the lives of all of our citizens and of the police because we're not doing anything to plug the handgun loopholes.

This week we heard an RCMP intelligence report which told us that there are hundreds of guns coming into Canada every day from importers who say they're importing guns and weapons for the film industry. But there are no checks and balances: When the film company gets the weapons, they then have no tracking mechanism. The RCMP has said to the federal government, "You have no way of tracing where these hundreds and thousands of weapons are ending up," and they're saying that they're ending up in the hands of criminals.

The member is trying to do something that's been tried in a couple of US cities and states because they too are desperate to stop the proliferation of these guns. Who wants the handguns? It's the criminals, it's the drug peddlers, it's the gangsters who want these handguns. For the life of me, why can't we see through the basic, common-sense action of this, putting more responsibility on the people who import the weapons—and they do it for big money. They are, in essence, arming the criminals in our society with these handguns, and we're doing nothing about it.

It's going on and it's threatening people. They talk about, "Well, you should then look at banning baseball bats and kitchen knives." How ludicrous is that? In my own riding, on March 14, six young teenagers standing in front of their house were approached by two thugs. One with a handgun shot six of them. Luckily, only one died, and the one who died covered the other five up, or all six would have been dead by that lethal handgun in the hand of a criminal, who was already known to have this kind of weapon in the past.

This is the type of reality in our streets, and some people say, "Well, it's not happening in my town. It's not happening in my riding." Believe me, it's a plague that will affect all of us. We can't just say, "Oh, there are great laws. We don't have to do anything." The laws have loopholes you can drive trucks through. My colleague from Oakville is saying that we have to get to the point of taking some action on this. Provincially, we're trying. This is another great idea. It has been tried in Chicago and New York with some success. We can't afford to just defend the status quo and say, "Everything is okay with handguns. Be happy; don't worry. There's a handgun ban in Canada." We need to get real with this issue. This is an attempt to get real. Whether you live in Toronto, Oshawa, Mississauga or Oakville, these criminals have these guns; they're readily available; they're coming across the border because there's no checking of it across the border. They're coming in by the thousands. There's money being made here, because with guns go drugs, crime and gangsterism. So let's do something. This is an attempt for us to support a member who feels strongly about doing something.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The honourable member from Oakville, Mr. Flynn, you have up to two minutes to respond.

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: I'd like to thank all the other members who have responded in their own way to this. It has gone a little bit as I predicted it might. My thanks to the members from Scarborough–Rouge River, London–Fanshawe, Simcoe North, Whitby–Oshawa, Eglinton–Lawrence and Beaches–East York.

As I said, this debate would take about an hour. Since that hour has passed, another 160 handguns have been manufactured in the United States. Some of those are going to find their way onto our streets. Some of those will be used in the commission of a crime. Some of those may kill Canadian men and women. We need to do something about that. I can think of a million and one excuses as to things you can't do or things you shouldn't do, but it simply is not good enough. I think you have to decide whose side you are on on this. Are you on the side of the victims of gun crime? On the side of the paraplegic association? People like Louise Russo and Halton Regional Police Chief Gary Crowell? Or are you on the side of the gun manufacturers and the gun lobby? It's that simple. There are simply too many guns entering our country from the United States, and we can do something about that. We, as a province, can send a message to the gun industry: "Do everything you possibly can to keep your guns out of Ontario. If somehow they're leaving your supply system, and somehow they're leaving pawn shops and gun dealers close to the border, and you suspect that maybe some of the guns are ending up in Ontario, then maybe you need to look at your supply system. Maybe you need to do something with your own company to make sure that those guns do not make it onto Ontario streets." By supporting this message, we're sending a message to those who manufacture handguns that, should that happen and should one of our citizens become a victim, we're coming after you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): We'll vote on this matter in 100 minutes' time.

SKIN CANCER PREVENTION ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LA PRÉVENTION DU CANCER DE LA PEAU

Mr. Ramal moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 83, An Act to help prevent skin cancer / Projet de loi 83, Loi aidant à prévenir le cancer de la peau.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Pursuant to standing order 97, you have up to 12 minutes for your remarks.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: Before I start, I'd like to welcome two members of the Canadian Cancer Society here with us in the gallery: Stephanie Murray and Irene Gallagher. They came to witness the discussion on this very important issue. I also want to thank my assistant, who worked very hard for the last month to prepare all the documentation and research to provide to all the members of this House about the importance of the initiative.

It's important for all of us in the province of Ontario to protect our citizens, especially the youth. Two members from the Canadian Cancer Society came to my office some time ago in the early fall and brought to my attention this issue, and explained to me in detail how important it is to ban ultraviolet treatment, especially for people who are under 19, because it causes cancer. Since that time, this idea has developed in my mind, and I've drafted it as a bill to introduce it today for second reading. Hopefully we'll get support from all the members of the House in order to create some kind of safety net in Ontario.

As you know, this initiative is important because it will provide for a prohibition on selling or supplying tanning services or ultraviolet light treatment services to a person under the age of 19. The prohibition does not apply to ultraviolet light treatment prescribed by authorized medical professionals for conditions prescribed by the regulations.

Since we live in a very complex society, many people try to use many different cosmetics in order to look beautiful, to look different than others, which has attracted so many different youth among us—not just in the province of Ontario and in Canada, but also across the globe. And those issues—the ultraviolet radiation, which can cause cancer on many different occasions. I was reading some statistics: Ultraviolet radiation, if we are subjected to it, will cause skin cancer. We have statistics showing that in Canada almost 68,000 have non-melanoma cancer, with a third of those caused by ultraviolet radiation. That ultraviolet radiation comes from the sun, but also from tanning salons and tanning beds. Many youth use these to do their tanning, and they cause cancer.

So we have cancers called non-melanoma and melanoma. Non-melanoma is the famous one, the biggest one—almost 68,000 in Canada. We also have melanoma, with some 3,000 being diagnosed. This one causes a lot of dangers; most of the time it causes death. Those numbers, incidences and diagnoses have been increasing since 1960. In the beginning of 1960-61, almost four per 100,000 among men used to be diagnosed with those cancers, but by 2000, the number had increased to 15 per 100,000 among men and 11.5 among women. The number did not just double but almost tripled among men and women. This affects mostly people who have fair skin, who are taking medications or who have freckles or moles. It increases the activities of the cancers, and those cancers, as you know, are not good for our youth.

All the statistics and all the medical research show us that people under 19 are more subject to cancer because their skin is still fragile and not mature enough to be able to resist the ultraviolet radiation that comes from the sun or from the artificial lighting of the tanning salons.

I think it is our duty and obligation as elected officials to create awareness and also to ban the different tools being used across the province that cause death and cancer among our youngsters. As you know, the youth among us are important to carry on this province and also to create a healthy province. So I want to thank the Canadian Cancer Society for their initiative and also for their continuous campaign to create a healthy society.

As you know, not long ago we banned smoking in cars when there are kids. This initiative was brought by my colleague the member from Sault Ste. Marie, who was also encouraged by the Canadian Cancer Society to introduce that bill. Success with that bill—it saw the light and has been passed, supported by both sides of the House. Hopefully it will be a law in the province of Ontario soon.

I think this initiative to ban the different tools, whether it's smoking, tanning or many other things—we were debating in the House last week, and also in committee this coming week, banning cosmetic pesticide use in many different places in the province. All these initiatives, I think, are a very important step to creating a healthy society.

That's why, in private members' bills, many members of the House bring very different initiatives. I know that some people think those bills do not go anywhere, just for consumption of time, but I don't agree. Most of the time, those bills at least create awareness if they don't pass, and most of the time are also carried by the minister or the ministry or the government and become a law of the land. I think this bill is important to create healthy habits among our youth in the province of Ontario.

Today, as you know, was Cancer Care Ontario day at Queen's Park. Many vendors came to Queen's Park and displayed different pictures and sites and spoke about cancer and how we can attack cancer in the province of Ontario and how we can protect ourselves. I think that campaign continues, not just with the Canadian Cancer Society but also with many different stakeholders across the province and many different organizations who care very much about people, about protection of the people.

I brought this bill because I know that a lot of people, especially the youth under 19, go to tanning salons and they sit for one hour or two hours. They want to change the colour of their skin because, for some reason, they think they look sexy or more beautiful, or they want to change their image to show off among their friends, but they don't understand the result of their actions. Most of the time, those actions cause skin cancer. So I think if we had a ban to prohibit people under 19 from using those salons, it would create some kind of safe environment for many youth in the province of Ontario.

Also, those salons open at many different places with no regulations and no educational materials for the people using the salons. Sometimes they sit for many long hours, and that will cause some kind of cancer.

As I mentioned, all the statistics from the Canadian Cancer Society and many other health organizations worldwide show it's caused as a result of ultraviolet, which comes from the sun or from artificial lighting like that in tanning salons. I think it's important for all of us to ban these tanning salons for people under 19 because, as I mentioned at the beginning, their bodies are not mature enough to resist or absorb those lights. Therefore, I think it's our obligation as elected officials to put some kind of ban or regulations to regulate this industry and create some kind of campaign of awareness among the people. Also, before the people use the salons, they have to be educated about the consequences of using or being subject to those artificial lights.

When we talk about health care in the province of Ontario and how much it costs us, I think it's our duty to have regulations to lower the pressure on health care. As you know, when we got elected, health care was about $29 billion a year; now it's up to $40.4 billion this year, in budget 2008. It's still not enough, because so many different diseases, so many different illnesses, develop in Ontario and in this world as a result of technology, as a result of changing our habits and life and of many different issues: as I mentioned, cosmetic pesticides, smoking in cars, drinking without regulation and also exposing our bodies to the sun and to artificial ultraviolet—many different issues. Also, there is pollution in the environment. All this stuff is causing a lot of damage to our bodies and it creates many different diseases that didn't exist in the past. Life in the past was very simple, was very regular, and people normally used to eat whatever they grew in the backyards. They would never expose themselves to artificial things like ultraviolet that comes from the lights created to change the colour of the body. So all these initiatives are causing disease, especially cancer, and cancer has grown in society as a result of the foods we eat today and also exposing ourselves and our bodies to artificial light. All this concentrated light which normally comes from the sun to a certain degree comes automatically into the body, and most of the time, for those people who are taking medication and also have a freckle on their face or their body, it doubles the reaction and in the end will cause cancers.

I'm looking forward to hearing from many speakers in the House. I've learned that many of the doctors among us in this House are going to speak and give us their wisest of ideas on why we have to ban tanning salons and exposing the bodies of people under 19 to this artificial lighting, because it's important, as I mentioned, to create a safe mechanism for people who live among us, especially the youth, because it's our obligation and duty to create a healthy society. So by banning this, we will create a healthy society and a healthy future for the people of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Mr. Peter Shurman: Given that this is perhaps the last time that I'll have a chance to rise in debate before we close for the summer in this House—

Mr. Shafiq Qaadri: Say it isn't so, Peter.

Mr. Peter Shurman: One never knows. It's possible we'll go on, but it looks like potentially the last time.

I'd like to make some comments specific to Bill 83, the Skin Cancer Prevention Act, as well as to more broadly address a category of bills that this fits under, and I'm talking specifically about bans, because we have discussed bans almost incessantly. As this session comes to a close, I suppose also coming to a close is the categorization that I fall into, which is "new member."

Over the session, I have had the opportunity to observe the member from London-Fanshawe in this chamber in debate, and I must say, first of all, that he is always a willing participant in debate. He is a likable colleague, but I'm sorry that I cannot support this bill, because while the intent of the bill is excellent, the legislation, for a variety of reasons, is bad, and I'll explain why in short and then elaborate.

First of all, it's yet another ban and, second, it is very poorly written legislation as it exists. Bill 83 is yet another example of the unimaginative and inept legislation that Ontarians have come to expect from the McGuinty Liberals. It's yet another ban. Liberals seem to have—I'm sorry to members on the other side—no faith in the intelligence of Ontarians. Progressive Conservatives value freedom of choice above all else, and I think that's the single largest division between the two parties: freedom of choice. We believe in personal intellect; we believe in personal responsibility.

The McGuinty Liberals believe that people need to be protected from themselves, and they have become expert nanny-state practitioners. Bill 83 is another piece of nanny-state legislation—government for the sake of government and for no other reason. The legal age to drive is 16, the age to join the armed forces is 18, and the voting age is 18. If I can provide an example of what I'm talking about, someone could sign up to fight courageously for Canada in Afghanistan, but God forbid that he or she should go to a tanning salon prior to deployment, because the age is 19. My God, I'm feeling like I'm a talk show host again. Forgive me the observation.

Who knows how to take care of their kids better than a loving parent? If you ask members of the Progressive Conservative caucus, and indeed if you ask Ontarians, the answer is, "No one." No one is better than a parent. Yet the member from London-Fanshawe would have everyone believe that he knows best. My colleagues in the PC caucus and I know that that is simply not true. It is simply not true.

Let's take a look at a few things the McGuinty Liberals, in all their benevolence, have seen fit to ban for the benefit of us mere plebeians. They began the session by banning trans fats. If I look at a package—I would like to think that, as an intelligent person, I look at packages—and see trans fats, I don't buy the product. Pit bulls: an entire breed of dog banned. Smoking in cars with kids present: I've said in this House before that if you do that, you must be something less than normal, and when you pass a bill like that, you have it, we all agree—I voted for it—but nobody has explained to me how you're going to enforce it.

We're going to pass a bill on cosmetic pesticides, but no one bothers to call attention to the fact that after all the exemptions, what we're passing is a bill that bans the use of cosmetic pesticides in residential areas, which accounts for less than 2% of the use of all pesticides, period. Displays of cigarettes in convenience stores: Going on 40% of all cigarette sales in this province emanate from smoke shacks on First Nations properties and are not policed at all. So you can ban things, but you don't have to worry about enforcing them.

Speeding in trucks: Isn't speeding illegal already? Where I come from, the 400 highways have a speed limit of 100 kilometres per hour, but we're going to limit trucks to 105. Okay. There is a ban on illegal firearms in vehicles. I have a question: If owning an illegal firearm is illegal, why do we need to ban them in vehicles? Let me ask that question again, in case you didn't hear me: If owning an illegal firearm is illegal, why do we need to ban them in vehicles? Oh, and by the way, if owning an illegal firearm is illegal, why do we need to ban them in vehicles? I keep asking myself this question, as a person who started here seven months ago, and I just don't get it. My personal favourite is the ban on banning clotheslines. That's what the members on the opposite side did. Cities banned clotheslines because they weren't pretty, and now we've banned their ability to ban clotheslines.

I have an idea: Let's introduce a ban on bans. How about a ban on being stupid, or how about jail time for stupid legislation? Perhaps certain members of the government benches should hope that such a bill never, ever gets passed. Let's have a ban on walking into oncoming traffic, or maybe we can have a ban on standing under trees on golf courses in lightning storms, or maybe we can have a ban on eating yellow snow. Think about this: How many things can you ban? This government legislates first and thinks later.

How will all of these bans we have be enforced? Enforcement is a detail that the McGuinty nanny-statists don't want to worry about. They don't want to worry themselves with it, so their response is to leave it to beleaguered municipalities, with no cash to support them, to do the enforcement. These things exist. People in their busy lives hear them on the radio and read them in the paper and say, "That sounds like a good idea." But there's no thought about what happens when it comes to enforcement.

Let me make a few comments on Bill 83, which is simply bad legislation. It's absolutely rife with gaps, it leaves too much to bureaucratic interpretation and is, in effect, legislation by regulation. What constitutes tanning services? Tanning beds? Selling tanning products? It could be the tanning of leather, because there are no definitions. Under this legislation, if passed as it exists, an 18-year-old could go with a piece of cowhide to a tannery and say, "I want tanning services," and if they're sold to him, that's illegal, because there are no definitions.

What constitutes ultraviolet light treatment? We don't know. Dentists use ultraviolet light to cure fillings and crowns. Does that constitute ultraviolet light treatment? If it does, and there are no exemptions for dentists, they would be committing a crime. If it does, we're in trouble. Why? Because, unlike members of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, which my friend has included as an exemption, and members of the College of Nurses of Ontario, members of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario are not exempt from this legislation. Does the member from London-Fanshawe propose to make it illegal for a dentist to use ultraviolet light to treat a kid's cavities? I think not, but he doesn't say so. I dare say it is not likely his intent, but we all know what is paved with good intentions. Legislation by regulation, all fluff and no substance—hallmarks of the McGuinty nanny-statism.

I will assume for a second that tanning services do refer to tanning beds. Of course, I don't think young kids should using tanning beds. Who would? But that's for a loving parent to decide. It's up to us to provide them with the material necessary to make an informed decision. We are not helping anyone by passing a do-nothing, waste of time bill like this. The bill represents all that is wrong with the McGuinty-Liberal nanny-statist government, and I cannot and I will not support this bill.

The numerous legislative bans that the McGuinty government has burdened our province and our citizens with are not about good government and the wellbeing of Ontarians; they're about PR. This private member's bill, Bill 83, is another example. We are coming to the end of this session of the Legislature. We'll be breaking for the summer. Since being elected in October, what legislation has this government passed that is of any substance? The answer is nothing.

I want to talk about the economy. I want to talk about health. I want to talk about crime. I want to talk about transportation. But what am I talking about? Legislation on signage in Niagara Parks properties, legislation regarding snowplows on private property, the Made in Ontario Act, the Buy in Canada for Mass Transit Vehicles Act, the Great Lakes Shoreline Right of Passage Act, the Apology Act, the Pesticides Act, the Smoke-Free Ontario Act—for goodness sake, these are all diversions to distract Ontarians from what is really happening.

Ontario's economy is crumbling. Our cancer patients, whom you're trying to address, wait for too long for treatment, if they see any treatment at all. Our infrastructure buckles under the strain of new migration to our urban centres, our manufacturing sector rusts, our farms are uprooted, our hotels are at a fraction of capacity, and what do we get from the Liberals while all this is happening? Bills like this.

I ask, when this Legislature resumes in the autumn, can we expect real governance from the McGuinty nanny-statists? Can we, please? Or can we expect more of the same drudgery? I think I know what the answer is already, and I am saddened for the people of Thornhill—my riding—and all of Ontario.

I came here to work hard and I think that I do work hard. I know that everybody does as well. But can we get a grip here and can we focus? It truly is a terrible commentary on the state of governance in Ontario that we get garbage bills like this.

Ms. Helena Jacek: It's a pleasure to rise in support of the member of London-Fanshawe's Bill 83, An Act to help prevent skin cancer. I think it's an excellent initiative to draw attention to this issue.

Ultraviolet radiation has been recognized as a carcinogen. It, in fact, is a particularly insidious and invisible carcinogen. That's why I believe it's so important to draw attention to this fact. I think most people are clear that sun damage occurs because of ultraviolet radiation and that sun damage can include everything from aging of the skin to cancers, whether they be relatively benign such as basal cell or squamous cell or an invasive type of cancer such as melanoma.

These are important issues. Many authorities have made statements in relation to the use of tanning beds, which, of course, are another source of ultraviolet radiation, so we have not only the Canadian Cancer Society but the World Health Organization. That organization has specifically stated that the use of tanning beds can increase the risks of skin cancer, especially for those under the age of 18. The US Department of Health and Human Services has also made a similar conclusion. The Canadian Cancer Society has also stated that those exposed to artificial tanning as young adults have a 65% increase in risk over those exposed later in life in developing skin cancer.

Health Canada has issued guidelines in terms of the safe use of tanning salons and tanning beds. As a former medical officer of health, it was my responsibility under the mandatory health programs and services guidelines pursuant to the Health Protection and Promotion Act to ensure that every tanning salon in York region was aware of those guidelines and was prepared to follow them. I think most people are aware that in many areas of this province a tanning salon pops up overnight, practically. Therefore, my inspection staff found it extremely difficult to get around to all the tanning salons and to ensure that they were following these guidelines.

Health units across Ontario are concerned about the use of these tanning salons, because that use is really quite considerable. A number of health units have gathered some statistics: Some 7.2% to 11.5% of adults aged 18 or over have used artificial tanning in different areas. It varies across the province. We don't have any actual data on those under the age of 18, but certainly anecdotally I have heard of parents preparing for a holiday down south where the whole family goes to put what they consider a healthy glow on their skin. Of course, we know that they are in fact potentially endangering their children.

It's particularly important in a country such as ours, where we have many people of European descent. North America, Australia and New Zealand are leading in terms of the number of cases of melanoma. Those with fair skin, those with freckles and those with moles are particularly susceptible to skin cancer.

This is why I'm firmly in support of this legislation. It will bring attention to the issue, over and above what our health units are able to ensure does occur in each jurisdiction according to Health Canada guidelines. Those guidelines are a good step; this legislation is even better.

Mr. Michael Prue: I rise, and I am going to support this bill. Notwithstanding the sometimes humorous and sometimes correct assertions of the member for Thornhill, this is a serious issue that needs to be discussed, and I think this is the appropriate venue. Although I would agree with the member from Thornhill that much of what has taken place in this Legislature during this particular government has conveyed a nanny-state approach to government, this is a private member's bill. I think we all need to remember that it is not a government bill; it is a private member's bill by a person who happens to be on the Liberal side of the House. But it is his bill.

I always try to look at bills differently: those that are private members' bills versus those sponsored by a government. A government bill, as we all know, will be voted for, virtually in every single case, by all the members of the government. A private member's bill is an option for people to cross party lines, an option for people on all sides of the House to see merit in a bill. You can either vote for it or against it on the strength of what that private member is trying to put forward. In this case, I think he has a pretty cogent argument. He has an argument that has been adopted in many places in the world.

If I can state for the record some of the organizations that are onside in terms of this bill, the first one is the Scientific Committee on Consumer Products. This is a European think tank that advises European governments. They stated that the use of ultraviolet tanning lamps—sun beds—is likely to increase the risk of melanoma. Any doctor can tell you that and probably any doctor will tell you that, but there is scientific evidence, and virtually every European government in the European Union abides by what they have been advised. They know it's likely to do it—and that's just one organization.

The second organization that's onside, the International Agency for Research on Cancer, published a report in 2006. The Canadian Cancer Society came on board. The World Health Organization is on board in terms of their advocacy of warning notices, client consent forms, operator training, supervision and the mandatory use of eyewear inside tanning salons or tanning beds.

All of these organizations can't have it wrong. They know there is a very real risk to people who use tanning salons, tanning beds, of contracting various forms of skin cancer. As the learned doctor and my colleague said as she spoke just before me, there are some serious types of cancer—I guess they're all serious, but some are more serious than others, like melanoma. Certainly if you have ever had a colleague, a friend or a loved one die of melanoma, you have to know that that is an absolutely horrendous disease. It is unstoppable; it is deforming. It is a horrible, horrible way to die. We have an obligation to make sure, even if one is accused of being in a nanny state, that if we know something about it, we can warn somebody about it to stop them from taking actions that might invariably lead to that.

I remember when I was a boy and the first scares came out about smoking cigarettes. I remember them showing on the television news that they had put nicotine and other carcinogens on mice, and you saw the cancers growing out of them. I know it was enough in my own mother's case: She quit on that very day, and advisedly and rightly so. But it has taken generations for us to come to the point where today cigarette use is actually declining among young people, and I'm hoping within my lifetime to see a time when we don't see that habit continuing, because of the deleterious side effects of cigarette smoking causing cancer.

This is nothing much different. I want to say that other governments have already taken this step. The government of New Brunswick prohibits the use of tanning beds for people under the age of 18. This is not groundbreaking legislation. It already exists in one of Canada's provinces. The state of California bans the use of tanning beds for those under 14, although it will permit the use of tanning beds for those between 14 and 18 upon parental approval. You need a signed statement from a parent or guardian if you are between those ages. The government of the United Kingdom prohibits tanning beds for those under 16. The governments of Australia, depending on which state in Australia you're in, universally ban the use of tanning beds for people under 16 in some states and under 18 in others.

We have a very real problem here in Ontario, and it isn't just with the use of young people. It's about the whole tanning bed and spa industry that uses this tanning equipment. It is virtually unregulated. There is nothing for health practitioners, city officials or anyone else to go in and say anything because there are no regulations surrounding it.

Health Canada has asked for voluntary guidelines. There are no standards of training whatsoever. I can go in, I'm sure, tomorrow, and if I'm willing to work for the wages, the working hours and conditions in a tanning salon, I can get a job, be shown how to flip a few switches, how to turn them off, how to time them, and I could become a tanning bed operator. It's as simple as that, and I'm not sure that we in Ontario should be allowing this.

I am supporting this being sent to committee because I want the bill to work. It needs to be strengthened. It's just not enough to say that people under 18 shouldn't be allowed to go to tanning beds as today they are not allowed to buy cigarettes. It needs something more than this. We need, first of all, to look at a ban of marketing of tanning beds.

It is very sad. I went to a school graduation and saw the school flyers of the new graduates. One of the advertisers was giving away coupons to the new graduates of a high school to come on down and get reduced costs on tanning bed facilities. The marketers are very smart. They know the market where people pick up this habit of thinking that looking tanned is being very healthy, and I must admit I thought that way in my youth too. I must admit that to have a tan in the summertime was the ultimate; to lie out there and bake yourself until it hurt was the ultimate. I'm much more careful now, I want to tell all of you.

Mr. Tim Hudak: And still very handsome.

Mr. Michael Prue: I inherited my mother's Irish skin, and sometimes the tanning and the overdoing of that actually hurt.

But we need to get a ban on the marketing, first and foremost, because we know that some 11% of all of the tanning sold in the province of Ontario is sold to young people between the ages of 16 and 18, those people who are in grades 11 and 12, those people who succumb to the marketing, who see the coupons—two for one, or tan for $5, unlimited for the month, all of the stuff that is being marketed out there—are particularly susceptible to it. We need to stop the marketing of those coupons in high school yearbooks and in high school newspapers and stop handing them out at the doorways of high schools across the province.

We need to look to a registry of providers. We need to have a registry so that we know who is providing the service, the types of equipment they have, monitoring the types of equipment to make sure they are safe. We need to look for mandatory training, as the World Health Organization said. We need mandatory training so it isn't possible for someone like me, looking for a job or a part-time job, to go in and say, "Yes, I'll work for $10 or $8.75 an hour. Yes, I know how to look at my watch and tell when 15 minutes is up and flip this switch or flip that switch and make sure that the place stays clean." We need to know that when people are performing this function, they are doing so in a much more professional capacity, and they should be accredited. We have an obligation to make sure, when people's health might be put at risk, that they are accredited.

We need to follow what the World Health Organization said about warning signs. A lot of people will think the tanning bed is perfectly safe. They'll think it is just as natural and just as normal as walking out on a summer day. They have to be told, and they should be, that it is not. There are warning signs on tobacco products. There are warning signs, when people go into bars and restaurants that serve alcohol, for particularly women who are pregnant or think they may be pregnant not to consume alcohol because of fetal alcohol syndrome. I don't see anything untoward in following the World Health Organization's dictates and simply having that kind of statement on the wall or next to the actual tanning bed so that people will have an opportunity to read it and make sure they understand it.

We need to have mandatory eyewear. Again, the World Health Organization said that people should wear those eye coverings when going into tanning salons because the ultraviolet light can actually harm retinas and can cause irreparable difficulties in sight. We need to make sure that, if people are going to use these facilities, they wear the mandatory eye coverings, because in the tanning salon it's just like staring into the sun. Although it may not seem as intense, it's just like that; you will harm the retina and you'll do it very fast.

We also need to make sure that we have client consent forms—again, the World Health Organization said that this was necessary—so there is proof that people are given the information that what they are doing may be harmful to their health, and before they are allowed to lie on the bed, they should have to sign that form and be so informed.

Having said that, I understand the whole argument about the nanny state. I understand that the regulations that would bring this about are problematic for some people who think we are mature adults and that we need not have the state intervene in what we want to do in our lives. But I've heard those same arguments throughout my life around cigarettes. I've heard those same stories told throughout my life about other dangerous things and dangerous factories. Quite frankly, there is a role for the state.

I commend the member for doing what he is doing. I absolutely commend him. It does need to go to committee, it does need to be strengthened and it does need to be mandatory, and not only for young people—all of those mandatory safeguards for those who are over the age of 18, who likewise need to be protected from something that is potentially a cause of cancer.

Mr. Shafiq Qaadri: First of all I would like to commend my colleague Khalil Ramal, from London—Fanshawe, for bringing forward this bill. I'd also like to recognize the very measured and civilized remarks of our colleague Michael Prue, from Beaches—East York. I'd also like to commend the very elegant sound and fury emanating from the MPP for Thornhill, having elevated the tone of the debate, essentially saying that this bill, which attempts to prevent cancer downstream for Ontario's population, particularly children, is a waste of time; essentially calling the MPP from London—Fanshawe stupid; and calling this debate garbage. I'd like to commend him for the continued thrust of the new John Tory civility in this House.

A couple of things were very important. My colleague the MPP for Thornhill essentially wanted to rely, as he put it, on a loving parent, a loving mother, which of course is something we would absolutely support. Having said that, I would ask that loving mother to explain to me the difference in the margins between, say, a basal cell carcinoma, a squamous cell carcinoma or a melanoma; or when, for example, does solar keratosis actually graduate into a melanomic type of cancer; or what prolonged ultraviolet light exposure will actually interfere with DNA polymerase or ligase, enzymes that are responsible for healing normal wear-and-tear skin damage; or what should be the actual excision margins?

I cite all those particular issues, because those of us who are entrusted with using our various levels of expertise have that responsibility, brought to bear in coordination with first-class, world-class organizations like the Canadian Cancer Society, which is ably represented here.

I would concede one comment to the MPP for Thornhill, who asked for good governance emanating from this government. I would say that, in coordination with organizations like the Canadian Cancer Society, using our collective expertise, we, of course, must help and frame the debate and legislation and initiatives and regulations and laws and so on that will help, in our best interests, downstream protection from major killers, major disease domains.

For example, we have something on the order of 30,000—I repeat, 30,000—individuals who will be diagnosed with skin cancer in Ontario this year. For those of us who travel across Ontario in our various responsibilities, that's a pretty healthy-sized town, or perhaps two communities together. Of course, we, as physicians, deal not only with the problem where the lesion, as we say, or the offending cancer, is just on the skin, but also when that cancer decides to leave home, when that cancer, as we doctors would say, becomes metastatic and travels, say, to the brain or the liver or to other parts. Of course, these are very important issues.

I would absolutely commend the MPP from London—Fanshawe and his coordinated work with the Canadian Cancer Society, who are here to bear witness to this initiative and would hopefully negate a lot of the sound and fury emanating from the Tory side. They also deeply support the idea of no person under the age of 18 using artificial tanning equipment, of course addressing some of the enticements to youth under 18; the advertising, as was ably brought up by the MPP from Beaches—East York; and, of course, a number of different areas, including public awareness campaigns. At the end of the day, along with things like smoke-free Ontario, seatbelts and pesticides, that is how we guard the collective health of Ontario, and that is good governance.

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: It is a pleasure to join the debate on Bill 83, and I want to commend the mover of this motion, the member for London—Fanshawe, for what I think is a very thoughtful bill.

The great thing about private members' time is that we can put our partisan differences aside. I thought the comments of the member for Beaches—East York today were right on the money as far as what private members' time should be all about.

When I heard the member from Thornhill speak, it went from mildly amusing to interesting to disrespectful, and at the end of it all, I think it was just downright silly and not in keeping with the tone of this place. I think that those of us who have been around for a little bit will understand that that's not what private members' time is all about; that's not what private members' bills should be all about. So I especially appreciate the comments of the member for Beaches—East York.

Private members' time allows us to give opinions through debate. So far today, I have heard from the member for Etobicoke North and the member for Oak Ridges—Markham, from the government side, and I have been having a conversation with the member for Bramalea—Gore—Malton. All three are health professionals. One is a medical officer of health and two are family doctors. They're speaking very, very strongly in support of this bill, and they're doing that for a reason.

1510

There should be one thing that we should just take a look at here: "Those exposed to artificial tanning as young adults have a 65% increase in risk over those exposed later in life to developing skin cancer." That's very serious, and that's something that we can do something about. Whether you want to get into convoluted arguments about nanny states or convoluted arguments about governance, you can't lose sight of the issue that we have the ability in this House, by supporting this bill, to do something that's going to have a positive effect on the health outcomes of a great many of our young people.

You see a lot of emphasis today—I think in our term of government, you've seen a lot of emphasis on health promotion. You've seen the establishment of a Ministry of Health Promotion. In the past, I think we just concentrated on trying to cure illness, allowing people to get sick and then trying to find a way to get them better again. Now we've turned that on its head and we're trying to stop people from getting sick; we're trying to prevent the cancer in the first place. I think that the bill that's being put forward today, Bill 83, speaks directly to that. It has the support of the Canadian Cancer Society. Some of the facts that they have brought forward speak volumes about what good this bill can do; they say, "Overexposure to UVRs for children and adolescents plays a pivotal role in the likelihood of developing skin cancer later in life." What more evidence would a member of this House need, other than that, in order to support this bill?

As I said, we're promoting wellness now, instead of trying to cure sickness, and we've heard from health professionals from within our caucus, from within this House who have given us information that is right on the money, and it's something that we should be acting on and we should be prepared to act on. The other comments aside, which came from the member of Thornhill, I would hope that each and every other member of this House has the good grace to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mr. Ramal, you have up to two minutes to reply.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: I want to thank the members from Oak Ridges–Markham, Beaches–East York, Etobicoke North and Oakville for their insightful and professional comments—and also the member from Thornhill; For a person who was a journalist sometime in his life, I think it's insulting to the people listening to us, especially if the cancer society was with us in the gallery here today—his comments.

One other thing that I think is insulting to all the people listening to us is that this member definitely didn't read the bill. He had no idea about the content of the bill. I guess he was speaking from anger, so I'm not going to listen to his comments and I'm not going to say anything. I want to agree with him on one thing: We should be banning the stupidity in this House. That's why it's important to us to bring issues that are important to our communities.

We listened to many professionals among us here today—two doctors spoke, and also the member from Beaches–East York and the member from Oakville—who know this issue very well and who have dealt with it in their lifetime in their past capacity as city members, doctors and mayors. The importance of prohibiting many bad things from being used in the community, from smoking by people under 19 to people who drive while they're drinking to banning cosmetic pesticides—all these initiatives are not stupid. They're not stupid. While you're trying to protect the health of people, I think it's a noble cause and it should be supported. Many people, not just those among us here, but also the people who are specialists, the Canadian Cancer Society, the World Health Organization, support this initiative. I think it's worth thinking about that.

It's important for all of us as members and as elected officials to support our people and to create a mechanism and a safety net to make sure our community is healthy and safe.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): We'll vote on this item in 50 minutes.

FAIRNESS FOR FAMILIES ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LE TRAITEMENT ÉQUITABLE DES FAMILLES

Mr. Hudak moved second reading of the following bill:

· Bill 88, An Act to provide fairness for families by amending the Taxation Act, 2007 to allow income-splitting for taxation between cohabiting spouses and common-law partners / Projet de loi 88, Loi prévoyant le traitement équitable des familles en modifiant la Loi de 2007 sur les impôts pour permettre le fractionnement du revenu entre conjoints ou conjoints de fait visés aux fins de l'impôt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mr. Hudak, pursuant to standing order 97, you have up to 12 minutes for your presentation.

Applause.

Mr. Tim Hudak: I thank my colleagues for their kind applause; we'll see how the vote turns out. I thank my colleagues in advance for their comments. I look forward to them in debate on this exciting new concept, in the province of Ontario, of fairness to families through family filing, if you will, or joint income tax returns. I also thank in advance my colleagues Sylvia Jones, the member from Dufferin–Caledon, and Lisa MacLeod, the member from Nepean–Carleton, who will address this bill—two dynamic, young women who have joined the PC caucus in the last couple of years. I look forward to their comments.

I think we know that today, Ontario families face a significant number of challenges. When they see gas prices going up, mortgage costs increasing, the cost of food in the grocery store going up and 200,000 well-paying manufacturing jobs leaving this province, it puts a squeeze on the pocketbooks of many Ontario families.

Most importantly, we all know that families make decisions as families. They make major decisions together, not as groups of individuals. For example, if I were to try to replace my car or do a home renovation or go on vacation, I wouldn't dare make those types of significant decisions without first consulting my wife. Families consult on these types of decisions. The same type of framework should exist for taxation in our society, not as individuals, but as total income for a family unit, to reflect that the family, not individuals, is the basic decision-making unit in our society.

I think members know that this is not a new idea. It was raised some 40 years ago when Prime Minister Diefenbaker appointed the Royal Commission on Taxation, led by Kenneth Carter. The 1966 Carter report called for equal treatment of families who earn the same level of income, and for making total family income the basis for administering our taxes. In a nutshell, Bill 88, the Fairness for Families Act, would allow married or common-law couples to elect to file a joint tax return and pay taxes as a family unit, rather than simply as two individuals.

Now, we already know that benefits are not based on individual income; they're generally based on family income. In Ontario, the Ontario sales tax credit and the property tax credit, OSAP loans and grants, the Ontario child benefit, the Ontario child care supplement for working families and GAINS are based on family income at the provincial level; and federally, the Canada child tax benefit, the guaranteed income supplement and the GST credit as well. So the basis for benefits in our system is family income.

I'd argue, therefore, that the basis for the flip side—how governments raise revenue—should be through family income and not through individuals. We know as well that income-splitting is effectively allowed today in the province of Ontario but is chiefly the domain of wealthy individuals through setting up corporate structures. I would argue in the assembly today, and hope my colleagues would agree, that all Ontario families, no matter what their income level, should benefit from the opportunity to split their income.

We may remember that the federal government's 2007 budget did take initial steps in this direction by allowing pension income to be split between married or common-law couples. The 2007 provincial budget similarly passed on income-splitting provincially for pension income. This act, if passed by the Legislative Assembly, would allow that benefit to go to all income that a family earns, not just pension income. It would bring about greater equity among single-earner or two-earner couples, ensuring that families with equivalent taxable income would pay the same amount of provincial tax.

Let me give you an example of how this works. Let's say there is a single-earner couple where one spouse makes $70,000 a year and the other spouse stays at home. Right next door is another couple who make $35,000 each. The single-earner couple would pay a total of $14,165 in federal and provincial income taxes. The two-earner family, with each earning $35,000, the same level of total family income, would pay a combined $10,364—a difference of $3,801 or $316 per month—a significant tax difference. That is categorically unfair.

This bill, if passed, would deal with the provincial level. We can't influence the federal level, but, hopefully in supporting this act, we can signal to the federal government to go the distance and allow income-splitting across all families in this country.

Again, benefits are based on family income. This is currently available to wealthy Ontarians through various corporate structures. The federal budget made initial steps for pension income-splitting, and it reflects the reality of Ontario families today that make decisions as a family, not as a group of individuals.

So back to my example of the single-earner couple that chooses to have one spouse stay at home and has a tax penalty of $3,801 per annum in combined federal and provincial income taxes: I do not believe that government policy should penalize couples who choose to have a stay-at-home spouse or a spouse working part-time. Government policy should be neutral and allow families to choose whatever structure is the best option for their home.

It's not just me saying this. I think my colleagues will know that a significant part of the world's population has this type of regime. France, Germany, the United States, the Czech Republic, Ireland, Luxembourg, Poland, Switzerland and Portugal, to name a few, have addressed this tax penalty that's imposed in Canada and in Ontario on families that choose to have a stay-at-home spouse or a spouse working part-time. We should join those 20 other countries and allow for income-splitting in the province of Ontario.

Let me tell you about friends of ours, a dual-income family. One worked in public relations; another actually worked here at Queen's Park. Like many of your staff members, the individual worked for a minister at the time. They had a little girl, and a decision was made that the husband, who worked in politics, would resign from his job to help raise their daughter. The wife continued on in public relations. They made that decision at significant financial sacrifice so they could invest in their daughter's future. If they make that choice, a legitimate choice, they should not suffer an additional tax penalty. Again, we should be neutral in those decisions; let families make their own.

When I introduced this bill for first reading last week, I received a number of e-mails, and I thank those at home who took the time to send in e-mails. Let me give you an example of somebody who wants to see this bill passed into law.

This woman wrote in. She and her husband have five children. One was born with a severe hearing impairment and requires diagnoses, surgeries, speech therapy and speech tutoring. She has two children who are dyslexic, who require extra one-on-one work in tutoring to help them overcome their disability. They made the difficult choice that she would stay at home to help out with the children, and now, because of that extra attention, the dyslexic children are doing very well and they're continuing on in French immersion programs in our school system. She guarantees that her children would no longer be in immersion if a parent didn't make the time to dedicate to their additional educational requirements, in this circumstance by staying at home.

Why should her single-income family of five children pay significantly more in income taxes compared to a dual-income, five-member family with exactly the same income? That is unfair and needs to change here in the province of Ontario.

We've had a number of groups that have been kind enough to send in their support for Bill 88. David Quist, the executive director of the Institute of Marriage and Family Canada, said: "I am pleased to see that MPP Tim Hudak has recognized the financial burden that many families are under. His private member's bill, the Fairness for Families Act, will lighten this financial burden for many families."

Sara Landriault, president of the National Family Childcare Association, said: "The NFCA would like to thank Tim Hudak for introducing Bill 88 into Queen's Park. This is a major step towards a family tax fairness policy for Ontario families. Bill 88 is a progressive tax bill that will bring all working families on an equal economic level, without discrimination. Bill 88 will give parents the freedom to raise their children the way they see fit and not be financially discriminated against."

Kate Tennier, the founder of Advocates for Childcare Choice, said: "I spoke with countless Canadians, many of them Ontarians, about their desire to have child care choices remain in families' hands. But what my fellow citizens repeatedly told me was what they really wanted was income-splitting. Young, old, left, right, single- and double-earning families alike are united in this view for two reasons: Not only is it the fair thing to do, but it sends a strong message that families are the primary social and economic unit in our society."

My last major point in this discussion: As you know, Ontario is likely on the brink of recession. We've seen some 200,000-plus well-paying manufacturing jobs leave our province. We've seen families' budgets squeezed by higher gas and food prices and higher taxes.

Let's say, by way of example, that a steelworker in Hamilton living in my riding of Glanbrook recently lost his job. His wife is working. She makes about $60,000 a year. He has gone down from a well-paying job, working part-time to try to make ends meet at $10,000 a year. Under this scenario of income-splitting, they combine their income and pay much lower income taxes, saving them about $1,041. It's not a huge amount of money when you lose a well-paying job in manufacturing, but it will help this family to get through difficult times. Considering financial circumstances, and that we've lost 36,000 talented Ontarians to other provinces, I think this is an important economic measure to help families like those in Glanbrook adjust to these circumstances.

I recognize that Bill 88 may not be a perfect bill. The Fairness for Families Act is right in principle. If there are ways to improve it through committee, I look forward to that. I look forward to working with my colleagues in the government and the third party, and my own Progressive Conservative caucus, to make this bill the best it can be.

I want to thank Michael Wood of legislative counsel in helping with this bill, and Kayla Monteiro, my intern, and Trisha Rinneard, my chief of staff, for their help.

I believe that if members of all three parties rise in support of Bill 88, it will send the strongest of signals to the federal government to demonstrate that Ontario supports fairness for families, and then will help extend it from ocean to ocean for all families across Canada. Filing joint taxes will modernize the way our tax system works, reflect the complexity of our times and the higher cost of living, and support families facing difficult choices in difficult circumstances. If one spouse chooses to stay at home to help a disabled daughter, she or he should not be punished with higher taxes by the provincial government for making that decision. The choice to stay at home, sadly, is too often left only to the wealthiest in society.

I ask my colleagues for their support to pass this legislation and bring fairness to all Ontario families.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Further debate?

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: I'm pleased to join the debate this June afternoon on Bill 88, the Fairness for Families Act, introduced by the member from Niagara West-Glanbrook.

I just want to go over very quickly my general understanding of the bill and then some further comments. The bill as presented, as I understand it from the member, would allow for married and/or common-law couples to elect to income-split their provincial income tax. This would take effect on or after December 31, 2009. It would be effective either in full, i.e., a full calendar year, or in part of a calendar year. So if a couple were together in a married relationship, a common-law relationship, whatever that might be, or a partnered relationship for some part of the year, then they would carve out a proportionate amount of that year that would allow them to income-split during that period of time. That presents its own modest difficulties. Nonetheless, as I understand the bill in general, that's the intent, and the objective would be to see a family income scenario or a couple's scenario whereby, combining those incomes and jointly submitting, they may find themselves in a position of some reduction in the income tax payment to the province of Ontario. Without getting into detail, that's the thrust of it.

There are some issues that I want to raise with respect to the bill that I think are important, not the least of which is that the bill—many private members' bills tend to be thin. It's not unusual for someone to stand in the House—I've heard it said on more than one occasion—and say, "That's a pretty thin bill. It's only two pages long." The shortcoming of that is that bills of this nature are such that they don't have depth, and you can't have the depth available that the government can put together with all their research capacity.

What's missing in part, in my view, is the debate and the fulsomeness of debate around: What's the cost? As the savings accrue, there has to be a cost to the revenue of the province of Ontario that I suspect is potentially rather significant. And to have the revenue streams necessary to provide the service in Ontario, we have to presumably recover those resources in some fashion or adjust spending and service programs accordingly.

I think there's a significant matter around what this means in a very broad sense—the implications to the fiscal house of Ontario. It's more than just the desire of families. Whether they have children or don't have children, whether it's a spousal relationship or a simpler common-law relationship, that affects them. This potentially affects the fiscal house of the province in a substantive way.

There is another matter in respect of the bill. The owner of the bill, the member from Niagara West-Glanbrook, maybe has glossed over a little bit, although, in some of his comments, as he speaks to sending a signal to the federal government that would see this extended from sea to sea to sea—my understanding is that, under our agreements with the federal government, Ontario would not be able to allow couples to jointly file their income tax: this would require an amendment to the federal Income Tax Act.

Often, in this Legislature on a Thursday afternoon, we have either private members' bills that the government of Ontario, if they were adopted, could then enact and actually put into place and formulate, or motions that come to this House that provide a degree of desire, direction, or enhanced debate of some sort that draws to the public attention a particular strategy, desire or need that has broad public support. I'm not sure, based on the context of the provincial government's relationship with the federal government as it comes to tax collection, that a bill that would effectively make a statement about what the intent would be of a joint submission but under our agreement with the federal government couldn't actually be enacted, would be fair to the constituents of Ontario—having a set of expectations that can't actually be fulfilled unless the federal government chose to amend the federal Income Tax Act to allow it to occur.

I'm hoping that the member will be able to provide some clarity in that regard, this issue of sending a signal to the government on income-splitting to all families as opposed to being able to enact such, readily.

I mentioned earlier, at the beginning, some of the cost issues and having a handle on what that would mean to us. Certainly, all of us within our ridings in Ontario have projects and initiatives that we want to see undertaken, and we can only achieve those with the resource capacity that's available. The member opposite, within his own jurisdiction and on a number of occasions during budget and otherwise, has pressed the case for revenue streams into his riding that would support business and industry, families, transportation and the like within the riding. I'm always concerned when we begin to diminish the capacity by reducing the tax burden, through income-splitting, as an example, and not knowing how we're going to offset that revenue stream and still be able to continue the activities that we want to undertake.

Recently, as the member spoke about, the federal government introduced income-splitting, and opted to do it in a very limited fashion. They opted to do it in respect of certain forms of pension income-splitting. They didn't even extend it fully across the range of a population group, of seniors. They chose to do that with pensioners. They were far more specific in doing that. I would suggest that they may—and I can't speak for them but, in my mind, I would suggest that potentially they were testing the waters to see how effective this strategy was.

What's proposed here is a far broader perspective on income-splitting in Ontario without having the test of time, even of what we've undertaken in response to the federal initiative, to do the same thing provincially. There are jurisdictions, I understand—and the member spoke to those—that are moving, or have moved, to joint submissions, income-splitting. My understanding is, there are jurisdictions that are moving away from it. Among that list, as I understand it, are countries like Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom. There are those who are moving in different directions. Not all are moving in exactly the same direction in respect to income-splitting at this point in time.

Although I'm appreciative of the member's initiative to find ways for couples to be able to maximize their tax-benefit opportunity, I'm not convinced at this point in time that income-splitting, broadly, in the province of Ontario is where we want to be, based on Bill 88, as we have it before us.

Ms. Lisa MacLeod: It's a pleasure to support my colleague from Niagara West—Glanbrook on his private member's bill. He has been a very effective finance critic for our party. He always brings to the floor of this Legislature progressive ideas on the fiscal front. This bill is no different.

In fact, I'd urge all members of the Legislature to support this bill on income-splitting, because it is a sign of the changing times in this country. It is really about fairness for all Ontario's families. As a mother who had the great fortune of staying at home with my little girl for the first year of her life, I can tell this chamber that there are few greater rewards in this life than time with our children: to help them grow, to care for them and to let them know that they are part of strong families.

Should one parent in a home choose to stay at home to care for their child, I would argue that they should not be penalized by a tax regime that does not take into consideration these circumstances. It is a fact that in Ontario and across Canada, single-earner families pay much, much higher income taxes than dual-income families. That hardly seems fair to me. That's why I support a more fair and equitable system. I agree with my colleague for Niagara West—Glanbrook that families should be able to income-split if only one member of the family is taking in pay. I would say "earning a pay," but that would be incorrect.

I know a lot of stay-at-home moms, and I will tell you that right now, they have earned our respect, and they deserve fairness. The jobs they do, and the jobs stay-at-home dads do, are as tough as any other job in this province. It is high time that this chamber and this government recognized that. This bill put forward by my colleague, the Fairness for Families Act, would correct the inequality that these families face in the tax regime. I think income-splitting that is extended to all Ontario families is common sense. It is the right thing to do.

I want to share excerpts from an e-mail sent to me by Natalie Gallimore from my city of Ottawa. She wants this chamber to know that there are several scenarios of why one parent may take in significantly less pay than another. She says:

—"one person has a very demanding job, with travel and long or odd, hours so most of the family/household responsibilities fall upon the other adult, who chooses to have less, or no, paid employment in order to establish a work-family balance;

—"the family decides to home-school;

—"one adult decides to go to school themselves;

—"there are disabilities or critical illnesses within the family (physical or mental);

—"there are caregiving responsibilities for older members of the extended family; and —"there is a calling for volunteer or charity work."

I have friends and constituents who live all of those scenarios. My friend Charlene is a stay-at-home mother. She has three beautiful girls, and she cares for her disabled sister. Her husband, Bruce, is as involved in the community as she is. He's an economist.

I don't understand why they should be penalized by our current tax regime. Charlene's work is every bit as important as any other person's work in this province.

We should be encouraging her and more men and young women to follow their calling, regardless of what it is, not to abandon it. This bill put forward by my colleague from Niagara West—Glanbrook will help them.

With the exception of seniors who can now enjoy some income-splitting measures, Ontario's young families, those who are trying to put their children through school, through soccer and other extracurricular activities are being treated as unequal if one parent chooses to work inside the home. It is the single-income family under the age of 65 who suffers under this government's current tax policy, particularly when they are compared to dual-income families who are basically earning the same pay. I think we need to change that.

We need fairness, and I would argue we need fairness for all families. If a mother wants to stay at home to care for her children, or if a father wants to go back to school to improve his family's quality of life, why should they be paying more taxes than a family in the same neighbourhood, making the same annual household income, but who are dual-income earners?

This bill will level the playing field by amending the Taxation Act. It means families with equivalent taxable income would finally pay the same in provincial taxes. My friend Sara Landriault supports his bill. She feels this bill "will bring all working families on an equal economic level without discrimination, and that it will give parents the freedom to raise their children the way they see fit and not be financially discriminated against." I agree with her. Time and again I hear concerns, particularly from my residents in Nepean—Carleton. We boast one of the highest birth rates in all of Canada, and that's why these issues of fairness—and let's not forget parental choice—are top of mind for me and for the constituents I represent. Under the principle of fairness and the spirit of parental choice, I wholeheartedly agree with my colleague from Niagara West—Glanbrook. I will be supporting Bill 88.

Like Sara Landriault asks, and I will conclude on this: "Why will the government allow me to income split if I am divorced but not while we are married? A true feminist believes in equality for a woman whether she is married or single." The fact of feminism, she says, is that "we should all be treated equally in all aspects of our life. Unfortunately, without income-splitting, women at home are not equal." I agree with Sara and I agree with the member from Niagara West—Glanbrook.

Mr. Michael Prue: I am rising to speak to Bill 88, put forward by my friend and colleague from Niagara West—Glanbrook. I must state at the outset that I will not be supporting the bill, but this is private members' business and I understand that my colleague from Welland may be speaking to it and may in fact support the bill. This is private members' public business, as I said during the last debate; we have to kick around ideas, and it is not bound by party policy.

My own review of the bill shows as follows. This is intended so that people who are married or living in a common-law relationship will be able to file a joint tax return and be allowed to conduct income-splitting. In virtually every case where income-splitting is undertaken, it is done by those people to reduce their level of taxation. People don't income split to raise their taxation. It doesn't happen. They don't do it. They don't want it to raise their taxes; they want it to reduce their taxes.

So let's be very clear what this is about. This is a measure that will help some people to reduce the level of taxes that they pay. Who wants the taxes reduced? Maybe some would say all Ontarians, but primarily, those fighting for reduced taxes are those at the higher income levels who have the highest rates of taxation in a progressive tax system; they are looking for ways and means to reduce that taxation. This is one of the ways that has been suggested by groups like the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, by some right-wing think tanks that will in fact allow people who earn good money to help reduce their taxes, particularly in the event that their spouse earns little or no money at all.

It will have three effects if it is passed. The first is that it will benefit those who are in the higher tax brackets much more than it will benefit people in lower income tax brackets. Even though there are couples where one spouse works and the other doesn't, in both brackets those who earn a lot of money stand to benefit a lot more than those who earn less. The second thing that will happen is that it will reduce the premise that we as Canadians and Ontarians have adopted, for at least a couple of generations, a graduated income tax; that if you earn more money, you are expected to pay more money towards the income tax and the upkeep of the system. The third and final effect it will have is that it will reduce treasury revenues. If it is adopted across Canada, and if we are in sync with the federal government, it will reduce revenues significantly. I will deal with the approximate amount towards the end of my speech. So it will have those three effects.

My colleague from Niagara West—Glanbrook quoted a number of things, but it follows on statements that have been made for the past number of years by the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. They use exactly the same argument, and I was pleased to hear him make exactly the same one: that one spouse earning $70,000 a year and another zero will pay about $361 a month—the figures are identical—versus those two spouses who earn $35,000. They use the same argument: that it will help stay-at-home moms and people who want to go back to school and that kind of stuff. They said, and Mr. Hudak, my friend from Niagara West—Glanbrook, used the same argument as well, that it will assist—it's already been worked out for elderly couples on pension income.

However, I have to point out that most tax experts in Canada do not agree with this proposal. Most tax experts in Canada believe this will not do what it intends to do, and they correctly note that income-splitting is not a step to a more equitable tax regime. My friend quoted the number of countries that have such a scheme, and in fact they do. He quoted seven or eight of them. In fact, 21 out of 30 OECD countries do not allow for income-splitting. Although he is correct in naming the seven or eight that do, the majority do not.

There's a good reason for that, and that is the cost to the treasury. The cost to the treasury is estimated to be about $5 billion if undertaken by the federal government, and the cost of his proposal to the treasury of Ontario is estimated at being about $2 billion. If people think we can get by with $2 billion less, then I think he has an obligation, and people who support this have an obligation, to say, "Where would we cut that $2 billion? Where would the cuts take place?" We have a $95-billion budget. I've heard my colleague speak many times about cuts that the current government could make, but I think it behooves all of us to understand that if we were to pass this, and if this bill was to go to committee and pass, where would the government find its other $2 billion? Or would we cut services to do it?

We have another difficulty: living next to the United States, which does have a form of income-splitting and allows for joint filing. But it creates what in the United States tax parlance is known as marriage penalties. It shows that if two spouses have similar incomes and are required to file jointly in the United States—which happens—unless there is a disparity in their incomes, if they earn more or less the same, then actually couples end up paying more for their taxes than two singles in the United States.

This is a disincentive for families. It is a disincentive for people to stay together. It is a disincentive for people to cohabit or to get married. It is a disincentive if the couples earn approximately the same salary. It only works, and this will only work, where one person in the couple earns significantly less than the other.

I'm going to close with this and leave time for my colleague from Welland. We also have the difficulty of coordinating the federal and provincial tax regimes. If Ontario were to go this alone—and I don't know whether we could—it would be very difficult to coordinate that with the federal income tax system. It will require, if it is passed here, that a similar move be made in Ottawa. I have not seen that there is a stomach for that, because I have not seen the government in Ottawa, albeit a Conservative one, willing to forgo the approximately $5 billion that this will cost.

A lot needs to be done if it is passed. A lot needs to be done in terms of coordination, of finding the revenue, of making it fair to couples who have like salaries versus those where one has an inordinately higher salary than the other. I just find, as an idea, it is not as progressive as it is made out to be. We have adopted a system of taxation in this country and this province that is graduated and, in my view, is fairer than that which is being proposed. Unfortunately I cannot, as an individual member, support this bill.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: Thank you for giving me a chance to comment on Bill 88, An Act to provide fairness for families by amending the Taxation Act, 2007 to allow income-splitting for taxation between cohabiting spouses and common-law partners. I know the member from Niagara West—Glanbrook has a passion in this area, and from his own ideological philosophy, I think it's important to his constituents.

I was listening to both the member from Pickering—Scarborough East—the PA for the Minister of Finance—and the member from Beaches—East York. They raised very important concerns about how we can implement this bill, if we support it in this place, since all the tax regulations are controlled and regulated by the federal government, and whether the federal government is willing to amend the Taxation Act or they want to leave it as it is. According to the collective agreement between us and the federal government, we cannot change anything without their amendment. Therefore, if we pass it here, it's not going to go anywhere, because it's controlled by the federal government.

Second, as was raised by both the PA and the member for Beaches—East York, if we do that, it's going to affect our treasury a great deal. As the member for Beaches—East York mentioned, it would cost Canada almost $5 billion, and Ontario $2 billion. That's a lot of money that would enable the government, enable us, to provide services for many different areas, whether health care, education, municipalities, tourism. Many different areas are crying for money. Also, I think it's important to remember that whatever we implement in this place is going to affect the lives of the people of Ontario, whether negative or positive.

I think the member from Niagara West—Glanbrook believes strongly that this is the best way to support families. I respect his idea and his direction, but as a matter of fact, when we introduce anything in this place, we have to remember the side effects in other areas. As I mentioned, it's going to cost the treasury a great deal of money, and we cannot afford it. Even if we passed this bill, we have no jurisdiction to make a change without an amendment from the federal government.

In the end, as has been mentioned, it's a private member's bill. Any member can introduce whatever they want and raise any issue, whether a motion or a bill, in order to create awareness among us and also send a message to the people of Ontario.

I think this bill would cause damage for the treasury, would cause trouble for us, and according to the agreement between us and the federal government, we cannot pass it and implement it. Hopefully, by good connection with the federal government, especially the finance minister of Canada—he was a member here and a former colleague—maybe you'll be able to convince him to do something about it, to bring in some kind of amendment that would allow us as a province to do so.

Ms. Sylvia Jones: I'm pleased to join the debate today and support my colleague the member from Niagara West—Glanbrook on his legislation, Bill 88, the Fairness for Families Act.

I commend the member for bringing forward this legislation because it is a bill that deals with practical issues facing a lot of families in Ontario. It is not uncommon for families across Ontario to have a single earner, and for these families to pay a higher rate of income tax than a dual-income family with the same income is unfair.

As the Progressive Conservative critic for community services, I'd like to speak to the fact that many families with a disabled child are single-earner families. One parent will go to work while the other remains at home to look after their disabled child. In most cases there are additional expenses for education, care at home or supportive equipment. Income-splitting is an excellent way to provide support to families who have children with a disability.

Bill 88, the Fairness for Families Act, represents an opportunity for this Legislature to help single-income families in a real way. It tells Ontarians that the Ontario Legislature cares about families.

Since becoming the PC critic for the Ministry of Community and Social Services, I've heard from many families who have expressed concerns about the current Passport program that the community and social services ministry has put together. In many regions of the province, there are less than 10% application approval rates. This means that 90% of the families will not receive the funding they need.

Regardless of the reason the Passport funding was denied, the fact remains that parents still have to take care of their children. One parent decides to remain at home to provide the care needed for their child. Despite receiving no provincial support, the working parent is taxed at a higher rate than a dual-income family earning the same income. Taking into consideration the fact that raising a child with special needs does involve more resources than a child without special needs, the system is not treating them fairly. In fact, it penalizes them for staying home.

I encourage all members to support Bill 88 today. It would give financial support to all families, and in particular to families with a disabled child.

As I indicated earlier, support for families can be in many forms. A package of measures can improve real financial support for families.

Today, I had the opportunity to introduce a private member's bill, the Social Assistance Statute Law Amendment Act (Registered Disability Savings Plans). The bill is aimed at stopping the provincial government from clawing back disability benefits based on investments into the federal registered disability savings plan, or RDSP. The registered disability savings plan was introduced by the federal government in the 2007 federal budget to assist parents to save for the long-term financial support of children with severe disabilities. The federal government asked provinces to ensure that investment in an RDSP would not result in a reduction of provincial disability benefit payments. Both British Columbia and Newfoundland proactively moved forward to exempt RDSPs as assets in determining eligibility for disability benefits. Unfortunately, Ontario has not made this change, so families, if they invest in their children's future, will have their disability payments clawed back. I hope all members will support this legislation to prevent a clawback from happening.

Imagine if we improved income-splitting today by passing Bill 88 and then passed my private member's bill so parents with disabled children could invest in their children's future. Imagine if we cared enough to provide a range of support to families. Imagine if the Liberals across the aisle were willing to recognize innovative proposals from private members and support their passage because it would assist families in Ontario.

Let's go back for a moment to private members' public business two weeks ago. The Liberal government voted against, and therefore defeated, the bill introduced by my colleague the member from Thornhill, Bill 78, An Act to provide property tax deferrals to low-income seniors and low-income persons with disabilities. I must say that I'm very disappointed that this bill did not pass. If this bill had been passed by the Legislature, it would have improved the lives and financial situation of many low-income seniors and persons with disabilities.

Community Living Ontario told me that they were supportive of the innovative idea from Peter Shurman, the member for Thornhill. Adults with disabilities who own their own home could have benefited, as it would have provided much-needed tax relief that would have allowed them to continue to live independently. Bill 78 would have created a province-wide and provincially administered program whereby low-income seniors and disabled persons could defer property tax payable on properties such as their residence. Voting against Bill 78 was a lost opportunity for the McGuinty government to provide tax relief to help persons with disabilities.

Again, why can't we as legislators embrace good ideas and make a real difference for families?

I urge all members to work together today to pass Bill 88. The measures proposed in this bill present the Liberals with yet another opportunity to provide financial help for families with a disabled child. I hope the opportunity is not overlooked or ignored, but rather that every member of this House will see the importance of the measures contained in Bill 88 and recognize that help would be provided to families.

Mr. Peter Kormos: I'm pleased to be able to join in the debate. My colleague Mr. Prue, the member for Beaches-East York, whom I listened to carefully during his comments, was quite right when he suggested that I'm going to be supporting this particular bill. I listened carefully to Mr. Prue's comments about the bill. I spoke with him before this debate began and I have a great deal of regard for his perspective on these sorts of things. He knows all about this stuff.

But just briefly, the issues that have been raised and concerns that appear to be raised by the government members—for instance, about the undue benefit to overly wealthy people, the obscenely wealthy, the disgustingly wealthy, the Conrad Blacks of the world. Obviously, the Conrad Black scenario would be the worst-case scenario described by Mr. Prue, when you talk about high-income people being able to split income. Conrad Black, for one, is very unlikely to want to share any of his income with Barbara Amiel. He probably has lawyers working overtime to make sure that she couldn't access any of his assets if her life depended on it. But one of the propositions to that and one of the responses could be to simply cap the amount of money that could be transferred over to a spouse for income tax purposes. That would address that problem.

Overall revenue issues: That's a red herring. Governments have revenue targets, they have revenue needs and they have to generate that amount of money. What that results in is cross-subsidization from one taxpayer to another. Inevitably, when you reduce somebody's tax burden, somebody else's tax burden goes up. As a New Democrat, as a lefty, I think that's an ideal opportunity to increase the taxes of the very wealthy, and I'm pleased to see that my colleague Mr. Hudak proposes a scheme whereby the tax burden will be more fairly shifted onto the very wealthy. Seriously, this could be perceived as a very enlightened piece of legislation, because the Hudak formula here is one that would make the rich pay, while hard-working people get a bit of a break.

The fundamental element here that makes this most attractive to me is that this allocates value to the work of a homemaker. I think that's something all of us should be very conscious of. This gives value to the work of the homemaker. Women or men who don't work outside the home but certainly work inside—caring for children, raising children, caring for their family—work incredibly hard. In many cases, they work far harder than their spouses. That's an undeniable reality. Short of divorce and marriage breakdown, there's rarely an opportunity to ascribe monetary value to that, and I say that's regrettable. I think what this bill does is it ascribes monetary value; it recognizes the economic value of a homemaker who forgoes a career to be at home to care for a spouse, a family, to raise children and to care for a household.

Finally, this is the sort of bill that should go to committee. Once it goes to committee and it's dealt with by committee, the government controls it. The government doesn't ever have to call it again. Here we are in private members' public business, you've got a member of this Legislature who comes forward with a creative solution to an acknowledged problem, and I say he deserves the opportunity to make his case in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mr. Hudak, you have up to two minutes for your reply.

Mr. Tim Hudak: I thank all of my colleagues for their contributions. Let me address some of the issues. The Liberal position is a curious one which seems to support the principle, but their answer is that they just don't want to do it quite yet. They don't actually have a clear position on the concept of allowing income-splitting. This is allowed to families in France, in Germany, in the United States, in Portugal and in the Czech Republic, to name but some.

They throw up an administrative issue and say that, because of the federal-provincial tax administration agreement, this is not possible. That's actually not true. We could administer this regardless of the administration agreement.

What I've tried to do, in crafting Bill 88, is to craft it in such a way that is consistent and allows that agreement to continue. I've said that if amendments can be made at committee to improve the bill, to maintain that consistency with the tax collection agreement, I welcome it. If the government wants to address this purpose of fairness for families through other means, I welcome that as well. I'd certainly be supportive. The point is that we need to achieve the principle of fairness for families and not to punish, with higher taxes, families who choose to have a stay-at-home spouse or one who works part-time.

The government also raises a spectre of revenue loss. I estimate about $1 billion is the revenue loss that would occur. That's basically one cent on the dollar when this bill would be implemented in fiscal year 2009-10. Heck, their end-of-year slush funds are $2.5 billion spent in one month alone.

Mr. Kormos, my colleague from Welland, has a very good point, by the way: Wealthy Ontarians largely, many of them, currently have this opportunity to split income through various corporate structures. Why can't we extend the same opportunity to split income among spouses that is available to wealthy Ontarians to average working families across the province of Ontario? He's right as well that it equates values to the work of a stay-at-home spouse. If the husband or wife stays at home or works part-time to support a child, this would recognize that as well.

I do hope for the support of all members and look forward to making improvements to the bill at committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): The time provided for private members' public business has expired.

HANDGUN MANUFACTURERS' AND IMPORTERS' LIABILITY ACT, 2008 LOI DE 2008 SUR LA RESPONSABILITÉ DES FABRICANTS ET DES IMPORTATEURS D'ARMES DE POING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): We will deal with ballot item number 31, standing in the name of Mr. Flynn.

Mr. Flynn has moved second reading of Bill 82, An Act to make manufacturers and importers liable for harm caused by the unlawful use of handguns. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Second reading agreed to.

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: Could I have this bill referred to the Standing Committee on Justice Policy?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Shall this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice Policy? Agreed.

SKIN CANCER PREVENTION ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LA PRÉVENTION
DU CANCER DE LA PEAU

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): We will now deal with ballot item number 32.

Mr. Ramal has moved second reading of Bill 83, An Act to help prevent skin cancer. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? I hear a no.

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. Carried.

Second reading agreed to.

Mr. Khalil Ramal: Could we send the bill to the Standing Committee on Social Policy?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Is it agreed that the bill be sent to the Standing Committee on Social Policy? Agreed? Agreed.

FAIRNESS FOR FAMILIES ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LE TRAITEMENT
ÉQUITABLE DES FAMILLES

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): We'll now deal with the next ballot item.

Mr. Hudak has moved second reading of Bill 88, An Act to provide fairness for families by amending the Taxation Act, 2007 to allow income-splitting for taxation between cohabiting spouses and common-law partners. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? I heard some noes.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a five-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1608 to 1613.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Jim Wilson): Mr. Hudak has moved second reading of Bill 88. I'd ask all those in favour to stand and remain standing.

SMOKE-FREE ONTARIO AMENDMENT ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LA LOI FAVORISANT UN ONTARIO SANS FUMÉE

Ms. Best moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 69, An Act to protect children from second-hand tobacco smoke in motor vehicles by amending the Smoke-Free Ontario Act / Projet de loi 69, Loi modifiant la Loi favorisant un Ontario sans fumée pour protéger les enfants contre le tabagisme passif dans les véhicules automobiles.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Debate?

Hon. Margaret R. Best: Today I will be sharing my time with my PA and esteemed colleague the member from Oak Ridges–Markham.

If we pass this legislation to protect children from second-hand tobacco smoke in motor vehicles, we will be taking an important stride forward in protecting the health of young people across Ontario. Bill 69 would amend the Smoke-Free Ontario Act. It builds on the Smoke-Free Ontario Act, which, as always, has the primary objective of protecting people from second-hand tobacco smoke in enclosed public spaces and workplaces.

This amendment would extend province-wide protection to children under 16 in motor vehicles. Science shows that second-hand smoke in vehicles is particularly harmful, and even more so for children under 16. Yet a Health Canada study in 2005 estimated that 140,000 children in Ontario between the ages of 12 and 16 years were exposed to second-hand smoke in vehicles during a one-month period.

I have listened to my colleague opposite from Nickel Belt. I heard and appreciated her concerns for constituents who may not know about the new law or who may find it hard to stop smoking in their motor vehicles, with or without children present. But I also know that since this public debate began last December, with sincere thanks to my friend and colleague David Oraziotti from Sault Ste. Marie, many people have already got the message that they should not smoke in their car with children present. Rest assured that we will continue to work proactively to get this message out to all corners of this province.

Our goal is voluntary compliance. Our public education campaign will be comprehensive, working with our partners in public health to reach out to drivers wherever they are in their vehicles and wherever they think about their vehicles and their children. Our message won't simply be that you will get a ticket if you are caught. Our message will be about protecting the health of our children. Our message will also be about getting help to quit smoking. Our message will be about the dangers of tobacco smoking. As part of the smoke-free Ontario strategy, one of the most comprehensive tobacco control strategies in North America, our government supports excellent cessation programs. We have helped more than 150,000 smokers in their efforts to quit, through programs like the Driven to Quit Challenge and Smokers' Helpline, which are managed by our partner the Ontario division of the Canadian Cancer Society. We have also committed to a permanent retail sales tax exemption for nicotine replacement therapies to help Ontario smokers to quit smoking.

Tobacco use is the number one cause of preventable disease and death in Ontario. It kills over 13,000 Ontarians every year, and children exposed to second-hand smoke are more likely to suffer sudden infant death syndrome, acute respiratory infections, ear problems and more severe asthma. The public supports taking action to protect children under 16 from tobacco smoke in motor vehicles. In January of this year, a poll released by the Canadian Cancer Society showed that over 80% of Ontarians, including 66% of smokers in Ontario, support a ban on smoking in vehicles with children under the age of 16. We are confident that the public is ready for this proposed ban to protect the health of our children.

Support for this legislation also comes from leading non-governmental health organizations, including the Ontario division of the Canadian Cancer Society, the Ontario Lung Association, Ontario Medical Association and the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Ontario. In the words of the Ontario Lung Association, this is about giving a voice to the back seat.

The people of Ontario are ready for legislation to protect our children from being exposed to second-hand smoke in motor vehicles. Our experience with the Smoke-Free Ontario Act, including the recent ban on display of tobacco products, is that we can expect a high voluntary compliance. We are confident in anticipating wide voluntary compliance for this amendment, especially given the level of public support. The reason is very obvious: This is about the safety and well-being of our children. I appeal to all Ontarians to make the commitment to smoke-free cars, smoke-free vehicles, for our children's sake. It is about the health of our children. I also urge all members of this Legislature to join me in voting in favour of this legislation. This is about creating a healthier, smoke-free Ontario. It's about our future: our children and their health.

Ms. Helena Jaczek: I'd like to begin by acknowledging our colleague the member from Sault Ste. Marie, David Oraziatti. Without his determination and drive, we would have, I think, taken a lot longer getting to this place.

We are now in third reading debate on Bill 69, An Act to protect children from second-hand tobacco smoke in motor vehicles by amending the Smoke-Free Ontario Act. It has been more than 40 years that we've been waging this war against tobacco. It was in 1964 that the US Surgeon General, Everett Koop, produced his landmark study that linked smoking tobacco with lung cancer. He also was hoping that by the year 2000, we in fact would be a smoke-free society. We haven't achieved that goal, but with this particular bill, we are going to get that little bit closer.

Today, tobacco use is the number one cause of preventable disease and death in Ontario, killing over 13,000 Ontarians every year. Tobacco-related diseases have been estimated to account for $1.6 billion in direct health care costs and $4.4 billion in productivity losses each year.

In my own experience in the war against tobacco, which started in the 1970s, I've seen many people suffering from tobacco-related illness. I was also very much impressed in those early years as to how addictive tobacco can be, so that, as a family physician, counselling those smokers in my practice did not result in very much success. Of course, those smokers were living in a society where tobacco smoke was really pervasive—in restaurants and public places—and so quitting was exceptionally hard.

When I started as medical officer of health in York region in 1988, smoking was commonplace in regional council. In fact, in our own health committee, it was the practice for the chair of our committee to smoke. After a few months, he did acknowledge that perhaps this was not the most exemplary behaviour, and ashtrays and cigarettes were banned from York regional council.

We've come a long way in the last 20 years. Gradually, municipal boards of health called for no-smoking bylaws in municipalities. In York region, this was a very hard thing to do; we had nine area municipalities. I well remember attending those council meetings and urging them to pass smoke-free bylaws—and they did, gradually. At the end of the day, in the year 2000, we finally passed a regional bylaw that covered the whole region of York. The problem, of course, was that as municipalities developed their own bylaws, they had differences in them. So when the McGuinty government passed the Smoke-Free Ontario Act in 2006, we levelled the playing field across the province.

We have made significant progress: In 2003, the government was committed to reducing tobacco consumption by 20% before the end of its first mandate. We have surpassed that goal: We have had more than a 30% tobacco-consumption reduction, which translates to an incredible 4.6 billion fewer cigarettes. We accomplished this by introducing one of the most aggressive and comprehensive tobacco control strategies in North America, and we have wonderful compliance: It's something like 99% compliance for smoke-free bars, restaurants, hotels and workplaces. We have introduced some cessation programs that have been quite successful as well: More than 150,000 got help with quitting through programs like the Driven to Quit Challenge and the Smokers' Helpline. The STOP study—Smoking Treatment for Ontario Patients—through the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health, is designed to find out the most effective methods of supporting Ontario's smokers who want to quit. In its first two years, this study has reached more than 38,000 smokers, and we announced this January that the Minister of Health Promotion has provided an additional $2 million to add another 15,000 smokers to this study.

In the 2008 budget, our government also committed to a permanent retail sales tax exemption for nicotine replacement therapies to help Ontario smokers to quit. On May 31 of this year, the power walls came down, and we estimate that we have at this point at least 95% compliance with that regulation. Bill 69 is the next important step forward. The primary objective of the Smoke-Free Ontario Act has always been to help protect people from second-hand tobacco smoke in enclosed public spaces and workplaces. This amendment would extend province-wide protection to children in motor vehicles.

There has been widespread support for this action. First of all, on the private member's bill introduced by Mr. Oraziatti, Vance Blackmore, the president of the Association of Local Public Health Agencies, said, "The passage of the Smoke-Free Ontario Act was a clear message that the government understood the significant dangers of second-hand smoke and is committed to minimizing involuntary exposure to it. We believe that this bill is a worthy amendment to the act, as it will protect children from involuntary exposure to it while in any vehicle."

A former colleague of mine, Dr. Charles Gardner, medical officer of health for Simcoe Muskoka District Health Unit and chair of the Council of Ontario Medical Officers of Health, has said, "More than 24 municipalities have supported a ban on smoking in cars with children present. I am pleased that this includes the regional municipality of York, as well as the town of Tecumseh, city of Kenora, township of Terrace Bay, Peterborough and Toronto, to name a few." There is support from across the province.

Last week in committee, we worked through Bill 69, and I really would like to say that I appreciate the care and consideration my colleagues opposite have given to this bill. I especially appreciate the shared sense of importance and urgency we have on passing this bill. At committee, we heard from a number of major health organizations that came to comment, and we have their full support in moving this bill forward as it is presented to the Legislature.

We heard that second-hand tobacco smoke in vehicles is particularly harmful and even more so for our children. Recent studies suggest that the concentration of toxins in vehicles can be up to 27 times worse than in a smoker's home. The Ontario Medical Association found that children exposed to second-hand tobacco smoke are more likely to suffer sudden infant death syndrome, acute respiratory infections, ear problems and more severe asthma. The medical science is clear: Second-hand tobacco smoke is dangerous to our children's health. Yet, a Health Canada study in 2005 estimated that 140,000 children in Ontario between the ages of 12 and 16 were exposed to second-hand tobacco smoke in vehicles during a one-month period—a clear indication that this bill is necessary.

We are confident that the public is ready for this proposed ban to protect the health of our children. Given the support from Ontarians, we are expecting that the legislation will have significant voluntary compliance. This legislative debate is just one part of the process that will bring greater public awareness and education.

If this bill is passed, we plan to deliver a multi-layered public education campaign with our smoke-free Ontario partners across the province that will reach out to people wherever they think about their vehicles and their children.

We are leveraging all the components of the smoke-free Ontario strategy to ensure voluntary compliance. Public health units will continue to champion this call to arms, and our cessation programs will help smokers quit.

In conclusion, this is about the safety and well-being of our children. The Premier and our government are committed to this, and our partners are committed to this. I appeal to all Ontarians to commit to smoke-free cars for our children's sake. This is the next step towards a healthier smoke-free Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments? Further debate?

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to join third reading debate on Bill 69, which is amending the Smoke-Free Ontario Act to ban smoking in motor vehicles with children under 16 in the vehicles. Unfortunately, I was double-booked last week on the committee days, but the member from Burlington filled in quite well.

I want to thank all of those associations that came in to appear before the committee: the Canadian Cancer Society, the Council of Ontario Medical Officers of Health, the Council for a Tobacco-Free Toronto, the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Ontario, the Ontario Campaign for Action on Tobacco, the Ontario Lung Association, and Toronto Public Health.

As we stated in second reading debate, we're certainly in favour of protecting more people from second-hand smoke; in this case, children 16 years of age and younger who are found in cars with adults who are smoking. It's certainly very important to give them a voice, as has been mentioned, from the back seat and that they have protection.

When we heard all the groups who were supportive of the bill before us, many times we heard the statistics on the effects on health of smoking in confined areas, and especially the increased effects on children because of their various lung capacities. I know that they had most of the reports in 2005—the California Air Resources Board report—and then followed up by the 2008 study conducted by the University of Waterloo, which confirmed those findings.

Health Canada, for example, reports that children who are regularly exposed to second-hand smoke are 50% more likely to suffer damage to their lungs or have breathing problems, sudden infant death syndrome, acute respiratory infections, ear problems and more severe asthma, just to mention a few, and we've discussed that thoroughly.

There was a discussion at second reading and in committee about the need for regulation. Again, a Health Canada study estimated that 140,000 children in Ontario between the ages of 12 and 16 were exposed to second-hand smoke in cars in a one-month period. Some of the statistics that you find when you start researching these bills are quite astounding. The Ontario Lung Association backed that up—and the Canadian Cancer Society has phrased it as “giving a voice to the back seat.”

Certainly, there's widespread support, even by smokers, about the banning in vehicles when children are present.

It's always a balance in our society about bringing in legislation and banning things. You have to try and do a balance. I think that when it involves children 16 years of age and younger, you have to assist them with legislation so that they are protected. That is certainly what this bill does.

There are other precedents that are set, especially in Canada. We have other jurisdictions—British Columbia, Nova Scotia and the Yukon Territory, to name just a few—that have brought in similar legislation.

We've asked some questions about the enforcement part and voluntary compliance. We hope to see a high degree of voluntary compliance, but as the Ontario Campaign for Action on Tobacco commented, given the harm that can be done to children by repeatedly exposing them to second-hand smoke, we believe there should be an escalation-applicable fine for repeat offences, and I'm hoping that that may be discussed in regulations as the bill proceeds to that stage.

The education component was brought up by the minister again today. There is no question that there needs to be a strong education component. I know that there has been some education component, especially since the bill has been introduced.

My colleague from Kitchener–Waterloo, Mrs. Witmer, introduced a resolution on December 13, 2007, “that, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should protect the children and youth of this province from the harmful effects of second-hand smoke in automobiles by immediately implementing an effective province-wide campaign to educate parents about the dangers of smoking in vehicles when a person who is less than 16 years of age is present.”

I know the member from Nickel Belt spoke quite eloquently in committee about the northern Ontario region she represents and the fact that there has to be more education to reach the people in some remote areas, and I’m sure she will speak to that when she has the opportunity.

There are some suggestions that were brought forward to improve the bill. I know that the member from Burlington has had a private member’s bill—I will bring it up again—and moved an amendment in committee that unfortunately was defeated. But despite the fact that the title is the Smoke-Free Ontario Act, it’s not a pot-free Ontario act. Many of my colleagues in the Legislature will know that the member for Burlington, Joyce Savoline, tried on numerous occasions to get the McGuinty government to close that loophole in the Smoke-Free Ontario Act and include marijuana and controlled substances. As I said, our first attempt was a private member’s bill, which received unanimous consent in the Legislature but was cut down quickly by the whipped Liberal members in committee. So, unfortunately, we didn’t even have the opportunity to hear from the public as to their thoughts and their positions on this issue, as the discussion—can we use the phrase?—was butted out before we could engage our citizens in that debate.

But the member from Burlington is quite tenacious. She valiantly tried again by putting forward an amendment to Bill 69 in committee which would include marijuana and controlled substances as illegal to smoke in cars with children. The argument that no one would smoke marijuana in a car with children is ridiculous. As a reasonable person, as a medical professional myself, I would also have assumed that no one would smoke cigarettes in a car with children, but then I’ve just read statistics—and other members have—that this is not true. Once again, the Liberals shot down her amendment, based on “the lack of scientific evidence.”

We find that choice of phrasing odd. I now recall where I last heard it used. It was in the 1960s and the 1970s when big tobacco companies were justifying their existence and reassuring the public that their products were safe.

I want to comment about the grade 11 student, Mr. Salvatore Anania, who appeared before the committee and said that one does not need scientific evidence to know that marijuana smoke is harmful and felt that it was the perfect time to include marijuana in the Smoke-Free Ontario Act. So I compliment that grade 11 student who made the connection that this government cannot seem to make in respect to banning the smoking of pot, the use of marijuana—in this case before the committee—in cars. The private member’s bill before was banning second-hand smoke from marijuana in public places. I think it was just tremendous for a grade 11 student to participate.

I want to thank a group of students that assisted the Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit in my area. They brought petitions in, supported at the local high school in Lindsay. They went and engaged in the political process—which I find is enlightening; we’re getting our youth involved—and brought those petitions to me. We presented them in the Legislature.

The educational component could have been started months ago, but we’re happy to see that some third party groups are advocating and going forward with an educational component. You can never do enough in that regard and I hope that more is addressed in that matter.

We want to move forward with this legislation; I think all parties are in agreement for that today. It’s unfortunate that the amendment from the member for Burlington was not passed, but maybe we will have this in another day, as regulations proceed.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on Bill 69 today.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: It is my pleasure to rise today for the third reading of Bill 69, which amends the Smoke-Free Ontario Act. Basically, the NDP supports this bill. It is consistent with our party’s historic support for health promotion and children’s well-being. It certainly falls squarely within the framework of what we call the second stage of medicare, which is to keep people well. Protecting children from second-hand smoke does that: It keeps children well.

We also know there is widespread support for the bill by different partners, certainly the partners that came and presented, but also the Ontario Medical Association, the Registered Nurses’ Association of Ontario, the Ontario Public Health Association, the Lung Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health, public health units, the Non-Smokers’ Rights Association—and the list goes on. We know that there is strong public support: Up to 80% of the people in Ontario support this new bill. But this is balanced with the fact that really only 37% of the smokers have made their vehicles smoke-free.

At the base of the Smoke-Free Ontario Act is an act that is there to protect every Ontarian from second-hand smoke. During second reading, I had an opportunity to bring forward two amendments that clearly go along with the mission of the act that we’re about to modify with Bill 69: to protect all Ontarians from second-hand smoke. The first amendment was to bring the cut-off age, which presently sits at 16—which means it protects kids 15 and under because it cuts off at 16; 16-year-olds are not included—to 19, 19 being the legal age at which people can smoke. This link is easy to do. The government told us, “Well, it has to do with the consent to treatment.” To me, that link is not there. We had an opportunity to be in line with the Smoke-Free Ontario Act and to make the cut-off at 19. When I asked if there was any body of evidence, any studies that would support that 16 is better than 19, such bodies of evidence did not exist. Nobody can point to a study that says, "If you do the cut-offs at 16 rather than 19, you will have more compliance." None of this exists.

There is a study that exists that used a cut-off of 16, but that was it. There's no valid medical reason or any other reason, for that matter, not to put the cut-off at 19 years old, which would protect children from 18 down to birth.

Many other jurisdictions have chosen to put the cut-off at 19 and to line it up with the age at which people are legally allowed to smoke. By putting that 16-year-old cut-off there, you're building onto this idea that we all know there are a lot of teenagers aged 16 to 19 who smoke; we all know this. Although it is illegal, it still happens. They go, they get cigarettes one way or another, and they smoke.

In putting in this bill an age 16 cut-off, we are almost endorsing that it's a fact of life that kids aged 16 to 19, although they're not allowed to buy tobacco, are going to be smoking in Ontario, and we'll give up on this and put the cut-off at 16, because it's too just hard to get those kids. We are leaders. It's upon us to lead. To put the cut-off at 19 would have shown leadership, but the amendment was voted down by the Liberals.

The second amendment that I brought would make a mandatory three-month period from the time that the bill receives royal assent to the time that the fines will start to be given. Everybody agreed that the strength of this bill is in the education that it sends out. It sends out this message that it is not okay to smoke in a car when there are kids present. But we know that 63% of the smokers are still smoking in their cars when there are kids present. To give public health units and other groups an opportunity when the law has been passed—it is not talked about anymore; it is a law that has received royal assent in Ontario. To give them a three-month education period is what we call a prime time for health promotion. It is a time when people listen, because the law is about to change. It is a great time to do education and to go get those hard-to-get ones.

The minister and some of the people who represent the government say, "Well, there has already been quite a bit of talk about this bill." Yes, I agree that the media have picked the bill and talked about it, but this is very different from targeted health promotion education to people who we know will have a hard time complying.

In my riding, there are communities with smoking rates three times the rates in the rest of Ontario. We know, and the public health units and the people working on smoking-reduction strategies know that this three months of education would have gone a long way to allow them to be successful in helping those people comply with the law. But this amendment was also turned down.

The Smoke-Free Ontario Act is there to help protect people from second-hand smoke, but it looks like we're only going to do this in tiny, weenie little steps when we could have had an opportunity, at no cost to anybody, to take a way bigger step. The NDP will still support this bill, but we wish they could have made it a whole lot stronger, faster.

I think I have to say this at the beginning, but I will share my time with my colleague.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: It's an honour to rise, as we all do in the New Democratic Party, in support of Bill 69. We are absolutely in support of smoke-free cars. We're in support of anything that promotes the health of children, and certainly this bill is a step forward in promoting the health of children. It's staggering to me that people still smoke in cars, but it was also educational to me to discover how toxic that practice is. I didn't know, for example—and I think many watching at home probably don't know—that even if you smoke in a car with a child not present and a child gets into that car, the very upholstery in the car gives off a toxic gas which is also very detrimental to the small lungs of small children. That's something I didn't know.

I was a child in an era when smoking was everywhere. I was a child of parents who smoked, and I think of my own health being compromised. The health of many in the generation that sits here in this chamber has been compromised by a practice that people genuinely didn't see as dangerous, particularly if they cranked down the windows a bit. Now we know better. Now we know that even if you crank down the windows, it's still dangerous. Even if you don't have the child in the car and then you smoke in the car and the child gets into the car afterward, it's still dangerous. It's dangerous no matter how you look at it. It's a dangerous practice and it should be stopped.

Of course, it will be difficult to enforce, but as our lead critic, the member for Nickel Belt, pointed out, it's not about the enforcement of this bill so much, it's about the educational aspect of this bill. The fact that this bill is out there, that it gets some media play, will, in turn, let people know just how detrimental this practice is, and that's the force of this bill.

I also feel very saddened that the amendments that were put forward by the opposition parties were not taken to heart by the McGuinty Liberals, but so be it. That's always the way. Unfortunately, sometimes partisan politics trump common sense. This is certainly the case here. Again, a bill that could have been made stronger and could have offered even more protection will offer a little less protection because it's more important to have partisan politics here, and Liberals to be Liberals, than it is to protect the health of small children.

In fact, if the McGuinty Liberals really were serious about protecting the health of small children, there are a lot of things they could do, and we know this. We know that our member from Hamilton Centre has been an advocate of daycare. If the McGuinty Liberals really wanted to protect the health of children, they would look at what our neighbours in Quebec have done and offer some government-sponsored daycare spaces to children. In fact, now in Ontario, only one in 10 children even have a shot at a space, and they're not subsidized. The average cost for daycare is over $1,000 a month in Ontario right now. It's $7 a day in Quebec. Why can't we do what Quebec does here? Good question. That would protect the health of children.

Something else the McGuinty Liberals could do if they were really serious about protecting the health of children is bring in a dental care program. My husband and I were in Sweden recently where there is free dental care up to the age of 18. If we had that here, that would truly protect the health of children. A community of 9 million in Sweden and we've got 13 million in Ontario—don't tell me we couldn't do it. We're one of the wealthiest jurisdictions in the world. That's what the McGuinty Liberals could do to protect the health of children.

What else could they do? There have been a number of other moments in the news in this last little while: C. difficile. We in the New Democratic Party have called, through the expert leadership of our health critic from Nickel Belt, for the Ombudsman to give oversight to our hospitals. The Liberals aren't interested in that; they're not even interested in having reporting on C. difficile deaths happen until September. I'm speaking personally because my uncle was one of those victims, three times, of C. difficile. Making hospitals safe places would help the health of all of our citizens, including children.

What else would help if the McGuinty Liberals were really serious about protecting the health of children? Not only passing Bill 69, which is about smoking in cars with children, but also bringing in affordable housing because we know one in six of our children suffer from poverty. Poverty is a serious social determinant of health. Children who are poor do not get enough to eat, do not have adequate housing, do not have dental care etc. That's what the McGuinty Liberals could do: actually spend some of the federal dollars that they've got on housing. And of course—a subject near and dear—up the minimum wage, because 41% of our children who live in poverty come from working families. If you have a mother who's working two jobs at minimum wage, that child's health is being compromised.

But I digress. To get back to Bill 69, smoking in cars with children: bad thing. Yes, it's a bad thing, and New Democrats will support the government in trying to abolish this bad act by people who, I don't think, are so much bad as addicted. Which begs the other question of, what are we doing for those who have a hard time overcoming addictions? The answer, unfortunately, from the McGuinty Liberals is not much. They're not doing much to combat addiction in this province, tobacco and alcohol addiction being the two pre-eminent arbiters of death from addiction.

Again, insofar as this bill is a good educational tool, insofar as this bill will take an inch forward where we need a mile forward in terms of children's health—insofar as it does that, we certainly support it. We would also call on this government to look at the whole issue of addictions. We don't have a drug strategy in Ontario. The city of Toronto has a drug strategy and it's an excellent one. Perhaps we could upload something from our municipalities, and that would be an Ontario drug strategy that the McGuinty Liberals could bring in to look at the whole issue of addiction rather than simply this one small piece of addiction that in this one small way affects children's health.

Certainly, before I sit down, I want to give acknowledgment where it's due, and that is to the wonderful leadership on this file by our wonderful health critic from Nickel Belt and to all of those who put time in on this committee. As I said, we in the New Democratic Party will do anything that will help to further the health of our children.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments? Further debate?

Seeing none, I will go to the minister for a reply.

Hon. Margaret R. Best: I would like to begin by acknowledging my colleague from Sault Ste. Marie, David Oraziotti; my PA, the member for Oak Ridges–Markham; and also the members opposite for their commitment, support and interest in the well-being of our children. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank the people of Ontario for their input.

As was said earlier by my colleague from Oak Ridges–Markham, tobacco-related diseases have been estimated to account for $1.6 billion in direct health care costs and $4.4 billion in productivity losses each year. Our government has made remarkable progress in the fight against tobacco-related illnesses and death. We accomplished this by introducing one of the most aggressive and comprehensive tobacco control strategies in North America, as I said earlier, and we established a province-wide law for smoke-free environments when the Smoke-Free Ontario Act became law on May 31, 2006. Just recently, on May 31, we took down the power walls, and once again we have achieved widespread voluntary compliance. Our estimates show that over 96% of vendors were in compliance by the May 31 date.

Now, Bill 69 is the next important step in moving forward. The primary objective of this bill and the Smoke-Free Ontario Act has always been to protect people from second-hand smoke in enclosed public places and workplaces. This amendment would extend province-wide protection to children in motor vehicles.

The medical science is very clear that second-hand smoke is dangerous to our children's health. As a government, we are also very aware that even acting in the public's interest needs public support. In January of this year, a poll released by the Canadian Cancer Society showed that over 80% of Ontarians, including 66% of smokers in Ontario, support a ban on smoking in vehicles with children.

Our government is confident that the public is ready for this proposed ban to protect our children's health. Support comes from leading non-governmental health organizations, as I've said before, including the OMA, the Ontario Lung Association, the Heart and Stroke

Foundation of Ontario and the Canadian Cancer Society. I want to take this opportunity to thank them for their input. I would like to quote the CEO of the Canadian Cancer Society, Peter Goodhand, who said: "Children don't have a choice when it comes to exposure to second-hand smoke while travelling in a vehicle. We congratulate the Ontario government for taking this step to protect ... children's health."

Our government believes that the people of Ontario are ready for legislation to protect our children from being exposed to second-hand smoke in motor vehicles. This is about protection of our most vulnerable citizens: children who do not have a voice, children age 16 and under. We are confident in anticipating wide voluntary compliance for this amendment, especially given the level of public support.

In response to the member opposite, as with any legislation, I agree with her that this ban will still require some level of enforcement. That is why this proposal includes a partnership with police services across the province to enforce the legislation. Enforcement is indeed important, but voluntary compliance is our goal. Our government knows that public awareness is key to making that happen.

This legislative process alone has brought greater public awareness and education. Again, in response to the member opposite, if this bill is passed, we also plan to deliver a multi-layered public education campaign across the province with our partners. We anticipate that we will reach people wherever they are, to get them to think about the importance of their children's health and our children's.

In addition to public education and enforcement, we will also be leveraging all the components of the smoke-free Ontario strategy to ensure voluntary compliance, including programs to help smokers quit and working with our partners in public health to continue to champion this very worthy cause.

This is about the safety and well-being of our children. The Premier and our government are committed to this, and our partners are committed to this. I appeal to all Ontarians to commit to smoke-free vehicles for our children's sake. Again, I thank everyone involved.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Ms. Best has moved third reading of Bill 69, An Act to protect children from second-hand tobacco smoke in motor vehicles by amending the Smoke-Free Ontario Act. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Third reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

Orders of the day.

Hon. David Caplan: I seek consent for the House to recess until 10:45 of the clock today.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Is there unanimous consent of the House to recess until 10:45? Agreed. This House now stands recessed.

The House recessed from 0950 to 1045.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I take this opportunity to welcome a number of visitors to Queen's Park today.

On behalf of the member from Kitchener Centre, in the east members' gallery: Brian and Connie Voll.

On behalf of the member from Scarborough—Guildwood, in the east members' gallery: Clara Russell, Ferlena Burke and Ida Fogo, the member's sisters and a family friend. Welcome.

On behalf of the member from Carleton—Mississippi Mills, in the west members' gallery we'd like to welcome Victor and Gloria Morris and Larry and Rita Morris, who are celebrating their 50th anniversary—congratulations—and also John Morris.

On behalf of the member from Thornhill, in the west members' gallery: Mr. Fred Winegust, marketing manager at IBM.

On behalf of the member from Peterborough, in the east members' gallery: Mr. Ted Hunter from the Peterborough Rotary, and Ms. Patyna Litvinova, Rotary exchange student from Siberia.

On behalf of the member from St. Paul's, in the east members' gallery: Mr. Sam George, councillor, Kettle and Stony Point First Nation.

On behalf of page Doaa Hussein, in the west members' gallery: her father, Hatem Hussein; her mother, Layla Al-Asawi, and her sisters Samaa Hussein and Safa Hussein.

On behalf of page Taylor Martin, in the public galleries: a friend of hers, Deanna Martin.

In the Speaker's gallery, I'd like to welcome two guests of mine: Francine and Terry Melmer from St. Thomas. Welcome to Queen's Park today.

As well in the Speaker's gallery, we'd like to welcome a delegation from the Ghana Parliament: Ms. Gloria Insaído, librarian; Mr. Kwesi Eshun, director, research department; Martha Acquah Hayford, head of Hansard; Mr. Addow Quashie, head of their information communication technology department; and Mr. Adams Fusheini, information resource coordinator, Parliamentary Centre. Welcome to all of our guests today.

ORAL QUESTIONS

TOURISM

Mr. Ted Arnott: My question is for the Minister of Tourism. According to a recent Hamilton news article, the Ministry of Tourism projects a 9% drop in travellers from the US to Ontario this year, costing us about $46 million in revenue. The minister knows that things are getting much worse. From the minister's own website, for the first quarter of 2008, the number of same-day trips from the US is down a staggering 25%. Grace Sammut from Resorts of Ontario tells us that the number of employee hours worked to date is down 24% from last year. This means lost jobs.

My question is this: Does this government actually intend to do nothing to reverse these declining tourism numbers?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: I want to thank the member for Wellington-Halton Hills for sharing some of that factual information. The first thing that I want to say is that this government is dedicated to a sustainable, viable tourism sector. That's why we're working with our partners on a plan—a plan that has put significant dollars into tourism; a plan that is working.

I would like to share some facts. When we look across Canada and Ontario, yes, we're experiencing some challenges when it comes to tourism. But Ontario, compared to some of the other provinces like BC or Quebec, which have seen a 7% and 5.8% decline in their numbers—we've actually seen a bit of an uptick in our numbers with overnight travellers from the US. So things are working. Yes, we do have challenges—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Ted Arnott: I have no idea who the minister's talking to. We're hearing a very different story. This government brags about marketing, yet the My Ontario travel book put out by this minister makes no mention of Windsor and Essex county and only makes passing reference to London, ignoring the great tourism potential of these communities. In the past six years, the tourism industry in Windsor has declined 50%. Both Windsor and London have been amongst the hardest hit by manufacturing job losses. Apparently, London and Windsor don't figure high in this minister's priorities.

John Tory's plan to stimulate tourism and suspend the PST on hotels and attractions this summer will give Ontario's tourism industry a much-needed boost. Will the minister commit today to implementing John Tory's plan?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: We've got a great plan that is working. Unfortunately, John Tory's poor band-aid for the province and for the tourism sector is something we will not move on. What we did in our budget bill was to put 92 million new dollars into our tourism industry. These are in tax incentives and initiatives that will help the tourism sector. What's great about Ontario is that we have a four-season destination here.

Let's look at the Windsor area. Next week, we're actually opening up the new Caesars-branded casino. I think this is going to be wonderful for that area. It will attract many more people. It's unfortunate that the opposition opposed that. The opposition also voted against our $30-million stimulus package for the industry that we brought forward last fall. The opposition—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Final supplementary.

Mr. Ted Arnott: The thousands of small businesses and the villages, towns and cities that rely on tourist dollars can't wait a year or two for another study like this minister's offering. They need action. They need action this week before the House rises. Where's the small business minister in all of this?

Here's a voice from the north. Stephen Holt of Charlton Lake Camp writes, "Northern Ontario is in need of immediate help for the upcoming season and the government has been quiet." Last week, the minister said that very few support our plan. This week, he's singing a different tune because he knows that the Tourism Industry Association of Ontario understands the urgency. North Bay city council supports our plan. Resorts of Ontario supports our plan. Attractions Ontario supports our plan. Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association supports our plan. Wings of Paradise in Cambridge, the Red Pine Wilderness Lodge, the Walper Terrace in Kitchener and the Millcroft Inn in Alton all support our plan. I could go on and on.

Why won't the minister respond to these pleas for immediate action and bring in our plan to support tourism into Ontario?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: We've been committed to the tourism sector since forming government back in 2003. Right away in 2004, in our first budget, we made sure that the RST was exempted so that we can use those monies for promoting and marketing our many destinations across Ontario.

For the immediate, we came up with a great initiative through our OPS, which this idea came out of. We have a fun pass that's being distributed to 1.4 million kids across this province. They're going to be able to go to any of our attractions, agencies—the AGO, Fort William, etc.—for free. That will drive much traffic.

Also, where we've had huge success has been with our "There's no place like this" campaign. It really helped our most important market. Our most important market is our domestic market, Ontarians being tourists within—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Tim Hudak: The question is to the minister responsible to consumers. Minister, this morning gas prices hit up to $1.36 in Hamilton. Back when Dalton McGuinty was in opposition, he claimed he had "three solid ideas" to hold the line on gas prices. Which of those three ideas have you actually acted upon?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: I know that the federal government has just been doing some investigation on this. I also know that the former minister, Minister Phillips, had taken a couple of initiatives which we've followed up on. So I think at the supplemental, in terms of the specific plans, I'll refer it to Minister Phillips.

Mr. Tim Hudak: I guess the answer is that they've acted on zero of the three promises that Dalton McGuinty made before the election.

Unlike Dalton McGuinty, real families that have to pump gas into their own automobiles are getting whacked by gas prices up to $1.36. Some forecast that gas prices may go as high as $1.40 a litre this summer.

Minister, somebody driving a Honda Civic made in Alliston, Ontario, who fills up their tank, on average, once a week would see an increase in their costs of $378. Families driving a Jeep Grand Cherokee would pay an additional $603.

Minister, given that your government has acted on none of your promises, what exactly are your plans to give working families and seniors a break on their rising costs this summer?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: To Minister Phillips.

Hon. Gerry Phillips: Probably the first question the public asks is, "Are the gas companies, oil companies, proceeding appropriately?" There's no question that the responsibility for that—and I think the member would agree—rests with the federal Competition Bureau, quite appropriately. There's no question of that, and we agree with that. I would note that, according to what we've seen on the weekend, the Competition Bureau has taken some steps. I think we should expect the federal Competition Bureau to play their role on behalf of the consumer.

What can we do here in Ontario? I would say: Ensure that people have options. We are working very closely with our car manufacturers on producing energy-efficient cars and investing a substantial amount of money in assisting them with that.

I will, in the—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Final supplementary.

Mr. Tim Hudak: It is ironic that they switch from the minister who is here to protect consumers to the minister representing the oil companies in the province of Ontario.

Let me say this back to the minister: You heard that somebody driving a Honda Civic is looking at $378 more this summer from higher gas prices. Since 2003, a typical middle-class family in Ontario is facing $2,000 more annually in expenses with gas, rises in electricity, higher Dalton McGuinty taxes, new user fees and delisted OHIP services.

We have called for relief this summer for working families by eliminating the provincial sales tax, at the very least, on accommodations and on attractions to help families spend some quality time this summer. Dalton McGuinty has steadfastly refused, because he believes he can spend the money better.

Minister, what kind of relief will you give to Ontario families this summer?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: I appreciate the yelling of the question, but it doesn't make it any better.

I'd just say: The public in Ontario want options. It was, dare I say, the Conservative government that cut out support for public transit. It was not a smart move. We are investing a substantial amount of the gas tax in public transit. That will help some people have options. That's a good idea. It will also take pressure off gasoline consumption; another good idea. It will help greenhouse gas emissions; another good idea. We are taking substantial long-term steps.

You made some bad mistakes when you were in government, and that's frankly why you're there. We're now making the right decisions for the public in Ontario, and we'll keep doing that.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is for the Acting Premier. Last Thursday, I was in Oshawa proudly marching with GM truck workers and their supporters at the plant. The marchers want GM to live up to its obligations, which were negotiated in good faith less than one month ago. What is the government doing to convince GM to keep the truck plant open and save the livelihoods of 2,600 workers?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Finance. Could we ask the honourable member to go back to his side for question period?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: I apologize to the member; I couldn't hear the question.

Our government is proud of the investments it has made to keep automotive jobs right here in Ontario. Whether you're talking about the domestic, the Detroit Three—General Motors, Ford, Chrysler—or whether you're talking about Honda or Toyota, there is no question that the kinds of investments we're making not only help that sector transition to a newer economy; they help transition to a cleaner economy.

I was pleased last Wednesday evening to be at the tribute to Buzz Hargrove that was held here in Toronto and to see the Premier of Ontario. I was proud to sit with the CAW locals from my community: Ford, Chrysler, General Motors. I was pleased that they continue to recognize, as does the leadership of the—

Mr. Paul Miller: This morning, workers complied with an injunction that ended the peaceful blockade of GM's corporate offices. While a judge ruled that the blockade should come down, I note some of the comments made in his ruling: GM was "almost deceitful" in its negotiations with the workers. Additionally, he wrote that the company "should not be rewarded for improper conduct." Well, the company already has its reward in the form of nearly a quarter of a billion dollars of taxpayers' money. Will this government force GM to live up to its obligations or will it allow GM to keep the money and run?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: As both the Premier and my colleague the Minister of Economic Development indicated last week, there are penalty clauses associated with the General Motors contract which will be implemented.

What I will say is this: Were it not for those investments at Toyota, we wouldn't have a new plant opening this fall. Were it not for those investments, we wouldn't have flex manufacturing, which leaves the opportunity for a new product line at Oshawa. Were it not for those investments, we would not have flex manufacturing in Oakville, which will allow for a new product mandate. This government's record is aimed at and designed to encourage the next generation of jobs. That member and his party voted against every one of these initiatives.

We stand with the working men and women in Canada's automotive sector. We'll continue to make the prudent investments that not only create jobs but ensure that we will have a better future ahead in the—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Final supplementary?

Mr. Paul Miller: If it means that existing jobs are protected and new jobs are created, New Democrats are not against strategic investment in the auto sector. In this case there were no job guarantees and no product guarantees. With so many good-paying jobs on the line, how could the McGuinty government have been so incompetent as to negotiate an agreement with a multinational corporation that leaves $235 million in the company's back pocket while leaving 2,600 workers with nothing more than a pink slip? This time, will this minister just cut the verbal attacks against the NDP and actually answer the question?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: Accountability truly is difficult, and you shouldn't have voted against those initiatives. Shame on you. You should have listened to Buzz Hargrove when he said that Premier Dalton McGuinty's government has been "active and supportive, recognizing the importance to the whole provincial economy of retaining these high-productivity jobs."

You should have been supportive when the workers at Chrysler, General Motors and Ford came to us and said, "Make these investments to help protect our jobs and to bring new jobs." You should have been supportive when we invested in Toyota, which will see a new plant opening just outside of Woodstock. You should have been supportive, sir, I say with respect, when Honda expanded. That party had an option. It chose to vote against auto workers. It chose—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question?

AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. By the end of March 31, 2009, how much does his ministry expect to invest in provincial funds through the Canada-Ontario affordable housing program?

Hon. Jim Watson: We're very proud of the affordable housing program for a couple of reasons. First and foremost, it was an agreement signed by the previous federal government and the McGuinty government.

Let me just give the honourable member a couple of examples of some of the dollars that have gone into affordable housing programs: in her home city of Toronto, $178.5 million, which represents 5,246 units; in my home town of Ottawa, $44.7 million for 1,064 units; and in the great community of London, $22.9 million for 647 units.

This is in addition to money that we just put in in our last budget—$100 million—the largest single investment of repair and rehabilitation money in the history of Ontario. We're proud of that. We know more work has to be done.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: I have two documents in my hand. One is a 2005 Canada-Ontario agreement where the McGuinty government promised to invest 300 million provincial dollars in affordable housing by March 31, 2009. The other document I have is an April 2008 letter from the minister's own office that says he expects to spend only $100 million of the $300 million by March 31, 2009. Why won't this minister admit in this House that he has absolutely failed to deliver on his $300-million promise?

Hon. Jim Watson: The member is completely wrong, once again. She is mixing up two or three different programs. Let me just tell you the record of this government compared to the record of when the NDP were in power. The last year that the NDP were in power, what did they spend? Fifty-two million dollars. The McGuinty government has spent $185 million.

I'm quite proud of the fact that this government entered into an affordable housing program agreement with the previous federal government, and I'm disappointed that the NDP are not putting pressure on their federal counterparts to raise this issue, day in and day out, to ensure that the federal government comes to the table with a realistic affordable housing program, because we know that the funding starts drying up with the RAP program and the homelessness initiative on March 31. So stand up for Ontario, NDP.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: The minister knows that the federal funding dollars for affordable housing are here only because of the role the NDP played in Ottawa.

Here is what the Toronto Star says about his performance: "Idle Funds Go to Waste"; "Ontario Lagging on Social Housing"; "Many Shut Out of Rental Programs"; "Ontario Housing Gap Tops $1 Billion"; "Buck-Passing on Housing." That's what the Toronto Star editorial board says about his performance. Meanwhile, $285 million of promised Ontario money and federal real dollars are going wanting and 150,000 people are waiting for affordable housing in Ontario.

Will this minister stand up and apologize for wasting the funds, for not spending the money and for promising something that's not there?

Hon. Jim Watson: Again, if the honourable member wants to be the leader of her party, she's going to have to get better research and get her facts straight.

This government has done more on the affordable housing front than the last two governments combined, because we actually reached a deal with the previous federal government under the leadership of Premier McGuinty, Jean Chrétien and Paul Martin.

Let me tell you what the Ontario Non-Profit Housing Association executive director said: "While no one government can solve decades of issues affecting the current state and need for more affordable housing, this government is leading the way in finding solutions to improve affordable housing in Ontario. Today's announcement will make a real difference and demonstrates that the government has been listening to" the sector's "concerns."

I'm proud of the fact that we are back in the affordable housing business. Yes, we have to do more, but we need the federal government to be at the table as a willing partner to work with cities, towns and the province.

SCHOOL SAFETY

Mr. Frank Klees: To the Minister of Education: Last Wednesday, the Premier told this House that he would direct the Minister of Education to investigate the failure of an elementary school principal to report an assault on a six-year-old in one of our public schools.

Unfortunately, the minister appears not to share the Premier's urgency. In fact, when I offered that the opposition would co-operate with the government to pass an amendment to the Child and Family Services Act that would make it mandatory for school officials to report to parents and to the police, the minister chose to ignore that proposal and instead rambled on about a future committee investigation.

We have the facts. There are protocols in place; they're not being followed. What we need is an amendment to legislation that will make that reporting mandatory. What is the minister waiting for and why will she not act on this issue?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: I watched for eight years while the government opposite made precipitous decisions that did not take into account what was actually going on in our education system. That is not how this government operates. What we are doing is looking at the reporting mechanisms, and as the member opposite knows full well, there are reporting mechanisms in different pieces of legislation.

My answer is that I'm very concerned that we close any gaps that exist in reporting. My parliamentary assistant, Liz Sandals, is leading the safe schools action team. They are talking to people around the province who understand the issues of safe schools and understand the culture of schools. What I commit is that I will take the advice of the safe schools action team, because they will have considered the real situation in our schools rather than an ideological political position.

Mr. Frank Klees: The minister is saying that what I brought to the attention of this House and the Premier last week is not real. What she is saying is that when the Premier said to this House that he will instruct the minister to investigate, she doesn't share the Premier's concern.

There is nothing further to investigate. We know that protocols aren't being followed. We know that principals are not using good judgment. We need legislation to support what every parent expects, and that is that if a student is assaulted in our schools, they'll know about it and the police will know about it.

I'm calling now on the minister to assume her responsibility, bring legislation into this House and ensure that there are teeth in the law to ensure that those responsible for looking after our kids in our schools will follow the law, report to parents and report to the police. Why will she not do that?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: It's obviously a very serious situation when a protocol has not been followed. The Premier did speak to me. I understand absolutely that it is my responsibility. It is our responsibility to make sure that the correct protocols are in place and that they are followed. The fact is, the protocol was in place. The protocol was there. What we need to do is make sure that we have the right enforcement mechanisms and that we have the right procedures in place.

It is clear that the board has taken action in this situation, and that is as it should be. The board has taken action. It is my expectation that when a protocol is breached, a board will take action. But it is not the answer for any of the children in our system for a government to take action that has nothing to do with the realities of what's going on in our schools. I need the information. I need to know where the reporting gaps are, and when we know where the reporting gaps are, then we will fill them.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE CONTROL

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Ma question est pour le ministre de la Santé et des Soins de longue durée.

Under the minister's watch, Ontario hospitals are cutting beds, cutting staff and increasing occupancy rates. The Rouge Valley Health Centre proposed cutting 220 health providers, 24 of them cleaning staff, and cutting 36 hospital beds, while at the same time pushing its bed occupancy level from 82% to over 95%. Studies show that when occupancy goes over 90%, as Rouge Valley is projecting, infection rates go up by 42%. Why is this government promoting public policies that put Ontarians at risk of contracting and dying from a hospital-acquired infection?

Hon. George Smitherman: As the honourable member will know from her participation this morning with her colleagues from one of the public sector unions, there have been governments in the province of Ontario historically that have cut funding for hospitals. She is in a party that was one of them. Our party hasn't done that. When she leads her question by suggesting that overall in health care we're closing hospital beds and reducing staff in hospitals, that's not accurate either. I would encourage the honourable member to bring forward information that actually confirms that point.

All across the platform of health care, our government has been associated with enhanced investment and substantially increased employment so that those people working in hospital environments can enhance their capacity to care for the people of Ontario. That is our record; it is proven by statistics. If the honourable member has a question with a basis in fact, I'll be looking forward to it by way of supplementary.

Mme France Gélinas: Well, I do have a bit of facts. The British Medical Association concluded in their report that high occupancy rates and less cleaning staff lead directly to the spread of hospital-acquired infections. Ontario's own chief coroner stated that overcrowding may have played a role in the C. difficile outbreak in Sault Ste. Marie hospital. Especially in light of this C. difficile outbreak, why is this minister standing by while hospitals cut staff, close beds and force hospitals to operate at 95% capacity?

Hon. George Smitherman: Maybe it was the combined efforts of those two parties who closed more than 18,000 acute care beds that has contributed to these occupancy issues. Our work over the course of the last four years has been to invest in the construction of more hospitals than the last five governments in the province of Ontario combined, and when you look at the particular circumstances in Sault Ste. Marie, that has included moving toward many more semi-private rooms—a substantial advance over the circumstances that were in place.

I do say to the honourable member: We acknowledge that there are very genuine risks in our hospital environments associated with things like superbugs. That's why public reporting and measurement of those will be introduced very shortly. Even your allies on this situation agree that that's an important step. I do say to the honourable member: If she wishes to demonstrate that across the province of Ontario there are fewer beds now than when we came to office, she's got a lot of work to do, because it's simply not true.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Bruce Crozier: My question is to the Minister of Revenue. My constituents have told me that it can sometimes take a lot of time and resources when they're required to fill their tax obligations and that they find them to be cumbersome. Filling out numerous forms, waiting for information to be provided, and interpreting tax laws on remitting the correct amount of tax can sometimes be quite challenging. Considering the fact that small business makes up 99% of the business community in Ontario, what are you doing to alleviate the red tape and ease the amount of time associated with filing taxes correctly and helping Ontarians focus energy on running their business?

Hon. Monique M. Smith: I would like to thank the member for Essex for the question. It gives me a great opportunity to speak about the fact that this morning I was at the Toronto Board of Trade launching our Ministry of Revenue new initiative on improving and modernizing our tax system to allow all taxpayers across the province the opportunity to pay their taxes in a more streamlined way. Our new system is called Onttaxs. Part of that system was to introduce one new toll-free number, 1-866-ONT-TAXS, which will replace 39 phone numbers that the Ministry of Revenue formerly had in place. This will streamline it for all of our taxpayers across the province.

We're also introducing one business number for every business across the province. That will integrate the federal business number and allow our taxpayers to use one number when accessing information. They'll be able to access this information soon on a new Internet service that will allow businesses to file their returns, make payments and view their accounts 24/7, seven days a week. We're making great initiatives here to—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Bruce Crozier: I am pleased that this government is moving forward on the modernization of Ontario's tax administration system, and I'll certainly advise my constituents of the changes that are taking place, which they will no doubt be pleased to hear. Many will feel that they are long overdue.

Minister, changes of this magnitude in a tax system as old as ours can be nothing short of monumental. Why were some of these changes not made years ago, as has been the case in other jurisdictions, and what benefits other than those you've mentioned can Ontario businesses expect to see as these changes come to fruition?

Hon. Monique M. Smith: One of the reasons that these changes were not implemented sooner was because the Conservatives, when they were in power, made no effort whatsoever to modernize our tax system in the province, despite the fact that the Auditor General requested it in not one, two, but three different reports. We are proud to be moving forward with our Onttaxs system and providing an easier system for all taxpayers across the province. Our online service will provide our business taxpayers their tax history for over four years, right at their fingertips, 24/7; we are spreading our walk-in service to over 70 Service Ontario locations; we have this new 1-800 number; and we have the new business number, but it's really the interactive service that we're providing through the Internet that's going to benefit all of our taxpayers. They'll be able to remit their PST and their Ontario health tax in a timely manner, online, starting this fall. We're rolling it out in a streamlined way to ensure that security's in place, but it will be a service that will be available this fall for all taxpayers.

GOVERNMENT INVESTMENTS

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: My question is to the Deputy Premier. In the wake of Liberal contracts gone awry and industrial unrest, the Premier and two of his ministers are in California, despite being snubbed by Governor Schwarzenegger. Their purported mission is to stir up interest in Ontario's biotech industry and to advertise the $1-billion Next Generation of Jobs Fund and a pharmaceutical investment program, yet a close inspection of these Liberal corporate handout schemes is very problematic.

Nowhere in the eligibility criteria is there a mention of job guarantees. The government is obviously not learning from its recent mistakes. Deputy Premier, why are job guarantees not part of the criteria for biotech funding?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Dwight Duncan: I think I need to remind the member of some facts about our province. I wonder if the member knows that Ontario is number two in pharmaceutical research in Canada. Those are the kinds of things we're investing in.

I wonder if the member knows that we're number three in the digital media industry in Canada and that we want to be number one. That's why we are taking some of the steps we're taking.

I wonder if he knows that we're number one in the ICT sector in Canada. Toronto's the third largest in the world in North America, and we are number one in financial services in Canada, number one in R&D, number two in aerospace, number one in the business services sector and number one in the chemical sectors.

We will continue to make the investments through the Next Generation of Jobs Fund and through the other sources that we have available. We will make the investments that will create jobs, that will ensure that we remain competitive in the—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: That was a terrible answer. He just got hosed in Oshawa, and there are no guarantees in the Next Generation. The fact is that this government's attempt to interfere and control the market is stifling Ontario's competitiveness. As their weak contracts are exploited, industries that do not receive government favour are being pillaged by some of the highest business taxes in the western world.

Deputy Premier, when will your government learn that no-strings-attached, one-off handouts are not effective in the long term? When will you stop wasting Ontario taxpayers' dollars and pay attention to some of the experiences you've had just recently in Oshawa, where you got hosed because your guarantees were no good?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: The member for Oshawa and the member for Whitby called for that. In fact, the federal Minister of Finance is now calling for more assistance to companies like General Motors. In the member's riding of Oakville, the very day the General Motors' announcement happened, Ford was announcing a new flex line at their plant and increased employment.

There is no doubt that we do need a variety of policies. That's why we have a five-point plan. That's why we're investing in skills. That's why we have cut the capital tax and eliminated it for manufacturers. That's why we are investing in research and innovation. That's why—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd just remind the member from Halton: You just asked a question. You should be listening to the response. Minister.

Hon. Dwight Duncan: That's why we're investing in partnerships. This government's five-point plan is the right approach. It is the approach that will help get this economy through the challenges it faces, and we will be better and stronger as a result of it.

CASINO EMPLOYEES

Ms. Andrea Horwath: To the Deputy Premier: In light of Ontario's job crisis, what is your government doing to ensure that the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp. stops its current drive to take away good-paying, full-time jobs and benefits from CAW casino workers that it employs in Brantford, Toronto and Sudbury?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal.

Hon. David Caplan: Quite the contrary, I can assure the member that the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp. has spoken to the conciliator and let him and the union know that they are quite eager to get back to the bargaining table. I want to encourage both parties to do so.

The facts are these: The Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp. is seeking, on behalf of its shareholders, the people of Ontario, and on behalf of its employees a fair deal that will honour both parties and make sure that we have a strong sector. This corporation has taken great pains to bring a new culture of continuous improvement. I think that's being reflected in the current dialogue that is going on. Speaker, I can assure you and I can assure the member that all work is being done toward achieving a fair settlement, and I would encourage both parties to get back to the table to achieve that.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: The OLG is pressuring CAW to agree to demands that would replace their full-time casino staff with part-time temporary workers for less pay and fewer benefits. The government's own corporation is set to kill off full-time casino jobs and decent wages and benefits for workers. This cannot be allowed to stand.

Will this minister meet with CAW leadership immediately, as they have requested of him by letter, and work to ensure that the OGL doesn't erode the full-time employment status of CAW casino workers and the jobs that are supporting their families?

Hon. David Caplan: I can assure the member that it is not my intention to insert myself, as it would be inappropriate, into the current round of bargaining. We are working through the conciliation process, through the collective bargaining, which we do believe in. We don't believe there should be interference in that process. I'm encouraging both sides to come together to achieve a fair settlement.

Also, this member's charge, that somehow there is a change, is not quite in keeping with the facts in this province. In fact, this government and this corporation have invested considerably, and next week I'm looking forward to being in Windsor for the re-branding of Casino Windsor to the Caesars brand. That represents an investment today of some $439 million back into this sector, back into good jobs, back into supporting the communities of Windsor and the families right across this province that depend on these vital jobs. This government has taken great pains to invest in this sector—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question? The member for London—Fanshawe.

WORKPLACE SAFETY

Mr. Khalil Ramal: My question is for the Minister of Labour. I was shocked and horrified last week when a young, 14-year-old worker received burns to more than 50% of his body while working at an auto parts company. I understand from my colleague MPP Ruprecht that a workplace accident involving a 20-year-old happened in his riding at the end of May. That young man also received burns to 50% of his body.

Minister, I am sure it must be difficult for you to see these accidents happen over and over again. I would like know what steps your ministry is taking to make sure these kinds of accidents do not happen again and that the people of Ontario, especially our young workers, are safe when they go to work.

Hon. Brad Duguid: I thank the member for London—Fanshawe for the question. Having been to his riding not too long ago and meeting the stakeholders with the member, I know how concerned he is about injured workers, in particular the safety and health of young workers.

I share his concerns about these two injuries that have occurred over the last number of weeks, and my sympathies certainly go out to the parents and the injured workers themselves. We hope for a full and speedy recovery.

The reality is that a new worker is four times more likely to be injured in the first month on the job than at any time in their career after that. That tells me that we all have a lot of work to do when it comes to working with employers across this province to ensure that those young workers get the orientation and training they need to be healthy and safe when they get out on the job. I thank the member for raising this issue. It's a very important—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Khalil Ramal: My constituents of London—Fanshawe, as do the members of this Legislature, want to know that their sons and daughters will return home from work safe and sound. I noted that you said that all MPPs got a kit on young worker safety again this spring. Has your ministry undertaken any other activities to help ensure the safety of our young workers? It's important not just for my riding, as I mentioned, but to all the members of this House, because it's very important for us to make sure our young workers, when they go to work, come back home safe. Can you tell us, Minister?

Hon. Brad Duguid: Yes, indeed, we have sent out tip sheets that have been distributed to one million students from grades 7 to 12 right across the province. It is about awareness. It is important that young people, when they go to their jobs this summer, are aware of the fact that they do have rights to protect themselves if they feel that what they're being asked to do is unsafe. It's about awareness for employers as well. They have a responsibility to ensure that they provide orientation and that they provide training. The member is quite right. We just celebrated Father's Day this weekend. As a father myself, when my son is old enough to go off to the workforce—I think all of us want to make sure that when they do go to their job, they will come home safe and sound. It's a priority for our government. We are conducting a blitz of employers across the province as we get into the summer job season, and we're making a number of other efforts in partnership with a number of others across this—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Norm Miller: My question is to the Minister of Small Business and Entrepreneurship, who doesn't appear to be here, so I will redirect the question to the Deputy Premier. What kind of support does your government offer small business operators in understanding and complying with provincial regulations?

Hon. George Smitherman: As the honourable member would know, even through question period, from an earlier question addressed by the Minister of Revenue, the government has had an approach which is designed to enhance the ease with which people working in small businesses are able to deal with the various regulatory challenges and burdens that are there. In addition, we're working with the Minister of Labour in the driver's seat to enhance our ability to diminish regulation burdens where possible. BizPal is a one-stop shop for business licensing and permits, which is a big step forward in design to enhance the ease with which small business operators can meet those various tests.

Mr. Norm Miller: I recently met with a convenience store operator in my riding of Parry Sound—Muskoka. He told me that times are tough. He has been in business for four years, and recently an inspector arrived at his business and wanted to see all the receipts for the past four years for cigars purchased. Without the receipts, the fine would have been $10,000. Now, at no time since he bought the business has anyone from the government come around to tell him that he should be hanging on to these receipts. In fact, at no time has anyone from the government come in to give him any kind of advice or support on how to comply with your government regulations.

Minister, big business is packing up and leaving Ontario, and we're going to need to start treating small business a lot better in this province. It seems that your government is doing nothing to help small business. When will you start to work to help small business instead of putting the focus on laying charges and collecting fines?

Hon. George Smitherman: First off, the matter at hand that the honourable member raises is quite a serious public health concern. I think that it is important, as well, for the honourable member to acknowledge that there's a very strong likelihood that this regime—the one that he mentions—is identical to that which was in place when his party was in government.

But we have made huge strides forward on this issue. BizPal, as I mentioned in the earlier answer, is a partnership with the federal government and municipalities, an initiative that allows small businesses to create a customized list of permits and licences. This is a very, very important enabler. We've created a single corporate tax administration form, a one-stop regulatory registry, a master business licence, and compliance information systems. You can see that all across the landscape is an attempt to make easier the burdens associated with the regulation of business. These are initiatives which could have been—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

ERAMOSKA KARST

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is to the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal. Last week, your Ontario Realty Corp. held an agency public involvement centre drop-in session as part of the planning and class environmental assessment on the Eramosa karst feeder lands. The primary focus of the planning and class environmental assessment study is stated as the possible disposition of these ANSI feeder lands.

When will the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Natural Resources do the right thing and transfer the ownership of the Eramosa karst to the Hamilton Conservation Authority?

Hon. David Caplan: Thank you for the question. It's quite bizarre, because I was on hand when I personally transferred the deed for the Eramosa karst to the Hamilton Conservation Authority. I don't know what further action he's looking for. I can tell the member, in fact, that the Ontario Realty Corp. has opened up dialogue with the local community. They have brought in international karst experts to provide the very best scientific data, research and advice as far as what further lands should be protected. It's a hallmark of this government to want to engage the public, to be able to open an honest dialogue with them and to listen to the advice that they receive before any future decisions are made.

The member is also aware that the city of Hamilton in an earlier official plan had designated these lands for development. They have subsequently decided to put a—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Paul Miller: I'm glad the minister mentioned "honesty" and "experts." At the public consultation last week, the minister's true agenda for these lands was clearly visible. The mockery of the public consultation process was disgraceful. The unbiased premise for such consultations was clearly breached and a major conflict of interest inflicted upon this process. Why has this minister hired Adi Irani of A.J. Clarke and Associates Ltd.—who just happens to be the president of the Hamilton-Halton Home Builders' Association, the voice of the residential and construction industry in our area—as a consultant to this project? Where are the environmentalists? Where are the local interest representatives? Nowhere. This is really special, Mr. Minister.

Hon. David Caplan: It is very special that finally we have a government committed to protecting public lands. It didn't occur under the NDP and it certainly didn't occur under the Conservatives. In fact, this government takes a back seat to no one on the opposite side of the Legislature when it comes to protecting the public interest and permanently protecting vital lands, as we did when I presented the deed for the karst lands to the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area in Hamilton.

The member is all rhetoric and hot air, because the facts are quite a bit different. The government has undertaken a genuine consultation process and has brought in international experts when it comes to the karst. I know that the member is very late to this particular issue and is trying to gain some particular attention for himself locally, but the fact is—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. New question.

CHINESE-CANADIAN HEAD TAX REDRESS DAY

Mr. Charles Sousa: My question is for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. June 22 is the second anniversary of the federal government's apology for a dark chapter in Canada's immigration history, the Chinese head tax and the subsequent Chinese Exclusion Act. These two separate pieces of legislation had a strong impact on Canada's immigration system, setting guidelines and a per person levy which discriminated against newcomers of Chinese origin.

Minister, as you well know, such federal restrictions at that time created serious social and economic consequences. Would the minister please tell us what the impact has been of this historic apology?

Hon. Michael Chan: My thanks to the honourable member for the question. The member is correct: June 22 marks the second anniversary of the federal government's apology for the Chinese head tax and the Chinese Exclusion Act. First passed by the House of Commons in 1885, the Chinese Immigration Act imposed a $50 head tax on all people of Chinese origin upon entering Canada. This head tax was raised to $500 in 1903, comparable to two years of wages at the time. While the tax decreased the number of Chinese newcomers, the amended Chinese Immigration Act of 1923 cut off all Chinese immigrants to Canada. This act stood from 1923 to 1947, banning Chinese immigration to Canada.

Canada is now a multicultural society, where it is widely acknowledged that diversity is one of our greatest strengths. Currently, newcomers from 200 countries come to Canada—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Charles Sousa: I, like all members of the Legislature, acknowledge that the Chinese head tax was discriminatory and unfair. I am pleased to note that, despite the adversities of the head tax, the Chinese community here in Ontario, which is hundreds of thousands strong, continues to make significant contributions to our province.

To the minister: What has been the response to the federal apology for the Chinese head tax here in Ontario and what effect does this have on immigration to Canada?

Hon. Michael Chan: In the fall of 2006, the then-Minister of Citizenship and Immigration rose in the Legislature to seek the consent of all parties to recognize June 22 as Chinese-Canadian Head Tax Redress Day in Ontario. On this day, members from all parties rose and confirmed their support for the federal apology and condemned the past discriminatory practices of the federal legislation. The apology itself was very important. It allows all Canadians, regardless of ethnic background, an opportunity to learn from the mistakes of the past and to continue building a strong Ontario for the future.

Now, in my capacity as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, I ask all members to pause for a moment on June 22 to reflect not only on the past injustices done or how far we have come but also about the work that still needs to be done to ensure that Ontario continues to be a place of opportunity for newcomers from all over the world.

GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY

Mr. John Yakabuski: I have a question for the Minister of Energy with respect to the Ontario Greenhouse Alliance, and we welcome them to the Legislature today. Minister, I understand that the greenhouse industry has met with successive Ministers of Energy on several occasions to discuss the potential benefits of the Ontario Power Authority's energy programs as they relate to the province's supply requirements and the opportunities for the greenhouse industry to be part of the OPA solution, at the same time providing for the sustainability of the industry. Can the minister provide us with an update on the status of the clean energy standard offer program and its feasibility for the greenhouse industry?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: The member is right: I have met with them. My colleague from Essex is a relentless champion of the greenhouse industry. My wife is from Leamington, so I have a good appreciation of the greenhouse business.

Yes, they have a proposal, to use the language that the member used—the clean energy standard offer program. What that really means is that the industry can produce electricity as part of their heating projects in their greenhouses and sell it into the grid, as we call it—sell electricity to the rest of the people in Ontario. It is a good idea. The OPA, on our behalf, is pursuing that.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Answer?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: My understanding is—and I will give the total answer in a few minutes—that in the week of July 14, they'll release the draft rules, and I'll tell you the rest of the story in the supplementary.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Minister, you acknowledge—and we've talked about it many times—that we've got a supply problem in this province, and much of it is as a result of your government's energy plan. Combined heat and power can be a huge part of that solution, and the greenhouse industry is a very appropriate sector for combined heat and power. Could I ask the minister if he would direct the OPA—because they've had meetings with three successive ministers over three years—to sit down for some meaningful discussions with the greenhouse industry so that they can move on with a standard offer program that is beneficial not only to their industry but to everybody in Ontario who is facing energy shortages as we go into the future?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: I won't let one of the things he said go unchallenged. We'll have more new electricity generation coming online in the next 18 months than at any other period in the history of the province, so I'm happy with that.

Again, as a result of the work of my colleague from Essex and others, the Ontario Power Authority will sit down with the greenhouse industry. As I said, the plan right now is that in the week of July 14, as a result of those discussions, draft rules will be issued. In the week of August 11, the final rules will be issued, and we can get on with this process of signing contracts with our greenhouse partners to produce electricity for the people of Ontario.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Gilles Bisson: My question is to the Minister of Labour. Minister, you'll know that Unilever, down on Lakeshore, about six years ago remorphed itself into a company called Korex. In order for that company to stay open, the new company, Korex, wanted concessions from the workers. The Energy and Paperworkers Union of Canada sat down and negotiated a six-year agreement where they took an 85-cent cut in pay and they froze their salary and their collective agreement for six years in order to save that company.

Today the new owner-operator of Korex is saying that they want to take out of the collective agreement everything but wages and benefits; in other words, all of the seniority rights, all of the grievance procedures and all of the language that the workers have benefited from for many years in that company. My question on behalf of those workers is: What are you going to do to protect those workers' rights?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I thank the member for raising the issue. It would be totally inappropriate for the Minister of Labour to comment specifically about a matter that's going on between an employer and an employee with regard to their collective bargaining agreement.

However, we do have mediators in the Ministry of Labour. I think everybody in this Legislature respects them as being among the best mediators in the country. We're always pleased to place those mediators at the disposal of parties when they're in these kinds of disputes to provide advice and help them reach agreements that they can go forward together with. It's in the interest of everybody if, indeed, the employers and the employees can reach those agreements. If that is not possible, the member would know that the workers and—assuming that they're unionized as well—their unions could—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Of course they're unionized; they're CEP. That was part of the question.

Listen: If the Minister of Labour is not going to protect workers, then who in this province will protect workers? The issue here is, the employer is saying, "I want to gut your collective agreement and take out things that have been given you by right through the Ontario Labour Relations Act." These workers, for years, have done what they've had to do to keep this company afloat. All they get back in exchange is a company that says that they want to gut those rights.

It's bad enough that we're losing jobs at GM and losing jobs across this province. What are you going to do to protect workers who are working today, to make sure we don't have bad bosses who come in and try to take away all of the collective rights that workers have fought for all these years?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I think what the member is asking me to do is intervene in a matter that's before the Ontario Labour Relations Board. I think the member knows full well that it would be completely inappropriate for the Minister of Labour to do that.

What we can do, and what we do do, is assist parties in trying to come together and reach agreement. We certainly have mediators who are available to assist the parties in these matters. Workers have the opportunity to grieve matters when they feel an employer has in some way abrogated their collective bargaining agreement. That's what the Ontario Labour Relations Board is there for. Certainly, in a matter such as this, the Ontario Labour Relations Board would have an opportunity to take the issues that the member has brought up under advisement. Our goal as a government is to provide a climate where parties can, in a balanced way—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. David Zimmer: My question is to the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities. In a changing global economy, knowledge and skills are key to future success.

To compete in the changing global economy, we need to make sure that Ontarians are at their best.

Our primary, secondary and post-secondary educational institutions play a huge role in educating future leaders and innovators. That's why our Ontario government places such high emphasis on education. Post-secondary institutions allow students an opportunity to develop and refine their skills. They offer future leaders the support and guidance they need.

Our Reaching Higher plan was the largest single investment in post-secondary education in 40 years. Minister, what else are you doing to make our post-secondary schools—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister.

Hon. John Milloy: I'd like to applaud the honourable member's support for post-secondary education. As members know, in order to compete globally, not only do we need to invest in post-secondary education and training; we also need to invest in research around international issues.

I was very pleased last week to announce a $25-million investment at the University of Toronto for the new School of International Studies. The new school raises Ontario's profile on the world stage, bringing together the Munk Centre for International Studies and the Canadian International Council, while forging strong ties with the School of Public Policy and Governance and the Rotman School of Management. It will create opportunities for 15 new Ph.D. students this year and 40 masters students over the next two years.

Institutions like this will attract some of the best scholars and ensure Ontario's place as a leading research—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for question period has expired.

PETITIONS

STROKE SURVIVORS

Mr. Gerry Martiniuk: I have a petition signed by 2,649 good residents of Cambridge, presented to me by the Cambridge Stroke Recovery Association and Norma, Rudy and Doug Martin.

"Whereas there is a complete lack of government-funded outpatient therapy for stroke survivors upon discharge from hospital in the city of Cambridge ... ; and

"Whereas, on October 29, 2004, a state-of-the-art government-funded outpatient hospital program, which included therapy programs for stroke survivors discharged from the hospital, was cut by the Cambridge Memorial Hospital due to a lack of provincial funds;

"We, the undersigned stroke survivors, caregivers, family members and friends of stroke survivors in Cambridge ... , draw your attention to the following:

"That the absence of a government-funded outpatient therapy program leaves many stroke survivors who are unable to pay for private therapy with a gap in services. As a result of this lack of therapy, many survivors despair and regress; and

"That therapy is critical to restoring a survivor's ability to function and become rehabilitated and reintegrated in the community, as opposed to being forced to enter a long-term-care facility, thus saving the system money while greatly improving the quality of life for stroke survivors and their families; and

"That resources devoted to fund one in-patient stroke rehabilitation bed could fund a full stroke rehabilitation outpatient team (full-time physiotherapist and occupational therapist and half-time speech-language pathologist and social worker) for one year ("Starting a Revolution in Stroke Rehabilitation");

"Therefore, we request that the Ontario government give priority to restoring a government-funded outpatient therapy program in Cambridge, Ontario, to provide desperately needed rehabilitation for stroke survivors (and others with similar needs) after discharge from hospital."

As I agree with the contents of the petition, I affix my name thereto.

PROTECTION FOR MINERS

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from the people of Naughton and Whitefish.

"Whereas the current legislation contained in the Ontario health and safety act and regulations for mines and mining plants does not adequately protect the lives of miners; we request revisions to the act;

"Lyle Everett Defoe"—a resident of my riding—"and the scoop tram he was operating fell 150 feet down an open stope (July 23, 2007). Lyle was 25 years and 15 days old when he was killed at Xstrata Kidd Creek mine site, Timmins;

"Section R-60 ... states that, 'A shaft, raise or other opening in an underground mine shall be securely fenced, covered or otherwise guarded....' The stope where Lyle was killed was protected by a length of orange plastic snow fence and a rope with a warning sign. These barriers would not have been visible if the bucket of the scoop tram was raised. Lyle's body was recovered from behind the scoop tram."

They ask the Legislative Assembly to enact:

"Concrete berms must be mandatory to protect all open stopes and raises;

"All miners and contractors working underground must have working communication devices and personal locators;

"All equipment involved in injuries and fatalities must be recovered and examined unless such recovery would endanger the lives of others; and

"The entire act must be reviewed and amended to better protect underground workers."

I fully support this petition, will affix my name to it and send it with page Murray.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Pat Hoy: I have a petition signed by persons from Blenheim, Tilbury, Ridgetown, Chatham and many other points within my riding.

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919; and

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability; and

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept; and

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight; and

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I have signed the petition.

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mr. Jim Wilson: "Whereas the legacy of Pope John Paul II reflects his lifelong commitment to international understanding, peace and the defence of equality and human rights;

"Whereas his legacy has an all-embracing meaning that is particularly relevant to Canada's multi-faith and multicultural traditions;

"Whereas, as one of the great spiritual leaders of contemporary times, Pope John Paul II visited Ontario during his pontificate of more than 25 years and, on his visits, was enthusiastically greeted by Ontario's diverse religious and cultural communities;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to grant speedy passage into law of the private member's bill An Act to proclaim Pope John Paul II Day."

I agree with this petition and am signing it.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Bob Delaney: I have a petition to the Ontario Legislative Assembly, and I thank many of the staff at Credit Valley Hospital for having affixed their signatures to it. It reads as follows:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I am pleased to sign and support this petition and to ask page Christopher to carry it for me.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mrs. Christine Elliott: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas we, the undersigned, believe that Ajax-Pickering hospital should have full funding for mental health, including beds; and

"Whereas this would affect the mental health programs and mental health beds at the Ajax-Pickering hospital;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to:

"Fully fund the mental health beds and programs at Ajax-Pickering hospital."

I'm pleased to sign in support.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: This is a new petition for the preservation of Ajax-Pickering hospital.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Rouge Valley Health board reversed the 2006 announcement closing the maternity and pediatric services at the Ajax-Pickering hospital due to an overwhelming public outcry; and

"Whereas the Rouge Valley Health board of directors has recently approved closing the 20-bed mental health unit at the Ajax-Pickering hospital; and

"Whereas there remains further concern by residents for future maternity/pediatric closings, particularly with the new birthing unit at Centenary hospital, which will see 16 new labour, delivery, recovery and postpartum ... birthing rooms and an additional 21 postpartum rooms opening this fall in 2008, even with the Ontario Ministry of Health's largest-ever expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital; and

"Whereas there is a natural boundary, the Rouge Valley, that clearly separates the two distinct areas of Scarborough and Durham region;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Central East Local Health Integration Network ... and the Rouge Valley Health System ... board of directors review the Rouge Valley Health System make-up and group Scarborough Centenary hospital with the three other Scarborough hospitals; and

"Further, that we position Ajax-Pickering hospital within Lakeridge Health, thus combining all of our hospitals in Durham region under one Durham region administration."

I affix my signature to this and will pass it to Dina.

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mrs. Christine Elliott: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas many young people with developmental special needs have no meaningful social, recreational or vocational opportunities after high school; and

"Whereas many of these young people have no real options for living independently in the community; and

"Whereas current supports in place are insufficient to meet the needs of these young people;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the McGuinty government allocate an appropriate level of funding to advance a transformation agenda of individualized funding for adults with developmental special needs in the province of Ontario to allow them to live with dignity and to reach their full potential as members of our communities."

I'm pleased to sign this and give it to page Murray to take to the table.

EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Lou Rinaldi: I have a petition here, and I'll read it.

"Whereas the federal government's employment insurance surplus now stands at $54 billion; and

"Whereas over 75% of Ontario's unemployed are not eligible for employment insurance because of Ottawa's unfair eligibility rules; and

"Whereas an Ontario worker has to work more weeks to qualify and receives fewer weeks of benefits than other Canadian unemployed workers; and

"Whereas the average Ontario unemployed worker gets $4,000 less in EI benefits than unemployed workers in other provinces, thus not qualifying for many retraining programs;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to press the federal government to reform the employment insurance program and to end the discrimination and unfairness towards Ontario's unemployed workers."

I've signed this, and I'll have Christopher from the great riding of Northumberland-Quinte West deliver it to the table.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mrs. Christine Elliott: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, believe that Ajax-Pickering hospital should have full funding for mental health, including beds; and

"Whereas this would affect the mental health programs and mental health beds at the Ajax-Pickering hospital;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, respectfully petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to:

"Fully fund the mental health beds and programs at Ajax-Pickering hospital."

I'm pleased to sign this in support.

GRAFFITI

Ms. Laurel C. Broten: "To the Legislature of Ontario:

"Whereas graffiti creates a nuisance that can adversely affect property values, business opportunities and the enjoyment of community life; and

"Whereas graffiti promotes a sense of disrespect for private property and a perception that laws protecting public and private property can be disregarded with impunity; and

"Whereas it is important that everyone do their part in keeping both public and private properties free of graffiti in order to maintain community pride and confidence; and

"Whereas the quick removal of graffiti from walls, fences and other structures is critical to maintaining community cleanliness and beauty; it is always true that the prevention is the best policy;

"Accordingly, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislature:

"To impose certain conditions on the sale of spray paint, broad-tipped marker pens, paint pens, glass-cutting tools and glass-etching tools or instruments of graffiti and to make it be unlawful for any person, other than a parent, legal guardian, school teacher or law enforcement officer in the performance of duty, to sell, exchange, give, deliver, loan, or otherwise furnish or permit to be sold, exchanged, given, delivered or loaned any prohibited graffiti material to any minor unless the minor is accompanied by their parent or legal guardian."

SERVICES FOR THE DEVELOPMENTALLY DISABLED

Mrs. Christine Elliott: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas many young people with developmental special needs have no meaningful social, recreational or vocational opportunities after high school; and

"Whereas many of these young people have no real options for living independently in the community; and

"Whereas current supports in place are insufficient to meet the needs of these young people;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the McGuinty government allocate an appropriate level of funding to advance a transformation agenda of individualized funding for adults with developmental special needs in the province of Ontario to allow them to live with dignity and to reach their full potential as members of our communities."

I'm pleased to sign this in support.

HIGHWAY 138

Mr. Jim Brownell: I have a petition from a number of constituents from Stormont-Dundas-South Glengarry, and it reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas provincial Highway 138 is one of the province's only two-lane roadways within the region and provides the main connection from the international bridge at Cornwall through Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry to Highway 401 and Highway 417; speed and traffic volumes are of particular concern and may have been contributing factors in numerous collisions and fatalities;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To urgently consider measures that will address the serious public safety and traffic hazard concerns on provincial Highway 138."

I shall affix my signature and send this to the clerks' table.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network ... board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan ... ; and

"Whereas, despite the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government, this plan now calls for the ill-advised transfer of 20 mental health unit beds from Ajax-Pickering hospital to the Centenary Health Centre in Scarborough; and

"Whereas one of the factors for the successful treatment of patients in the mental health unit is support from family and friends, and the distance to Centenary Health Centre would negatively impact on the quality of care for residents of Ajax and Pickering; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service to our Ajax-Pickering hospital, which now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain the badly needed 20-bed mental health unit."

I affix my signature to that and pass it to Brianne.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The time for petitions has ended. This House stands recessed until 1 p.m. this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1205 to 1300.

ONTARIO FARMERS

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: For many farmers, on-farm sales are an important source of additional income. For many families, stopping at a farm to purchase newly picked Ontario corn, strawberries, tomatoes or other produce is a summer tradition. People watch for road signs to know when crops are ready and where they are available for sale. But in Dalton McGuinty's Ontario, this simple tradition is being threatened.

Many farms aren't located on the well-travelled provincial highways; they're on country side roads. Customers and farmers rely on directional signs to help people find the farms where produce is being sold. But for farmers like Charles Emre, an asparagus farmer in Norfolk, having that sign has become a battle.

This spring, Charles posted his sign, with permission, on private property along Highway 24. Soon afterwards, the owner of the land received a threatening letter from MTO telling them to take it down. Charles estimated that his sales dropped by 50% without the sign. The story appeared in newspapers across Ontario. Since then, MTO agreed to ignore the sign for the rest of the harvest.

We want our Ontario farmers to succeed. We want people to Buy Ontario, but the ministry's action had the exact opposite effect. Farmers shouldn't have to go through this. That's why, later today, I will be introducing a bill that will allow farmers to post seasonal directional signage along provincial highways, so that farmers like Charles can stop dealing with red tape and get back to dealing with asparagus, potatoes and all the people who will once again follow the signs to Ontario's freshest produce.

STILT WALK CHALLENGE

Mr. Dave Levac: I would like to recognize six exceptional students of North Park Collegiate's leadership class in Brantford, organizers of the recent stilt walk challenge—Sam Brandow, Kristie Wilhelm, Brittany Baker, Kylee Wilson-Powell, Deanna Murray and Meaghen Rollins—and congratulate them for organizing the event and motivating the participants to come out and beat the Guinness world record for the most people simultaneously walking on stilts.

In the summer of 2007, Doug Hunt—"Doug the Great," as he's known—director of marketing, fundraising and volunteers of Participation House Brantford and world record holder himself for walking on the tallest stilts in the world, approached teacher Ted Thomas of the leadership class to join him in attempting his third time to break the stilt-walking record. Mr. Thomas agreed, and on May 15, 625 participants from North Park Collegiate in Brantford, Paris District High School of Paris and residents of Brant county taped themselves to stilts and walked 100 metres down the North Park track, more than the previous Guinness record held by Cirque du Soleil and unofficially beating the Japanese record.

Proceeds are still coming in on a daily basis from this successful fundraiser, which benefits Participation House Brantford, a not-for-profit organization that serves adults between the ages of 16 and 65 with physical disabilities in Brant county.

I extend my heartfelt appreciation for the great efforts of the organizers, especially the students, and the participants of the stilt walk challenge who made this possible, and thank them for bringing Brantford recognition on the world Guinness map.

TOURISM

Ms. Laurie Scott: I rise this afternoon to recognize the resorts, lodges and tourism operators of Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock and their tremendous efforts to provide jobs and promote Ontario—no thanks to Dalton McGuinty, who is in California, possibly at an off-site movie studio with the Governor filming True Lies, part two.

Unfortunately, our dedicated tourism operators are being left to go it on their own, and they are doing a tremendous job, despite tough economic times and predictions for a soft season. Resorts Ontario tells us that the number of employee hours worked to date is down 24% from last year. That means lost jobs.

Tourism businesses and employees are looking for a show of faith from the Liberal government. What they are being given is a do-nothing strategy from the Minister of Tourism.

The PC caucus proposed a strategy to save Ontario families some of their hard-earned money by eliminating the retail sales tax for the summer on tourism operations and attractions.

The Ontario Tourism Industry Association understands the urgency. The Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association supports our plan, Attractions Ontario supports our plan, and many others do also. Despite the support from all across Ontario, Mr. Fonseca has told vacationing families that he has no intention to save them money, even as he sits high atop the huge piles of tax he collects from the tourism operators. The challenges of our economy are real and the signs are clear, yet the Premier and his do-nothing-strategy colleagues have their heads buried deep in the sand over there.

Once again, instead of leadership and a willingness to work hard, this Liberal government is doing nothing other than hoping all the bad stuff will go away. It's time to help tourism in the province of Ontario. The time is now.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I'd just ask the honourable member to withdraw the comment she made regarding the movie.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'll withdraw at your request, but it's a title of a movie.

ERAMOSKA KARST

Mr. Paul Miller: This morning, I asked a question of the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal about the Eramosa karst feeder lands, which he clearly tried to avoid and deflect by confusing these lands with the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area. The minister knows that the people of Hamilton are clear that this government is not meeting their wishes to keep the feeder lands in public hands.

On my tour of the feeder lands last Friday, I saw the results of development where a berm had been installed. The water flow had been completely dried up and the area had become a dump for all sorts of garbage. This is the fate facing the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area if any development is permitted on the feeder lands, and this government knows it.

This government not only refuses to answer the questions in the Legislature, but it seems focused only on trying to confuse issues, blame the opposition parties and ignore the real issue. The government's own greenbelt plan gives permanent protection to the natural heritage and water resource systems that sustain ecological and human health. The preservation of the feeder lands would do exactly that: It would preserve the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area.

The official opening of the Eramosa Karst Conservation Area is this Friday, which will be a short-lived celebration, as the development of the feeder lands would stop the water flow, causing a death sentence for the karst. Let me be very clear: The feeder lands need to be preserved in their natural state. That means no development of the Eramosa karst feeder lands.

TOWNSHIP OF WILMOT

Ms. Leeanna Pendergast: I had the opportunity this past weekend to be part of a history-making day, attending the grand opening of the Wilmot Recreation Complex in the town of New Hamburg in my riding of Kitchener-Conestoga. The township of Wilmot, under the leadership of its mayor, Wayne Roth, welcomed the community to share in a day of live music, ice skating, in-line and roller skating and an all-day free barbecue.

Many other mayors, including Carl Zehr of Kitchener, Bill Strauss of Woolwich and Ross Kelterborn of Wellesley, joined us, as well as some Wilmot councillors: Les Armstrong, Elliot Fung, Terry Broda and Peter

Roe. Once again, a thank you to the Honourable Jim Watson, the former Minister of Health Promotion, who had the foresight to commit the $4 million to this project.

As a complement to my "Eat Local: Live Fresh" resolution, Wilmot township, through Wilmot Healthy Communities, is celebrating Living Well Week from June 20 to June 27 at the Wilmot Recreation Complex. This is a partnership with local schools, businesses and churches, including Waterloo-Oxford District Secondary School, Waterloo Regional Police Service and the Wilmot Family Resource Centre. We invite everyone to come and join us in growing a healthy community by eating and living local in Wilmot township.

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: I've come across a poem written by Ginty McDalton. It's Reflections on a Session.

The session is over and what have we done?

We've banned everything under the sun.

Now you don't need to think; simply obey.

We'll run your lives for you, the Liberal way.

Science and prayers and trans fats—banned.

Don't mind bigger issues at hand,

Like C. difficile or native affairs;

Those will take care of themselves, I swear.

All session long, there's been too much complaining

About the very few well-paying jobs we're retaining.

This too shall pass, auto sector aside,

So steel yourselves for the Liberal slide.

And wait till you hear of the new plans we've hatched:

More cash for our friends, no strings attached.

We'll never cut taxes; we need them too much

For gifts and for votes and for slush funds and such.

Democracy: It's much overrated,

So we've changed the hours, and boy, did they hate it.

How dare they ask their insolent questions?

How dare they bore us with their suggestions?

For we are the Liberals, Ontario's elite;

We like our sessions short and sweet.

We're in control and we like it that way;

We might crown McGuinty king one day.

Oh, what a session, it was so entertaining.

Despite all the bungles that needed explaining,

Despite the closures and infectious disease,

Despite all that, it was really a breeze.

Many have lost, many lives in dismay.

To these whiners and losers and skeptics, I say:

Be happy; don't be a doubting Thomas;

Things will get better, somehow, I promise.

STUDENT LITERACY

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: I rise in the House today, oddly enough, to highlight the Ontario secondary school literacy test scores that were recently released. Literacy tests are especially important because strong literacy skills form a strong foundation for future learning and development.

Overall, the test scores showed an 84% success rate, which is up from 72% in 2002. That's a 12% increase. That means that almost 25,000 more students passed the test. One must bear in mind that 10,000 more students wrote the test than did in 2002.

I was especially pleased to hear that the Halton District School Board and the Halton Catholic District School Board both scored exceptionally well, with 90% and 92% success rates respectively.

While keeping in mind that test scores are only one measure of success, I congratulate the students, the teachers, the principals, the parents and the support workers who have all worked together to achieve these great results.

While this government proudly acknowledges this success, we know that this is not a time to rest on our laurels. We know that many students still face challenges, both inside and outside the classroom. With this in mind, we will continue to work with our partners in the education system to ensure that every student in every school is given the tools they need to achieve success.

TRILLIUM BOOK AWARD

Mr. David Zimmer: Last week, the Minister of Culture, along with Kevin Shea, chair of the Ontario Media Development Corp., announced the winners of the Trillium Book Award.

Established in 1987, the Trillium Book Award is Ontario's leading award for literature, recognizing literary excellence and celebrating creativity. The Trillium Book Award also promotes Ontario writers and their works.

Barbara Gowdy received the English-language book award for her book Helpless. The French-language book award went to L'oeil de la lumière by Pierre Raphaël Pelletier. The English-language poetry award went to Human Resources by Rachel Zolf, and Tina Charlebois was recognized for her French-language work entitled Poils lisses.

These award winners join the exceptional company of past Trillium Book Award winners, including Margaret Atwood, Michael Ondaatje and Timothy Findley.

I wish to congratulate our winners and the finalists for inspiring all Ontario writers and for providing Ontarians with wonderful and compelling pieces of literature.

GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY

Mr. Bruce Crozier: I would like to welcome members of the Ontario Greenhouse Alliance who are visiting us in the Legislature today, some of whom are in the members' gallery.

Formed in 2003, the alliance represents the largest cluster of greenhouse production in North America, and it's located right here in Ontario.

The greenhouse industry contributes $4 billion per year to our province's economy. In Ontario, there are over 1,200 greenhouse operations, most of which are concentrated in and around the ridings of Essex, Chatham-Kent-Essex and the Niagara region.

Greenhouse operations in Ontario employ more than 19,000 people, with over $2 billion in structures. At the current rate of expansion, the industry is targeting a further investment in rural Ontario of some $20 million per annum, bringing substantial benefit to rural economies.

Again, I welcome the Ontario Greenhouse Alliance to Queen's Park today. I encourage all members to stop by the legislative dining room this afternoon to meet some of their members and, of course, to pick up a sample of their beautiful plants and delicious vegetables, grown right here in Ontario, in our backyard.

REPORT, INTEGRITY COMMISSIONER

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I beg to inform the House that on June 13, 2008, the report of the Integrity Commissioner concerning her review of expense claims under the Cabinet Ministers' and Opposition Leaders' Expenses Review and Accountability Act, 2002, for the period April 1, 2007 to March 31, 2008, was tabled.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON JUSTICE POLICY

Mr. David Zimmer: I beg leave to present a report from the Standing Committee on Justice Policy and move its adoption.

The Clerk-at-the-Table (Ms. Lisa Freedman): Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill 41, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act in relation to the use of speed-limiting systems in commercial motor vehicles / Projet de loi 41, Loi modifiant le Code de la route relativement à l'utilisation de systèmes limiteurs de vitesse dans les véhicules utilitaires.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Shall the report be received and adopted?

All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it. The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

Report adopted.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mrs. Julia Munro: I beg leave to present a report on agencies, boards and commissions: Health Professionals Appeal and Review Board, from the Standing Committee on Government Agencies, and move the adoption of its recommendations.

Report adopted.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Does the member wish to make a brief statement?

Mrs. Julia Munro: As Chair of the Standing Committee on Government Agencies, it is my privilege to table the report of the committee. The report I am tabling today covers work undertaken and completed by the committee in the last Parliament prior to the calling of October's provincial election.

The committee undertakes reviews from time to time of the operation of selected boards, agencies and commissions of the province. This report of the committee reviews and commends the work of the Health Professionals Appeal and Review Board and makes recommendations on how they may improve some of their approaches and procedures.

We express our appreciation to all the witnesses who appeared before us during the public hearings on this agency. The committee was ably assisted by its staff in the last Parliament: Tonia Grannum, the clerk of the committee, and Carrie Hull and Larry Johnston, the research officers. I move adjournment of the debate.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Debate adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

INCREASING ACCESS TO QUALIFIED HEALTH PROFESSIONALS FOR ONTARIANS ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 VISANT À ACCROÎTRE L'ACCÈS DES ONTARIENNES ET DES ONTARIENS AUX PROFESSIONNELS DE LA SANTÉ QUALIFIÉS

Mr. Smitherman moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 97, An Act to increase access to qualified health professionals for all Ontarians by amending the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991 / Projet de loi 97, Loi visant à accroître l'accès des Ontariennes et des Ontariens aux professionnels de la santé qualifiés en modifiant la Loi de 1991 sur les professions de la santé réglementées.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The minister for a short statement.

Hon. George Smitherman: I'll save my time for ministerial statements.

SIGNAGE TO PROMOTE ONTARIO GROWN AGRICULTURAL FOOD PRODUCTS ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR L'AFFICHAGE VISANT À PROMOUVOIR LES PRODUITS AGROALIMENTAIRES CULTIVÉS EN ONTARIO

Mr. Hardeman moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 98, An Act to promote the sale of Ontario grown agricultural food products by amending the Municipal Act, 2001 and the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act / Projet de loi 98, Loi visant à promouvoir la vente de produits agroalimentaires cultivés en Ontario en modifiant la Loi de 2001 sur les municipalités et la Loi sur l'aménagement des voies publiques et des transports en commun.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The member for a short statement.

Mr. Ernie Hardeman: Many farmers who offer fresh Ontario-grown produce from their farm are located on country side roads. If passed, this act would allow farmers to post seasonal directional signage on private property adjacent to a provincial highway to bring people to the farm. The exemption would only apply to signs owned by farmers who are selling their own fresh produce and Ontario-grown food products.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

FOREIGN-TRAINED DOCTORS

Hon. George Smitherman: It is with great pride that I rise in this House today to introduce the latest significant step our government is taking to improve access to health care for the people of this province: a new piece of legislation, the Increasing Access to Qualified Health Professionals for Ontarians Act, 2008.

Regulatory health colleges have been instrumental in protecting the public interest by ensuring the safe practice of health providers. If passed, today's legislation broadens their mandate to help ensure that the concept of all Ontarians having access to family health care is part of this public interest. Today, our government is challenging our partners, the regulatory colleges, to take on this new responsibility of helping qualified internationally trained health professionals enter our health care system.

This builds on a solid foundation of work that we have done in Ontario these past four and a half years. When our government came to office in 2003, one of the first things we did was increase the number of residency positions so that more international medical graduates could get the training they needed so that their skills would be best put to use on behalf of Ontarians. As a result of our efforts, there are currently 630 additional international medical graduates now in residency training in the province of Ontario. These are in addition to 135 international medical graduates who recently finished and are moving to practise in communities across the province.

But barriers remain. When our government was honoured by the people of Ontario with a second mandate, we set about tackling this issue with renewed vigour. Today's legislation and complementary regulatory changes signal our next major steps in breaking down these barriers.

I asked Etobicoke–Lakeshore MPP Laurel Broten, my parliamentary assistant, to focus her energy, her heart and her soul on the steps that we can take to further reduce barriers for international medical graduates so Ontario patients can have timely access to the care they need. She produced a report that is courageous and ambitious and one I encourage all my colleagues to read. It's a report that champions the idea that we must be relentless in pushing aside barriers that separate Ontarians from the caregivers they need. Her recommendations break down into five initiatives we can undertake in partnership with the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario over the coming months. These include regulatory changes that are complementary to today's legislation.

First, she wants us to enhance our ability to safely and appropriately allow qualified internationally trained doctors who come to Ontario to begin practising immediately. These are doctors who have trained and worked in a country where the medical education and health care system is similar to Ontario's. With this change, they will no longer be forced to be retrained; instead, they go direct to practice.

Second is the creation of new classes of licences, such as transitional licences, which recognize that many doctors can come here and begin practice with some limited supervision, or a restricted licence for doctors whose practice is limited to their highly specialized training, such as a neonatologist.

Third, we need to offer more timely and improved assessments to help internationally trained doctors determine where they fit best.

Fourth: expanded access to programs that help doctors training in other systems to bridge the cultural and language gaps through education, mentorship and hands-on training.

Fifth, in those cases where an international medical graduate is not likely to achieve success as a doctor, we have an obligation to be honest about it and to quickly work with that individual to transition him or her to alternate roles in our health care system, such as the new role of physician assistant.

Ms. Broten's report is an excellent one, and it has informed the legislation I am introducing today, as well as being the foundation for the regulatory changes we will be developing with the College of Physicians and Surgeons over the summer.

Let me say that patient safety is at the heart of this legislation and at the heart of everything we do in health care. None of the changes we are proposing will result in shortcuts to practice of any kind. Rather, they will improve access for Ontarians to doctors who want to practise medicine and who are qualified to practise medicine. And that is the name of the game.

About 400,000 Ontarians are actively in search of family health care. We've made great progress since taking office, but ours is not a government that rests on past achievements. We know that there are many qualified, competent and safe international medical doctors who have chosen to come to Ontario and others who will follow. We know we need them. This legislation, if passed, will help us, it will help them and, more importantly, it will help Ontario's patients.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Statements by ministries? Responses?

FOREIGN-TRAINED DOCTORS

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: What a disappointment. I think we can now acknowledge, as we did in question period this morning, that this government is devoid of taking any action whatsoever. What they have simply done here is tried to make it look like they're going to take steps to help foreign-trained doctors move forward into practice. This says nothing more than, "We are going to mandate that we're changing the responsibility of colleges in the province of Ontario, and if we don't get the right number of qualified health professionals, it's their fault"—a total abdication on the part of this government, just like they assumed no responsibility for the economic loss of jobs in this province or for C. difficile. It's unbelievable. So they say, "It is now up to you, colleges. We can't do what we said we would do."

There were a million people without a family doctor in 2003. There are still more than a million people without a family doctor today. In fact, I would also say to you that the number of communities that are designated as underserved has increased by 16%, from 122 to 142, and the number of people taking new patients has also decreased. We still continue to lose doctors in this province to other provinces—which never happened before; it shows you how bad things are under this Liberal government—and we're losing 30% of new medical school graduates within two years of their complete training.

Basically this government has said, "You know what? We have no plan for health care. We can't develop a human resources plan as we had said needs to happen." We need to take a look at our population, we need to take a look at what the needs will be, and we need to determine the appropriate number of health providers that are necessary. They've thrown up their hands and said, "We've had five years. We can't do it. I'm sorry; we can't do it. But do you know what? We're now going to make the colleges responsible. It's their duty." In fact, I'll tell you that this legislation says nothing more than that: "It is the duty of the college now to make sure that people have access to adequate numbers of qualified, skilled and competent regulated health professionals." Talk about shirking your responsibility.

That goes back to Ms. Broten's report, and I would beg to differ with the minister. It is nothing but sheer rhetoric. There is very little in the way of any fact contained within her report. In fact, I would say to you that there are no factual recommendations to even support her recommendations. We don't know whom she consulted with. I wonder if she even talked to the colleges. It might be interesting to phone the colleges up and see if there's been any consultation with them regarding either Ms. Broten's report or this one sentence—I guess this is legislation—simply saying, "Folks, do you know what? We give up. We acknowledge that we can't provide for the people in this province the appropriate numbers of health professionals. In fact, we don't even know how many people are going to need a nurse or where they're going to need a nurse. We don't know how many people might need a chiropractor or a pharmacist. We give up."

It's like C. difficile last week and for the month before that: "It's not our problem. That's a problem of the hospitals." Other ministers in Quebec, Northern Ireland—and we're continuing to see examples around the world—have had health ministers who said: "This is a serious problem. I assume the responsibility. I'm going to put in place a co-ordinated plan in order that there are no further outbreaks of C. difficile in Ontario." Not this minister, not this government. They don't want to be accountable to people in the province of Ontario and they accept no responsibility for any problems.

It is very disappointing that these individuals are in charge, because we're not going to see any improvements when it comes to the number of doctors or nurses. And if the improvements don't happen to work out, they will blame the colleges. First the hospitals, now the colleges: Who's next?

FOREIGN-TRAINED DOCTORS

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Access to effective primary care is a major issue for Ontario. There are roughly 850,000 Ontarians without a family physician; wait times in the average Ontario emergency room are over three hours and can be up to 7.5 hours; and we are short about 2,000 physicians and 9,000 nurses province-wide. This is simply unacceptable. Spending on health care is increasing every year, but somehow the lineups for care and the poor quality of care continue.

This bill is about making it easier for foreign-trained physicians to practise in Ontario. On the surface, it seems like something good, something we should support. I certainly have had the pleasure to work with many dedicated, competent, hard-working physicians, and I know that Ontario needs more. The question, though, is this: Is this going to significantly improve access to quality primary care in Ontario, or is this simply chipping away at the edges? More importantly, is the supply of physicians the only problem?

As a headline in last weekend's Toronto Star stated, "Nursing Crisis Worse Than Ever: Huge Shortage Has Seen Overtime Hours Soar, Many Burning out or Fleeing the Profession."

Michael Rachlis, an expert in health care in Canada, was recently quoted as saying, "Even if the number of physicians doubled, unless we were to change the structure in which they work, Canadians would still have inadequate access." We're talking about doubling what we already have, something that this bill—

Mr. Ted Arnott: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Premier is making a number of objectionable comments. Would you ask him to—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Stop the clock, please. I would just remind the Minister of Health and the member from Kitchener-Waterloo that if there's discussion that they want to have, there are chambers on either side. Please have the discussion there and not across the floor.

The member for Nickel Belt.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: As I was saying, even if the number of physicians in Ontario was to double, unless we change the structure in which they work, Ontarians would still have problems of access.

For example, the minister's much-lauded family health team, which he touted as being a model of interdisciplinary practice, in fact is overwhelmingly comprised of physicians as opposed to a balance with other health professionals. There are roughly eight physicians for every nurse practitioner; 18 physicians for every one dietitian. Basically, there are 72 dietitians in the whole system, which leaves at least 70-some family health teams with none. There are 366 physicians for every chiropodist, which means that we have all of four chiropodists working in family health teams right now. That's 146 family health teams with none at all—not much of a team there.

It is interesting to note that other provinces, such as Saskatchewan, have fewer doctors per capita, yet despite being less wealthy and more rural, people in Saskatchewan have better and more immediate access to care. The problem is how physicians and other health care professionals are deployed—or, should I say, not deployed.

Why isn't the government moving more quickly to increase the scope of practice and responsibility of other professionals such as nurses? Why isn't the government moving more quickly to replace fee-for-service payments with other forms of remuneration for physicians, such as salaries? The vast majority of physicians in Ontario are still paid by fee-for-service.

Let's discuss increases to the supply of physicians like this bill is trying to do, but let's not pretend that this alone will solve the problem of lack of access to health care or radically improve the quality of care or ensure the financial sustainability of our health care system. It won't do this. If we are serious about improving quality of care and access to care and affordability of care, we need to radically increase the supply of other health care professionals: nurse practitioners, health promoters, community developers, social workers and midwives.

Why are we making such slow progress building new community health centres, an NDP innovation that provides the gold standard in primary health care? Why are we so far behind Quebec, which, for a long time, has had a comprehensive network of community health centres? There's no plan in Ontario to have a network of community health centres.

Why are we falling behind provinces such as Saskatchewan in implementing electronic health records, which can greatly improve efficiency of management, cutting wait times for access to physicians and other providers?

Why don't we have a high-level government committee assessing the health impacts of our social and economic strategies, like they do in Saskatchewan, so that you look at the determinants of health?

We look forward to discussing this bill, but we currently have doubts that it will do much to secure an accessible, high-quality, financially sustainable health care system in Ontario. Much more needs to be done.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT (SPEED-LIMITING SYSTEMS), 2008

LOI DE 2008 MODIFIANT LE CODE DE LA ROUTE (SYSTÈMES LIMITEURS DE VITESSE)

Mr. Bradley moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 41, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act in relation to the use of speed-limiting systems in commercial motor vehicles / Projet de loi 41, Loi modifiant le Code de la route relativement à l'utilisation de systèmes limiteurs de vitesse dans les véhicules utilitaires.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Mr. Bradley.

Hon. James J. Bradley: I rise in the House today to urge passage of an important piece of legislation that, if enacted, will help protect our environment and improve road safety. I'll be sharing the time I have to speak to you with my parliamentary assistant, Mike Brown, the member for Algoma-Manitoulin.

At the beginning, I want to commend the members of the Legislature who participated in the debate at second reading, and in particular, those who participated during the committee process: first of all, the hearings that were held; and secondly, the deliberations that took place in clause-by-clause study. I thought that all members of the committee offered some very thoughtful comments, and some excellent amendments were offered. I was so very tempted to receive, accept and implement amendments; I had information provided to me that, in fact, the bill itself incorporated what the members actually wanted to do. But I want to thank them very much for their thoughts and for putting forward amendments. What it really means is that the members—particularly the opposition, in this case—have given considerable thought to this bill.

By the way, this is an important bill of this House. Whatever passes in this House is a bill that is the work of all members of the Legislative Assembly, particularly those who are working in committees. I want to give no suggestion to the House that this is anything other than a bill that all members can take credit for at the appropriate time. In fact, there are members who have offered some very good suggestions and who have engendered some excellent debate about the bill, because no piece of legislation is completely perfect. We really appreciated the suggestions that were made by all members of the committee and of the House.

As members would know, the proposed legislation will cap the speed of large trucks built after 1995 at 105 kilometres per hour. Ontario is a leader in road safety, and we're always looking for ways to make our highways even safer. This legislation presents us with a key opportunity to improve road safety for our families, while at the same time helping to protect our environment, so that our children and grandchildren can enjoy a cleaner and greener future. Cutting emissions from large trucks can only help our environment.

The reality is that over one third of Ontario's greenhouse gas emissions come from the transportation sector, and 84% of this comes from road transportation. This is why speed limiters are so important to all Ontarians, not only to those who share the road with large trucks.

Speed-limiter technology will enable our government to make a significant contribution to the fight against climate change. We will work closely with the province of Quebec to harmonize our respective programs and our implementation. We need to move promptly if we are to reap the full environmental benefits of speed limiters. A Transport Canada study estimated that for every year that speed limiters are in place, we will be preventing about 280,000 tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions from being released into our air. That is nearly 800 tonnes a day. Our government takes climate change very seriously. We cannot stand by. We must take action now.

We're not the only jurisdiction to see the benefit of speed limiters. Quebec, for one, has been very supportive of mandating speed limiters and announced it as part of their green plan in June 2006. Ontario is committed to working with the province of Quebec and the trucking industry to establish reasonable and effective implementation timelines for speed limiters.

If passed, this legislation would also include an educational enforcement period to help get drivers, owner-operators and trucking companies prepared for full implementation.

I want you all to know that we have listened to the concerns of Ontarians, including members of the trucking industry, about speed limiters. Some individuals have wondered why speed limiters are necessary, why we are bothering to implement speed limiters when, by law, trucks should never be exceeding 100 kilometres per hour. Our response to that question is straightforward: Not only do speed limiters help our environment, but they are also an enforcement tool that will keep trucks travelling safely so that police can focus on other traffic-related priorities.

Others have expressed the concern that speed limiters will be prohibitively expensive for truckers. The reality is that most trucks built in the last decade already come equipped with this technology. This legislation would require that these devices be activated on Ontario roads. Activating a speed limiter costs about $100.

Operators can save money. In a recent Transport Canada report it says that the Ontario trucking industry will save about 100 million litres of diesel and $144 million annually. Also, it has been estimated that speed limiters will reduce the wear and tear on trucks, reducing maintenance costs.

This legislation is fair because it treats all truck drivers and companies the same while driving in Ontario. At the same time, it is flexible. With today's technology, operators will also have the option of investing in devices that will allow drivers to switch speed limiters on and off when in jurisdictions with higher speed limits.

Excessive speed is a factor in nearly 23% of crashes involving large vehicles. We anticipate that speed limiters will improve the situation by capping the top speed of large trucks.

The Ontario Trucking Association has stated that more than 50% of Ontario's trucks are already voluntarily using speed limiters, and recent studies tell us that about 75% of all US trucks are already operating with activated speed limiters. This shows that the vast majority of truck operators realize that these devices help improve a truck's fuel economy, reduce greenhouse gas emissions and lower maintenance costs.

The time to act is clearly now. Not only would we enjoy cleaner air, but limiting truck speeds would also make our highways safer for everyone who shares the road, all of which contributes to a higher quality of life for all Ontarians.

I know that all members of this House support measures that would protect the lives of Ontarians. The proposed legislation is exactly that kind of measure. This legislation, if passed, would help save lives. We are serious about improving our environment and we are committed to improving road safety.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I rise in the House today to continue this discussion on important new legislation that, if passed, will help protect the environment and improve road safety for all Ontarians.

I'm sure that most of us have experienced a speeding truck on our highways. Not only can this be dangerous, but because of its excessive speed, the truck is also burning excessive amounts of fuel. This government has heard public concerns about speeding trucks on our highways that pollute our environment and create unnecessary risk for others. The proposed legislation, if passed, would make the use of speed limiters on large trucks mandatory. This built-in electronic device would cap the speed of trucks at 105 kilometres per hour.

Today our government is building on five years of action with an ambitious plan to reduce the amount of emissions produced by our transportation industry. With speed limiters, we are proposing a new way for Ontario to achieve the goals set out in our Go Green action plan on climate change by cutting fossil fuel consumption and greenhouse gas emissions. Under this plan, our government has set out a number of achievable targets to reduce Ontario's greenhouse gas emissions: 6% below 1990 levels by 2014, 15% by the year 2020, and 80% below 1990 levels by the year 2050.

Our government already has a number of important initiatives underway to help us reach these goals: the green commercial vehicle project, a four-year, $15-million pilot project to help businesses switch to cleaner technologies such as hybrid power; the high-occupancy-vehicle-lanes project, our long-term plan to encourage more people to carpool and to use public transit; and Move Ontario 2020, a $17.5-billion plan to build more than 900 kilometres of rapid transit in the greater Toronto area and Hamilton.

If passed, speed limiters would save the trucking industry an estimated 100 million litres of diesel fuel annually. As Minister Bradley pointed out earlier, these fuel savings could reduce annual greenhouse gas emissions by about 280,000 tonnes annually. This is the equivalent of taking 2,700 trucks off the road each year. In terms of reaching our climate change goals, speed limiters alone could deliver between 1% and 3% of the total emission reductions needed to meet our 2014 target. We are definitely on the right track here.

Ontario's roads continue to rank among the safest in North America. In fact, according to our latest statistics, we have broken our own road safety record for three years running. Improving safety on our roads is a paramount concern of this government and it is a key objective of this legislation.

Studies show that speed has a direct relationship with the severity of injuries in a crash. Reducing the speed of a large truck will greatly reduce its impact in a collision. In fact, excessive speed is a factor in nearly 23% of all crashes involving large vehicles. We anticipate that speed limiters will help reduce collisions.

In putting forward this legislation, we have received support from a number of environmental protection and health advocates, such as the Lung Association and Pollution Probe; our many road safety partners, such as the Ontario Safety League and the Insurance Bureau of Canada; and finally from our industry stakeholders, such as the Ontario Trucking Association and the Canadian Trucking Association. I am also pleased to say that a number of small companies have stepped forward to support speed limiters. In fact, some have told us that, as small companies, they are already seeing a reduction in operating costs.

The American Trucking Association has also applauded speed limiters as an example of Ontario's leadership in road safety. As Minister Bradley noted earlier, about 75% of US trucks already use speed limiters. The majority of this industry realizes that the use of speed limiters would increase a truck's fuel economy, reduce greenhouse gas emissions and lower maintenance costs.

We are committed to continue working with our stakeholders and our colleagues in other jurisdictions as we move forward. The McGuinty government is serious about improving our environment, and we are committed to improving road safety. Let's tackle these issues together. Today the McGuinty government is asking for the support of our colleagues in this House to reap these environmental and safety benefits for Ontario families.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments? Further debate?

Mr. Frank Klees: Third reading of this bill, and we have, indeed, spent considerable time—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Order. That's fine. The member can continue.

Mr. Frank Klees: If the member would like to do questions and comments, I'm happy to give him that opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments time has passed. The member has the floor. Please continue.

Mr. Frank Klees: With regard to Bill 41, the minister referred to his willingness—in spirit, I suppose—to accept amendments. I had advised him that we would be proposing amendments, which we did during committee—a fair number of them. I felt that all of them were consistent with the reasoning of his government with regard to implementing speed limiters.

Right off the top, I proposed that if his government is basing its rationale on the safety issue, that by putting speed limiters into trucks and by limiting their speed we would improve road safety, then those speed limiters should be installed in all vehicles on the road. Something does not quite figure in the government's rationale, and I'm going to try to bring the public along as we go through this reasoning.

As the minister and the parliamentary assistant indicated, what Bill 41 will do is make it mandatory for all trucks to have a speed limiter—essentially a governor, as we would know it—that would limit the speed on all of those heavy trucks to 105 kilometres per hour. What is very interesting about that is that that speed limit is already five kilometres over the 100 kilometre-per-hour speed limit that we have on most of our major highways—certainly the 400 series of highways. If we have a speed limit of 100 kilometres per hour, and if, as the government argues, speed is a major factor in collisions, then my question to the minister would be: Why would we not limit the speed of these trucks to 100 kilometres per hour, which is the speed limit?

The next question I have for the minister is: What about those roads where the speed limit is 80 kilometres per hour? Are we not concerned about safety on those roads, or on some of the city streets that we have, where the speed limit is even less than 80 kilometres per hour? Are we not concerned about that? The minister will argue that we will presume, of course, on the responsible driving habits of the truckers to stay within those speed limits, but we can't trust them on the 400 series of highways. That's where we have to put the speed limiters in place, and that's where government takes over in terms of mandating and making it a requirement to put in those speed limiters. What is interesting is that the vast majority of collisions involving trucks don't happen on the 400 series of highways; they actually happen on roads where the speed limit is below 90 kilometres per hour. Interesting.

So when you look at the government's rationale for this legislation, it sounds good. There isn't anyone in this House or anyone observing this debate who will argue that government shouldn't do whatever it can to improve road safety. There wasn't a member in the committee who challenged that. The point that I was trying to make, and that many members of our caucus have been trying to make with the government, is that if we are concerned about road safety, then let's look at the big picture and let's start with enforcing the speed limiters that we already have in place in this province, called speed limits. Let's enforce that. Let's get the message out, not only to trucking companies and truck drivers but to everyone who gets behind a wheel, that the government of Ontario is serious about road safety, that we will enforce our speed limits and that there will be consequences for people who ignore those speed limits.

That is where the problem lies. What the government is not prepared to do is to step up and ensure that our front-line police officers have the resources to enforce the law. The government is not willing to step up and ensure that our justice system is properly resourced, so that when a speeding ticket is issued, that ticket won't just be bargained away or thrown out because a justice of the peace is not available to hear that particular charge, which happens every day in this province. I get regular reports from Chief Armand LaBarge in York region. He sends me these reports because he wants me to be aware and the Legislature to be aware that we have a serious problem in our justice system, that his front-line officers are frustrated every day of the week by having to appear in court as witnesses, having to appear in court to justify laying charges on our roads and on our highways for Highway Traffic Act infractions.

They are there, the accused is there, but how often is there not a justice of the peace, not only to hear that case but for the entire sitting? All of these tickets get thrown out. So my appeal to the Minister of Transportation is that we should be focusing on enforcing the laws we have in place already before overlaying additional levels of further legislation and further requirements that obviously won't get enforced either. None of them will, if we don't have the enforcement resources in place in this province.

That reasoning was ignored by the government, because it's a lot easier for the government to simply have another piece of legislation passed and have another announcement, as I know that the minister will after third reading is passed—and have another media event claiming yet another victory on the part of the McGuinty government for addressing this important issue of road safety. The media will come; they will print. People will read the headlines. Minister Bradley will be a hero, Dalton McGuinty will be seen to be doing something, and yet what they have not done is address the fundamental problem in this province: that we have laws that are not enforced and that are not prosecuted because we don't have the resources in place to do that. That's why I have serious concern about endorsing this legislation.

I will say that there are members of our caucus who are supporting this legislation. I will not. I will not because of the reasons that I've just given. Furthermore, during our standing committee process, I presented what I considered were practical and pragmatic amendments that I believe would have made some improvement at least, given some rationale to various aspects of the legislation. The government heard every amendment, and not one single amendment was accepted by the government members on that committee.

It's interesting that in the 13 years I've been in this House, I have yet to see a perfect piece of legislation. That's why we have the process. We have first reading and second reading. Legislation then goes to committee for the purpose of having all parties consider it. We have research done, we make amendments to improve the legislation, and then it comes back to the House for third reading and final approval. At every step along the way in this particular case, the government felt that they had it right and perfect from the very beginning—and, by the way, so did one or two of the stakeholders who consulted with the ministry. Obviously, they were the one or two stakeholders whom the ministry heard. All of the other stakeholders who came forward—and we had many during committee hearings. We had many who submitted e-mails and many who participated in teleconference. And there were reports: I have three very substantive reports here that were submitted and referenced. Unfortunately, these were presented to me on the morning of our committee hearings. I didn't have an opportunity, and neither did any other member of that committee, to review these reports, and yet these are the very reports that should have allowed us to have some substantive debate on the issue. This made a mockery of that entire public hearing process. So we had a piece of legislation that was presented to us as a fait accompli, obviously, from the very beginning.

I had an e-mail from one of the stakeholders, who obviously had direct input into the minister's office.

When we sent out a request to stakeholders, which we do as a matter of course, to provide us with recommendations and suggestions in terms of amendments for the legislation from a stakeholder's perspective, I received an e-mail that, quite frankly, concerned me as a member of this Legislature and as a former minister. I shared this e-mail, by the way, with the current minister, because I felt that he should know. To his credit, I think the minister's reaction to this e-mail was identical to mine.

I'm going to read one aspect of this e-mail into the record, because, while it won't make me any friends with these stakeholders—I understand that—I want it to be a strong signal to anyone else who would dare to take us, in this Legislature, for granted and to hold in contempt the parliamentary process and the legislative process. I know that I won't be receiving an e-mail like this again, and neither will anyone in our research department. But I'd like to you listen to this, Speaker, because you will be interested, as will any other member of this Legislature, to know the arrogance with which some stakeholders approach this place:

"As for the amendments, we have none, and in fact I would go further and say that we would be very strongly opposed to any amendment. This is our bill. Every period, every comma, every semicolon was put there by us, and we would be very, very unhappy were it to be amended in any way."

Obviously, these stakeholders are very, very happy today, because their legislation has not, in fact, been amended in any way. "Every period, every comma, every semicolon" that was put there by them is still in place.

While it may be a victory for those stakeholders, I think it is frankly a condemnation of a system of law-making that most people in this province would think has legitimacy and where most members of this place would think they have a meaningful role to play. We've found out that that isn't necessarily the case.

Having said that, this legislation will obviously pass, and we will move into a time in this province when this requirement for heavy trucks to have speed limiters will be law. We'll see how that plays out.

You may say, "What is wrong with that? Why would anyone be opposed to that? If trucks are driving slower and are kept to even the 105 kilometres per hour that the minister says these settings will be at, doesn't it make sense that this will make for safer roads?"

I'm going to ask you just one question, and this is where the common-sense gap comes in when we have this debate: Has anyone observing this debate ever been in a situation on the road where they have actually had to accelerate to avoid a potential problem and a collision? If they have, I ask them: What would it have felt like to step on the accelerator to avoid that collision and there was nothing there? There was no additional power; you didn't have any additional speed to actually avoid that potential safety issue. Think about that.

When I asked that question in the course of the committee, there wasn't anyone who could give me an answer to it, and yet many made representations to the committee, and through e-mails and phone calls, who are truck drivers and said to me: "This legislation will potentially create safety issues for that very reason." If there's no other reason to oppose this legislation, it would be for the safety factor that those who are on the roads every day are experiencing, and telling us from a practical standpoint that they need that flexibility.

The government heard that as well and ignored it. So we move on. We heard all of the amendments that were put forward. They were voted down by the government without any qualms about whether or not there should be any changes to this legislation.

Finally I made one proposal, as an amendment as well, that if the government is intent on imposing this kind of restriction on truckers residing or doing business in the province of Ontario, they should at least exclude those truckers emanating from the United States of America. The reason was this: There are hundreds and thousands of trucks that come into Ontario every day out of the United States, doing business in Ontario or crossing through Ontario, who also made substantive submissions to the committee, saying that if this bill is adopted by the government of Ontario, they will stop doing business in Ontario because it will be impossible for them to be competitive in their several jurisdictions in the United States and then have this technology, which has to be hard-wired into their vehicles. There's no way that at the border they can trigger a release on that. If they did that, if there was that kind of mechanism built into the vehicle, it would mean, under this law, that they would be found guilty of breaking this law.

We already have notice that there will be a challenge, a NAFTA challenge, should this bill be or when it is implemented. We've had a number of occasions since the McGuinty government took office in Ontario where this chamber warned the government that the bill they are introducing and spending time manipulating through this legislative process would either have a charter challenge or would be challenged in one way or another by the courts. Of course, with the arrogance of the government, they ignore the pleadings of not only members of the Legislature but of officers of this assembly.

The most recent, you'll recall, was that of the adoption bill. We warned the government time and again that legislation implemented retroactively that would impact on the personal lives of citizens of this province on decisions they made 10, 20, 30 and 50 years ago was not going to stand up under constitutional and charter scrutiny. They ignored us. They ignored the privacy commissioner of this province. They've had to go back on that because the court ruled against them, and so they have had to revise that legislation to bring it into compliance with the charter. I'm predicting that that is precisely what will happen here as well, because there is a NAFTA challenge, and we'll see where that takes us. So the government ignored even that amendment. I was simply trying to save them some embarrassment.

At a time when the economy of our province is facing the challenges that it is, it may be one thing for the government to do nothing when it comes to tourism, to do nothing or make bad deals when it comes to our manufacturing sector, particularly the auto sector; it's yet another thing when the government takes a proactive position and introduces legislation that will hurt business in this province beyond where it is now. Incomprehensible. I just don't understand.

However, the minister will have his time before the cameras. I'm sure we will see him and his beaming face on the 6 o'clock news tonight, if it passes this afternoon, or tomorrow or the next day—whenever it passes. I'm sure that the stakeholders who wrote this e-mail will be applauding him and be at all of the minister's fundraisers. I can guarantee you: They won't show up to one of mine. Somehow we'll have to deal with that, I suppose.

So I rest my case. I will personally be voting against the legislation for the reasons that I have outlined, and many more that I tabled during second reading debate, particularly during our committee hearings. For anyone who's interested, all of those proceedings are recorded. We have the Hansard record of that discussion. There is a record there of the amendments that were put forward, all to no avail. But we did the best that we could. We attempted to help the government improve the legislation, and they said, "No, thank you."

I now say to the minister that when all is said and done, I'm hopeful that the intent that he has outlined in bringing this legislation forward will be realized. I'm hopeful that collisions will be reduced. I'm hopeful that the number of fatal collisions will be reduced significantly. I'm hopeful that it will do for the environment everything the minister has stated. But I have my serious doubts on the basis of information that was presented to us that was logical and that I believe made a great deal of common sense.

There are other things the government could have done. Enforcement is one of them. The other thing the government could have done is to rely on the private sector to manage its own business. At a time when gas prices are what they are, I can't imagine a single owner-operator or a single carrier that would not already have in place policies to restrict speed limits and to make sure that, if for no other reason but for economic benefit, speed limits are adhered to.

I will be interested over the next number of months and years to see where this legislation ends up, and I will be very interested to see how the minister responds to the practical implications that will emanate from this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath):
Questions and comments?

Mr. Norm Miller: It's my pleasure to add comments on Bill 41, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act in relation to the use of speed-limiting systems, and on the speech made by the member from Newmarket-Aurora, who is, of course, a former Minister of Transportation.

I think he brings up some excellent points to do with this bill that we're now discussing in third reading. The most disturbing is that he has these large and significant reports on the issue which he states were not duly considered in the process of looking at the bill, and the fact that he, as the PC representative, put some significant amendments forward and none were passed. This government has talked about democratic reform, but when it comes right down to it, we don't seem to see much evidence of that on the ground. We seem to have a flawed process that has taken its course with this bill, and I think that's unfortunate. I think he brings up an excellent point: that we need to enforce the speed limits we already have.

Just try driving at 80 kilometres an hour on a secondary highway, which I did on the weekend. I was out motorcycling on Sunday with three or four other folks. We were going exactly 80 kilometres an hour, and I have to say that I had a car about two feet behind me, almost running over me, because very few people actually drive at the speed limit. That says to me that either we have the wrong speed limits or we don't enforce them. So there seems to be a real problem there.

I've heard from a lot of independents on this bill. I asked them, "What's the real agenda, if you're giving me these arguments that it's not necessarily making highways safer"—particularly in the north, where there are two-lane highways and the trucks have to pass sometimes. They said that they thought the real agenda of this bill was about trying to control rogue drivers in large companies.

I think it's unfortunate that we haven't had a fulsome process here where the amendments could be duly considered. Those significant reports should be significantly considered for this bill.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: I just wanted to help my friend who asked a question about why we don't permit trucks to go faster than 105 if they need to increase their speed to avoid a collision. That is a reasonable and good question, and I will help my friend. The reason is, trucks really can't do that. I am told that for a large truck like the ones we are talking about to increase its speed by five kilometres an hour, it takes 76 seconds. These are not Maseratis; these are large commercial vehicles. So the idea that a large commercial vehicle can increase its speed to avoid a collision is really not technically possible.

I want to also assure the member that we, on this side, oppose speeding, whether it's by Americans, Canadians or Ontarians. To advocate that American trucks should have the right to break Ontario laws because they're American trucks is a rather odd position, I think, for the official opposition to take.

I want to tell the member that we, on this side, are in favour of saving 280,000 tonnes of greenhouse gases. We are in favour of those truckers who tell us this is the right speed to deliver our goods safely, efficiently and at a reasonable cost. And that's what we're going to do.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I was going to wait until my speech—because I'm going to have an hour leadoff in a few minutes—but again, to the parliamentary assistant, we had this debate in committee. The parliamentary assistant saying that the government is going to save 280,000 tonnes of emissions is completely inaccurate.

Let's look at what this bill really does. About 60% of trucks on the highway now are currently using speed limiters and are being limited to 105 kilometres. So 60% of the fleet is already meeting the numbers that the government is talking about, when it's 105 kilometres. Of the other 40%—and I'm just rounding out the numbers; I might be a little bit out—that are not on speed limiters, there's this thing called "the speed limiter," and my good friend the member from Welland will know well what I talk about; it's called fuel prices. Most of the trucks are already slowing down as it is, so the government can't get up in this House and say, "We're going to save 280,000 tonnes of emissions in the atmosphere," because it doesn't do that.

Part of the problem that I have with this bill is that if the government were saying, "We have a green plan and we have a comprehensive strategy by which to reduce emissions in the atmosphere, and we're going to do not only things when it comes to vehicles but when it comes to how vehicles are constructed, not just speed"—if we were to look at emissions from factories, if we were to look at what's happening with coal-fired plants in this province, and we were putting it into a green plan, then I would understand the logic to this. But that's not what this is. This is a one-off bill that the government is trying to wrap up as a green thing. I'm saying that this is not anywhere as green as the government makes it out to be. Let's be clear: This bill, in the end, when we say 280,000 tonnes, ain't going to come anywhere near that, because most of the industry is already compliant with 105 kilometres, either by way of governors on their trucks, speed limiters, or by way of the fuel prices, having to slow down the speed.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments? The member for Newmarket—Aurora for a response.

Mr. Frank Klees: The comments of the parliamentary assistant with regard to supporting speeding by American trucks is absolute nonsense, and he knows it. In fact, if he and his government were serious about enforcing speed limits, they would do so in the province today. No one supports speeding. I spent my entire remarks here to talk about the importance of ensuring that there is enforcement of our speed limits, be those American trucks or Ontario trucks.

What I am saying is that what we should be doing is passing legislation in this place that is actually based on common sense and that is not simply a political tool for the government to pound its own chest about what they're doing for the environment. I think that Joanne Ritchie said it best: "What puzzles me is why government would consider forcing a solution on this industry when it's clear the problem lies elsewhere." She is OBAC's executive director, and says this:

"Many carriers have speed management programs—including governed engines. And owner-operators can ill afford to speed. Trucks are already slowing down for safety and economic reasons, and unless government starts enforcing existing laws to get reckless drivers off the road, they're shirking their responsibility and actually increasing the risk of crashes on our highways."

To the government's attention I bring stakeholders whom, they obviously didn't listen to. As will be proven, this is a foil that is being used by the government to say one thing that will be believed by the vast public because they are communicating it effectively. It doesn't make it right; it doesn't legitimize this legislation. That is the point that I was trying to make with you.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Further debate?

Mr. Gilles Bisson: As I was saying earlier in questions and comments, I'm going to be sharing my lead with a few members of our caucus. I would ask for unanimous consent to share my lead with the member from Welland and the member from Trinity-Spadina. Done.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): It's not needed.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: I know. I'm just putting it on the record, Madam Speaker, but I thank you for that direction because you're right: It wasn't a UC. I should have known better after having been here for so many years.

There are about three parts to the debate that I want to get into when it comes to this legislation. First of all, there's the environmental side of this bill, the effects it will have on the environment. I also want to talk about the practicality of this legislation and what it means to many people in the trucking industry vis-à-vis their livelihood and what happens in the real world—not in the world that we live in here where we draw up laws and we think that, oh God, we understand everything because we're smart legislators—the people at the end who are going to have to live with this legislation and what it means to them.

Let me first say that I've heard the minister and the parliamentary assistant. They stand and talk about this bill, and they say, "Oh, this bill is a great green bill; this bill is going to do wonders; it's going to bring greenness to the province of Ontario." You can hear them. It's almost as if they're preaching the Bible and they're just bringing the message on. If this really was a bill that would bring us to a point of being able to really reduce emissions when it comes to greenhouse gas and it was in that way, I probably would have an easier time trying to support it.

But part of the reality is—let's not kid ourselves—that this bill is not going to have the effect that the government says it's going to have when it comes to the reduction of greenhouse gases. Let me make the argument: The government says that if we bring all the trucks on the highway from the current speeds they're driving down to 105 kilometres an hour—because by speed limiters they will be forced to do 105 kilometres—we're going to save 280,000 tonnes of emissions into the atmosphere. That's the claim. Nothing could be further from the truth. For that to happen, you would have to accept the argument that all the trucks now, on average, are doing over 105 kilometres, and you know that's not the case. You drive the QEW from Hamilton to Toronto on a regular basis, I drive the Highway 11/17 area in northern Ontario, and we interact with trucks on a regular basis, and let me tell you what it is: Since gas prices have gone up, or fuel prices for trucks, I can tell you that there's a noticeable difference in speeds on the highways across this province.

I used to get on Highway 11, as would everybody else, and drive from one community to the other, and it was common for trucks to be doing 115, 120 kilometres. I understand that; you would see that. But you hardly see a truck doing that these days, for a couple of reasons. One is that fuel prices have slowed the truck traffic down as well as it has slowed down the average car on the road. Don't believe me. Go talk to Cam Woolley. We all know Cam Woolley, from the Ontario Provincial Police. He's on radio and TV probably more than most of us around this place. Cam Woolley was very clear that the OPP are noticing, by way of the charges they're laying, that there are fewer speeders on our highways today because people are saying, "Never mind the risk of being caught"—and I'm going to talk about that later—"it is too expensive to run my vehicle at a higher speed." If you're driving a Mack truck, an 18-wheeler, down the road at a speed of, let's say, 115 rather than 105, it's going to cost you more fuel. Truckers are smart businesspeople. Do you think that running a truck doesn't take a whole bunch of skill sets? It's not just a question of being able to drive the truck; it's also a question of being able to make money. To do that, you have to understand the nature of the business. Therefore, most of the trucks now have slowed down just because of gas and fuel prices. Again, don't believe me.

Non, ne croyez pas Gilles Bisson, le député de Timmins-Baie James. Allez parler à la police provinciale et vous allez voir que la police provinciale elle-même est en train de nous dire clairement que la réduction de la vitesse sur les chemins de la province de l'Ontario est quelque chose qu'on peut voir aujourd'hui.

The second reason that I think this claim the government makes in regard to greenhouse gases is a bogus one is that most trucks are using speed limiters now. The industry didn't need to have a law brought into the province of Ontario to put speed limiters in trucks. Most of the large companies out there have decided to do it themselves, and they did it for their own reasons: First, they wanted their drivers to drive within the speed limits because of what it meant for the CVORs. If you have a good, clean CVOR as a company, you're allowed to continue operating, but if you get a bad CVOR and speeding comes into play in that—if your trucks are constantly being charged for speeding violations—your CVOR becomes that much worse. So industry, the larger companies and even some of the small independents, have already put speed limiters in their trucks, by and large, and a large part of the fleet that drives the highways of Ontario is already using speed limiters by way of voluntarily introducing them into their trucks.

My point is that if the government says that 280,000 tonnes of emissions into the atmosphere will be achieved as a result of the legislation, I say to the government, "Hogwash; not anywhere near there," as most trucks are already at the speed limit because the majority of trucks, especially in large companies, are using speed limiters now. They're down to 105, and those others are slowing down because of the price of fuel. Don't come in here and say, "Oh, Lord, I've got a green plan and I'm going to save the atmosphere of the province of Ontario, and we Liberals will wrap ourselves up in a green flag," because that's not what this bill is doing. This bill is an attempt by the government to say, "Look at how green we are." At the end of the day, am I going to say that there will be no savings of emissions? Of course there will be some. I'm not going to pretend there won't be any. But it is not anywhere near the numbers the government is quoting. I would have liked to see it.

Our critic, Peter Tabuns, and my leader, Howard Hampton, have been very clear on this point. They are saying that the government should bring forward a green plan that encourages a plan across ministries that says how we're going to reduce emissions in the atmosphere, and you do that in a number of ways. If the government were to come in and put together a plan that says, "We are going to look at emissions, not only by way of speed on trucks, but we're going to look at the construction of vehicles when it comes to what emissions are allowed in the first place by way of technology that we can install on cars, trucks and other vehicles that are on the road," that would be one thing. If we were looking at emissions from factories across Ontario that are spewing emissions into the atmosphere and saying, "We will do something to encourage them to make the necessary investments in order to reduce the amount of greenhouse gas that's going into the atmosphere," that would be something. And if we were to say, "Rather than having a bunch of cars on our freeways driving to and from Hamilton and everywhere else, why don't we look at mass transit as a way of moving people out of their cars and putting them on intercity rail, so that people were able to move by mass transit and save emissions that are going into the atmosphere?"—if the government was doing that and a whole bunch of other things, the coal plants and others, then I would say, "Ah, the government's got a plan. A little bit here, a little bit there, pull it all together, and it comes to a big number."

But the government has no such plan. It comes in here and says, "We've got speed limiters. We're going to make the atmosphere green." Come on. Give me a break. They're not going to make the atmosphere green by way of the speed-limiters legislation. The reality is, most trucks are already doing a speed of 105, either because they're into speed limiters already or they're into saving money because of the price of fuel.

The other issue I want to talk about is what this is going to do from the perspective of safety. We heard a lot of people who came to committee to talk to us about what this bill can and will do for the safety of our highways. One of the things we heard a lot about is that people said, "Listen, if you put speed limiters on trucks, what you're going to have, you're already seeing it." We got a lot of e-mails on, from people who live along the 401 from Windsor all the way out to Cornwall. I got probably about 40 e-mails, letters or phone calls that came in on this issue alone from people who live on that corridor. They said, "Listen: Many sections of the 401 are two lanes: two lanes in one direction, two lanes in the other." They're already seeing it, because a lot of trucks already have speed limiters on them now. What happens is, one truck tries to pass a second truck on the two-lane freeway, and because they can only do 105 kilometres an hour, they're doing what is termed "elephant racing"—two big trucks trying to pass each other and neither one of them has sufficient speed to overtake the other. So they end up blocking the lane for a longer period of time on those two-lane freeways. We see that on Highway 11 from Orillia all the way up to the spots where we still have four-lane highways—as Monique Smith would know, my good friend from Nipissing—up to North Bay. We see that already. It's more of an occurrence now than it was in the past, where trucks on the freeways are trying to get by a person doing 103 kilometres, and a guy who can do 105 kilometres is trying to overtake—or the woman; it could be a woman or a man driving the truck, obviously—and they're not able to pass each other in sufficient time.

What does that cause? It causes road rage. You have people who are behind these vehicles who are getting fed up, and they're cutting and taking chances in order to bypass these trucks because they're in a hurry to get from point A to point B. It could cause fatal accidents.

Let me give you a good example. You're driving from North Bay, let's say, and you want to go visit my friend Charlie Angus in Cobalt. You say, "Charlie and Brit are making supper tonight, and Charlie's going to be taking out the guitar. I'd love to get down there and sing some songs with him and have a great home-cooked meal with Brit and the kids." You get in the car, you get on the highway in North Bay and you start to drive up—

Interjection.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: My good friend Monique Smith probably had supper with me the night before, I would imagine, right?

Anyway, here's the story—and the member from Nipissing will know this. You get inside the car at North Bay and you start to drive up the highway. How many passing lanes are there between North Bay and Cobalt? You can count them on your hand: There are probably around five passing lanes between those particular areas, right? So what you end up with is that there are very few places where people are able to pass trucks on Highway 11 as you're driving north or south between those two municipalities.

So here I am: I'm in a hurry, I'm driving my car, I'm doing 103 or 100—just chugging along, playing the tunes. I've got the satellite radio on the 1960s tunes, and I'm just moving along and singing to Bob Dylan, doing what you do best when you drive. All of a sudden, you come upon a truck. This truck is going slow, and you say, "Well, I can't pass over here because there's a curve. I can't pass over there because there's a car coming. I can't pass over here because there's a hill and I'm not sure of the road. Oh, it says, 'Passing lane in two kilometres.'" So now you've got the tunes cranked up even higher, and on comes Paul Simon, and he's singing a song and you're just moving along. You're chugging along to the traffic.

Interjection.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: If you're lucky, yeah, it would be my other friend with the—anyway, I'm not going to go there.

Anyway, you get to the passing lane and you want to overtake the truck. And what do you see but a truck in front of you trying to pull in front of the truck in front of him. So you end up in a situation where those two trucks are trying to pass each other and by the time the passing lane comes to an end, what do you think happens? You're still in the car listening to Sirius radio, and now you're back to Bob Dylan again, listening to tunes as you're going up Highway 11. So now I say, "To heck with the radio," and I'm turning off the radio; I've got to listen to the wind to see if I can get by this truck.

People are taking chances. I see it on Highway 11 in the area that I service, from Timmins up to Constance Lake. People are now passing in some pretty dangerous spots. They think they know the highway because they've driven it 100 times before and they're passing where they think they have enough room to do so. The passing lanes are being filled by trucks trying to pass each other. Why? Because they are using speed limiters. We heard this from a professor in Manitoba who said that this can actually lead to more unsafe roads.

On the safety aspect, I just say to the government across the way: Don't come into this debate and tell me that this is a green plan, and don't tell me that, at the end of the day, this is all about road safety. We've heard from tons of expert witnesses who came before the committee and said to us: "This is not what the government makes it out to be." So I'll just say to the government to be careful on that point.

I want to talk about what I thought was one of the major problems with this bill that we somewhat fixed at committee, and not even by way of an amendment. This is the interesting part—and I know that my colleagues here who are speaking after me want to talk to this. One of the things that we heard the most is people from the trucking industry saying: "Okay, fine. We'll put speed limiters in our truck, but I don't just do business in Ontario. I may have my truck and drive from Barrie to Toronto and pick up another load and go off to Windsor. Then, from Windsor I may truck something down to Pennsylvania or Michigan," or wherever they might be driving.

The problem is, once you cross the border there are different speed limits. So the speed limiter is installed, and the way the legislation is written—pay attention. It says that you shall not have a device onboard the truck that allows you to fail the speed limiting system. In other words, you can't bypass the speed limiter. You can't have a switch, a device or a gizmo of some type in your truck—do you like that word, "gizmo"?

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Gizmo?

Mr. Gilles Bisson: "Gizmo" is a good word. I take it that it's parliamentary, so I'm going to use it.

You can't have a gizmo in your truck in order to bypass and to fail the speed limiting device—very clear. The legislation says that if one is found in your truck, the enforcement officer—either the police officer or the person from MTO—will seize that device out of your truck and you shall be fined.

So we went to committee and said, "Listen: If you're going to have speed limiters in Ontario, you have to have a mechanism by which you can turn the speed limiter off when you leave the Ontario jurisdiction and go into a jurisdiction where the speeds are higher."

For example, you will know that the reason speeds are posted on highways has to do with the condition of the road. If you are driving, for example, up in the riding of my good friend the member from Nickel Belt, France Gélinas, you don't want to drive very fast on the Sultan Road. If you're driving from Chapleau down to Thessalon, again, you don't want to drive very fast on that road; it's very wavy. So the MTO posts fairly slow speeds on that road; the top speed is about 80 kilometres. In some areas, it's down to 60. But when you drive from Toronto to Hamilton, it's a straighter freeway. The speed limit is what, 100? It's 100 kilometres an hour. In other areas, we have speed limits that are even higher, because we found that higher speeds on properly constructed highways aren't necessarily unsafe.

You have areas in the United States where the speed limits are 120 kilometres an hour. So what do you do if you're a trucker and you have a truck that has a speed limiting device on it and you do business in the United States? You're now at a competitive disadvantage with your competitors, travelling into the United States with your load.

A lot of independent truckers came to us and told us about that. They said, "This is really unfair. This is about giving the big companies yet another hand up." I hated when Brian Mulroney used to say that. He used to talk about giving people—no, it was Mike Harris who said "Hand up." Mulroney was another quote. "I'm going to give them a hand up." Here's this government saying to the big companies, "We're going to give you a hand up. We're going to put speed limiters in everybody's trucks and we're going to help the big guys, and the little guys are going to get it in the ear."

The law says that you can't have anything to fail a device that is a speed limiter. So we go off to committee. My opposition colleague, the member from whatever riding, Mr. Klees, the Conservative critic for transportation, said that he had an amendment in order to deal with the issue of speed limiters exiting Ontario. The government said, "No, we can't support that legislation. That would be a bad amendment." So I called on the expert witnesses who were there at committee and who worked for the Ministry of Transportation. Do you know what they said? "Oh no, no. You can have a computer in your truck. You can buy a laptop that you plug into a device, into a hard-wire harness that's underneath in the seat, and you can have that in your truck as a way of turning off the speed limiter when you leave the province of Ontario." Or you can buy the Q400, I think they called it, which is another device that you install in your truck, and it allows you to turn off the speed limiter when you leave the province of Ontario. Or even better still, you can have this GPS technology, where the fleet of trucks, once it leaves the geographic boundaries of Ontario, automatically has the speed limiters turned off.

I thought that was rather interesting because the legislation says, "You shall not have and you shall be charged if a speed-limiting device in your truck is found that can limit the speed on that truck." I was in a bit of a quandary, so I asked a number of questions. I said, "The OPP pulls over Ralph the trucker, and Ralph's got one of these $3,000 laptops on board, and the laptop is closed and turned off. Are you going to charge him?" "No, we're not going to charge him." That's good news, I thought to myself. But the officer could still charge him, because the legislation says that he or she can. So we're in this sort of grey area, where the government, by way of answers in the committee, tried to accommodate some of the concerns we were raising in the opposition and the public were raising when they came before us and introduced this concern before the committee. But we're in a grey area because the law says that the person will be charged, but the ministry says, "Don't worry. We're just not going to enforce that."

I just said to myself, this is—

Mr. Michael A. Brown: That's not what they said.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: That's exactly what they said. They said that if they found a Q400 or a GPS device or a laptop in the truck that was turned off, passive and had not deactivated the truck, they would not charge that person for possessing a device under the act, even though the act says that the person has to be charged. We tried to get an amendment to clarify that, that said, "If driving your truck in Ontario"—at the very least, just make it for Ontario. The government wouldn't accept that. So we're in this sort of a grey area that says that you can't have it, but if you have it, the ministry says, "We won't charge you." Time will tell. But in committee, I got it on the record, and I want people to utilize this in their defence when they go to court because you can, as my friend Mr. Kormos would know far better than me. The issue of what was said in committee and what was said in legislation and what was intended—I want to make it clear: The government has said that they will not charge people who have speed limiting-devices in their trucks so long as they're turned off. Clear enough. I saw that and I guess it's a little bit of a victory, but I still think it's a bit of a strange situation.

The last point I want to make, because I know my other two colleagues are biting at the bit to get into this debate: Ce sont des députés qui sont dévoués et qui veulent participer dans ce débat et veulent être capables d'ajouter au débat sur les points qui sont importants pour le monde qu'ils représentent. Je sais que tous les autres députés de l'Assemblée veulent faire de même. Ils sont ici aujourd'hui et ils sont engagés. Regardez-les. Ils sont engagés dans le débat. Ils sont ici et ils écoutent chaque mot. Regardez la foule; on n'a—personne. Mon Dieu, il n'y a personne ici l'après-midi. Qu'est-ce qui se passe? C'est le nouveau Règlement de la chambre. J'ai oublié.

I was saying, if you didn't get the translation fast enough, that I'm in here and I'm engaging members of the assembly in this debate, and I know that they all want to participate. I was commenting on all the masses of people in the galleries, and thank God we have television because there's nobody up there. These new rules have really, I think, been an absurd thing when it comes to the public's ability to participate here.

The point that I want to make is this: I said at the beginning of this debate that I would vote for this legislation at second reading because I thought that in principle, it's not a bad idea; it's something that's worth exploring. I believe that as a legislator, you shouldn't shoot an idea down just because you have a bit of a problem with it. So I said, "Let's allow this thing to go to second reading. We'll give this bill conditional support and send it to committee and hear what people have to say, and see if the government is prepared to respond to the concerns that were raised by those affected who came to committee."

This bill had short-shrift time in committee, and I take responsibility for that as a member of the subcommittee. I'm not going to throw stones at the Conservatives or the Liberals. I should have insisted that this bill be in committee for a longer period of time—not that it would help, because the government decided what they wanted to do, and I'm but one member. They have the majority here, and a government, at the end of the day, decides what's going to happen.

What is clear to me is that those people who came before us—I've got to say that the one issue this spring that I got the most mail, e-mail and phone calls on, as critic, was this speed-limiting legislation. I've had other bills in the House. It is very clear that there is a very strong constituency opposed to this bill. I believe, as a member of the assembly and as a critic for the New Democratic Party, that if this bill was really doing something to green the environment, I would vote for it, because that's clearly something that would be worth supporting. But from what I've seen from the witnesses who came before us and from the e-mails and phone calls I've had from people on this particular issue, this is not going to green the province of Ontario. It's not going to reduce the greenhouse gases that people say it's going to do. So there's a very minimal effect when it comes to the green part of what this bill does.

On the other side, the bill is clearly opposed by a number of people within the industry, and in all conscience, I can't support the bill on the basis of that. I find that sad, though. I think we should have taken more time at committee to at least try to fix this bill to make it do what it needed to do, and I probably would have been okay to support it at that point. But clearly, the bill is not supported by many people in the industry. It does not do what it intends to do in regard to road safety or when it comes to greenhouse gases.

For that reason, I—jeez, I've got 14 hours and 51 minutes to go. This is pretty good.

Interjection: More time, more time.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Wow, more time. I can filibuster.

There we go. It came back. All of a sudden, I thought, "Do I have to go 14 hours and 51 minutes?" I can't do that; that would be unfair.

Comme je dis, j'ai d'autres collègues qui veulent parler, donc à ce point-ci on va donner la chance à l'un des deux qui veulent parler sur ce projet de loi. Merci.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: I want to welcome the citizens of Ontario to this political forum. We're on live; it's 10 to 3. I know how excited you are, with the popcorn in one hand and the wine in the other, to tune in on these political debates.

I wanted to take this opportunity and present a different view from my colleague's. I want to do that because I think there are different views among like-minded people as well. While my friend from Timmins—James Bay raises important points, which I'll speak to—and they're valid in terms of why he would oppose it—I'm going to take a different tack on the bill.

The Liberals, generally speaking, do very little with respect to any particular bill. They take little, picayune kinds of efforts and make them sound huge and revolutionary. This is one of those bills that is hardly historic, hardly revolutionary and hardly at the top of the list in terms of how it greens our environment. It's a small, little measure. It's as small as, not the tax rebate, but the little environmental initiative by the Liberal government of which they're very proud; that is, you pay no PST on a bicycle if it's under $1,000. That's as good as it gets with this government.

These are the little initiatives that become big with the Liberals, and the point is, they're not big. It's so hard to attack them, because they don't do much one way or the other. That is why, on the whole, it's usually good to make fun of what Liberals do, as I am with this bill. While I'm going to support this bill, it's usually a lot of good fun to attack the Liberals, because they don't do much of anything, and this is another example of a bill that doesn't do much. As my friend from Timmins—James Bay says, "If you want to look at initiatives in terms of how we green the environment, this isn't it."

My friend and colleague makes the point that the government makes the claim that 280,000 tonnes of emissions are taken out of the air because of this initiative. That would be true if all cars were driving at 120 kilometres an hour or beyond. But, as he pointed out, they're not; 60% of trucks already have controls that keep them at a certain speed limit. Therefore, the saving that the government speaks about is already diminished by 60%.

Interjection.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Okay. So some greenhouse gases are diminished as a result of this initiative, but it's not as big, Mr. Brown, as you claim or your government claims. It's not a bad initiative, however tiny it is, but it's not as big as you claim.

For me, it's an issue that, yes, it helps, but one could wish that they would be bolder then or as bold as some of the provinces like Quebec or other countries, and take initiatives that one could be proud of.

Mr. Michael A. Brown: They're doing this.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Who's doing this?

Mr. Michael A. Brown: Quebec.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Of course: Quebec is doing it, has done it. But Quebec leads by integrating speed-limiter legislation into a comprehensive climate change plan, which Liberals are not capable of. They're not capable of bringing in a plan. The only thing Mr. Brown is capable of, along with his colleagues, is bringing in little initiatives and then saying, "But we're doing what Quebec does," making the claim that it's the same. Mr. Brown, it isn't the same. When you have the comprehensive plan that's presented in Quebec versus your little, tiny initiative, it's not the same. That is the difference. You can say all you want, and you will and you do, but it's not quite the same, and you know it.

I am a driver myself, and this is where I take a different view from some of my colleagues. I find that a lot of truck drivers speed on a regular basis. I have to admit that I'm intimidated by the big truck drivers driving at 120 K or more. Mr. Kormos is a powerful man. He's not intimidated at all. He kind of likes it. He drives there on the highway, and he just enjoys it. These trucks whiz by, and he's not unhappy with that. He's a big guy; he can take it. Me, I'm just a little guy. When I see these truckers coming by at that speed, quite frankly, I'm that afraid. I wish I were as semi-divine as Mr. Kormos, but he's a little more semi-divine than I am, and he's not as frightened as me. Me, I'm frightened. They're very big, and when they speed, they're bigger than me and my little car.

I know we're going to have the benefit of Mr. Kormos's views on this matter, and he's going to tell us how differently he feels about this, and then you get the benefit, good people of Ontario, of different points of view on the matter. But for me, limiting the speed of truckers is not a bad thing. Most of them drive too fast for my liking. I believe that a lot of drivers feel the same way as I do, and finding a way to make sure that they drive at lower speeds versus 120 or 130 is, in my view, a very positive initiative.

So even though I'm not excited about this bill, it really is hard for me to oppose it. When you have the Canada Safety Council saying that it's not a bad idea and the Ontario Trucking Association saying that this is not a bad idea—and, as far as I could tell, the Teamsters didn't organize a whole lot of deputations in committee, and maybe they did and I didn't see it, but as far as I know, the Teamsters didn't bring in a whole lot of people to oppose it. Yes, there are independent truck drivers who oppose this.

Here's where I think we need to do some work. Why is it that a lot of truck drivers speed? They speed because they're paid by the hour in some cases, and in order to get to their destination, they've got to get there on time, and in order to make the money you want to make, you have to get there fast. I don't think this is good. From a safety point of view, I don't think it's good. I don't believe speeding is that good, especially when you are 10 times bigger than I am, and by "me," I'm talking about my car. I believe that whatever we can do to slow them down is a good thing. If they have to speed because they're on the clock and because they're trying to make a few extra dollars, then I think we need to address that. We're not addressing that; none of us are talking about how we can.

A lot of independents leave a lot of these truck companies. Why? Because they're not paid well and the benefits are poor. But you don't hear the government talking about how we might help by way of arguments. I don't think legislation, obviously, is the way to deal with that, but we should and could be talking about how we should be making arguments to assist many of the truckers who work for companies and who are not well paid and don't have good benefits, and why they're paid by the trip and not the hour, and why, if you're paid by the hour, you have to get there fast. Why aren't we dealing with the fact that many of these people are not enjoying the benefits that they should have and not being paid adequately to be able to drive safely and slower? Yes, it saves money for the trucking industry. It's good for the environment and it's good for the driver. We could all be doing that. They would be driving not so fast if they could be guaranteed a decent wage and decent benefits. That, in my view, is what we should be talking about, and we're not.

If we solved that particular issue, then a lot of the independent truckers would probably still be employed by the trucking companies and not be on their own. They often can't afford not to speed to get to the next destination. Driving a truck is expensive. Every repair you have to do for your truck is an expensive repair. They need the money, and that's why I put to you, as lawyers say, that they have to drive fast. That's why they drive fast. I believe driving fast is a dangerous thing, both for car drivers and truck drivers. It is a very dangerous thing.

By the way, when the government says, "We want to keep it to a limit of 105," even 105 is above the current speed limits everywhere in Ontario. That's still fast. But no, it's not good enough for some; for some, it's just not good enough. For me, 105, which is beyond the law on the speed limits, is fast. I know that those who are more muscular than I am, both in mind and body, don't think it's a bad thing. But I think reducing the speed of truck drivers is a good thing.

There are people here who haven't used the example of Australia, but Australia has had this law for 20 years. I don't know why Liberals don't use that argument, but you should, because in the example of Australia, which is the first country that considered it, the speed limiters have been the law for both trucks and buses since 1990. They set it at 100 kilometres. What's their experience?

"Have the Aussies, after almost 20 years of speed limiters, found that to be" a problem? "Here's what Chris Brooks, senior adviser, road safety, Australian Transport Safety Bureau," said:

"There is no good evidence that a 10-kilometre differential between light vehicle and truck speed limits creates a safety problem. If there is any such problem at all, it is small compared to the safety benefits of running trucks at 100 km/h rather than 110 km/h."

"Speed limiters place everyone on a level playing field and shippers and carriers can't push drivers to drive too fast to meet a schedule."

I'm also conscious of the fact that when people say, "What happens when you're stuck behind lumbering behemoths, particularly on country and regional roads?" Well, the Australian experience tells us a different thing. He says that "overtaking-related crashes on rural roads are surprisingly uncommon.... It may be that on two-lane roads with a general speed limit of 110 kilometres per hour, the presence of speed-limited trucks tends to constrain light vehicle speeds. If so, there may well be a substantial net safety benefit that would be lost if trucks were permitted to travel faster."

In other words, rather than causing more accidents, speed-limited trucks are causing other traffic to slow down and thus reducing the likelihood of accidents.

So I'm ready to support this bill. I'm ready to support it today. I argue again that it's hardly a revolutionary bill. It's a picayune little initiative, like the no-PST tax savings you get for getting your bike. But to the extent that it's an initiative that might help rather than not help vis-à-vis emissions and vis-à-vis safety, I'm going to argue on the whole safety issue and be on the side of that one.

That's the extent of my argument on this.

Mr. Peter Kormos: I'll be using the balance of this lead time of some 20 minutes.

I do not support this legislation and I want to tell you why.

I suppose that the most basic query would be, if speed limiters do all of these things, then why isn't the government proposing speed limiters for all vehicles on our highways: trucks, buses, cars, motorcycles? It seems to me that if this really was a safety and environmental issue, that would be the goal of this government.

I was fortunate enough to be able to sit in on the afternoon of the hearings when Ms. DiNovo was subbing for our critic, and I tell you, having heard the submissions made then, having read the material that was obtained—and I'm grateful to Andrew McNaught, the research officer for the committee—having read the submissions made by others, including those who support the bill, I don't think the government has made its case. I simply don't. And that's not to say that speed isn't a problem.

I want to tell the minister—and I don't want to be unfair, so I'll not name names—that there have been more than a few times when I was driving in my Chevy S-10 pickup truck on the QEW back to Welland in the middle lane, with my cruise control set at 150—

Interjections.

Interjection: One fifteen.

Mr. Peter Kormos:—and there was this great big maroon Buick Roadmaster rushing past me on the left-hand side in the passing lane. As he was passing by me in this big Buick Roadmaster—and the newer version is a LeSabre; the owner of that Buick Roadmaster downsized to a LeSabre—with a swoosh, leaving my Chevy S-10 pickup truck just rocking in the wake, I might have, from time to time, recognized somebody who looks awfully like the Minister of Transportation. So maybe the minister warrants a speed limiter.

Look, I am impressed by the fact that owner-operators—and we all know that; everybody has spoken sympathetically about owner-operators. These aren't the big trucking firms. These are the men and women who invest huge amounts of money in their tractors, their rigs, who live in them, and who are a critical part of our economy in North America, especially with the not just growing but established phenomenon of just-in-time—and Lord knows, I wish us all well. My fear, with the job losses in the auto sector and in the auto parts sector, is that there may well be fewer and fewer transport trucks on our highways because of this government's abandonment of manufacturing and its workers here in the province of Ontario.

But if I've got to choose between the Ontario Trucking Association, the big trucking interests, and owner-operators, I'm with the owner-operators. If I've got to choose between the big trucking organizations and the Teamsters Union—which, as you know, is the union that a whole lot of professional truck drivers belong to, if they're fortunate enough to be unionized workers—I'm siding with the Teamsters.

I read the material that was provided as a supplement to the contribution by Professor Prentice from the University of Manitoba. It was sad; it was regrettable; it was truly tragic, because I was embarrassed to go into that committee and see that submitters were only allowed a 10-minute slot. Some people went to great lengths to prepare their submissions, and then to be told they had a 10-minute slot was an absolute embarrassment. But Professor Barry Prentice from the University of Manitoba made submissions, and then Andrew McNaught obtained the scholarly materials, the research papers, that he made reference to. At the end of the day, the rebuttal to the government proposition is far stronger than anyone at first anticipated.

I am also impressed because—I've got to tell you, I can't not mention Dorothy Sanderson from Cannington, Ontario. She's just a tremendous woman, a long-time trucker. She has driven many a mile, many a kilometre, delivering food, clothing and all that sort of stuff from one city to another, across North America, I suspect. She brought the perspective of the real world—none of this theoretical stuff; real-world stuff, real-life stuff. She talked about a number of things, as much as she could in a mere 10 minutes.

She talked about the phenomenon that we already heard the NDP transportation critic refer to as elephant racing, where one truck is trying to pass another on, let's say, a slight incline, with that truck occupying the left-hand lane for an incredibly long period of time, so that there's a huge lineup of cars behind him, which then generates driver behaviour that is inherently unsafe because people become reckless. They're in a panic to pass those trucks. I'm worried about the trucker who can't accelerate quickly enough to a sufficiently high speed to safely pass somebody or to avoid an accident. I'm worried about the trucker who can't accelerate at a sufficient speed to pass a dangerous situation.

By now, I'll bet you that I've driven millions of kilometres in the course of my lifetime so far—that QEW back and forth, back and forth, back and forth. I've got to tell you: To this day I've had the daylighters scared out of me by any number of drivers, but never by a professional truck driver. Are trucks big? Of course they're big. Do trucks travel one after the other, as we increasingly rely upon trucking to get goods from one place to another? Yes, of course they do. I tell you: Where the data referring to speed speaks of speed being a factor in 23% of accidents involving trucks, there's similarly material that suggests that of those 23%, the vast majority are cars that are speeding that cause the hazard and cause the danger. If speeding trucks are a problem, then get enforcement out there on the highway. It's as simple as that.

My colleague from Trinity-Spadina spent a whole lot of his 20 minutes expounding on the fact that size matters, and I'm not about to rebut him.

Interjection.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Mr. Brown laughs. I don't know what side of the calculation he finds himself on. But my colleague from Trinity-Spadina emphasizes that size matters. Down where I come from, people have known that a long time already. Yeah, trucks are big; that means you respect them.

It's just like pedestrians and cars. I watch, for instance, pedestrian behaviour. It's far different down where we come from in Hamilton or Welland, where, for instance, a taxi driver isn't forced to wait at an intersection while pedestrian after pedestrian after pedestrian blocks his or her right turn. Down where we come from, pedestrians understand that that cab driver is trying to eke out a living at what usually amounts to less than minimum wage, and you cut the guy some slack, for Pete's sake. Stop so he can turn right, rather than the arrogant, "I'm a pedestrian and I'll show you, you car operator." You understand what I'm talking about, don't you? You've been there, you've seen it, and you've done it.

As I say, on the highway, trucks are bigger than your car. I'm lucky. I don't drive a big pickup truck; I have a small pickup truck, a Chevy S-10. It's got well over 300,000 clicks on it. I've had it for many a year. The other car is an old 1991 Buick Park Avenue. I don't drive that anywhere near enough. You know that David Chev-Olds, down on Niagara Street, the people I buy these vehicles from, keep them tuned up and running.

Why, for the life of me, the committee couldn't entertain these submissions for longer than 10-minute slots boggles the mind. Why, for the life of me, the committee couldn't have extended its hearings to listen to more detailed analysis of, for instance, the scholarly material boggles the mind. It seems to me the government is in a rush to get this bill passed; I suspect very much it's going to pass today. I believe that the majority of people in this chamber, the majority of them being Liberals, are going to ensure that the bill passes. I accept that as a reality, as the nature of majority governments, but I find it truly regrettable, because there wasn't a fair discussion about what's really happening on the highways.

One of the other observations that so many traffic safety people will tell you about is that it's safer to travel with the flow of traffic. As a matter of fact, you had one innovative scoff-law who, a couple of years ago, tried testing the police and the courts by driving at 100 kilometres an hour along the 401 eastward, as I recall it. You'll remember that he was charged, because he was effectively holding back traffic. Ms. Elliott recalls that. His defence was, "I was travelling the speed limit, 100 clicks." Sorry, pal; you were obstructing the flow of other traffic.

It seems to me that there's an issue around speed. Gary Furlong has written a book about this, about boundaries shifting, as an analytical tool, but it's obviously applicable here. The speed limit is 100, but we accept that 115 clicks is tolerable, because the police tend not to charge people under 115—somehow, and I don't know how valid that is; maybe I've just been lucky—so that effectively, the speed limit becomes 115, and people push that to 120 and then 125 and 130. I've got to tell you, driving out towards where Ms. Elliott is from on the 401, in my Chevy S-10 pickup truck—1994, by the way—on speed control at 115 clicks, I'm in the right-hand lane, and I'm still slowing other people down. It ain't the trucks that are zooming past me at 125, 130, 140 kilometres an hour; it's people in cars.

My anecdotal experience is contrary to what other people's is, obviously. Professional truck drivers have never, ever caused me to fear them. I'm respectful of a truck: the fact that it's bigger, the fact that it isn't as manoeuvrable as, let's say, a high-priced sports car like a Corvette or a Porsche. That means that you've got to respect them, cut them some slack, give them some leeway so that they can manoeuvre safely. I, for one, think you should take pride in doing that, because you've got a working woman or man driving that truck who's working hard to make a living. Just as pedestrians should respect taxi drivers and cut them a little bit of slack and let them get their fare to where it's going, people on the highway should respect trucks a little more and cut them a little slack and not create hazardous situations.

How many times—because I know you drive on that QEW, too—do you see somebody pass a truck, dart right in front of it in the middle lane and then slow down? You got some poor truck driver just about swallowing his bubble gum—

Mr. Peter Kormos: Well, because you've got your little Chevy Cobalt out in front of him, you pass him and then you slow down no more than spitting distance in front of the guy. You know exactly what I'm talking about. There's a truck driver—the perspiration breaks out in short order.

People don't understand that we have to share the highways with trucks; it's as simple as that. I say that if there's a problem with speeding, then you readjust the boundary. Then you have a campaign—and it will not take very long. People are incredibly responsive; it's this Pavlovian response. People, in short order, will start learning that you can't go 125 anymore. Having said that, we build highways in this country that are designed for vehicles to travel at 120 or 125 kilometres an hour. Most of the 400-series highways are designed specifically for that rate of speed.

I was impressed by Dorothy Sanderson, the truck driver. I was impressed by Professor Barry Prentice. I was incredibly impressed by spokespeople, not only at the committee, where they made their submissions, but they held a soiree here downstairs—the people supporting this legislation had no qualms about drinking their wine or eating their hors d'oeuvres, their little crudités. We had the owner-operators association of Canada, along with the US-based Owner-Operator Independent Drivers Association downstairs at one of those soirées we have here from time to time, which seem to have no trouble attracting politicians and even their staff, because a free meal is a free meal and a free glass of wine is a free glass of wine.

I suspect they were a little dismayed at the rapidity of the process, and that people, especially the American owner-operators, were reflecting on US-style hearings, which tend to be somewhat more protracted and inquisitorial than the hearings we have here at Queen's Park, especially of late. I think they're suffering some whiplash with the speed at which this bill is being pushed through the Legislature. In a majority government, we have to live with the government's utilization of that majority in whichever way they see fit, for whatever motive or reason they see fit.

I don't think this bill does what it says it does, I don't think it will have the profound environmental impact that it purports to have, and I certainly don't think it's going to create safer roads. In fact, I believe it could create more dangerous highways. I'll echo what some of the other people have said: What we really need is far more effective training for drivers of all vehicles.

It's amazing how you can witness, from drivers whom you know have been driving for a considerable period of time, incredibly dangerous driving habits that they've either acquired or simply never shed over the course of training. It's why I'm pleased that the NDP and our transportation critic have raised the issue of truck driver training schools and criticized those instant diplomas with minimal amounts of training.

One of the ways to create safer highways across the board is to insist on higher standards for the training of all drivers. One of the ways of ensuring safer roadways is to insist on safe vehicles, because while speed is ranked at 23%, unfit vehicles—bad brakes, among other things—are right up there with speed. Speed, I repeat, was most likely the problem of the car driver.

In terms of unsafe vehicles, when you've got a rig that costs $300,000, $400,000—are those the kinds of prices that people invest in these rigs?—that's a whole lot of mortgage. Trust me: They take care of them. You'll see them. Go to a truck stop. Go to Stop 50, the truck stop on the way down to Welland from where you live, on the south side of the QEW. Pull in there and see those rigs. They are spic and span. They are immaculate. You could eat off the fenders and bumpers. These owner-operator truck drivers take immaculate care of their vehicles and keep them at the most sophisticated level of mechanical condition.

I do not want to put truck drivers' lives or other vehicle occupants' lives at risk by putting an unfair and inappropriate mechanical limit on the speed of a truck when that speed is necessary to drive safely, either in terms of keeping up with the flow of traffic or of avoiding an unsafe situation. If this bill goes to a vote today, I will be voting against it.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Questions and comments? Further debate?

Mr. Paul Miller: I had the privilege of sitting in on some of the submissions by independent truckers in reference to this bill. It amazes me that this bill is going forward without the co-operation of the majority of truckers in this province. What you have is the big companies that are pushing it. We all want safety in this province. Safety is of the utmost importance. However, the majority of truck drivers in this province don't feel that this bill provides a safe atmosphere to do their jobs in and work in a safe environment.

I'm a little confused with the bill. If it was uniform throughout North America, that would be one thing. But when you go over into New York state or into Michigan, the speed limits are different. Are the slow-moving Canadian truckers who are on their highways in the States—and the other truckers have the ability to get to destinations quicker. Are they going to be bumper-riding these trucks? Are they going to be cutting them off? Are they going to be moving at a faster speed to create more income for themselves, or are they going to also join in at a slow speed in co-operation with their Canadian truckers? Also, when these truckers enter into Ontario, are they all of a sudden going to slow down and not speed because of our laws? They're not going to try and create more money, especially the independent drivers?

I would think that if you were going to pass a bill in this House, you would want the co-operation of the entire trucking industry and the majority of the trucking industry. That's not the case here.

Everyone likes safe highways. I too have run across situations where there are anxious drivers behind me, going up a hill, and you've got two big rigs blocking both lanes. People are in a hurry to get by, and finally when the truck does get out of the way, these cars are bumper to bumper, flying up on the passing lane. The next thing you know, what we've got is an accident.

A lot of times when you're going downhill or uphill, you can't see what's in front of you. When the rig gets out of the way, the next thing you know you're on top of a school bus or something, trying to pass at a high speed. I think the majority of these truckers are good drivers and I think they actually do control the flow of traffic on our highways.

In the presentations, the independent truck drivers had 10 minutes each. They came with large dossiers. They wanted to make a professional, educated submission, and they weren't allowed to. They had 10 minutes.

Then, unfortunately, the government decided to bring in a couple of people who had lost a spouse on the highways. How did this spouse, the one they brought, lose her husband? He wasn't avoiding another truck; he lost his life avoiding speeding cars. He ended up sideways in the ditch. So it wasn't trucks causing truck problems, it was the cars, as my colleague from Welland pointed out.

There are so many things in this bill that are missing. There are so many things that haven't been addressed. If you want to have a bill that's effective, a bill that's going to cover all aspects of the business of trucking, then you should listen to all the submissions, you should listen to all the people who are involved in industry and take seriously what they say—and take longer.

As my colleague pointed out, this bill is being rushed through too quickly. There are many people out there who weren't heard. There are only so many people who are allowed in the time allotted to come in front of the committee, and it seemed to be stacked by certain bigger outfits, more than the little guys.

Once again, a bill is going through this House without deep thought. Get it through quick before the session is over. Don't deal with all the aspects that can be looked at from both sides in the aspect of safety.

I want to just touch on pollution. We're talking about pollution, which I've talked to the environmental minister about. Here we are in a province where you have huge stacks pouring out tonnes and tonnes of emissions into the air we breathe. These trucks come with pollution control systems on them. So this big—I don't know—250 tonnes of pollution they're going to save is nonsense. It may save a little bit.

Why don't you start dealing with industries and the stacks that pour out millions and millions of tonnes of pollution? Put secondary control systems in. Truckers might have a good argument. The truckers are saying, "You're punishing me, as a small operator. You're taking away my livelihood, yet you let the big polluters pollute." It just doesn't make sense.

I think it's gotten to a point where common sense does not prevail, to a point where we don't look at a bill long enough or hard enough to dissect it. I'm not a professional driver, but it seemed to me that all the professional drivers who came in front of them, except the big companies, were dead set against this bill. They do feel that it's going to impact on their livelihood.

So what's going to happen? Down the road, if this bill passes, I want to really see the results of the studies of the "saviour" from pollution in comparison to other things in the province that pollute. I want to see the impact, what percentage out of 100% of this bill placed on the truckers is going to save from pollution.

Frankly, coming from where I am, I've even had people who wanted to put in new plants say to me, "Mr. Miller, the airshed in Hamilton is full now. What's another incinerator? What's another 1,000 trucks in Hamilton?" We have the highest rates of asthma, breathing problems and lung problems in Hamilton. What's another incinerator? What's another factory? What's another 1,000 trucks? It just doesn't make sense.

If you're going to enforce the laws of this province, then do it with some thought. Do it with some depth. I'm sick, in my short tenure here, of seeing surface bills just to please people, just to keep them quiet or happy—not bills with substance, just the fluff bills, I guess they call them. I've seen so many in the short time I've been here. I have seen no bills with any substance come to this floor for honest, hard debate, where the opposition parties can grill and do what we're supposed to do. What do we do? We get cut off by the majority in committees. We don't even get to talk about them.

In fact, my bill never even got read. Nobody even looked at it. They didn't even know what I was talking about when I made my presentation. That's pretty scary. So if you want to be serious about this province, whether it be safety, the environment, trucking, schools, whatever it is, then you'll have to start having longer and better discussions, more in-depth investigations, and have the professionals in each field here to speak and have their time in court to be able to make these bills the way they should be.

I think there are many things missing in this bill, many things they didn't deal with. They touched on it but didn't really open it up. I really feel that this bill is totally unfair and hasn't been looked at properly. Personally, I cannot support this bill in its present state. It needs a lot more work before you impact the lives of thousands and thousands of truckers and other people in this province who rely on that.

If you want to look at the safety aspect of it, let's look at buses. You don't think that a bus can do as much damage as a rig? How many buses have you seen turned over? How many buses have killed people? How many people on buses—our school buses don't even have the proper safety features. The kids are on those buses without seatbelts. It's scary. They're bouncing around like popcorn. If a big rig hits them—what if a Greyhound bus hits a school bus? He hasn't got a speed limiter. Don't you think he's going to do as much damage as a big rig would? He certainly would.

I support safety, I support a good environment, but this bill does not address those problems to the level it should. Until we start putting bills through this House that have thought, foresight and depth, I have a real problem with it. I, personally, cannot support this bill in this state.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Thank you. Questions and comments? Further debate? Are there any honourable members who wish to participate in the debate? If not—I was actually going to go to the minister or the parliamentary assistant for a reply.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): I'm sorry. I guess it has to be the minister himself because he moved the motion.

Mr. Bradley has moved third reading of Bill 41, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act in relation to the use of speed-limiting systems in commercial motor vehicles. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

I believe the ayes have it. The motion is carried.

Third reading agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Be it resolved that the bill do now pass and be entitled as in the motion.

Orders of the day.

Hon. Leona Dombrowsky: I move adjournment of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Ms. Andrea Horwath): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The House now stands adjourned until Tuesday, June 17, at 9 o'clock.

The House adjourned at 1536.

ENERGY POLICIES

Mr. John Yakabuski: My question is for the Minister of Energy. Your government has projected that new nuclear plants announced yesterday for Darlington will be online in 2018, but your government has yet again promised to close the coal-fired plants, this time by 2014. That leaves a four-year gap. Minister, how do you plan to keep the lights on during that four-year gap?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: It's a question that I think the public have a right to hear the answer on. We have a 20-year electricity plan. It's published. It's the subject of an awful lot of background research. It is before the Ontario Energy Board right now for review. It spells out in great detail exactly how we will provide the supply.

I might add, to all of us, particularly the public, it starts with conservation. We are determined to cut our demand by about 20% over the life of this project, over the life of the plan. Secondly, we are doubling our use of renewables. It's all spelled out in that plan. We are going to maintain our nuclear fleet at 14,000 megawatts.

I would say to the member and, equally importantly, to the public: Take a look at the plan. It's all there in detail. It spells out exactly how we will accomplish it. And it's a good plan.

Mr. John Yakabuski: I might remind the minister that he had planned to close the coal plants in 2007, and then in 2009. You're not that good at planning, Minister.

Your government has absolutely no credibility when it comes to energy. It's been one broken promise after another. We know that in 10 years, demand in Ontario will rise to about 29,000 megawatts. The current capacity is between 26,000 and 28,000 megawatts, and the coal plants provide 25% of that capacity. There's no guarantee that the nuclear plants will actually be online by 2018.

I ask you again, how do you plan to keep the lights on past 2014? Or do you plan on breaking your coal promise yet a third unprecedented time?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: I'll repeat part of my answer. We have a 20-year plan, spelled out in detail, before the Ontario Energy Board.

I would also say that we have an Independent Electricity System Operator. This is a group that looks at our supply. What did they say? Two things: They've told us publicly that we have on stream the capacity to hit our next one-third reduction on coal in 2011. They've also told us that over the next 18 months we have more new supply coming online in the province of Ontario than at any other 18-month period in the history of the province.

So we have a 20-year plan before the Ontario Energy Board that's spelled out in detail. I think the people of Ontario can feel confident that we have a reliable, affordable and environmentally sensitive electricity plan for the future.

Mr. John Yakabuski: Their plans—it reminds me of Robbie Burns.

Minister, what your government's dithering has cost Ontarians—businesses are going to think twice about investing and creating new jobs in Ontario, because under your plan, which you're not very good at planning, there's no assurance of a reliable, affordable, sustainable energy supply in the province of Ontario. There's no plan for keeping the lights on between 2014 and 2018, so the coal plants are going to have to stay open until the nuclear plants are actually up and running, and who knows when that date will actually be? And because you've refused to install scrubbers on the coal plants, as our party suggested, we're going to see the number of smog-related deaths, now pegged at 9,500 a year, dramatically increase.

When is your party simply going to admit that your bungling of the energy file is costing Ontarians jobs and lives?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: Actually, on the contrary, I would say to our business community, invest in Ontario. We have a long-term electricity plan that I guarantee you is reliable, affordable and done in the most environmentally sensitive way possible. Other jurisdictions aren't doing that. In my opinion, they don't have a sustainable electricity plan. I happen to think our plan is an economic tool for Ontario, and as I say, it's all spelled out in detail.

I would just remind the member and others that people often talk about electricity prices. In the last four years, our industrial price has actually gone up at a rate less than inflation. So you'll hear fictitious figures.

I would go back to our business community and say that this is the place to invest. We have a long-term plan that will provide reliable, affordable and environmentally sensitive electricity for the years ahead.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Stop the clock for a moment. To the members, I recognize that it's much like the end of a school year and everybody's anxious to get out of here, but I would just caution the government side to have some respect as the opposition asks their questions and to keep the tone down.

New question.

C. DIFFICILE

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: My question is for the Minister of Health. Yesterday, the Hamilton Spectator reported that there were investigations into C. difficile deaths in countries such as Britain, Wales, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, the United States, Northern Ireland and, now we learn, Scotland. In fact, in the article, Scotland's health minister was quoted as saying that after about 16 C. difficile deaths, there is now "a compelling case" for an independent inquiry.

When all these countries have conducted independent investigations into C. difficile, why, after almost 300 deaths in just seven hospitals, will you not accept the fact that a severe problem exists—people are dying—and why will you not undertake a broad, independent investigation to get to the bottom of it and prevent it in the future?

Hon. George Smitherman: It is a matter of the future which is first at hand in addressing this issue. We too have had investigations in the province of Ontario—a coroner's investigation into the affairs in Sault Ste. Marie, which in part led the coroner to say that no further investigation is required. What is required is to take advantage of the information that we have.

I feel very strongly that the approach we've outlined to Ontarians—which sees Dr. Michael Baker emerging as the very strong voice as a patient safety lead on behalf of the government of Ontario, and full public reporting, which will be initiated very expediently on September 30—stands as the very best measure of protection for the people of Ontario, adding tremendous transparency to the circumstances related to patient safety matters in Ontario's hospitals not only related to C. difficile but on a wide variety of indicators. I'm quite certain this is the most appropriate way to move forward.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: I say to the minister that the response is totally inadequate. I have a pile of letters and faxes here from individuals throughout the province who are calling for an investigation, ranging from a 20-year-old who suffered to someone who is much older.

I would say to the minister, you have been in complete denial about the seriousness of this outbreak. Are you afraid that someone is going to scrutinize your behaviour and lack of action over the past five years? You refer to what you've done. As you know, what you've done amounts to absolutely nothing. You've reviewed some hospital charts, you've sent out some fact sheets; you haven't taken an overall, comprehensive look at each hospital to determine what happened and why and how we can contain it.

Why will you not listen to the public and give the public answers today in order that further deaths can be prevented?

Hon. George Smitherman: It's a little bit disappointing that in an attempt on the honourable member's part to politicize this, she has to make a characterization that says to people, thousands of them all across health care, that they've done nothing. She says in her comment that the people in health care in Ontario have done nothing, that the Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee has done nothing. She says that 14 infection control networks and all the people who work in support of those have done nothing, that the 137 infection control practitioners allocated to hospitals, including two at Joe Brant, did nothing.

I don't think the honourable member's characterizations are appropriate. But more to the point, we have the opportunity to move forward in a way that uses transparency as a powerful tool to get the action that people require all across the broad platform of hospitals. September 30: broad public reporting of information on all hospitals.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: It is absolutely shameful, as I speak to the Minister of Health, that he would try to deflect the responsibility to the health providers in this province. They are the only ones who have been on top of this issue. The hospital administrators, the nurses, the doctors and the cleaning staff have tried to do what they can without any help from this minister. This is the only individual who hasn't taken any action.

I say to you today that there are at least 300 deaths. In fact, I've said before that if you extrapolated, it could be 5,000. This is a complex, systemic issue. It needs to be looked at impartially and efficiently. You have an obligation to restore public confidence. I ask you one more time, will you establish an independent commission or, today, are we going to give the Ombudsman the responsibility to do what you refuse?

Hon. George Smitherman: We've given the responsibility to Dr. Michael Baker, an acknowledged expert in the matter at hand. We think it's important that on this important matter, the honourable member in her first question said that all that had been done in health care amounted to nothing. In her second question, she said, "Oh, no, it's just for political purposes that I want to be able to say that."

Instead, we think the prudent approach for Ontarians is to ask someone who is expert in the matter to be their voice on this and to lead Ontario forward with a broad degree of public reporting, with a level of transparency that will be extraordinarily powerful in its own right and which can be implemented very quickly. That is the path we choose. It's the path toward putting this information powerfully in the hands of Ontarians. This is a strong incentive to the right kind of performance, and this can happen very quickly. September 30 is the start date.

POVERTY

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: My question is to the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Last night, more than 100 people on fixed incomes, social assistance and minimum wage crowded into the native centre for a true consultation on poverty. No one was kept out and no one was silenced. More than anything else, attendees demanded (1) a living wage, (2) a substantial raise in social assistance, and (3) more affordable housing. I ask, why won't this government listen and commit to a $10.25-an-hour minimum wage now, 7,000 new housing starts this year, and a concrete plan right now to raise the incomes of all ODSP and all OW recipients above the poverty line? Why won't this minister give the poor what they need?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: For the first time ever we have a government that is committed to addressing the issue of poverty in a comprehensive way with measures and with timelines. Yet, the party opposite continues to undermine this process every step of the way. This is not about politics. This is about getting to work to make sure that kids in this province have the opportunities they need to achieve their full potential. It's about working together with people from all walks of life, from all perspectives, to actually develop that comprehensive strategy that will create an educated, healthy workforce and society. This is not about you, this is not about me; it's about making life a little bit better for kids who are living in poverty, for all people—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: The minister is very good at addressing the poor, but the poor don't need to be addressed; they need an address. More than 80 economists and dozens of antipoverty and labour groups have pleaded with the McGuinty government for a $10.25 minimum wage indexed to inflation now. I ask again, why won't this government raise the minimum wage immediately to above the poverty line? Why won't the minister give the poor what they need?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Over the weekend there was a very disturbing comment made by the leader of the third party. Howard Hampton in a party conference referred to those people participating in developing a poverty reduction strategy, people coming and attending and working hard together, as poverty pimps. So here's what I want to know: Whom is he talking about? Is he talking about the Kingston Coalition Against Poverty? Is he talking about the Anne LeSage's Thunder Bay Indian Friendship Centre? Is he talking about the CAW Community child care services? Is he talking about the Homeless Coalition of Windsor-Essex County? My question is this: Will Howard Hampton stand up and apologize?

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Stop the clock for a moment.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: I can see why the minister opposite doesn't want to speak—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thanks. Start the clock. Final supplementary.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of the groups that the minister opposite mentioned are the same groups that are demanding a $10.25-an-hour minimum wage right now. They're the same groups that are demanding affordable housing right—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Stop the clock. I just ask the members on the government side once again to tone it down. We're on our second-last day, we've got a class of grade 5s here to whom we constantly preach about having respect in the classroom. We need to have that same respect in here for one another. Please continue.

Ms. Cheri DiNovo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, all of the groups that are working in the antipoverty context are firmly on the side of a $10.25 minimum wage now. They're all firmly on the side of affordable housing now. They're all firmly on the side of an increase in ODSP and OW now. So I ask this minister opposite again, will she do what the poor demand? Will she give the poor what they need instead of attacking our leader?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I want to ask the member opposite and the members opposite if they agree with their leader. Do you think Big Brothers and Big Sisters are poverty pimps? The Salvation Army, the Hamilton Social Justice Coalition, St. Joseph's Immigrant Women's Centre, the Ottawa Food Bank, the mission shelter, the YMCA and YWCA, the United Way, are these people poverty pimps? If not, would you stand up and distance yourself from your leader's comments?

NUCLEAR ENERGY

Mr. Peter Tabuns: A question to the Minister of Energy: Nuclear power project cost overruns account for $15 billion of the nearly $20 billion of the stranded debt left by Ontario Hydro. Each month, every household and business in Ontario contributes to paying off this massive debt through debt retirement charges on every single hydro bill. Why is this government so intent on repeating history and committing Ontario to an expensive, unreliable $50-billion nuclear future?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: Let me say what we're committed to, and that is, implementing the plan we've laid out. It's our 20-year plan. It provides for reliable, affordable and environmentally sensitive electric power, in detail. It calls for conservation measures that are very aggressive but attainable: 6,300 megawatts, and that's where we all should start. It calls for doubling the use of renewables—wind, solar. It does call for maintaining our nuclear capacity.

The people of Ontario understand that we've produced electricity this way since the late 1960s. Last year, 2007, 52% of our electricity came from nuclear. What we guarantee the people of the province is that we have a very clear plan, one that's reliable, affordable and environmentally sensitive and provides for the right plan for the future.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: Minister, you make tremendous claims, but the reality is you've moved very slowly on renewable energy and efficiency. You have shut down renewable energy projects. You have not been moving on getting hydro power from Quebec or Manitoba at the speed we need.

You've been in power for five years. We aren't seeing the tougher efficiency standards for appliances, more aggressive building codes. Will you simply admit that your inaction is forcing you to repeat history and go to a repeat of Darlington, $2.5 billion to start with and over $14 billion at the end of the day? Will you admit that you've simply boxed this province into a corner?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: Again, we'll deal with the facts, and that is, we've laid our 20-year plan. I would say to the public that we have what we call a renewable energy standard offer program. We thought we would get, over 10 years, 1,000 megawatts. After 18 months, a year and a half, we got 1,500 megawatts. We're 50% above our 10-year target.

On conservation, I think we're very aggressive. In fact, the chief conservation officer has indicated we've exceeded our target for 2007 by a fair bit. Although I would say to all of us, all that is, in my opinion, is the first lap of a long-distance race on conservation.

I'd just say to the public, we have this 20-year plan laid out in detail for affordable, reliable, environmentally sensitive electricity. Part of it is to maintain what we provide on nuclear. Again, I would say that 52% of our electricity last year came from nuclear. We plan to maintain essentially that capacity—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Final supplementary.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: The facts are that nuclear cost overruns have plagued every nuclear project in this province and have resulted in more than $15 billion in stranded debt. Your energy approach has not taken us down the path of affordable energy and good-paying jobs by creating clean, affordable power. Even recently, you closed down renewable energy projects that were coming forward in this province. Why are you going ahead full throttle with a $50-billion nuclear megaproject before your own energy plan is approved by the OEB?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: Just again for the public's sake, in terms of the process we're following, we've learned some lessons from Darlington. We are going through a competitive process. We have three very good companies that are in the request-for-proposal stage: Areva, AECL and Westinghouse. So it will be a competitive process.

It was single-sourced, I might add. Last time, the project started, stopped, started, stopped. We've learned from that. This project we have on a very firm timetable, a very firm track, using the competitive process.

So I'd say to the public, we've got a plan spelled out in detail which will provide us with 20 years of affordable, reliable and environmentally sensitive electricity. I'm very happy with the plan, and as I said in one of the answers earlier, I think this provides us with a long-term competitive edge economically.

SCHOOL SAFETY

Mr. Frank Klees: My question is to the Minister of Education. Yesterday, the minister confirmed in this House that the proper protocol was in place when a principal failed to report an assault on a 6-year-old student in a York region school. She also confirmed that the reporting protocol was not followed. Then she said this: "What we need to do is make sure that we have the right enforcement mechanisms." The York Regional Police agree with the minister. When asked if charges were laid against the principal, Constable Marina Orlovski said this: "They were considered and dismissed. The required elements for the charges were not there ... based on the wording of the act." That's why we've been calling on the minister to change the wording of the act so that in fact charges can be laid.

I ask one more time of the minister: Will she agree to bring legislation forward that will enable charges to be laid for failure to report?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: I appreciate the member opposite's vigilance on this. I think it's very important from the perspective of everyone in this House that we have the correct protocols and the correct legislation in place so that reporting mechanisms are appropriate. What we are doing is looking at the various pieces of legislation that have reporting mechanisms in place. We're looking to see whether there are gaps and whether there is a need to change the legislation.

As I have said to this member many times, the protocol was in place. It was breached. The actions of the board were taken in light of the action of the principal. What we are doing is looking at those pieces of legislation, and we will act to rectify any gaps that are in place.

Mr. Frank Klees: The Child and Family Services Act makes it an offence for school officials to fail to report incidents of child abuse at the hands of a parent. If convicted, the school officials face a fine of $1,000. I've pointed out on numerous occasions that there is no similar provision in this act or any other legislation in the province with respect to a school official being required to report student-on-student assault or abuse.

In light of this example, in light of what we have heard from the York Regional Police, that they are unable to lay charges, this is a simple matter. We don't need another investigation or a long committee. What we need is for the minister to simply acknowledge that she is on the side of parents, on the side of students, on the side of the police, and that she will bring in an amendment—

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: I am on the side of children. I am on the side of parents. I have said clearly that from a parent's perspective, it is inappropriate to me that a parent was not informed of this incident. I have been very clear about that. In fact, that is the nature of the breach of the protocol that happened in this case.

It will come as no surprise to anyone in this House that I, as the Minister of Education, am not going to endorse policy on the basis of the member opposite's recommendation without having considered all of the aspects that are in place in other pieces of legislation. It is my responsibility to be judicious, to look at the interaction between pieces of legislation and to take the advice of experts and legal advice. That is what my parliamentary assistant, the member for Guelph-Wellington, is doing with the safe schools action team. I will be taking the advice of the safe schools action team in the fall.

ACCESS TO EDUCATION

Mr. Rosario Marchese: To the same minister: In 2006, 15-year-old Kimberly Lizano-Sossa and her 14-year-old brother Gerald were arrested by immigration officers while at school and subsequently deported. In Toronto alone, more than 20% of immigrant children are still being denied a role in public schools because of their immigration status. Children shouldn't be afraid to go to school, and schools shouldn't be pawns in immigration battles.

In 2005, you amended the Education Act, and you said that would never happen again. Why are you now unwilling to enforce the act and protect these children's right to an education?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: It is the position of this government—and in fact we changed the legislation; we changed the Education Act to provide an education for every child who comes to the doorstep of a publicly funded school in this province. That is the legislation, and that is the position of this government. I know that there are and there may be situations where there are questions asked and where there's information attained. I'm not going to comment on a specific case. The position of this government is that if a child lives in Ontario and is in a position and wants to go to a publicly funded school, that child has a right to an education. That is our legislation.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: Some 20% of immigrant children are being denied access to a school. What is the point of having a law that you yourself introduced in this place in 2005 if you're not going to enforce it? You should be telling all boards in Ontario, in no uncertain terms, that all children must be accepted in school regardless of their status. Why aren't you adopting the Toronto District School Board's "don't ask, don't tell" policy to ensure that children can learn without fearing the fate of Kimberly and Gerald?

Minister, are you going to enforce your own law or continue to pretend the problem is not yours?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: In December 2004, we sent a policy memorandum to all school boards, and what we said was that all school boards must allow children to come to school, whatever their immigration status.

The fact is that there may be incidents and there may be situations where a student is denied access. That is not the policy of this government. Certainly, I will continue to make it clear to boards of education that the law must be enforced and children must be allowed to enter school.

MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURE FUNDING

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: My question is to the Minister of Public Infrastructure Renewal. In the 2008 budget, our government announced $1 billion in new funding for municipal infrastructure. This new funding is desperately needed in high-growth communities like Peel and various other municipalities across this province. Obviously, we welcome this timely investment, because we know that these projects will help build stronger communities, boost our productivity and help stimulate job growth in the province.

Minister, can you tell this House how these investments in our infrastructure will not only help our cities, but help improve our economic advantage?

Hon. David Caplan: I'd like to thank the member for the question, because it is a very important one. As a part of our 2008 budget, our government launched a massive municipal infrastructure investment initiative: some $450 million invested into communities, large and small, 243 of which are building, renovating and expanding local infrastructure, including roads, water, sewers, community centres and other public facilities.

Communities across the province were asked to submit construction-ready and high-priority local infrastructure projects. Our government wanted to see projects under way in the upcoming construction season so that the benefits can be delivered both in the short term for employment and in the long term for economic and social benefits such as health, safety and social services. I'm very pleased to report to the member that in fact these announcements are not just simply that, but we are seeing shovels in the ground, cranes in the air, and the work has begun.

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: I want to thank the minister for addressing the question and for helping explain how these targeted investments in our infrastructure will help alleviate the economic challenges we're all facing.

Minister, what sorts of projects do you anticipate receiving requests for, and how will you prioritize these requests so we can get the highest and best results from these investments?

Hon. David Caplan: Blueprints are quickly turning into shovels in the ground and what will be a new fire station and emergency medical services facility in the town of Halton Hills, and I'll be pleased to join my colleague Mr. Arnott from across the way in Georgetown later this afternoon. It's a $1.9-million MIII grant awarded to this municipality for the project that they identified as both construction-ready and high on the list of local infrastructure needs. I should tell you that this was only one project of many in Halton region, as Halton region received approximately $10 million for key infrastructure projects right throughout the province.

Our government has a clear commitment to helping our municipal partners overcome their infrastructure challenges. This partnership shows that we can achieve our collective goal of a strong, resilient economy, continued growth and a better quality of life in communities right across this province. It's the budgetary policies of this government—

The Speaker: Thank you. New question.

PESTICIDES

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'd like to follow up on my question from the other day to the Minister of the Environment regarding Bill 64. There's been much doubt cast over the lack of scientific proof to support your banning of the use of cosmetic pesticides. First, we heard from the Premier that municipalities could go above and beyond your legislation, then we heard that this wasn't true. For months we all heard from you and the Premier that it's about public health, but we've heard from your own officials that this isn't the case. We've heard on a daily basis that municipalities, Health Canada and health experts are seriously questioning the legislation. Minister, you said the Premier is wrong; Health Canada is wrong; municipalities are wrong; farmers are wrong; small businesses are wrong. In light of many of the experts who have legitimate concerns, will you agree to province-wide hearings on the regulations of this bill?

Hon. John Gerretsen: Let me just start off by thanking the member for her question and telling her that she is wrong. We are going to pass the most progressive ban on the use of pesticides in Ontario that has ever been in any province in this country, and indeed in North America. We're doing something much better than banning the use of cosmetic pesticides; we're also going to ban the sale of the pesticides across this province. There is no ban more effective than banning the actual sale of pesticides.

We have been consistent right from the very beginning in our platform last October. We basically said we're going to ban the use of cosmetic pesticides in the province of Ontario, and secondly, we're also going to have a consistent, one-level playing field across this province. That's why we want to make sure that the ban that's going to go into effect—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary?

Ms. Laurie Scott: "Consistent" isn't the word that I would use. You don't even seem to be interested in accepting the advice of experts across Ontario. Your own Ontario pest advisory council is suggesting five years' implementation. You have ignored that expert advice. On top of all the others you say are wrong, you are now saying your own advisory council is wrong. Minister, it's clear you haven't thought this legislation through; you're literally making things up as you go along. Ontarians and children deserve real, meaningful action from the environment minister. Some 9,500 smog-related deaths are estimated to occur this year. Many of these are children.

Minister, can we chalk this so-called pesticide ban up as another McGuinty photo op and get on to talking about the real environmental issues facing the province?

Hon. John Gerretsen: The bill is about one thing and one thing only, and that is to help our citizens, particularly the youngest citizens, in our province. We're banning the use of cosmetic pesticides so that they will not be subjected to it on their lawns, their front yards, their backyards, their playgrounds, their gardens. That's who it's really all about. We want to make sure that they will be able to play out in the fields and out on their lawns in the best possible way. This has been endorsed by the Suzuki Foundation and by many other organizations as well. We are concerned about the health of our young people, and the banning of this particular pesticide use and sale across the province is going to take the effect of that. We certainly hope that we can count on the support of both opposition parties to make sure that we're united on this front and to make sure that the people of Ontario get the best possible protection as far as their health is concerned.

INJURED WORKERS

Mr. Paul Miller: My question is to the Minister of Labour. I have received many communications from Mr.

Darrell Powell, official witness to the Senate Subcommittee on Population Health, and Mr. Peter Clare, who are in the west gallery this morning. Both are committed representatives of injured workers. Mr. Clare's recent e-mail to the minister asked for a meeting of the minister with the WSIB chair, Steve Mahoney, to discuss the Ministry of Labour's legislative framework of the Workplace Safety and Insurance Act, 1997, as well as the WSIB's interpretation and application of the WSI Act as it pertains to injured workers on accepted benefit claims. Has the minister discussed this communication and its contents with Mr. Mahoney?

Hon. Brad Duguid: No, to the best of my knowledge, I don't recall having a discussion with the chair of the WSIB on this particular communication, but I thank the advocates for injured workers for being here today and certainly look forward to the work they do in working with us to reduce workplace injuries across this province.

Working together with the WSIB, with our injured workers, we've been able to reduce workplace injuries by 20% over the last four years. That's 50,000 workers who would have suffered a workplace injury, and their families. I think we're making progress on this front, but the fact is that we still have more work to do. That's why we look forward to working with the members in the gallery and others in this area to improve even more.

Mr. Paul Miller: Once again, I don't think that was an answer to my question. The WSIB process that Ms. Mathers's brother, Jeff Thompson, experienced—Ms. Mathers is in the west gallery—is believed to have been a factor in the stress, emotional and psychological problems that led to his death.

As Mr. Clare stated in his e-mail: "It is a well-known fact, the WSIB's administration of the WSI Act, 1997, may in a lot of instances cause disparity, mental/psychological and emotional problems as secondary conditions due to having to deal with the WSIB process. I feel if Mr. Mahoney were to hear from the grassroots level the problems we face as injured workers, perhaps he may change some of the WSIB's internal policies on how injured workers are treated by Mr. Mahoney's WSIB staff...."

Will this minister commit right now in this House to meet today with Mr. Clare, Mr. Powell and Ms. Mathers to strongly request that Mr. Mahoney attend this meeting—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister?

Hon. Brad Duguid: Again to Ms. Mathers, Mr. Clare and Mr. Powell I really express, on behalf the government, our sympathies for the difficulties they've gone through. It's always difficult for us to hear of some of the pain and suffering that injured workers experience.

That's why we've added 200 additional health and safety inspectors, to ensure that we're doing all we can to prevent workplace injuries, because the best way we can help injured workers is to prevent the injuries from happening in the first place. That's what we're determined to do.

I would be more than happy to meet with these particular individuals and others as we move forward to work together to make workplaces healthier and safer across this province.

AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Minister, I was dismayed to hear that more of my constituents could become homeless if the federal government does not renew funding for a national housing initiative. I understand that potentially 24 social agencies stand to lose funding when the homelessness partnership initiative expires.

Minister, as you can imagine, my constituents in Ottawa Centre are very concerned about this situation, especially when the most recent census indicates that 12% of the city of Ottawa's population lives on incomes that put it at risk of becoming homeless. You only need to realize that without the federal dollars, agencies will have to reduce programming and will be unable to assist those in need. As usual, the federal government has allowed those most in need to fall by the wayside, and many of my constituents are asking what our government is doing to help that 12% of the population.

Is this issue a concern to the minister, and can he please inform the House what he and the provincial government are doing to put pressure on the federal government?

Hon. Jim Watson: I think the honourable member from Ottawa Centre is a true advocate for housing needs in his city and his community in Ottawa. I too share the member's concern with respect to the lack of progress that provincial and territorial ministers across the country have made when it comes to getting the federal government engaged again in the affordable housing strategy.

In the last budget, for instance, the Canadian Housing and Renewal Association said, "When Minister Jim Flaherty stood to deliver the Conservative government's ... 2008 budget today, he left 1.5 million Canadians in desperate housing need on the outside looking in."

It took provincial and territorial ministers two and a half years to get a meeting with the federal minister, and we have yet to secure an arrangement to ensure that RAP funding and homelessness initiative funding does not run out on March 31 next year. We need all members, regardless of political stripe, to help us convince the federal government that they should be back in the affordable housing business in partnership with us and municipalities—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: However, you and I both realize that providing supportive housing to those in need requires a partnership, one that includes a federal government that is ready, willing and able to respond to the needs of the constituents in Ottawa.

One of the more troubling situations is the rising need for supportive housing for those dealing with addictions. I'm sure the minister is aware that dealing with addiction is not a stand-alone issue. It requires a variety of financial, social and mental supports from all levels of government. It requires a comprehensive strategy that recognizes the complexity of the issue: that addiction is a heartbreaking disease and that tackling addictions is a community effort.

Minister, can you tell this House about our government's strategy to provide supportive housing for those tackling these difficult challenges in Ottawa?

Hon. Jim Watson: I was very pleased to be in Ottawa with Premier McGuinty just about a week and a half ago when he announced a $5.5-million investment to provide assistance to those trying to conquer drug and alcohol addictions.

I want to thank the Minister of Health, because through his ministry, in the supportive housing program, we are in fact going to be providing over the next three years 1,000 supportive housing units that are going to be made available. Through the Ministry of Health and working in conjunction with housing providers throughout the province of Ontario, we've recognized that it's fine to build affordable housing, but those individuals that the member from Ottawa Centre spoke of who have addictions and challenges in their own lives need more than housing; they need a supportive environment. Through Minister Smitherman and through this member, we're delivering a drug rehab centre for young people in the city of Ottawa. We're very proud of that initiative and I know that the Minister of Health is planning on—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you very much.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Tim Hudak: A question for the minister responsible for consumers: Working families in Ontario are contemplating gas prices forecast to be $1.40 per litre or more this summer. This past week, as you know, mortgage rates have increased, prices for basic foods like pasta are up 26%, and bread is up 10% or more since last year. And that's all on top of Dalton McGuinty's higher taxes, new user fees and higher hydro rates. Minister, what exactly is your plan to give a break to Ontario consumers this summer?

Hon. Ted McMeekin: To the Minister of Energy.

Hon. Gerry Phillips: I'd like to comment on the last point the member made, and that is, electricity prices. I mentioned earlier in the House our 20-year plan for affordable, reliable and environmentally sensitive electricity. Just over the last four years, for the industrial sector, electricity prices have gone up a little less than inflation, and for residential people, just slightly more than inflation. So we've been doing what we can for the consumer on electricity prices.

On gasoline prices, I would say to him that the primary responsibility for dealing with the gasoline companies rests clearly with the federal government. It is the Competition Bureau. So if there's any issue around gasoline companies overcharging, it really would be the Competition Bureau—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary?

Mr. Tim Hudak: Obviously, the minister for consumer interests is doing nothing to give a break to Ontario consumers this summer and keeps passing it to the minister responsible for oil companies and hydro rate increases.

You know, Minister, while Dalton McGuinty and his entourage jet off to San Diego or use the government King Air plane to do a short hop from Toronto to Hamilton, Ontario families are paying more to put gas in their automobiles, to fill up their grocery carts or to power their homes. They are making significant sacrifices in this summer of increasing costs.

John Tory and the Ontario PC caucus have put forward a solid and thoughtful plan to eliminate the provincial sales taxes on accommodations and attractions so working families can have some quality time together this summer. Minister, will you support our plan to help Ontario families who are getting squeezed in Dalton McGuinty's Ontario?

Hon. Gerry Phillips: I go back to the point I made earlier in terms of Ontario families. We are working as hard as we possibly can to build the economy. I think the public is very wise. They understand that what we're dealing with here is that the price of oil has gone from about $30 in 2003 to $130 now. The US economy has gone soft. The Canadian dollar now is essentially at parity. In spite of these challenges, we are working as hard as we can on the economy. The unemployment rate is now, frankly, lower than when we assumed office because of the work that we've done with our private sector to create jobs. Our Premier is working very hard to attract industry to come to the province of Ontario.

I would just say, it's not been very helpful, frankly, for the federal minister to downplay Ontario. We would have been—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

DEVELOPMENT IN NIAGARA

Mr. Peter Kormos: A question to the Minister of Tourism. Why is the McGuinty government facilitating and accommodating the commercialization and privatization of the pristine parkland of the Niagara Parks along the Niagara River?

Hon. George Smitherman: I know that the honourable member will look forward to having an opportunity to speak directly to the Minister of Tourism about that. We have been in a position to strongly support the principle that Niagara is a region that obviously has tremendous economic capacity from the standpoint of tourism already, and accordingly, we think that it's very important to continue to work.

I will note to the honourable member that there has been a historic opportunity in this Legislature to demonstrate one's commitment to the greening of the province of Ontario, and not all members have participated equally in that. If the honourable member wishes to provide more specific information, we'll take a stab at a more specific answer.

Mr. Peter Kormos: Will the government then explain why it is permitting the Niagara Parks Commission to lease out the Miller's Creek Marina to a private operator, along with 45 acres of Niagara parkland to a developer for the goal of building condominiums and commercial shopping space? How is that consistent with the terms of reference of the Niagara Parks Commission?

Hon. George Smitherman: I do want to say to the honourable member that he first mentions a marina. I take that to be an existing operation and associated, presumably, with the operation of agencies is the responsibility to do all that is possible to generate revenue from available sources.

But as I mentioned in my earlier answer, there was an opportunity in this Legislature that all members had to demonstrate their strenuous commitment to the preservation of green space. We've created a greenbelt in the province of Ontario of 1.8 million square kilometres; very impressive, I think, insofar as that area was bigger than Prince Edward Island itself. On that very matter, not all members of the Legislature took the opportunity to demonstrate when it really mattered, when it really counted, as a matter of legislation, their strenuous desire to see green land protected. But it's nice to see the honourable member coming around.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: My question is for the Minister of Labour. All around Ontario, farmers are hard at work in the fields at this time of year to put food on their tables and ours. As we know, the agricultural sector plays a very important role in the economy of this province, but we also know that working on a farm can be very dangerous, especially around large animals and even larger farm equipment. I'm proud to say that many of my constituents in Lambton-Kent-Middlesex are farmers. Most of them hire full-time or seasonal workers as they go through their agricultural year. They are acutely aware of the hazards that face them and their workers each and every day. Minister, can you tell us and our farmers what your ministry is doing to improve the health and safety of this important group of domestic farm labour?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I want to begin by responding to the member for Lambton-Kent-Middlesex by just acknowledging the incredible work this particular member has done in representing the agricultural community.

I'm going to begin on a bit of a sombre note. Our ministry lost a very valuable member of our team over the weekend, and it's the member of our team who probably wrote the very information that I have in front of me here today. Her name was Wilma Davis, and she was our briefing and issues coordinator in the Ministry of Labour. On behalf of our Ministry of Labour team and the entire Legislature, I just want to take this opportunity to express our condolences to her family.

The end of this month—June 28—marks the third year since our government extended the Occupational Health and Safety Act to farming operations. This regulation provides our agricultural community and workers within it—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mrs. Maria Van Bommel: Thank you, Minister, and I know we all share in our sympathies for the family.

Residential farm workers are not the only ones, though, who work in the fields every day. Every year, more than 15,000 immigrant workers come to work on Ontario farms under the federal government's seasonal agricultural worker program. Many of those 15,000 come into Lambton-Kent-Middlesex to work on our tobacco, fruit and vegetable farms. Would the minister tell this House whether immigrant workers also have the same rights and protections that our domestic farm workers have?

Hon. Brad Duguid: Yes, absolutely, I can assure the member of the fact that foreign workers are treated the same way as all agricultural workers under the Occupational Health and Safety Act. When we extended the Occupational Health And Safety Act to farming operations, we gave agricultural workers the right to know about workplace hazards, the right to participate in workplace health and safety decisions and the right to refuse unsafe work. The results have been a reduction in workplace injuries and fatalities in the farming sector.

That being said, there are still workplace fatalities. There are still workplace injuries in the farming sector. I look forward as Minister of Labour, working with the Minister of Agriculture and the member opposite, who, as I said before, is an expert in agricultural issues, and working with our agricultural community to further reduce workplace injuries. It's something that's in all of our interests.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr. Gerry Martiniuk: My question is to the Minister of Revenue. Given the almost daily announcements of plant closures, job losses, rising gas and food prices, we understand that the government's projected revenues are already down by $1 billion for this fiscal year. Minister, can you confirm how much current government revenues are down from your projections?

Hon. Monique M. Smith: This is a question for the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Dwight Duncan: The member would know that Q1 results will be published towards the beginning of July. At that time, we'll have a sense. What we can say is that because of this government's initiatives, Ontario is responding to the challenges in our economy better than most economists predicted. The word they use is the resilience of our economy. If we didn't have a federal Conservative finance minister saying not to invest in Ontario and if we didn't have a federal government that continued to take advantage of the unemployed in your community, we wouldn't have all the challenges.

This government is responding with a prudent, balanced—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. Gerry Martiniuk: To paraphrase an old Buffalo TV question: Do you know where our billions are? It's surprising that the minister doesn't have the answer to this very simple question.

In order to balance the budget, the government has said it would find $1 billion in inefficiencies. We understand that the revenues are already down by $1 billion. The Premier has said he won't raise taxes but he won't cut services either. That means only one thing: a deficit, stealing from our children.

Minister, I ask you again, are the current government revenues down, and if so, by how much?

Hon. Dwight Duncan: As I say, the Q1 numbers, which we are not in possession of, will be available toward the beginning of July. But we do know where the money is. It's invested in skills training, which you voted against. It's invested in infrastructure, which is helping communities right across the province with short-term employment challenges and long-term productivity gains. You voted against that. It's invested in our health care system, and you and your colleagues want to take $3 billion out of health care. That is where the money is.

Is the economy challenged? Absolutely. Do we need a federal partner? Absolutely. Do we need a federal finance minister who doesn't slam Ontario as a bad place to live? Absolutely. Do we need your help? Do our employers and working people need the support of the opposition to invest in Ontario? Absolutely.

I'm glad to see you here today. I'm glad you got a question. Join—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you very much, Minister.

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Mr. Gilles Bisson: My question is to the Minister of the Environment. We all know that the environmental assessment rules are going to be changing later this month. My question is simply this: What does this change mean for the proposed Blue22 high-speed train line between downtown Toronto and Pearson airport?

Hon. John Gerretsen: As the member has rightly pointed out, the environmental assessment rules with respect to rapid transit are going to change. We're basically going to have a regulation that says that environmental assessments with respect to transit should be finished in six months. The reason for that is that we want to get on with the 52 projects and the $17.2 billion that we're investing on behalf of the people of Ontario to make sure that there's more transit available. More and better transit for the people of Ontario, particularly in the Golden Horseshoe area, is going to mean a better environment for everyone.

We look forward to this member's and his party's full support for transit projects that will be environmentally sensitive and that will be good for the environment and good for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Gilles Bisson: Minister, you know that tens of thousands of people who live along the Georgetown rail corridor, from downtown Toronto to north Etobicoke, are concerned about how these new environmental assessment rules will affect them. They have patiently waited for the environment minister to decide on the terms of reference for an environmental assessment for the high-speed train that would follow those old rules. Why have those terms of reference languished on the minister's desk for more than a year?

Hon. John Gerretsen: Currently under the environmental assessment, there are terms of reference that are subject to it, there's the overall plan that's subject to it and then the individual projects are subject to it. The environmental assessment process with respect to transit is simply taking too long. We want to make sure that the public is engaged. We want to make sure that the public will have full input in the environmental assessment process, but we also want the process to come to an end somewhere along the line so that we can build those transit projects which will be good for the environment and good for the people of Ontario.

COMMITTEE SITTINGS

Hon. Michael Bryant: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I believe we have agreement—I'm seeking consent to put forward a motion concerning the Standing Committee on Estimates.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Hon. Michael Bryant: I move that, notwithstanding the order of the House dated May 1, 2008, respecting the meeting times of committees, the Standing Committee on Estimates be authorized to meet today commencing at 3 p.m.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Agreed to.

VISITORS

Hon. Harinder S. Takhar: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I know it's not a point of order, but the guests that you recognized on my behalf earlier—I want to recognize the icon of the Indian film industry, Dev Anand, and our Consul General, Satish Mehta.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, and the minister does know that that was not a point of order.

PETITIONS

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mr. Jim Wilson: I want to thank the good people of the congregation of St. James church in Colgan for sending this petition to me.

"Whereas the legacy of Pope John Paul II reflects his lifelong commitment to international understanding, peace and the defence of equality and human rights;

"Whereas his legacy has an all-embracing meaning that is particularly relevant to Canada's multi-faith and multicultural traditions;

"Whereas, as one of the great spiritual leaders of contemporary times, Pope John Paul II visited Ontario during his pontificate of more than 25 years and, on his visits, was enthusiastically greeted by Ontario's diverse religious and cultural communities;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to grant speedy passage into law of the private member's bill An Act to proclaim Pope John Paul II Day."

I agree with this petition and I sign it.

HOME CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: I have a petition from SEIU and people from all over Ontario:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario government has continued the practice of competitive bidding for home care services; and

"Whereas the competitive bidding process has increased the privatization of Ontario's health care delivery, in direct violation of the Commitment to the Future of Medicare Act, 2004; and

"Whereas home care workers do not enjoy the same employment rights, such as successor rights, as all other Ontario workers have, which deprives them of termination rights, seniority rights and the right to move with their work when their employer agency loses a contract; ..."

They ask the assembly:

"(1) to immediately stop the competitive bidding for home care services so home care clients can receive the continuity and quality of care they deserve; and

"(2) to extend successor rights under the Labour Relations Act to home care workers to ensure the home care sector is able to retain a workforce that is responsive to clients' needs."

I fully support this petition, and will affix my name to it and send it with page Gregory.

COMMUNITY SAFETY

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: “To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas residents and community leaders in Ottawa want the government of Ontario to pass the safer communities and neighbourhoods act (SCAN) in order to rehabilitate problem properties that are used for criminal activity. Similar legislation is enacted in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and Yukon and recently passed in Newfoundland and Labrador; and

“Whereas the following community leaders have endorsed SCAN legislation: Ottawa Centre MPP Yasir Naqvi, city of Ottawa, the chief of the Ottawa police, Ottawa Police Service, Ottawa Police Services Board, Ottawa Neighbourhood Watch executive committee, Concerned Citizens for Safer Neighbourhoods, Eastern Ontario Landlord Organization, Friends and Tenants of Ottawa Community Housing, Hintonburg Community Association, Somerset Street Chinatown BIA and the Dalhousie Community Association;

“We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

“To pass the safer communities and neighbourhoods act, similar to the one enacted in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and Yukon, in order to rehabilitate problem properties in our neighbourhoods that are used for criminal activity.”

I fully agree with this petition, affix my signature and send it by way of page Doaa.

HOSPITAL SERVICES

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: “To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the government-appointed supervisor of the Huronia District Hospital ... has recommended a merger of HDH with the Penetanguishene General Hospital.... ; and

“Whereas the supervisor recommended changes to the governance of the hospital to eliminate community memberships and the democratic selection and governance of the hospital board and directors based on an ideology and not on the wishes of the community;

“Whereas the supervisor has also recommended the splitting up and divestment of the mental health centre in Penetanguishene, creating uncertainty in the future of mental health beds and services; and

“Whereas hospital mergers and restructuring under the local health integration network can result in a loss in the total number of hospital beds and services provided to a community,

“Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

“We call on the government of Ontario to:

“Protect the current level of beds and services at all sites in Midland and Penetanguishene; and

“Protect the community memberships and the democratic governance of the new hospital created by the merger of HDH and PGH.”

I'm pleased to sign this and give it to Charles to present to the table.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Mike Colle: I have a petition here from the Lawrence Veterinary Clinic and Janice Jones from Lindsay, Ontario, on animal protection.

“To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919; and

“Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability; and

“Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

“We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends.”

I support this petition and I give it to page Christopher G.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Robert Bailey: “To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the current Liberal government is proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from its place at the beginning of daily proceedings in the Legislature....

“Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature.”

I affix my signature to that as well.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: “To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network ... board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan....

“Whereas, despite the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history....

“Whereas one of the factors for the successful treatment of patients in the mental health unit is support from family and friends, and the distance to Centenary Health Centre would negatively impact on the quality care for residents of Ajax and Pickering; and

“Whereas it is also imperative for Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service to our Ajax-Pickering hospital, which now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain the badly needed 20-bed mental health unit."

I affix my signature and pass this to Ellen.

LORD'S PRAYER

Mr. Bill Murdoch: I have petitions, as you can see, from all over my riding—they've been here for quite some time—on the Lord's Prayer. From the surprise motion that was given to us last Thursday that was passed and I would have agreed with, I feel that these people have the right to have their petition read in the House. It's to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the current Liberal government" was "proposing to eliminate the Lord's Prayer from daily proceedings in the Ontario Legislature....

"Therefore we, the undersigned, ask the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to preserve the daily recitation of the Lord's Prayer by the Speaker in the Legislature."

I appreciate what you're doing. I've also signed these.

WYE MARSH WILDLIFE CENTRE

Mr. Bob Delaney: It's a pleasure to support my colleague in Simcoe North with this petition for the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre, located in the township of Tay, manages approximately 3,000 acres of environmentally sensitive land which is owned by the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas over 50,000 people visit the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre each year; and

"Whereas over 20,000 students from across Ontario visit the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre each year, receiving curriculum-based environmental education not available in schools; and

"Whereas the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre receives no stable funding from any level of government;

"We, the undersigned, petition the province of Ontario to establish a reasonable and stable long-term funding formula so that the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre can continue to operate and exist into the future."

It's a pleasure to sign this petition and to ask page Aaron to carry it for me.

HIGHWAY 35

Ms. Laurie Scott: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines to communities across Ontario and crucial to the growth of Ontario's economy; and

"Whereas the Ministry of Transportation has been planning the expansion of Highway 35; and

"Whereas Highway 35 provides an important economic link in the overall transportation system, carrying commuter, commercial and high tourist volumes to and from the Kawartha Lakes area and Haliburton;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Liberal government move swiftly to complete the four-laning of Highway 35 after the completion of the final public consultation."

It's signed by many people from my riding, and I'm handing it over to page Rachele.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Charles Sousa: This is a petition to support Bill 50, the Provincial Animal Welfare Act. The petition reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919; and

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability; and

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept; and

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight; and

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I have signed the petition, and I provide it to Murray.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: "Petition to the Ontario Legislative Assembly:

"Western Mississauga ambulatory surgery centre:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I'm pleased to sign that and give it to Christopher to present to the House.

GRAFFITI

Ms. Laurel C. Broten: "To the Legislature of Ontario:

"Whereas graffiti creates a nuisance that can adversely affect property values, business opportunities and the enjoyment of community life;

"Whereas graffiti promotes a sense of disrespect for private property, and a perception that laws protecting public and private property can be disregarded with impunity;

"Whereas it is important that everyone do their part in keeping both public and private properties free of graffiti in order to maintain community pride and confidence;

"Whereas the quick removal of graffiti from walls, fences and other structures is critical to maintaining community cleanliness and beauty; it is always true that the prevention is the best policy;

"Accordingly we, the undersigned, petition the Legislature:

"To impose certain conditions on the sale of spray paint, broad-tipped marker pens, paint pens, glass-cutting tools and glass-etching tools or instruments of graffiti and to make it be unlawful for any person, other than a parent, legal guardian, school teacher or law enforcement officer in the performance of duty, to sell, exchange, give, deliver, loan, or otherwise furnish or permit to be sold, exchanged, given, delivered or loaned any prohibited graffiti material to any minor unless the minor is accompanied by their parent or legal guardian."

I agree with this petition. I'll be adding my name to it.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Bill Murdoch: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Grey Bruce Health Services, Markdale hospital is the only health care facility between Owen Sound and Orangeville on the Highway 10 corridor;

"Whereas the community of Markdale has been promised a new state-of-the-art hospital in Markdale;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care announce as soon as possible its intended construction date for the new Markdale hospital and ensure that the care needs of the patients and families of our community are met in a timely manner."

I've also signed it.

POWER PLANT

Mrs. Julia Munro: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas in our understanding the Ontario Power Authority, under a directive from the Honourable Gerry Phillips, Minister of Energy, is planning to select a private developer to build and subsequently own an expensive, fossil-fuel-burning, large-scale power plant in York-Simcoe to address speculative future demand;

"We, the undersigned, respectfully ask the McGuinty government to be on the right side of history by rescinding this outdated and outmoded decision by placing the economic, environmental and health concerns of Ontarians first, rather than the corporate interests of a known polluting industry;

"Furthermore, we request that contemporary alternatives be sought and a renewed emphasis on energy conservation be launched."

WYE MARSH WILDLIFE CENTRE

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: This is another group of about 1,000 signatures on the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre, located in the township of Tay, manages approximately 3,000 acres of environmentally sensitive land which is owned by the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas over 50,000 people visit the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre each year; and

"Whereas over 20,000 students from across Ontario visit the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre each year, receiving curriculum-based environmental education not available in schools; and

"Whereas the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre receives no stable funding from any level of government;

"We, the undersigned, petition the province of Ontario to establish a reasonable and stable long-term funding formula so that the Wye Marsh Wildlife Centre can continue to operate and exist into the future."

I'm pleased to sign that and give it to my good friend Murray Fallis, who has been a great page here, to present to the table.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Bob Delaney: I have a petition to the Ontario Legislative Assembly. It's signed by a number of people, generally in the Erin Mills area of Mississauga. It reads as follows:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

“Whereas ‘day surgery’ procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

“We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

“That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to ‘day surgery’ procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed.”

I’m pleased to sign and to support this petition and to ask page Christopher to carry it for me.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for petitions has ended. This House stands recessed until 3 p.m. this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1206 to 1500.

MEMBERS’ STATEMENTS

BARB COWIESON

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I understand that under the rules, as leader of the official opposition I’m unable to participate in members’ statements, but I understand we have unanimous consent for me to participate today?

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Mr. Robert W. Runciman: Thank you very much, Speaker.

When I arrived at the Legislature way back in 1981, I met a lady who had already been at Queen’s Park for seven years, not as an MPP but as a member of the PC caucus administration team. That lovely lady, Barbara Cowieson, is still here. In fact, she’s sitting in the members’ gallery today.

Barb is currently serving as director of PC services—she’s been in that role since 1995—but has regrettably decided to move on and explore new challenges. In an amazing 34 years at the park—even more than Norm Sterling—Barb has seen a lot of changes, from manual typewriters to high-speed Internet, all three parties serving in government and a parade of passing faces in the Legislature.

Barb was born in Cape Breton—I won’t mention the year—and moved to Toronto at the tender age of 18. She’s led a very interesting life since becoming an Ontarian. I’ll just touch on a few aspects.

Barb’s a biker. She owns her own chopper, and no, she doesn’t belong to any gangs. She and her husband, Bob, are avid sailors. They sail out of Kingston, John. When they bought their boat, a 30-footer, Bob thought he could be the captain, but he quickly found out that Barb was the admiral. Barb’s owned and managed rental properties, including a 15-unit apartment building. She’s even helped to gut and rebuild several properties—and on and on.

Barb has had a busy, exciting and rewarding life, but at the end of the day her first priority has always been her family, her two sons, Scott and Ryan, and hubby, Bob.

Barb, we’re going to miss you around this place. You’ve made an enormous contribution to your party and your province. I know I speak on behalf of all members and staff of the three parties represented in this place. Best of luck, thank you and God speed.

CHINESE CANADIAN HEAD TAX REDRESS DAY

Mr. Peter Tabuns: This coming Sunday, the Chinese community will be marking Head Tax Redress Day. In 2006, I filed a resolution in this chamber to have Ontario recognize June 22 as Chinese Canadian Head Tax Redress Day in Ontario. It was passed with all-party support on October 4, 2006.

We were honoured by the presence of the Chinese community in the chamber. The Chinese Canadian community has played a pivotal role in making Ontario a more prosperous and just society.

The tireless effort of the community at large, and the formal head tax redress campaign, which turns 24 years old this year, to ensure a formal apology for the Chinese Exclusion Act and redress for the head tax has helped turn the page from a dark chapter in Canada’s history.

Head tax survivors, their descendants, activists from the Chinese Canadian National Council and the Ontario Coalition of Head Tax Payers and Families have pursued resolution to an injustice. June 22 also provides the opportunity to express the tremendous debt we feel towards the Chinese Canadian community for its contribution in building Ontario’s prosperity.

Thanks to all those who have and continue to fight for justice and fairness.

PEEL’S ABORIGINAL CELEBRATION

Mr. Kuldip Kular: On June 7, I was honoured to attend Peel region’s first annual celebration of aboriginal culture and heritage on behalf of my colleagues. A Gathering: Peel’s Aboriginal Celebration was sponsored by Region of Peel Children’s Services and hosted at Sheridan College’s Davis campus. This provincially funded event was a great success, attracting an audience of some 800 visitors and guests and almost 50 performing groups and vendors.

The theme of this year’s celebration, “Seven Grandfather Teachings,” was imparted through First Nations’ drumming and dancing, Metis fiddlers, Inuit throat singers, storytellers and the traditional teachings of elders. The celebration succeeded in entertaining a diverse audience and, importantly, in raising the awareness of Peel residents, aboriginal and non-aboriginal, about the rich culture and heritage of Canada's first people and the challenges they face.

The aboriginal community in Peel region has experienced immense growth in recent years. Strong growth presents new challenges. Many aboriginal families experience gaps in child services and programs that leave them disadvantaged when it comes to education. This government's Best Start program is crucial to improving their chances for a stronger education because it helps to close these gaps in services and programs for children at a critical age in their development.

Peel's Aboriginal Celebration deserves recognition for its value in educating the public and offering the opportunity for outreach and engagement with the aboriginal community. I congratulate the organizers on their great success and look forward to attending next year's celebration.

BRUCE-GREY-OWEN SOUND AWARD WINNERS

Mr. Bill Murdoch: Today I want to acknowledge the accomplishments of people from my riding of Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound on the national and provincial stage.

On Tuesday, June 9, I had the privilege of meeting with three students who competed at the Canada Wide Science Fair in Ottawa. Megan Schlorff of Hanover won two gold medals and also received the Actuarial Foundation of Canada Award for her project entitled Let the River Flow, where she investigated the Saugeen River watershed. Jenna Schlorff of Hanover won two silver medals and three other awards for her project Think Fast. Jen investigated the difference in reaction time and stopping distances of drivers following LED-brake-light-equipped vehicles versus standard incandescent brake tail lights. Laurissa Christie of Owen Sound won the bronze for her project, What's the Buzz?, which investigated the recent problem of honey bee colony collapse in North America. Josie Mielhausen of Lion's Head earned an honourable mention, while Vaibhavi Solanki of Hanover tested her first-ever science project at the Canada Wide Science Fair.

I would also like to acknowledge a local brewery, Neustadt Springs Brewery, whose Neustadt Scottish Pale Ale was named the Speaker's selection winner at the first-ever Speaker's craft beer tasting competition held here at Queen's Park on June 3. This deep, golden, full-flavoured beer, brewed in traditional Scottish style, beat out 46 other Ontario beers and will now be available at the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

ONTARIO WINE WEEK

Mr. Bruce Crozier: Today I rise to remind everyone that the third week in June is Ontario Wine Week. It's the week that was set aside by my private member's bill, passed some three years ago, in which we celebrate the success and the taste of Ontario wines.

We have four great wine regions in the province of Ontario, being Prince Edward county, of course the Niagara Peninsula, Pelee Island and Lake Erie North Shore. From those four areas, we have wines that are getting better and better every year.

Today is when the Ontario Wine Awards will be announced by the Wine Council of Ontario, so we look forward to singling out some of those special wines that are worthy of that award.

What I want to encourage you to do—and I know, Speaker, that you're a great supporter of this—is to, beyond just this week, in the rest of the summer and the rest of the year, keep in mind the great wines that are produced in Ontario. This summer, take a little time: Tour Prince Edward county, tour the Niagara Peninsula, and come on down into the Essex area and tour the Lake Erie North Shore and maybe go to Pelee Island. Enjoy some great Ontario wines this summer.

SCI-TECH ONTARIO

Mr. Robert Bailey: It was my pleasure to have two students from my riding of Sarnia-Lambton here last week as part of the Sci-Tech Ontario presentation. Christopher Chopcian from Hanna Memorial elementary school and Llew Falla from Northern Collegiate Institute and Vocational School were both here to demonstrate their award-winning submissions.

1510

Christopher's project was entitled Control Innovations for Quadriplegics, and it was a mobile human-machine interface that is designed to enable people with spinal injuries to control different appliances just with a nod of their head. For this invention, Christopher won two gold medals, something that is very rare at the national science fair.

Llew's project was called CH<sub>4</sub> Optimization of Biowaste via Microbial Fuel Cell Control. This was a green energy project in which he designed a microbial fuel cell that shows it is possible to simultaneously generate methane gas and electricity. This would show great promise in creating both a carbon-neutral and a renewable energy system. He will be attending an international science fair with his project.

I would like to congratulate both Christopher and Llew. Their parents, friends and teachers should be very proud of them.

POLO FOR HEART

Ms. Helena Jacek: This weekend I will be attending Polo for Heart, Canada's largest and most prestigious international charity polo tournament, in my riding of Oak Ridges-Markham. Taking place at the Gormley Polo Centre, it will feature various fun events, including the pony parade, and will be highlighted by polo matches between the Toronto Polo Club and visiting teams from around the world.

Polo for Heart originated in the 1970s when Colonel Michael Sifton of the Toronto Polo Club partnered with the heart action committee to present a polo series for charity. The charitable tournament raised $25,000 in 1979 and has since raised over $3.5 million for heart disease and stroke research.

The beneficiaries of this exciting three-day event are the Southlake Regional Health Centre's regional cardiac care program and the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Ontario's Chase McEachern tribute fund. The Chase McEachern fund raises funds to provide automated external defibrillators, or AEDs, to the public, situated in public places and buildings across Ontario.

In addition, I wish to thank this year's chairperson, Gabrielle Spanton, and her dynamic team, who have worked tirelessly to put the event together. It is expected Polo for Heart will raise an estimated $250,000 in proceeds this year. I have attended this event several times in the past—it is wonderfully colourful and exciting, and we're praying for good weather. Best wishes to Polo for Heart this weekend.

EVENTS IN MISSISSAUGA SOUTH

Mr. Charles Sousa: I rise today to talk about some great events happening on the waterfront this summer in my riding of Mississauga South.

This past weekend, many local volunteers helped to host the annual Mississauga Waterfront Festival. The festival has become a highly anticipated tradition in our community, offering three days of headline musicians and bands. The many events are welcomed by children, parents and local businesses alike.

It is worthy to note the generosity of the organizers, volunteers and sponsors who provide outstanding charity during the festival. This year, through their Sponsor a Child program, approximately 4,000 kids and parents received free admission, food vouchers and tickets for carnival rides.

I would like to extend my thanks and congratulations to the chair of the waterfront festival, Pat Anderson, and all the volunteers who make the festival a resounding success year after year, rain or shine.

There is plenty to look forward to on Mississauga's waterfront this summer. On Canada Day, I invite everyone to participate in our Paint the Town Red celebrations. Great home-grown local bands and school groups will be performing, and of course there will be plenty of fireworks.

We also look forward to the annual Buskerfest in mid-August, where 20 buskers will perform their unique talents in this street festival. Then, in early September, the waterfront will host the Southside Shuffle Blues and Jazz Festival.

The waterfront in Mississauga is a real gem, and it's great events like these that truly make it a destination spot. I encourage all Ontarians to consider making a trip to Mississauga's waterfront village festivals this summer.

WESTFEST 2008

Mr. Yasir Naqvi: I'm pleased to rise in the House today and tell members about Westfest 2008, a five-day festival that recently took place in my riding of Ottawa Centre.

Between June 11 and 15, Richmond Road in my riding was closed to celebrate Westfest 2008, the Westboro village's festival of music, art and life. Since the inaugural one-day festival just five short years ago, Westfest has become one of Ottawa's main summer festivals and includes a diverse celebration of music, art, literature, dance, performance arts and theatre.

One of the remarkable things about Westfest is that it is 100% free of charge and 100% of the profits from the artists' merchandise is returned to the artists. In addition, Westfest takes pride in being environmentally friendly, and this year introduced compostable beer cups made from corn recycling containers.

This year, I was pleased to have the opportunity to visit Westfest and join with hundreds of community members in the Celebration of Canadian Aboriginal Women in Music. I would like to congratulate Elaina Martin, founder and executive director, along with all the volunteers for their hard work and dedication to the success of this event.

ANNUAL REPORT, OMBUDSMAN

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I beg to inform the House that I have today laid upon the table the 2007-2008 Annual Report of the Ombudsman.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

COMITÉ PERMANENT DE LA POLITIQUE SOCIALE STANDING COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL POLICY

M. Shafiq Qaadri: Je demande la permission de déposer un rapport du Comité permanent de la politique sociale et je propose son adoption.

I beg leave to present a report from the Standing Committee on Social Policy and move its adoption and send it to you by way of a nameless page.

The Clerk-at-the-Table (Ms. Lisa Freedman): Your committee begs to report the following bill as amended: Bill 64, An Act to amend the Pesticides Act to prohibit the use and sale of pesticides that may be used for cosmetic purposes / Projet de loi 64, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les pesticides en vue d'interdire l'usage et la vente de pesticides pouvant être utilisés à des fins esthétiques.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Shall the report be received as adopted?

Agreed? All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

The bill is therefore ordered for third reading.

Report adopted.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

LAKE SIMCOE PROTECTION ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR LA PROTECTION DU LAC SIMCOE

Mr. Gerretsen moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 99, An Act to protect and restore the ecological health of the Lake Simcoe watershed and to amend the Ontario Water Resources Act in respect of water quality trading / Projet de loi 99, Loi visant à protéger et à rétablir la santé écologique du bassin hydrographique du lac Simcoe et à modifier la Loi sur les ressources en eau de l'Ontario en ce qui concerne un système d'échange axé sur la qualité de l'eau.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

First reading agreed to.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The minister for a short statement?

Hon. John Gerretsen: I'll wait until ministerial statements.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SITTINGS

Hon. Monique M. Smith: I move that the following committees be authorized to meet during the summer adjournment, in accordance with the schedule of meeting dates agreed to by the three party whips and tabled with the Clerk of the Assembly, to examine and inquire into the following matters:

The Standing Committee on Estimates to consider the estimates of certain ministries;

The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to review the Ontario health premium, in accordance with section 29.2 of the Income Tax Act;

The Standing Committee on General Government to consider Bill 90, An Act to enact the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act, 2008, to repeal the Colleges Collective Bargaining Act and to make related amendments to other Acts;

The Standing Committee on Government Agencies to conduct reviews of agencies, boards and commissions pursuant to standing order 107(f);

The Standing Committee on Justice Policy to consider Bill 50, An Act to amend the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act;

The Standing Committee on Public Accounts to consider the reports of the Auditor General;

The Standing Committee on Social Policy to review the Personal Health Information Protection Act, 2004, pursuant to subsections 75(a) and 75(b) of the act, and to consider Bill 77, An Act to provide services to persons with developmental disabilities, to repeal the Developmental Services Act and to amend certain other statutes; and

That the committees be authorized to release reports by depositing a copy of any report with the Clerk of the Assembly during the summer adjournment, and that upon resumption of the meetings of the House, the chairs of such committees shall bring any such reports before the House in accordance with the standing orders.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Ms. Smith has moved that the following committees be authorized to meet during the summer adjournment in accordance with the schedule of meeting dates agreed to by the three party whips—

Interjections: Dispense.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

Is the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Agreed to.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

Hon. John Gerretsen: Today, I'm honoured to rise and introduce the proposed Lake Simcoe Protection Act. Let me begin by reminding members of the commitment that Premier McGuinty made to protect Lake Simcoe nearly one year ago; we're delivering on that commitment.

I'd like to quote from Stephen Leacock, one of Ontario's literary greats who, of course, lived on Lake Simcoe in Orillia. He once wrote:

"The islands of the Aegean Sea have been regarded for centuries as a scene of great beauty ... the Mediterranean coast of France and the valleys of the Pyrenees are a charm to the enchanted eye.... But to my thinking, none of those will stand comparison with the smiling beauty of the waters, shores and bays of Lake Simcoe."

That smiling beauty is part of the great legacy of this province. We must honour and preserve that legacy so that it will be there for our children and their children, and for generations of Ontarians to enjoy.

But these waters haven't always been treated with respect. For close to 200 years, Lake Simcoe has been under stress. Human activities have significantly affected the watershed, the landscape has been changed, water quality has been degraded and shoreline vegetation, wildlife and natural systems have been altered during that time. To that, we add the pressures of population growth, urban and rural development, new invasive species and, of course, climate change.

Our government cannot and will not allow that damage to continue unabated. We have seen some signs of modest recovery in recent years, but strong actions are still needed to restore the natural balance of the Lake Simcoe ecosystem. And that's what we aim to do by bringing forward new, proposed legislation that would set the framework for developing a long-term protection plan for the lake and its watershed.

It will include regulating protection of critical shoreline areas, including its rivers, creeks and wetlands, to protect water quality, and it will provide the authority to create the new Lake Simcoe protection plan and set the scope of that plan. This plan will directly affect key decisions involving activities that may cause harm to the ecological health of the watershed. The plan would allow us to adapt our efforts to respond to new challenges like climate change and invasive species, and it would ensure the promotion of environmentally sustainable land use and development practices.

Our government will also be investing $20 million over the next four years for stewardship, science and monitoring actions, and for implementing the long-term plan to protect Lake Simcoe. Farmers are and have been doing good work to reduce the amount of phosphorus going into the lake, but more needs to be done, and we will help them.

A large part of our $20-million funding commitment is earmarked for enhancing existing funding programs for implementing the best agricultural practices. This will help farmers with the cost of putting in place measures to reduce agricultural impacts on the lake, and we will consult with farmers on the best ways to do this.

What we are proposing today will build on the work that was already done some 20 years ago. We have already put in place new interim limits on phosphorus discharges for sewage plants. We've appointed a Lake Simcoe science advisory committee, which in fact is meeting today on Georgina Island with the aboriginal community. We've also established a stakeholder advisory committee, and today, I know that they're meeting here for the second time at Queen's Park. I want to make special mention of the members of the committee who are joining us in the House today. We have Gayle Wood, the committee chair and CAO of the Lake Simcoe Region Conservation Authority. Gayle is with us in the gallery. I especially want to thank the Lake Simcoe conservation authority for the leadership that it has taken over the last 20 years through the Lake Simcoe environmental management strategy, on which much of the new bill and plan will be based.

Also with us are Jessica Annis of BILD; Gary Gregoris of Mattamy Homes; Mayor Harry Hughes of Oro-Medonte; Karen Kraft Sloan, former Canadian ambassador to the UN for the environment; and Claire Malcomson, coordinator of Campaign Lake Simcoe. I notice in the public galleries there are a number of individuals who have worked very hard and are very much interested in the lake as well.

We have consulted extensively with Ontarians through the Lake Simcoe discussion paper already. I personally attended the workshops and public information forums that were held in both Barrie and Newmarket. We will continue to work with Ontarians to develop the plan.

People are truly passionate about protecting our lakes and waterways. They know how important our fresh-water resources are to life in Ontario. More than 350,000 people live in the Lake Simcoe watershed, and in the summer that number grows to around 400,000. Around $200 million a year is generated for the local economy through tourism, fishing and boating. Eight communities get their drinking water from the lake. An estimated $300 million is generated by agricultural production each and every year. The Lake Simcoe watershed is also home to 58 species of fish and 65 species that are at risk.

There is no question that these waters are essential to our people's health, to our success and to our overall quality of life. We have a duty to the future to ensure that we leave our environment in better shape than we found it, and that's what we plan to do through the act and its plan.

Today we are taking an important step forward to protect and sustain the waters, the ecosystem and the beauty of Lake Simcoe.

I urge all members to support our proposed legislation and look forward to the debate that undoubtedly will occur.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Statements by ministries? Responses?

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I'm very happy to respond today to the minister on the proposed Lake Simcoe Protection Act and the plan that will follow it. I'm going to be sharing my time with Mrs. Munro. We both have around 100 kilometres of Lake Simcoe shoreline in our ridings, so it's not hard to tell how important this legislation is to a lot of the members on this side of the House.

To the minister, first of all, you know that both the greenbelt legislation and the Oak Ridges Moraine Conservation Act put a lot of additional pressure on different parts of the lake, particularly in the growth areas around the city of Barrie etc. What is not mentioned here today is the 25-year intergovernmental action plan, or the growth plan for Simcoe county, which calls for a minimum of approximately 250,000 people to be added to the county of Simcoe over the next 25 years. Many of those people will be in that watershed, and of course, that is a pressure that's really not mentioned in your opening statement; you dealt more with agriculture in your comments. The growth of the area is a huge concern to all of us.

Although you didn't mention my name—you've mentioned it to me personally—we passed the Lake Simcoe resolution back in November 2006, which was unanimously passed by the House in private members' hour. We called for action by the government. I was pleased to see in the provincial election that our party came out with a strategy and that the government promised an act, and we're here today with that. On top of that, we've also got the federal government at the table with $30 million that they've committed to specific projects around the lake over four years.

I don't think there's any question that there's been a lot of pressure on all political bodies, whether at the provincial level, the municipal level or the federal level, to take action on what we would call a gem in the centre of our province. If we look at a map of Ontario and we look at the huge growth we've seen around the province in the last 30 or 40 years, right above it all is Lake Simcoe. It's a shallow lake to begin with and there are indeed extreme pressures on it. We certainly hear from cottage associations and ratepayer associations all the time.

I look forward to the debate on this bill. I look forward to hearing from all of the different stakeholders. I know as you put a plan together over a period of four years—it will take at least four years to put that plan together. That's what I'm gathering from your comments today. We look forward to that debate.

I also want to thank a number of the organizations: First of all, Ladies of the Lake—I don't know if any of those girls are here today, but their calendar is available for 2009.

Interjection: They're here.

Mr. Garfield Dunlop: I'm just saying that your calendar is available for 2009.

—Rescue Lake Simcoe Coalition, Lake Simcoe Region Conservation Authority—Gayle was mentioned here already—Environmental Defence and Ontario Nature.

I hope together we can build this act into something very special and protect Lake Simcoe for many years in the future—in fact, forever.

Mrs. Julia Munro: I have a couple of minutes in which to respond to today's announcement. As my colleague has mentioned, it is something that is near and dear to us. I want to recognize the many friends and neighbours here in the gallery today who I have worked with over the years in recognizing how important it was.

A few years ago, it was a question of making sure that the LSEMS agreement was signed once again. That has been something that each government has come up with on a five-year basis. But today we're looking at monitoring for four years. In the moments that I have to speak, I would just raise some rhetorical questions, obviously, at this point in the debate. The question of taking action is one that many of my constituents want to see happen right now. Four years is a long time. The $20 million is a good amount of money to be putting on that. The fear of creating more bureaucracy is one that I know is a concern.

The other concern is the competition from other pieces of legislation. This government has passed Places to Grow, the greenbelt and the source water protection. These tend to overlay much of this same geographic area that we're talking about when we talk about the Lake Simcoe watershed. So I think it's most important for everyone to understand the complexity of these various pieces of legislation, and which one then has supremacy over the others.

I think as time passes, we will be very interested in seeing the details of this legislation, and want certainly to work towards the betterment of Lake Simcoe.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

Mr. Peter Tabuns: I'm addressing the comments of the minister. As we know, the health of Lake Simcoe has been steadily declining for many years. We know that Lake Simcoe's annual phosphorus inputs are two to three times the natural level and that this is causing excessive algae growth and robbing the lake of oxygen, affecting the cold-water fish community, wildlife and overall water quality. We know the decline in water quality is primarily due to pollution from land-based rural and urban sources. In other words, human activity is the primary cause.

We should thank citizens who have spent hours and years in pushing governments to finally act. This is enabling legislation, and the cliché that's so common around here—but a reality—is that the devil will be in the details. The plan is to be developed over the next nine months. The crucial question is this: Will this act lead to actions that will effectively address the serious environmental challenges faced in the region, or will it end up simply being window dressing, a narrowly focused water purification bill and a half measure on the environment?

There are at least five concerns the government needs to address to reverse the environmental decline of Lake Simcoe:

First, local groups have expressed concern that the province's strategy for Lake Simcoe must be comprehensive. The government's focus on protecting water quality and quantity effectively says that this issue is about water and not about land. But land use in the area hugely affects water quality. It was made clear in public consultations that protecting green space and developing appropriate land use policies are crucial to the protection of Lake Simcoe. This act has to adequately recognize that in order to actually deliver the change and the results that we need.

Second, local groups are concerned that the strategy will address the symptoms, not the causes. The government's discussion paper talks a lot about phosphorus levels but not enough, according to Campaign Lake Simcoe, about the need to protect key natural heritage and agricultural areas and curb ill-planned urban growth along the lake.

Third, there is a concern that adequate funding to implement the plan may not be made available. I know that an amount was pledged in the statement by the minister. Whether that is adequate to clean up the lake is not clear.

Fourth, there is a concern about who will govern and oversee the implementation of the plan. Will the government of Ontario play a strong role to counterbalance the development industry?

Fifth, and related to the last question, will the strategy be bold and inclusive, or will it end up offering loopholes to powerful interests? Specifically, will all large-scale developments be covered by the plan? Will the plan allow grandfathering of large-scale development projects already in progress?

In his comments, the minister talked about the impact of climate change on Lake Simcoe. I think it's incumbent on the minister and his government to bring forward a climate change plan for this Legislature to consider.

On a separate note: Frankly, you can't take care of the lake unless you have a climate change plan that's actually going to deliver the goods.

The government has to seriously consider these points that I've made, these questions and concerns, if it wants to move forward with a bill that is actually going to preserve the health of Lake Simcoe.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Orders of the day.

Hon. Monique M. Smith: Order G64, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peter Kormos: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: It's not in order to call G64, it only just having been reported to the House and having been amended in committee.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): That is a point of order. The bill was amended at committee; therefore, it needs to be reprinted in order for it to be debated.

Orders of the day?

Hon. Monique M. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I move adjournment of the House.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed? Agreed.

The House adjourned at 1537.

MEMBERS' EXPENDITURES

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I beg to inform the House that I have laid upon the table the individual members' expenses for 2007-08. Members will find copies in their desks.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Hon. Michael Bryant: Speaker, I believe we have agreement; I seek unanimous consent for the business of the House to be arranged pursuant to a motion I could read now or read after.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Agreed?

Interjection.

Hon. Michael Bryant: Do you want me to read the motion?

Mr. Peter Kormos: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I understand that the government House leader will be seeking unanimous consent for a schedule for today, not by way of motion.

Hon. Michael Bryant: Thank you. I seek unanimous consent for a motion with respect to the scheduling of the Legislature—

Mr. Peter Kormos: No, no.

Hon. Michael Bryant: No motion?

Mr. Peter Kormos: If I may, Speaker, I understand that the government House leader is seeking "unanimous consent for the business of the House today to be arranged as follows" etc.

Hon. Michael Bryant: Speaker, it's not a motion, so I'd better just read it as is.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The government House leader seeks unanimous consent for a schedule of business.

Hon. Michael Bryant: We're actually going to get there, believe it or not.

I seek unanimous consent for the business of the House today to be arranged as follows:

This morning to 10:45 a.m.: debate on the motion for third reading of Bill 64, An Act to amend the Pesticides Act to prohibit the use and sale of pesticides that may be used for cosmetic purposes. Should debate on Bill 64 collapse before 10:45 a.m., the House will recess until 10:45 a.m. and the vote on Bill 64 will take place when the House reverts to orders of the day;

At 10:45 a.m.: introduction of visitors, oral questions and petitions;

Following petitions: Notwithstanding standing order 8(a), the House will continue to meet and will revert to orders of the day to complete consideration of Bill 64;

Following completion of Bill 64: The Speaker shall adjourn the House to September 22, 2008; and

That there shall be no deferral of any vote upon any item of business today.

Mr. Peter Kormos: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Not to belabour the point, I want us to be perfectly clear, because one interpretation of that could be that when the House reverts to orders of the day there shall be a vote with no further consideration, and the motion does not contemplate equal sharing of time, for instance, in the one hour and 45 minutes this morning. I would seek clarification from the government House leader with a view to determining that this allows for all three parties to at least have equal time to participate in the bill or that the debate shall continue until it collapses.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Government House leader, could you provide some clarification to the House, please?

Hon. Michael Bryant: Yes. The first paragraph would read, "Debate to be shared by all three parties on the motion for third reading of Bill 64."

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The government House leader seeks unanimous consent for the business of the House today. Is it the pleasure of the House that the consent carry? Carried.

Agreed to.

COSMETIC PESTICIDES BAN ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR L'INTERDICTION DES PESTICIDES UTILISÉS À DES FINS ESTHÉTIQUES

Mr. Gerretsen moved third reading of the following bill:

Bill 64, An Act to amend the Pesticides Act to prohibit the use and sale of pesticides that may be used for cosmetic purposes / Projet de loi 64, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les pesticides en vue d'interdire l'usage et la vente de pesticides pouvant être utilisés à des fins esthétiques.

Hon. John Gerretsen: I'm very pleased today to lead off debate on third reading of Bill 64, a bill that proposes a province-wide ban on the use and sale of cosmetic, non-essential pesticides. Why did we propose this ban? We proposed it because all Ontarians, particularly young children, have a right to live in a healthy environment. They deserve to breathe clean air, drink clean water and know that the land they live on is healthy and sustainable. All of us, including young children, deserve to be able walk in the parks and enjoy the gardens and watch themselves and their parents playing outdoors without worrying about the risks of unnecessary pesticides.

Over the past four and a half years, our government has taken historic steps and been highly proactive in protecting and preserving the environment for our benefit and the benefit of future generations. The proposed Cosmetic Pesticides Ban Act is another positive step in this commitment, another step in the right direction.

If passed, this act would ban pesticides for cosmetic purposes on lawns, gardens, parks and schoolyards across Ontario. It would make exceptions for agriculture and forestry, and for public health or safety reasons. Golf courses would also be excepted, but subject to strict conditions that would require pesticide use reduction over the year, and those exceptions would only be granted upon the filing of an acceptable pesticides management plan with the Ministry of the Environment, according to the regulations, which are still to be determined.

We want to ensure consistency of law and give all Ontarians equal protection from potential exposure to cosmetic pesticides, no matter where they live in the province. That's why last fall, during the election campaign, we made it quite clear that we wanted to ban the use of cosmetic, non-essential pesticides and we wanted to have consistent application of that law throughout the entire province.

We all know that current municipal bylaws vary greatly; there are different requirements at home, at work and at the cottage. We will study the various municipal bylaws as part of a regulatory regime we will be bringing in if this act is passed. We will consult on the regulations with municipalities and with all others who have an interest in this. At the end of the day, we know that we will have the toughest law and the toughest regulations against the use of pesticides for cosmetic, non-essential purposes.

One law would ensure that all Ontarians are protected equally, that it's clearly understood what is against the law and what is not, and that we're not confused by competing requirements. It will also be clearly understood what the penalties are for not following the law, and that enforcement is consistent, predictable and equal across this province.

We have gone much further than banning the use of cosmetic pesticides; we are also banning the sale of cosmetic pesticides. Banning the sale of the product in the province of Ontario is the best way to eliminate the use of it.

I know that municipalities have some concerns about this, particularly those municipalities that have stronger bylaws with respect to use. But we've said right from the very beginning that if we were to implement a ban on the use of cosmetic pesticides, we want it to be equally applied across the province.

In that regard, let me quote from an e-mail I received just within the last half-hour from Jan Kasperski, of the Ontario College of Family Physicians. It's addressed to me and to Kevin Flynn, my parliamentary assistant. Before going any further, let me just thank him for shepherding the bill through second reading in the House, and through committee. Indeed, I want to thank all the committee members who were involved in listening to deputations and in the clause-by-clause that followed earlier this week.

Ms. Kasperski writes:

"Dear Mr. Gerretsen and Mr. Flynn,

"The Ontario College of Family Physicians and the 8,400 family doctors who are members of the college, on behalf of the patients we serve, are very grateful to both you and the terrific public servants who have worked tirelessly to bring Bill 64 this far in such a remarkably short period of time....

"For 10 long years, the OCFP has been made a target by the pesticides industry. Our credibility has been questioned repeatedly. We faced up to them by reaching out and touching the hearts of Ontarians with our sincere desire to protect children from harm.

"Your sincere efforts to do the right thing for all Ontarians shine through in all that you do too. Some members of the coalition" may not be all that supportive, but we are.

"As for the OCFP, we will celebrate with you tomorrow"—meaning today; this e-mail was sent last night. "We are realists. We know that the best strategy is to take five steps forward.... Regulations will get us" there.

"Thank you so much for what you do. You are both deeply respected and we greatly appreciate your hard work in driving this bill forward. Please give our best to the Premier and thank him on our behalf."

I'm not reading this for the personal comments she made about Mr. Flynn and myself, but for the fact that the College of Family Physicians is on side with what we're doing here today. They know we've gone further than we said we were going to. We said we were going to ban the use of cosmetic pesticides. By banning their sale, we're doing something much better.

As I mentioned before, numerous groups, including the Ontario College of Family Physicians, the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment and the Canadian Cancer Society, have been calling for a ban on cosmetic pesticides as a prudent measure to protect our health. The renowned David Suzuki Foundation is a strong advocate as well; I received an e-mail from them as well overnight.

By banning the sale and use of cosmetic pesticides, we have an opportunity to eliminate a potential threat to the health of our children, our parents, our friends and neighbours, our water supply, as well as to future generations.

As you know, our government consulted extensively with stakeholders and the public in developing the proposed legislation. We have received approximately 11,000 comments from the two postings on the Environmental Registry. We've met with environmental groups, health organizations, and the municipal, agricultural, golf, turf, retail manufacturing and production sectors. I would like to thank all of those individuals and organizations we have met with over the past few months. Their viewpoints and suggestions are valued and the legislation has benefited from their input. At the standing committee as well we heard many insightful comments. Having heard all the submissions, we are confident that we have brought forward the best possible legislation.

In addition to exceptions to the ban for uses related to agriculture and forestry, the promotion of public health and safety and golf courses, Bill 64 is drafted to allow exceptions for other prescribed uses in regulation. This would allow the government to deal with things like endangered species or the preservation of urban trees, which may not fall clearly within the health and safety exception. We have listened to the concerns of stakeholders with respect to the "other" exceptions and have strengthened Bill 64 to make these exceptions conditional. This means that in order to use pesticides that have been prohibited under the use ban, these "other prescribed uses" must meet all conditions placed on them as specified by regulation. Failure to meet those regulatory conditions means that these other uses would lose their exception and be prohibited.

If the bill is passed, we look forward to engaging Ontarians once again to make sure that the strongest possible regulations are put in place to protect our health and environment. We will meet with those municipalities that have passed what they regard as stronger-use bylaws and we will take a look at those bylaws to see how they can be implemented in the regulations.

I would like to add my personal thanks to everybody who has worked so hard on this, both from a stakeholder and from our staff and ministry viewpoint. I also want to thank those who have worked so hard for many years to ban cosmetic pesticides in communities. They, and particularly those municipalities that have been involved in this for many years, have laid a strong foundation that has allowed us to introduce a province-wide ban. We will continue to work with them and with the Ontario Pesticides Advisory Committee, and they will help us on the details to be outlined in regulations.

If passed, my ministry would also consult with stakeholders on draft regulations that list the specific pesticides and ingredients to be banned. Currently on the proposed list, we have some 80 different ingredients and over 300 products, which is much more extensive than any other jurisdiction in this country. I also want to make it clear that if the bill is passed and the regulations put in place, time will not stand still. We are committed to continuing to work with our municipal partners to ensure that we have the strongest possible regulations in place across this province.

As we look ahead, if Bill 64 is passed and the regulations are developed and put into place, the ban on the cosmetic use of pesticides could be in effect as early as next spring, 2009. That's what we've always been aiming toward, even though other jurisdictions have taken as long as two or three additional years. If we want to protect our children from unhealthy risks, then we should implement that as soon as possible. In communities across the province, families and children would be protected from the harm of pesticide use on the lawns, gardens—I might note gardens are not included in the province of Quebec—parks and schoolyards that they live on, pass by or play in on a day-to-day basis.

Our government is not the first to recognize the hazards or the needlessness of the cosmetic use of pesticides. As I mentioned before, Ontario municipalities—some 33—already have shown leadership in banning or restricting them, and I salute them once again for their great work. Through them, approximately 46% of Ontarians are already better protected from harm. A province-wide ban would ensure this protection is extended to all diverse communities in this province, whether urban or rural. We recognize that including rural communities in the ban moves away from our original view that we would not focus on restricting those areas. However, rural residents and children deserve every opportunity for good health and our government simply will not leave them out. We want a uniform law across this province, whether it's urban or rural.

We want all parents, no matter where they live, to have the security of knowing that their children are not subjected to these chemicals. As I mentioned before, Quebec has implemented a prohibition on the sale of pesticide fertilizer mixes and other pesticides for domestic use by the general public. Ontario proposes to take one of the toughest stands against cosmetic, non-essential pesticides in North America and, certainly, it would take the good work of our municipalities one step further because we're not only banning use, we are banning sale, which is the best way to ban use.

Our legislation would prohibit the use and sale, as I mentioned before, ensuring not just consistency and clarity in law that would apply to all municipalities equally, but also making sure that products containing banned ingredients would not be available for purchase in Ontario. We chose to go beyond our original commitment during the election campaign last fall in this regard because we believe that taking these products off the shelves in the first place is the single most effective way to reduce their use. This step is strongly supported by environmental and health groups, as well as the general public.

Taking this thought a bit further, let's look again at the economic impact of our proposed changes. Here in Ontario, we are proud to be home to an environmental industry that contributes over $8 billion a year to our economy and is at the leading edge of the burgeoning green economy. We are confident that, if passed, our proposed legislation would provide another boost to this important sector and a new direction for growth, as our innovative businesses create new, pesticide-free products, new services, new jobs and economic growth. We are absolutely convinced that the industry is capable of coming up with these new, pesticide-free products.

In our recent budget, our government allocated over $10 million over four years to support our proposed plan to ban the use of non-essential pesticides. These funds will help support Ontario-based research to foster development and commercialization of green alternatives that are better for the environment and for the health of Ontario families. This also has the potential to position Ontario as a research and development leader, as more provinces, states and countries ban the use of cosmetic pesticides and begin to look at alternatives. These funds are also targeted for education and outreach.

Our government continues to be gratified by the number of stakeholders that have expressed interest in working with us to ensure that the general public is aware of alternative methods of lawn and garden care. These include educational institutions, municipalities, retailers, service providers, health units and organizations ranging from the Canadian Cancer Society to the Royal Botanical Gardens in Burlington. With their help, we propose to focus on education and outreach as the principle means of ensuring compliance with the ban. Fines will be a last resort. The most important thing is banning both the sale and use of the product.

This bill is the first step in our government's commitment to reduce toxins and tackle the environmental cost of illness. If passed, it will ensure that our children and all Ontarians are no longer exposed to cosmetic, non-essential pesticides that can harm their health. It would provide a new avenue of growth for innovators and entrepreneurs who are propelling Ontario's green economy, and it would promote natural, organic solutions to lawn and garden care that are better for our environment and would help improve the health of our planet.

By supporting this legislation, we, as legislators, would be protecting our province and our people not just today, but for generations to come.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate?

Mr. Peter Shurman: I'll be sharing my time with my colleague the member from Haliburton-Kawartha Lakes-Brock.

This is the last day in the Legislature before September, obviously, and I know that some of the members and people watching us on television are already well engaged in the golf season. I can play more now—maybe not well, as some members know, but I can play more now.

Have you ever heard the expression, "Drive for show and putt for dough"? It means that the big drive is easy: One smash with that big-dog driver and you're two thirds of the way down the fairway in one flashy shot. What has this got to do with a bill on pesticides? Bear with me. The hard work in golf is on that third, fourth, fifth, sixth shot in the final 100 yards getting to the green and then in the putting. The devil is in the details, and in golf the details are in that short game, that last 100 yards.

So it is with McGuinty legislation: Drive for show, but the short game and the details? They're just not there. "Let's ban pesticides. No one likes pesticides." That's the big drive. That's the drive for show. "Do we have the science to back it up? No. But who cares? We'll grab everyone's attention with that first big boomer shot off the tee."

Liberal strategy interprets public opinion like this: "Yeah, pesticides, they can't be good for us. McGuinty's right." But people are not stupid. Pesticides used properly protect them from West Nile virus and termite infestations and provide worm-free ears of sweet corn in the summer and large luscious fruit as soon as the season starts a couple of weeks from now.

I will not be supporting Bill 64 because it will not accomplish what it claims. I told this Legislature a few days ago that bills designed to grab the attention of people for a few seconds and have them say to themselves, "Sounds good to me," were about all the McGuinty government could come up with in the session now ending, and here we go again.

There are three distinct kinds of bans in legislation we deal with here. An essential one would be, for example, a ban on handguns. Most everyone agrees with that. But we know what a problem enforcement is despite significant police efforts on this issue, and still we persevere on a ban like that.

Another kind of ban is the type inherent in something like Bill 69, passed here on Monday: no smoking in cars with kids. We pretty well all agree it deals with a few stupid people who do that, and we know it won't really be enforced due to manpower resource issues. But the government thought it looked good, so now we have that ban in Ontario.

Then there's a bill like this one. The McGuinty government says, "Hey, let's ban pesticides." The instant response from people goes something like, "Pesticides are poison; poison is no good. Great idea." That's all the thought they give to it, but that's instant and it is also false. "Wait a minute," says the government. "We can enforce it, and it'll look great." If you want to talk about a cosmetic ban, indeed that's what this is. It's a perception that you're selling, not a reality.

Why am I against it? No science backs this up—zero, none. You talk about timely? Read Terence Corcoran's piece in yesterday's National Post on this very problem. Before anyone tries to characterize my stance as pro-pollution, pro-big business or devil-may-care, stop. Abuse of pesticides and irresponsible use of pesticides must be stopped. There are few who would argue with that—I certainly wouldn't—but this legislation does not distinguish at all between the use of pesticides and the abuse of pesticides.

Bill 64 targets responsible users of pesticides. In fact, based on no scientific fact, it punishes them for acting responsibly. It is short-sighted. It is unfair. It is irresponsible. When we act as responsible legislators, we need responsible and factual support data, and Bill 64 is not based on scientific fact. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture wrote: "OFA would like to voice our very strong objection to the limited hearing time allocated to Bill 64 (four hours), and to the incredibly short application time afforded those wanting to address the standing committee .... The fact that Laurel Broten, a committee member, reported that the committee clerk was to 'post information regarding the hearings ... in major newspapers, if possible,' would be comical if it was not so disrespectful. It was preposterous to suggest that notification could possibly have been provided through newspapers, when the clerk was only informed on Thursday that the deadline for application to attend the hearing was 5 p.m. the following day."

When we, the official opposition, assess any proposed legislation, we consider a number of factors, including: (1) Does the proposed legislation speak to the needs of Ontarians; (2) Is the proposed legislation effective in achieving what it sets out to achieve; (3) Is the proposed legislation informed, based on knowledgeable sources; (4) Is it fair and responsible; and (5) Has there been sufficient attention paid to its enforcement?

Unfortunately, the resounding answer to all of these questions with respect to Bill 64 is no, it does not pass the test on any of them.

The McGuinty Liberals would have Ontarians believe that this bill is about protecting the environment, but there has been no evidence presented. "My God," said one deputation in committee, "pesticides killed 1,600 people last year and half were children." So I questioned them: "Was it exposure, or did they drink the stuff because dad left the cap off on the front steps?" Answer: "Don't know."

If the McGuinty government were serious about protecting the environment, they would take real action on closing inefficient and harmful coal plants, smog and toxins. They would take action that has its basis in science and good government, not headlines and hearsay. Health Canada, the definitive authority, has over 500 experts who set standards for our pharmaceutical drugs and we can't trust their views on pesticides? Give me a break.

Allegations of responsibly used pesticides causing cancer and poisoning children were made before the committee, but the evidence was never presented. Groups that needed to be heard were not, like Petro-Canada, with an entirely new and promising approach to pesticides, using products which are the equivalent of baby oil. If you drank baby oil, the only result would be a longer than usual visit to the bathroom.

Here is a quote from their written submission:

"A golf turf fungicide that goes beyond the current requirements proposed in Bill 64. Our product is 100% free of active ingredient and is scientifically proven to maintain efficacy.

"A selective herbicide that has eliminated approximately 85% of the active ingredients (with the goal to reach 100%, similar to the fungicide). Again, scientific evidence clearly demonstrates that this product maintains its effectiveness when measured against other leading brands with full concentrations of active ingredient."

The product commonly known as Roundup is banned, despite Health Canada classifying it as a reduced-risk product. In this legislation, the McGuinty Liberals chose to ignore science and, indeed, our own Canadian scientists from Health Canada. Why are they there? Health Canada scientists are the gold standard in terms of testing and protecting us from chemical or pharmaceutical formulations. It's a fact that proper use and administration of proper quantities is, arguably, the single most significant determining factor of health risks. Scientists from Health Canada have concluded that if used according to instructions, pesticides do not harm children or pets or the very people who apply them.

Every one of the people in this chamber benefits from the pesticides this city uses to control mosquito infestations to prevent the spread of West Nile virus. Everyone here eats Ontario fruits and vegetables, grown with the aid of judicious and responsible applications of pesticides. That's legal under this bill. If our crops were grown without it, we'd have a yield of 30% to 40% less than what we get. So pesticides work. Like any chemical, they work best and are beneficial only when used correctly.

The government chose to rely on a report by the Ontario College of Family Physicians—the Pesticide Literature Review—which had a great many limitations, including selective reporting of data, ignoring Health Canada's role in pesticide registration and rolling all pesticides into one definition. That's like saying all medications are bad. Anyone here take no pills whatsoever? I think not.

This McGuinty government runs a public relations machine. First it builds misconceptions, then it plays on fear and then it pretends to propose solutions—kind of like an arsonist who sets a fire and comes back 10 minutes later and extinguishes the fire so he can be hailed as a hero. The problem is that the McGuinty Liberals' idea of solutions is just to ban things. Indeed, I'm not sure what they would do in this House if they ran out of things to ban. Maybe they could ban bans for a while and deal with real problems by bringing real solutions. Our economy comes to mind, but never mind that today.

I'm quite worried; perhaps the next time I have a headache I won't be able to take an ibuprofen because they'll decide to ban it. Following the logic that was applied to this bill's development, they could easily do that as their next ban. They'll say if I take 100 capsules I could cause serious injury to myself or even die, and they'd be right, but I don't plan to take 100 capsules. I read directions, and so do pesticide users.

Both medication and pesticides are reviewed for proper use by the very same Health Canada. Does this government seriously believe that people operate on the lowest common denominator? In other words, is their legislation designed for someone who may take 100 ibuprofen pills or inhale or drink pesticides? The comparison is fair. Why? Because these things are ably and rigorously tested by Health Canada. Used as directed, they're safe—not maybe safe, they are safe. For the sake of my head, I hope sincerely that ibuprofen will remain a legal product to sell and use, not abuse, in Canada, and in Ontario particularly.

The truth is that this is yet another piece of smoke-and-mirrors legislation which pretends to accomplish something while it really achieves nothing. I have to ask what general is leading this army, because the battle is in the other direction. Meanwhile, the troops are fighting imaginary skirmishes, looking for an enemy that just isn't there.

Bill 64 only targets a few people who are basically using pesticides responsibly. It exempts agriculture, forestry, golf courses. That leaves people and properties, accounting for only 2% of pesticides used. Yes, I said 2% of the total. Stakeholders across Ontario wanted to make these points—responsible people who were not heard because of location and time. The government rejected our request to take hearings on this bill on tour, and the total time for hearings was about four hours. The McGuinty government neglected to seek input on this legislation from experts and responsible users of pesticides.

Here's one result already, and I quote from the Ontario Vegetation Management Association:

"OVMA is seeking an exemption for the use of pesticides for industrial vegetation management. Herbicides used to control vegetation in industrial situations are an essential component in maintaining the integrity of the infrastructure that the Ontario public depends upon for safe and reliable services. Control of brush and conflicting vegetation is necessary for the safe operation of economically important facilities (eg. power lines, gas pipelines, oil pipelines, railways, roadways), prevention of catastrophic failures and life-threatening emergencies. Pesticide use in these operations is not a cosmetic use and should therefore be exempted from the proposed amendments to the Pesticides Act."

The government didn't bother to listen to Ontarians to define essential or non-essential uses.

From the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association:

"Bill 64 makes it very complicated for those of us who use pesticides to understand who we answer to. The PMRA—a federal body respected internationally as a tough regulator—can approve a product based on a thorough scientific evaluation. The municipality up till now has had the power to ban its use, claiming it is harmful, and yet Bill 64 hasn't banned it. How confusing is this? We need to have one regulatory authority—the PMRA—that has the power to evaluate and approve (or reject) products based on the science."

This government decided to introduce a blanket law that once again doesn't pay attention to details.

In conclusion—and I state emphatically—there is no science to back up Liberal rhetoric here. This bill was not introduced with the health of Ontarians in mind. It was introduced with the goal of distracting people from the fact that this is a do-nothing government that specializes in meaningless, token gestures.

I close as I began. I will not be supporting Bill 64 because it will not accomplish what it claims. We are stuck in a bad movie. Ontarians are getting what passes for leadership and protection from the Wizard of Oz: "Pay no attention to that man behind the curtain."

My message to this government is: Go back to Kansas; get the courage to make the right choices; get the brains to give us smart legislation, not fluff; come back to reality to deal with Ontario's real challenges.

People in my riding of Thornhill and of this province deserve better leadership on key issues.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate? Member for—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): I remind the members that this is split time. It's rotation. I look to the next party, Member for Toronto—Danforth.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had understood that the Conservatives were splitting that time, but I'm prepared to speak and I appreciate your consideration.

Interjections.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: Speaker, when order is restored in the chamber, I'll get to it.

There are a number of serious flaws with Bill 64. At the hearings on Monday, those flaws were highlighted in detail by a wide variety of stakeholder groups such as the Canadian Cancer Society, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, Toronto's medical officer of health, Ecojustice, the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment, the Canadian Environmental Law Association, the David Suzuki Foundation, the Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario, Pesticide Free Ontario—a wide variety of submissions with many common themes, both supporting action on pesticides and expressing concern with elements of this bill that undermine its effectiveness.

The questions we have to address first are how we came to be here, how we came to have this debate today, how this society came in any way to act on the question of pesticides and, frankly, the dispersal of toxic chemicals throughout our environment.

We can go back to Rachel Carson, if you want, in the 1960s, talking about the broad dispersion and use of new technologies that were developed after the Second World War—organic compounds that could be used to kill plants, to kill insects, but to kill in a very non-discriminatory way and pose human health threats.

Those concerns have led, over the decades, to action by governments ranging from Richard Nixon's in 1970 to Hudson, Quebec, in 1991, to the city of Toronto, to Oakville, Markham and a variety of others that understand that the whole field of organic, chemistry-based toxins used to control plants and other pests is an extraordinarily powerful technology and needs to be reined in. At this point in this society there is broad support for taking action, at a minimum, to get rid of those uses that are generally seen as unnecessary. So it's the organizations that I cited and a number of others, along with municipalities, that have taken action. In the case of Hudson, Quebec, and the city of Toronto, they actually went all the way to the Supreme Court to fight for their rights to protect their citizens.

We do need action and I just want to cite a few commentaries on the real issues before us. The city of Toronto put out a fact sheet a few years ago, explaining to people what the health effects were of pesticides and what the concerns were. They noted scientific studies done by epidemiologists, some studies of men and women who work with pesticides, including pesticides used on lawns and in gardens, suggesting they have increased risks of fertility problems, spontaneous abortion and miscarriage. It's not solely a question of cancer. It's not solely a question of more subtle effects. Fertility problems, spontaneous abortion, miscarriage: These chemicals affect our ability to reproduce. Some studies, mainly of workers, suggested that maternal exposure during early pregnancy to pesticides used in gardening is associated with increased risks of several types of birth defects such as cleft lip and palate, spina bifida and limb anomalies.

Brain and nervous system effects: Researchers conclude that there's reasonable evidence for an association between exposure to pesticides and a moderately increased risk of Parkinson's disease. More research is required to establish which pesticides contribute to the increased risks.

Cancer: Recent studies show increased risks of testicular, prostate and cervical cancers, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and multiple myeloma among those exposed—particularly farmers—to pesticides through their work. In children, several studies have shown moderately increased risks of some cancers, particularly leukemia, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and neuroblastoma, and some birth defects, with pesticide exposure around conception in the womb and early infancy.

I think the studies are out there that show a connection between the use of pesticides and incidence of cancer, birth defects and reproductive problems. I don't think that the scientific establishment in this country would dispute that. In fact, I think they would support that. The Canadian Cancer Society then goes on, in another paper, to talk about what the costs are. I talked about the human impacts, and for individuals and for families, those impacts are substantial. Those impacts are enough to justify restrictions on the use of these chemicals, particularly in situations where there's broad agreement that their use is not critical and not necessary.

The Canadian Cancer Society, in their submission, stated: "Cancer is a leading health issue in Ontario. While cancer treatments have improved and mortality rates have fallen, cancer incidence is expected to increase drastically due to Ontario's aging and growing population. It is estimated that by 2020, cancer cases in Canada will increase by two thirds.

"Approximately 60,000 Ontarians will be diagnosed with cancer and 27,300 deaths from cancer will occur in 2008.

"Fifty per cent of cancers can be prevented through healthy lifestyle changes and policies to protect the public, such as banning the use and sale of cosmetic pesticides.

"Cancer is a major cost driver in provincial health care budgets and affects the ability of all levels of government to collect revenue and pay for services. As of 1998, Ontario was spending approximately $2 billion directly per year on cancer care. The indirect costs associated with cancer, such as loss of productivity, costs Ontario approximately $5 billion per year."

I would say that on the face of it, simply looking at epidemiological studies presented by credible authorities, such as the medical officer of health for the city of Toronto and other medical officers of health, and looking at the data produced by the Canadian Cancer Society as to the real cost to this society in financial terms—not human terms, not family terms, not community terms but raw dollars—that burden is substantial. For those reasons alone, the environmental groups, the citizens' groups, the health groups and the nurses' associations who have campaigned, literally for decades, are justified in bringing this forward, and the cities that have taken on this fight deserve the gratitude of the people of this province for having taken the risks.

I've been on city of Toronto council when it has taken initiatives beyond where a provincial government was willing to go, and I know that they carry the burden of the heavy fight. The member for Oakville, I'm sure, is well aware of the fights that went on in his council and community. So for me it makes sense that those pressures, those campaigns and those pioneering efforts to protect the population should be rewarded with legislation that is broader, stronger and more encompassing, and that we should be moving in a direction that phases out these uses wherever possible—and let's start with the unnecessary ones.

I have, however, three substantial problems with this bill, problems that are substantial enough that I won't vote for the bill, because I think there are elements, in particular the one I'm going to address now, that undermine the ability of cities to act and take the lead in the future. If cities had not had the power in the past to act on smoking or on pesticides, we would not have a Smoke-Free Ontario Act. We would not have any legislation on pesticides before us today. We would be in trouble. The initiative of this government to push back the power of the municipalities is a profound error.

We brought a number of amendments to committee on Monday for clause-by-clause consideration. The one that was fundamental for us, the key, was the removal of the section of this act that took away the power of municipalities to act independently, essentially to let them take the floor provided by this bill and build from there. In fact, what this legislation has done is put a ceiling on the power of municipalities to act. Stakeholders called for this government to get rid of that amendment.

The government claims that it has changed the way it works with the municipalities. John Gerretsen, when he was Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, said, "Under the leadership of Premier McGuinty, a new, positive tone has been established in provincial-municipal relations.... We know municipalities are accountable, mature orders of government that can ably represent themselves and their citizens with the federal government." I suggest to the Minister of the Environment that he should have listened to himself as Minister of Municipal Affairs and amended this bill so that cities continue to have the right to pioneer and go further. We in the NDP believe that cities do have the knowledge and the political courage to go further than provincial governments and that that knowledge and courage should not be restrained.

We remember the debacle after the Premier said in an April news conference that municipalities would be able to improve upon the pesticide ban. My sense is that the Premier did that knowing full well that was the correct position to take politically. He wasn't corrected at the time. He should never have been corrected. The bill should have reflected his comments. He said that because any reasonable person would think municipalities should be able to pass bylaws that are closely connected to their cities and citizens.

The Association of Municipalities of Ontario, which was represented by Markham councillor Erin Shapero, who is here today, said, "We are concerned about a clause in this bill which would render municipal bylaws inoperative and would like to see that clause removed from the proposed legislation."

Mr. Peter Kormos: Then remove it.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: Then remove it. So we moved at committee, and we were turned back. That amendment was not adopted. I asked for a recorded vote. The government members unanimously voted against that amendment. They voted to restrict the power of municipalities.

The Canadian Cancer Society agrees with maintaining the ability of municipalities to act and to be leaders. I will read an excerpt from their note on the pesticide legislation: "The evidence linking pesticides and cancer is still growing. As the scientific and health communities are continually learning more about the risks associated with exposure to pesticides, municipalities should not be prevented from enacting bylaws stronger than provincial law if the community and city council support stronger protection." In fact, they recommend that if there is a conflict between municipal and provincial pesticide legislation, the stricter restrictions should prevail. This is what exists in the smoke-free Ontario legislation.

Excuse me, could I have a glass of water?

Mr. Peter Kormos: I've already ordered one for you.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: You're very good to me, Mr. Kormos

Mr. Peter Kormos: Don't spread rumours.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: I won't spread rumours. I'll make a fair statement in open session.

Hon. James J. Bradley: Who's running for the NDP leadership?

Mr. Peter Kormos: Tabuns.

Mr. Peter Tabuns: Kormos.

Given the similarities between the two in terms of levels of government moving to improve public health, we should have the same legislation. We put forward an amendment to that effect. Again, the amendment to actually retain municipal power to protect the public and move forward the environmental struggle was defeated.

Municipalities have been leaders in introducing pesticide bans. They tend to be closer to public health concerns. In fact, 33 municipalities have enacted pesticide bans of some form affecting almost half of Ontario's population. This legislation ends the ability of municipalities to respond to real concerns brought forward by their health officers and their citizens.

From the David Suzuki Foundation: "Interfering with municipal powers to regulate the use of pesticides to protect public health is unnecessary and unjustifiable." This was reiterated in a joint letter to the Premier from Ecojustice and the Canadian Environmental Law Association. They fought tooth and nail to defend the rights of municipalities to enact local bylaws against big pesticides. Their opinion was set aside; their commentary was not heeded; their words were simply pushed off the table. They wrote, "We recommend that this section"—referring to restraint on municipalities—"be deleted entirely and that the bill remain silent on this issue. Section 14 in the Municipal Act, 2001, and the developing body of case law are more than adequate to deal with any conflicts arising between municipal bylaws and provincial regulation of pesticides. Further, provincial regulation of pesticides ought to be the floor from which municipalities can regulate further in accordance with local needs. We believe that such a direction would be consistent with the intent of the Legislature when the Municipal Act was most recently amended, bolstering local regulatory powers to protect human health and the environment."

So I have to ask, why was the Municipal Act amended to reflect the maturity of the municipal level of government, the recognition of their ability to actually take on these issues in advance of the province, when at the first opportunity to actually put things into effect, to put a floor in effect upon which municipalities could build, that power was taken away from them?

There was concern from the Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario that the override provision may be successful in allowing the pesticide industry to soften the ban.

I just want to note that the city of Toronto board of health actually brought forward a resolution at one of the recent meetings, and I'll read it out, concerning this overturning of their powers. First of all, they passed the motion requesting the Ministry of the Environment to amend the wording of the proposed Cosmetic Pesticides Ban Act, so that if there's a conflict between a municipal bylaw and the act, the provision that is most restrictive of the cosmetic use of pesticides prevails—and note: requested the medical officer of health to submit a report to the board of health on what legal options might be available to the board of health and the city of Toronto to preserve our right to protect the health of the public if Bill 64 is adopted without the amendment proposed in recommendation 1(a).

In other words, that city is not prepared to simply roll over and have its powers to protect its citizens abrogated. It is now investigating, as it has in the past when it's dealt with the pesticide industry, what its legal rights and powers are to protect its citizens. The action of this government to put them through that is a dereliction of their duty and responsibilities and a dereliction of respect for the municipal level of government.

The second part I want to address: The legislation provides the government with too much flexibility to exempt certain uses. Subsection 7.1(2) lists the exemptions for the cosmetic pesticide ban: golf courses, agriculture, forestry, to promote public health and safety, and then, finally, "other prescribed uses." In other words, the ministry can indiscriminately regulate exemptions to the act. This is a dangerous precedent. With one stroke of the pen, the pesticide ban can be made completely ineffective. I don't think that this should be left to regulation. If there were particular exemptions that the government wanted to have in the legislation, they should have been put in the legislation so that we in the opposition could have debated those exemptions, so that those in the environmental movement and the environmental health movement could have made their representations as to the adequacy, inadequacy, fairness or unfairness of what was put forward. But, in fact, that didn't happen.

What's been put forward is the blanket ability to declare an exemption for any other purpose. I don't think we can leave this to regulation. In fact, beyond that, we shouldn't leave this to regulation. The ability of the public to intervene in the regulatory process is very limited. The ability to lobby, get media attention, exert real pressure on the government to make a difference when you get to the regulatory phase, is not the pressure lever and attention you have when we're going through the legislative phase. It gives the government far too much room to manoeuvre and gives it far too much discretion.

We have a situation where the municipalities, which have acted effectively as the safety net for this province in terms of protecting people from pesticides, have had their power taken away; then the government has taken upon itself the ability to regulate away all the protections that it says will be in this act.

An argument was made in committee: Let's assume this government is pro-environment. I don't say that, because I think this government has had a very sorry record on the environment, but let's say for a moment that they consider they are. There's always the possibility that another government will be elected and use the powers that they've put in place to undermine even the small steps they consider they've taken.

The Canadian Environmental Law Association and Ecojustice made their point quite eloquently in their letter to the Premier: "Subsequent governments could, through prescribing excepted uses, render the purpose of these amendments to the Pesticides Act meaningless. We recommend that this subsection also be deleted from the bill in order to ensure that pesticide use in Ontario is reduced over the long term."

The Canadian Cancer Society: "Section 7.1(2)5 has the potential to authorize exemptions that would undermine the intent of the legislation."

It is very clear to those who are deeply concerned about the use of pesticides in this province, those who fought for a long time for strong legislation, that this particular section of the bill gives carte blanche to any future government to throw it all out the window without any need for public hearings.

The Toronto medical officer of health: "I am also concerned that the bill authorizes unspecified exemptions ... described as 'other prescribed uses,' which could be used by future governments to reduce the health protection of the legislation without legislative debate."

The Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario: "Current and future governments would be left open to strong pressure to weaken the legislation through this loophole."

We in the NDP proposed an amendment to strike this line entirely. The government voted against those amendments. In doing so, they voted against a cross-section of public interest advocates and public health experts.

I want to turn to the third problem with the bill: The legislation bans certain pesticides rather than allowing certain pesticides. The bill allows all pesticides to be used for cosmetic purposes unless they are specified by regulation. We have suggested, and a number of groups have suggested, approaching it very differently, to prescribe only the pesticides that are, in fact, allowed.

The reasons are straightforward. Simply put—everyone recognizes it—pesticides are powerful and they can be dangerous. The evidence on that is clear. There's a positive association between exposure to pesticides and a number of types of cancer: non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, leukemia, brain cancer, kidney cancer, pancreatic cancer, prostate cancer, lung cancer. There is strong evidence that children may be more vulnerable than other population groups. A British study found that 50% of pesticide poisonings involved children under the age of 10.

We simply recommended in our amendments that we have a precautionary approach. Put that in place, decide what is clearly safe. Allow that, in what we've all agreed are cosmetic, non-essential uses, and go from there. Those who are familiar with the Krever commission on the contamination of the blood supply in Canada are well aware that Justice Krever argued, and I think very well, on the basis of the evidence that where there is potential for risk, caution is certainly in order. In this case, where we're dealing with non-essential uses, why do we lack any caution at all? Why do we not put in a more restrictive regime than the one put forward by the government?

I have to ask myself why the government is putting so much power into its hands on the regulatory side. I know the argument that will be made, and has been made in the past, is, "We like to get into the detail and make sure you are protected. We enable ourselves, but then we get into it and make sure that things are done well."

I just want to note two reports. Neglecting Our Obligations, by the Environmental Commissioner of Ontario, talks about the fact that in Ontario, environmental protection, time after time, is not there. If it's contaminated landfills, if it's water pollution, he notes time and again that the government doesn't enforce, does not follow up. In fact, he even brought out a report about a year ago—I think the title was Doing Less with Less—talking about amendments to the Nutrient Management Act in the regulations that essentially made it unenforceable. The Auditor General for Ontario in his 2007 annual report talked about hazardous waste, and how hazardous waste management in this province time after time is not followed through on; how the reports of waste coming out of generators do not match the report of waste received by receiving stations. Very commonly, more than 10% of that waste seems to have evaporated from the time it left the generator to the time it reached the receiver.

So when the government says to us, "Trust us. We have this enabling legislation. We'll go further, we'll be tougher, we'll make sure things are fine," I don't think there's a basis for that. I think for us, on the opposition side, to accept the government's protestations that leaving it all to regulation and their goodwill is going to result in environmental protection would be folly. This government has taken away the safety net of municipal powers to deal with this issue. It has done it against the protests of the municipal sector, against the best advice of those in the environmental sector, and is simply asking for a blank cheque. I don't think we can give it.

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: It's a pleasure to follow the previous speaker, it's a pleasure to join Minister Gerretsen today in my remarks and it's a pleasure to join third reading debate on Bill 64. I've been privileged to be a part of the development of this legislation from day one. The intent, obviously, is to ban the sale and the use of cosmetic pesticides in Ontario. I'll tell you, I'm very proud to stand in support of this bill today, and I think we all should be. We've heard some views today—that's what this place is for, and I certainly don't want to diminish that—but it's time perhaps to inject some balance into the debate today. Some obviously feel—when you listen to the member for Thornhill—the bill exceeds—

Mr. Kevin Daniel Flynn: I guess that's right. Somebody does have to speak for that side, but some would feel that it goes too far. Some feel that it would not go far enough.

The Canadian Cancer Society in its remarks before the committee said that if this bill is passed, Ontario will have the strongest legislation in the country. I believe we'll have the strongest pesticide legislation in all of North America. That, to me, is a good thing. That is something that should be viewed as being a progressive step forward; we should be seizing this opportunity.

You talk about the value of the regulatory system and why you would leave certain decisions to the regulatory system. What I don't think we can underestimate, or we shouldn't underestimate, is that there is still a desire within Ontario for people to maintain their properties—their flower beds, their lawns, their vegetable gardens. They want to do that with safer products. Using the regulatory system, you're going to allow for the approval of those products—safer products, green products, organic products—in a much more expedient way than if you were to enshrine that in legislation. So I can see the value for this in that process.

I would probably associate myself with some of the sentiments that were expressed by the member for Toronto-Danforth. At the end of the day, we may not agree on the process or the strategy to achieve those, but certainly some of the sentiments—I was in the trenches with my own council in Oakville trying to develop legislation that mirrors what we have before us today. When I look back and I think of the reasons for that, we were doing that in the absence of provincial action. We were doing that simply because, as a council and as a municipality, we had very little experience in the enforcement or development of pesticide bylaws. We were forced into that position. We were put in a corner because the province and the federal government simply refused to act in that regard. My preference at the time, had we had a bill that had come forward similar to the bill that's being proposed today, was that I wanted to see that protection extended to all the people of Ontario. It seems to me what we need is a level of government that's prepared to take responsibility for the reduction of pesticides and allow that toughest protection to be extended to all people in the province of Ontario and not in select municipalities. If there's a reason a product shouldn't be used in Oakville, the product shouldn't be used in Markham, North York, London or Thunder Bay either. That seems to me to be the end game in this. We need to get tough legislation within the province of Ontario. I believe that this does that.

We're committed as a government—I think we've proven that, despite the remarks from the member for Toronto-Danforth—to both the health and safety of the people of Ontario and to preserving and protecting the environment. When you look at some of the environmental legislation that has been brought in over the last five years of the McGuinty government—take a look at the greenbelt legislation and Places to Grow—I think you've seen significant improvement. I know it's the role of the opposition to oppose, but I think even begrudgingly you have to admit that we've made some progress in the last five years, and I think we should be proud of that. This legislation blends those two goals together, the one of health and safety and the one of preservation and protecting the environment. Now, why would you do this? Why is it such a popular bill with the people of Ontario? Simply, it's going to ban the sale and use of pesticides for cosmetic purposes on lawns, gardens, parks and schoolyards across Ontario. It's a reasonable, prudent and practical step that's going to stop the unnecessary use of pesticides.

We know that all pesticides pose a risk. We know that when Health Canada says pesticides are safe, they're not saying they're safe. They're saying they pose a risk and then they classify the degree of that risk. It's an entirely different concept than saying that something is safe. What we want to do is protect Ontarians from the potential exposure they have from the use of products similar to this, to toxins, and particularly in this regard, the exposure of children who have greater exploratory behaviour. They're just curious little creatures who want to get down on the ground and pick up things and put them in their mouths. They're more likely to come in contact with pesticides than people who are playing on a golf course, for example. It just makes them more susceptible. I think we're really aiming at the young people.

It protects the environment. I think other speakers have talked about the cumulative effect of pesticides, or the combination of pesticides that are used, and that's a grave concern. We know that after a storm occurrence or rainfall, pesticides can run off. They flow into the tributaries, the rivers, and eventually that runoff makes its way into our drinking water supply. We often forget that what we put on the ground and what flows down into the rivers and the creeks from our community ends up in the Great Lakes and Lake Ontario, where Toronto, Oakville and a number of municipalities in the greater Toronto area draw their drinking water supply.

Many Ontario municipalities, some of which are represented here today, have already taken a stand against cosmetic pesticide use. I think they deserve to be applauded for that, because, as I said in my earlier remarks, they were prepared to step forward when no other level of government would. When the province of Ontario, under previous governments, wouldn't take that move and when the federal government was keeping the same old regime in place, municipalities stepped to the floor, and I think we do owe them a lot. My own community of Oakville is one of those communities that has regulated its use. When I talk to constituents within my own community, they're glad that we're doing this. They're grateful that a decision was made by the town of Oakville to implement a pesticide bylaw that came into effect at the beginning of this year. They feel that they should have a restriction on the use of pesticides and that the necessary protections are now in place for them and for their families.

We're joined by some members in the east members' gallery who have been stakeholders in this process. I think they deserve to be recognized or at least noted in Hansard. We've got Farrah Khan and Gideon Forman from the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment; Sari Merson is here, joining us from Pesticide Free Ontario; and Erin Shapero, a councillor from Markham who has been very active in this issue, has joined us as well to see the passage of this bill today, something that's long overdue.

As we move forward in this—and I do hope the bill passes today and we can get to work on the regulations—people are going to ask, “How do we safely dispose of the pesticides we have if we can't use them anymore?” I'd like to remind all members of the House and certainly all members of the public that you should never put pesticides out in the garbage and you certainly should never pour them down the drain. They should be stored safely. Whatever municipal collection you have for household hazardous waste, you should put the products into that stream.

The ban that we proposed today I think makes sense. Cosmetic pesticides are simply not essential. We use them to make our lawns and our gardens more aesthetically pleasing, but that's not the only way we have to accomplish that aim. There are plenty of environmentally friendly alternatives.

In talking about the agriculture and forestry sectors, there has long been a focus on the safe use of pesticides. Farmers in the agricultural sector are required to take pesticide safety training. They're governed on the strict use and storage of pesticides as well. They're reducing pesticide use. If you look at the records of the agricultural community, surveys show a 52% reduction in pesticide use on agricultural crops in Ontario since 1983. That's almost half. Our farmers in the agricultural community want a safe, healthy and clean rural environment for their families, their crops and their livestock. Increasingly, and of their own volition, they are switching to lower-risk pesticides and they're starting to implement more and more integrated pest management programs, and that's beginning to reduce the reliance that the entire industry has on pesticides.

Like farmers, those workers and employees who are engaged in the practice of forestry are also required to meet stringent rules on the use, handling, storage and safety of pesticides. It's a collective responsibility. It's a trust we bear for our generation and future generations.

Currently, some pesticides are required to protect our forests from a range of native and, it seems increasingly, non-native insects and pests. We've seen the Jack pine budworm and the Asian long-horned beetle infestations in recent years. Even more, we're starting to understand that healthy forests really mitigate the effects of global warming and climate change. They're important, obviously, to the Ontario economy and to the national economy. The forest products industry in northern Ontario is a valued partner in our government's commitment to long-term forest health, and it includes the responsible use of pesticides.

As the minister mentioned, if Bill 64 is passed, the public and the stakeholders would be consulted extensively on regulations that establish the uses related to forestry, agriculture or any use that is proposed to be excepted from the proposed ban. Our government is going to bring in some regulations and conditions for the golf sector that don't exist today, so that any pesticide use on courses would have to meet a much, much higher standard than it does today. For example, some things we should be considering in the regulations: We could potentially ask these operations to obtain IPM accreditation. IPM is currently a voluntary program. We're saying that perhaps it shouldn't be. Today, Ontario is home to 800 golf courses and counting, including 12 of the top 20 in Canada.

What I'm saying is that this piece of legislation is the start of a process that allows us to work together. It's one that I think is deserving of the support of all parties. I would hope, when the vote is taken, that all parties stand up for health, safety and a clean environment in Ontario.

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm pleased to say off the top that while my colleagues and I support the concept of eliminating non-essential use of pesticides to protect our health and environment in this province, having sat through committee hearings and having read the legislation, I have a number of concerns.

First and foremost, the word "cosmetic" has not been clearly defined and is left open to interpretation. Bill 64, the Cosmetic Pesticides Ban Act—I'll just say that for those at home who have maybe just tuned in—would see the government ban the cosmetic use of pesticides. Does this bill refer to cosmetic pesticides or does it refer to a cosmetic ban? What is cosmetic, the pesticide or the use? I'm not sure the minister or the folks on that side can answer that question. They certainly haven't answered the question to date, and the three pages of Bill 64 don't contain the answer. I would imagine it depends on which side of the issue you want to discuss.

This bill, in my opinion, has been presented as a "ban now, ask questions later" approach—political feel-good stuff, typical McGuintyism.

Many of the presenters we heard from felt the same. Wendy Fucile, the president of the Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario, began her testimony by saying that "Bill 64 has the potential to be an important step in the right direction, but we're not popping the champagne corks yet."

Gideon Forman from the Canadian Association of Physicians for the Environment suggested three amendments to the bill and spoke at length about the government limiting cities' ability with regard to pesticide use.

Sheila Clarke of the Canadian Federation of University Women, Ontario Council, proposed seven recommendations to Bill 64, while the Canadian Cancer Society made it clear that the bill is not sound in its current form.

Two days ago, a news release was issued from the Registered Nurses' Association of Ontario. The headline reads: "Health and environment groups sound alarm about pesticide bill." The news release says:

"Environmental and health care leaders are calling on the McGuinty government to act on flaws in the province's pesticide legislation to better protect the health of Ontarians.

"Bill 64 will ban the use and sale of pesticides for cosmetic purposes. However, as the bill winds its way through committee hearings and reading in the Legislature, a group of"—more than a dozen—"prominent health care and environmental organizations says the government must act on the bill's weaknesses."

Words and phrases like "shortfalls," "undermines public protection," "significant concerns," "disappointed," "gravely worried" and "loopholes" are rampant throughout a news release written by the very people this government was supposed to have listened to and consulted with.

How does this bill go awry? This news release is evidence that this government did not listen to the experts on either side of the issue.

What is Bill 64 based on? I have a few guesses, and I'm confident that it's based on political science, not on real scientific facts. There's been much doubt cast over the lack of scientific proof to support the Minister of the Environment in his banning of the use of cosmetic pesticides.

First, we heard from the Premier that municipalities could go above and beyond the legislation. Now we've heard that that wasn't true. That was an interesting contradiction of opinions—a nice way to start off this legislation. For months, the Premier and the minister have stated that this is about public health, but we've heard from the government's own health officials that this isn't the case.

Let me quote from the Ottawa Citizen of May 28:

"When I asked if this would change the government's view of the safety of 2,4-D, he responded 'It's not a safety issue.' Huh? Practically every statement the McGuinty government has made about the ban includes the claim that it will 'protect human health, especially children's health.' And that's not a safety issue?

"No," says the spokesperson,"—from the ministry. "The issue is not public health."

We've heard on a daily basis from municipalities, Health Canada and health experts who are seriously questioning the legislation. The minister has told the Premier that he is wrong. He's told Health Canada that they're wrong. He's told municipalities, farmers and small businesses that they're all wrong. Experts across the province have legitimate concerns about Bill 64 and they deserve to be heard through province-wide hearings on the regulations of the bill. So I question the minister's integrity if he refuses that democratic opportunity for experts across the province. Frankly, if this is about protecting the health of children, I think we should take this opportunity to get it right through expert advice, proper science and real facts. I think our children deserve that. They deserve to be given the facts when it comes to their protection.

My colleagues and I believe that we must immediately begin reducing the amount of toxins that Ontarians come in contact with each and every day. However, we also feel that Bill 64 duplicates work already being done at federal and municipal levels, while other environmental issues such as smog go unchecked by this government.

Lorne Hepworth from CropLife Canada summed things up best when he said, "We want to capture the benefits, but we too do not want to have any unnecessary risk, any unacceptable risk, to the public's health or the environment. We have children, we have grandchildren, we have pets, and we like to play on the lawns and on the sports fields too, so I think from that standpoint we share in the goal of this legislation and the committee's approach to it.

"The bottom line, however, is that we also support the safe, proper and responsible use of Health-Canada-approved and -registered pesticides when their use is deemed essential."

This issue of banning pesticides is a very complex one. I can't stress enough that it needs to be based on science. We've seen this government, in their haste to please special interests, shut out other approaches and actively work to ensure that science doesn't get in the way of a great headline or a great photo op. Many would agree this bill does not appear to be based on anything close to consensus or any examination of neutral objective research, evidence or science.

As the bill stands, it suggests that there's something inherently wrong with the pesticide products currently for sale in Ontario. One is left scratching one's head on this because Health Canada and other internationally known research organizations disagree with the idea suggested by the government that there is something wrong with various herbicides, fungicides, algacides and insecticides that control pests in our environment. Up until now, the province has become content with the fact that Health Canada sets the standards on pesticides in this country.

The Premier and the minister are implying that they now know better than Health Canada. It's a very similar theme from the McGuinty Liberals: They know better. If this government thinks Health Canada is wrong when it comes to pesticides, do you also think they are wrong when it comes to other areas of jurisdiction such as pharmaceuticals? If members opposite are sitting on information suggesting that we can no longer trust Health Canada, then I think it's time they brought that information forward.

Bill 64 also establishes a double standard for health of urban residents compared to rural residents as well as those working on golf courses and those on farms and in the forestry industry. Scotts Canada made a submission to the Environmental Bill of Rights that I'd like to quote in part: "A ban focusing on towns and cities while ignoring rural areas would be seriously flawed. To introduce a ban on the use of Health-Canada-approved pest control products in urban centres while permitting their use in rural settings establishes two standards of health and safety for Ontario residents. Clearly where our health and the health of the environment is concerned, a double standard is neither desirable nor acceptable." That says it all.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture, Ontario's largest farm organization, said, "Banning pesticide use in urban settings while maintaining they are safe in agriculture undermines the public's confidence in farming, the safety of our food supply and Health Canada's regulatory safeguards."

Prior to the provincial election last fall, the Premier was on the Bill Carroll Show on CFRB. While on the show, Premier McGuinty was asked about the pesticide legislation and was reported to have said that banning pesticides for cosmetic purposes is the first step. So I question: What is the next step?

Those in the forestry and farming sectors are allowed to use the chemicals because they are bound by stringent training on the application and storage of pesticides. Farmers are required to be certified under the grower pesticide safety course before they can purchase pesticides, let alone use them. Recertification is required every five years. Common sense should tell you that a product is not more or less toxic depending on where it is applied. Therefore, perhaps this government will examine the benefits of educating and training. This certainly may be a more effective route to take than trying to enforce this legislation. Enforcement is something we've heard very little about from that government side.

Exemption for the agriculture and forestry industries is a good thing, but I've spoken to representatives from both sectors who fear that the bill has the possibility of becoming a slippery slope. Rural Ontarians are well aware of the government's track record. It has them worried.

There is a place for pesticides in Ontario. Without them, farmers would be hard pressed to grow consumable products. What about infestations of emerald ash borer or gypsy moth? What about infestations that could wipe out many trees and tree cover that provide cooling effects? During committee, we heard from municipalities that admitted to using larvicides, which are pesticides, to control mosquito populations that can cause West Nile virus. The members opposite like to talk about the risks associated with pesticides because it's politically friendly to the ear, but there are many benefits as well if used properly. That's where education and training come into play. This is where public hearings could be so important; to hear what the experts have to say in how best to proceed.

1030

I agree with Craig Hunter from the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association, who told the committee that he supports "the elimination of misuse, overuse and unnecessary use of any pesticide in any venue. It is essential that to be able to do so, one must know what safe use, appropriate use and justified use are. It takes education and training, like any other complicated issue we deal with in society today." I think we all agree that protecting human health and the environment are paramount.

Bill 64, at the mere three pages that it is, is short on facts, big on rhetoric; the Ministry of the Environment has been as well. If this bill passes, there is a lot of work to be done, as there is the potential for the devil in the details. I'm not sure that the minister wants the devil to be ousted from those details.

I want to refer to the Endangered Species Act and the forestry sector, which certainly feels that the government has double-crossed them as it moves through the regulatory process. The government gave the forestry sector a commitment in writing to recognize their forest management practices, which have long been a world-renowned platinum standard for excellence in forestry. Our forest management practices have worked in support of endangered species, and the science proves that species have been brought back from the brink under current forestry practices: species like caribou, red-shouldered hawks and bald eagles.

A few weeks ago, under the regulatory process, with the Endangered Species Act, the McGuinty government sent a clear signal to the forestry sector that it would not honour its commitment to provide for long-term regulation under the new Endangered Species Act. That sets a very scary precedent, that the regulations and the process that are going to take place with this bill have taken place with the Endangered Species Act.

It was mentioned about the short notice for committee hearings and how people just did not know in time. Some people actually flew, on blind faith, from Ottawa hoping to get on the schedule. That is not the proper way to conduct public committee hearings. The government, again, was doing this all quickly; not enough details, not really wanting to hear from the people, especially people from rural Ontario.

Let me quote from the member from Huron—Bruce on Bill 64 from May 26. I just want to make sure she's listening. "I look forward to the hearings, and they should come to rural Ontario, where they will be very graciously received by the McGuinty government." You can check that Hansard from May 26. I don't know if she has been sleeping or a little slow at the switch because, as sincere as she tries to let on, I say to the member for Huron—Bruce, your own McGuinty Liberals haven't graciously received rural Ontario. As a matter of fact, the environment minister shut them out, and you can read the letter from Geri Kamenz, the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, in that respect.

Yesterday I asked in question period to the Minister of the Environment if hearings would be held across the province and in rural Ontario: no answer; lots of the usual rhetoric; lack of facts. It's regrettable that a bill of this level of importance has been rammed through the House and committee.

The parliamentary assistant for the environment, the member for Oakville, has said he has faith in the agriculture sector. So I say: Why are you shutting them out? Why didn't you give more time for them to appear? I ask again to the Minister of the Environment: Will you take the hearings on these regulations to rural Ontario, take them public and across the province? The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs: Where has she been in this whole picture? This is important legislation and it has not had its open hearings for the public across the province. One day of hearings in Toronto just does not cut it.

I'm running short on time. The devil's in the details, as we've said about this bill. I'm calling on the government to do its due diligence and open transparency. I want the Minister of the Environment to go on record that he will take the regulations across the province for hearings.

Yesterday's National Post carried an article on the lack of validity of this bill: "When Ontario's environment minister, John Gerretsen, was asked last week about Health Canada's finding on the safety of 2,4-D, he raised another issue. Health Canada, he said, was looking at pesticides on a 'product-by-product' basis. That's not good enough."

Another quote from the article: "It's easy to lay the charges and mount a campaign, to convey fear and uncertainty, compared with the dry business of actually conducting a science review.... You make stuff up, exaggerate the risks, politicize the subject and spin it into a corporate and ideological battle. And, above all, you ignore the facts."

That seems to be nailing what's happening here right on the head. Ontarians and children certainly deserve real action from their environment minister. If the health of Ontarians and our environment is truly to be taken seriously, then we should have serious legislation that will improve the health of Ontarians, and this legislation certainly does not cut it.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): Further debate? Debate having concluded, in accordance with agreement in the House earlier today the question on the motion of third reading of Bill 64 will be put forward following petitions.

Third reading vote deferred.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bruce Crozier): The House is now recessed until 10:45 of the clock.

The House recessed from 1036 to 1045.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Dwight Duncan: I have a message from the Administrator of the government signed by his own hand.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The Administrator of the government transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending 31 March 2009 and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly.

INTRODUCTION OF VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): I would like to take this opportunity to welcome a number of guests here today.

On behalf of the member from Scarborough Southwest, Mr. Ed Green, who is celebrating his 60th birthday.

On behalf of page Murray Fallis, his aunt Joanne Cooper and his cousin Jane Cooper, in the public gallery.

On behalf of page Damian Ewing, his brother Xander Ewing, in the public gallery.

As well, on behalf of the member from Thornhill and myself as Speaker, we'd like to welcome in the Speaker's gallery today grade 7 and 8 students from Henderson Avenue Public School and my good friend, one of their teachers, Malcolm Crawford. Welcome to Queen's Park today.

As well, in the Speaker's gallery, I would like the members to recognize the outgoing chief administrative officer from the Police Association of Ontario, Mr. Bruce Miller, and the incoming chief administrative officer, Ron Middel. Bruce, thank you for everything you've done. Welcome, Ron.

As well, we'd like to welcome back our guests who are visiting from the Imo State House of Assembly in Nigeria. Joining the delegation this morning is the Right Honourable Goodluck Nanah Opiah, the Speaker of the Imo State House of Assembly, and his guests. Mr. Speaker, welcome to Queen's Park today.

Interjection: The Right Honourable.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The Right Honourable, yes. I like that. The Speaker likes that title, Mr. Speaker.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): As Speaker, not to presume anything, but since this might be the last day that the House meets—not to presume anything—I'd like to take this opportunity to thank this wonderful group of pages for the fine work that they've done on our behalf. We wish them a safe summer and thank them all very much.

Applause.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): With that, it is now time for oral questions.

ORAL QUESTIONS

C. DIFFICILE

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: As we embark on what may be our last question period for this session, my question is addressed to the Minister of Health. Yesterday, the Ombudsman described the almost 300 known C. difficile deaths in Ontario as a tragedy. He said that perhaps the government is hesitant to call an independent external investigation into the deaths because it is trying to contain an embarrassing situation. Minister, is that why you continue to resist the public call for an investigation into C. difficile?

Hon. George Smitherman: I think it has been said in this House many times that there's a lot of information in the public domain about C. difficile. There has been a lot of information in the public domain about C. difficile. Indeed, hospitals in Ontario obviously grapple with its challenges every single day and with a variety of other known risk factors for patients.

Our sympathy is with people who experience less than ideal circumstances, for sure, but we have the opportunity to take action in a very, very swift way. The transparency associated with what we're bringing into place on September 30 will be a powerful influence for patients, under the leadership of Dr. Michael Baker from the University Health Network, who will emerge as a very public spokesperson on behalf of patients for the circumstances. We think that this is the most appropriate way to move forward and to make effect in the most swift circumstances.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: The fact is that this minister is unwilling to do what other ministers of health throughout the world have done; that is, when there are a significant number of deaths occurring and no explanation for them, there's an inquiry held. I have no doubt that Dr. Baker, in the future, will do a job that needs to be done. However, we're going back. We need to find out what happened and why and make sure it doesn't happen again.

I don't want to hear any more excuses from this minister as to why he will not address this tragedy. I told you yesterday that I had received letters from people who have either had C. difficile or who had lost loved ones to C. difficile. They want answers. They realize you've had four years and done nothing. You didn't heed the warnings. You haven't even yet brought in mandatory reporting. I ask you today, will you listen to the call for an inquiry from—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Minister?

Hon. George Smitherman: There she goes again, saying that the people in health care in Ontario have done nothing; that the hospitals in the province of Ontario, who run their facilities and have the obligation for cleaning them, as an example, have done nothing; that the deployment of infection control practitioners across the province of Ontario is nothing; that forming the Provincial Infectious Diseases Advisory Committee, that's had circulars and given advice to hospitals, was doing nothing; that creating 14 infection control networks is to do nothing.

But not to mention that this issue has been studied substantially: A coroner's report on offer, an investigation into circumstances at Jo Brant, gives us the information that we need and that hospitals require to do the appropriate things in the circumstances, along with the public reporting regime, which will dramatically enhance the transparency associated with patient-safety circumstances in hospitals across the province of Ontario.

Mrs. Elizabeth Witmer: There's only one individual who has not taken decisive action: the minister. Our health providers, our people in hospitals and elsewhere, have done the best they can without strong, coordinated leadership from the top.

This minister can no longer divest himself of responsibility and accountability for this tragedy. He has turned his back on the victims and their families. He's turned his back on the opposition and requests from the Ombudsman to address this tragedy and call an inquiry.

As a result, today we have filed a motion of non-confidence in the government for failing to take action on behalf of Ontarians to address this issue. I give you one more opportunity to acknowledge that you will establish an independent inquiry into the deaths.

Hon. George Smitherman: It's interesting that the honourable member uses the expression "turn her back," because we remember the circumstances when Mike Harris did that to the former chief medical officer of health in our province. He's a CMOH still in our province, Dr. Richard Schabas, and here's what he said on the matter of an inquiry: "I'm not sure a public inquiry is necessarily the logical next step. They often make for good theatre but they don't get us where we need to go, which is to address this problem in a vigorous and effective way, and I think largely we already know what the underlying problems are with C. difficile."

It's not that the information is unknown, it's that the honourable member wants to take a few years and engage a lot of lawyers in an investigation, where we think it's more important to engage clinicians and the people who are on the front lines of health care to take all the appropriate, necessary and available steps to address this circumstance, which has been a known commodity in hospital environments for many, many years.

SCHOOL SAFETY

Mr. Frank Klees: To the Minister of Education: Yesterday, the minister finally acknowledged that, unlike failing to report suspected abuse at the hands of a parent, currently there is no offence in legislation when school officials fail to report student-on-student assaults to parents and police.

It begs the question: Why should it matter who assaults a child before the very people who are entrusted with the responsibility for their safety are required to act? So can the minister explain how she can justify standing by and doing nothing, knowing that there is a clear double standard in law when it comes to the protection of Ontario's children?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: Just to be clear, as I have been as this question has been asked over the last few days, our interest on this side of the House is to make sure that every child in the publicly funded education system receives the oversight and the service that they need. There are police/school board protocols in place that require reporting in particular incidents. We're looking at those protocols. We're also looking at the various pieces of legislation that have reporting mechanisms in them to make sure that we have the correct mechanisms in place.

I'm sure that the member opposite is aware of a letter that has come from the Ontario Principals' Council that says, "Be very cautious about changes that you make to reporting mechanisms because, as we know, principals in our schools need to have discretion in dealing with the children in the system."

The reason that the safe schools action team is looking at the reporting mechanisms is that we—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary?

Mr. Frank Klees: The minister admitted in the House yesterday that there is a serious gap in the law. Because of that gap in the law, the charges against the principal of C.W. Jefferys school in Toronto for failing to report a sexual assault are going to be tossed out by the court, and she knows it.

I suspect that the minister has known about that for more than a year and has done nothing. The situation at C.W. Jefferys and at the York region school were not minor shoving matches; they were serious acts of violence.

If the minister is really on the side of students and on the side of parents, she would close that glaring loophole today. And if she isn't on the side of children and of parents, whose side is she on?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: It is quite clear to me that in the instance that the member is talking about in the York Catholic board, there were breaches of protocol. It has been very clearly stated by the board that that happened, and there has been action taken by the board. There was a protocol in place and that protocol was breached.

It is the responsibility of the Minister of Education to make policies that are reasonable and rational and that address the issues across the system. The fact is that the reason the safe schools action team is looking at the reporting mechanisms across the province in all pieces of legislation is so that I, as the minister, can make recommendations about changes to legislation if that's necessary so that those gaps can be closed.

To the contrary of what the member opposite said, I have taken action in the most reasonable method possible. What I have not done is written policy on the back of—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Final supplementary?

Mr. Frank Klees: The fact is that parents across this province are absolutely shocked to know that there are no legal consequences when school officials fail to protect their children, and they're becoming increasingly concerned to see this minister's lack of concern and lack of immediate action.

Yesterday, perhaps the minister gave us an insight into why she's not acting. She said this: "It will come as no surprise to anyone in this House that I, as the Minister of Education, am not going to endorse policy on the basis of the member opposite's recommendation...." Well, if she won't take my recommendation, will she listen to parents across this province who are appealing to her? There is no more need for studies, Minister. There is no need for drawn-out consultations. What we need is a minister to act. I ask the minister again: Will she bring in immediate legislation and put children and parents first, and if not, what lobby has managed to get her ear?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: Since we came into office in 2003, we've been putting children and families first on this side of the House in every piece of legislation that we have introduced. Our raison d'être as a government is to make sure that children and families in this province have the protections that they need. We were elected to restore publicly funded education in this province because it had been ravaged by the members opposite.

He is absolutely right: I will not take the advice of the member opposite alone. I have already said that it is of great concern to me that the parents in this case did not get the information that they needed. One of the reasons that the safe schools action team is looking at the reporting mechanisms is to make sure that that does not happen again.

HEALTH CARE OVERSIGHT

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: My question is for the Deputy Premier. Why is this government refusing to allow Ombudsman oversight of hospitals and long-term-care homes?

Hon. George Smitherman: The Ombudsman has substantial involvement in a variety of oversight responsibilities related, as an example, to the Ministry of Health. In the case of hospitals in particular, these are organizations that have a community governance model. That's a very special feature of the Ontario health care system. It varies substantially from the model of regional health authorities in other provinces, where community-based individuals, people selected from the local community, are not involved in providing governance. Accordingly, that has been a very substantial distinction.

In the case of long-term care, a very substantial and different compliance regime is in place, which allows for timely response to concerns about the care that people are receiving. We believe that it's necessary to continue to offer that on a real-time basis through the 1-800 action line and that this offers substantial assurance of quality to the people of the province of Ontario.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Boards of directors of hospitals are there to provide good governance to their local hospitals. That has nothing to do with the third party, independent investigating skills that the Ombudsman brings. There's nothing in governance that even relates to investigating complaints. We've had community governance for a long time, but Ontarians still have questions. They have questions about C. difficile that haven't been investigated.

Ontario's Ombudsman says that C. difficile deaths would have been investigated by his office if the government had not refused. Some of the 260 deaths could possibly have been prevented. Knowing that Ontario is the only province without Ombudsman oversight, what excuse does the government have to continue to refuse Ombudsman oversight of hospitals?

Hon. George Smitherman: Why is it that the honourable member accepts some oversight but not others? Why is it that the coroner, with substantial powers backed up in law to investigate these matters, has thoroughly done so in the circumstances of Sault Ste. Marie? Does that not prove to be a satisfactory mechanism in the very specific circumstances that the honourable member raises?

We feel, and other experts from the coroner's office to the chief medical officer of health to local medical officers of health agree, that the information that hospitals need to address circumstances related to patient safety is in their hands. We're going to be adding a very significant degree of transparency, which will be a very powerful influence for all people in the province of Ontario to have very timely information about a wide variety of patient safety circumstances in their hospital environments.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Those other ways of bringing accountability do exist in other provinces, but they still have Ombudsman oversight. They have this third party, independent Ombudsman who brings closure to complaints.

Here's how the Ombudsman himself characterized the government's refusal. He said, "What is the hesitancy? One is, fundamentally, that they're trying to contain perhaps an embarrassing situation...."

Ontarians deserve better than a government that chooses to hide embarrassing situations instead of doing the right thing. Ontarians deserve to have their individual complaints about hospital care investigated by an independent, neutral third party, as every other province in Canada does. Why won't the government do the right thing and allow Ombudsman oversight of hospitals and long-term care?

Hon. George Smitherman: We think that on matters related to the clinical performance in a hospital, it's far more relevant that we take advantage of the information that we have to have clinicians—Dr. Michael Baker in this circumstance—lead us forward in a way that dramatically enhances the transparency that's available with respect to the performance of Ontario's hospitals.

In addition, through things like wait times, we've dramatically enhanced the amount of information that people have about the performance of their hospitals. We've added the powers to the Auditor General to do value-for-money audits of the hospital sector in addition to others.

These are all examples of how we've dramatically enhanced the transparency and accountability of the hospital environment. I think this is a very substantial way to move forward to deliver on the better-results performance that we anticipate will be possible and that we expect from our hospital environments.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETIES

Ms. Andrea Horwath: This is to the Deputy Premier: More often than not, the government's Child and Family Services Review Board closes the door on families who have complaints about Ontario's child welfare protection system. This board in no way substitutes for the truly independent avenue that is available from the Ombudsman's office.

Why does the McGuinty government continue to block the Ontario Ombudsman from looking into children's aid societies, something that the Ombudsman himself has been requesting, in fact most recently in yesterday's report?

Hon. George Smitherman: To the Minister of Children and Youth Services.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: As the member opposite well knows, we do require CASs to have clear, transparent and consistent complaint processes. We established the Child and Family Services Review Board as the authority to hear complaints and review decisions made by the CASs. This board is subject to investigation by the Ombudsman and judicial review by the courts. In addition, we have created the independent office of the Provincial Advocate for Children and Youth.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: The Ombudsman is actually quite pointed: The McGuinty government's way has failed miserably. Even the government's own appointee to the Child and Family Services Review Board told us that the board's scope is inadequate. Here's what Sheena Scott, the government's own appointee, said on May 27 about bringing Ombudsman oversight to the CAS: "Arm's-length independent oversight is something that is consistent with international and domestic law."

If independent Ombudsman oversight is the preferred model in the eyes of so many experts, including the government's own appointee, the Ontario Bar Association, justice stakeholders and the Ombudsman himself, what stands in the way of bringing Ontario into line with international domestic law and allowing families to appeal children's aid society decisions to the Ombudsman?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Let me repeat: There is a process in place where complaints to the CAS can be dealt with. We have required CASs to establish a clear complaint process so that family members and others know exactly what steps they must take and how to lodge appropriate complaints. They are dealt with at the CAS level. We also have a Child and Family Services Review Board. It has the authority to hear the complaints and review decisions made by CASs. The Ombudsman can also review these decisions, as well as the courts.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: Let me repeat: It's not working. Hundreds of complaints are still going to the Ombudsman's office. People are not satisfied with this government's poor solution to the problem.

Last week, I actually introduced legislation once again that would enshrine the Ombudsman's oversight of children's aid societies in this province. Why won't the minister endorse this idea of bringing Ontario into line with many other jurisdictions across Canada? It's the very least that children and families deserve. In fact, it would be interesting for everyone in this chamber to know that even children are calling the Ombudsman's office, which is in his report, asking for him to have oversight into their complaints.

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I don't know quite how to answer this any differently than I've already answered it. Every CAS must have a clear and transparent complaint process. CASs are administered by community boards of directors. There's a clear and transparent complaint process in every CAS across the province.

We also have the Child and Family Services Review Board, which has the authority to hear complaints and review those decisions. The board is subject to investigation by the Ombudsman and judicial review by the courts. There is a process; the process is clear and transparent.

TOURISM

Mr. Ted Arnott: My question is once again for the Minister of Tourism. A survey released this morning from Harris/Decima shows that more and more Ontarians are choosing to stay at home rather than dine out, a growing trend which hurts our hospitality industry. Consumer confidence appears to be plunging, and confidence in this government is sure to follow.

As gasoline prices, food prices and the cost of living soar, the McGuinty government is doing nothing to help struggling families this summer. Will the minister move immediately to implement John Tory's plan to remove the retail sales tax from accommodation and attractions for this summer?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: Here go the nega-Tories again in our province with a short-term band-aid solution to the challenges that, yes, are being faced by the tourism sector.

Our government has worked very, very closely with our partners in the tourism industry over the last five years. Our plan includes short-term initiatives as well as a long-term strategy and road map for tourism here in Ontario. We've invested in festivals and events across this province to boost local economies to make sure that people have attractions and experiences within their local place. We understand that 80% of our tourism market is domestic; it's Ontarians travelling within Ontario. That's why we've had a very successful campaign that was launched last year called "There's no place like this." Compared to a year before, the time that this campaign ran, we actually saw a 5% jump in our—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary?

Mr. Ted Arnott: Data from the ministry show that hotel performance in the province in the first quarter of 2008 declined substantially relative to the same period last year. No doubt the minister will hear the same thing when he meets with the Tourism Industry Association of Ontario later today. Our caucus has given you an answer. Support for John Tory's proposal continues to grow.

Beth Potter from the Ontario Private Campground Association tells us that her members experienced a minuscule 14% occupancy rate for overnight stays in May, as compared to an almost 100% occupancy rate last year over the May long weekend. In fact, this year several campgrounds had not even a single camper in their parks for the long weekend.

My question is this: Why won't the minister stand in his place today as Minister of Tourism and be an advocate for tourism instead of being an apologist for his do-nothing government?

Hon. Peter Fonseca: I am here to champion Ontario tourism. Unfortunately, the member in that party over there wants to talk down Ontario, wants to be negative on Ontario. What we're here to do is champion all the great things there are to do and see across this magnificent province. We want to talk about Muskoka. We want to talk about the Niagara region. We want to talk about the north. We want to talk about our border communities like Windsor. We want to talk about great cities; about Prince Edward county.

We are here working with our partners, and I will be meeting with the Tourism Industry Association of Ontario later today. They have told us that our plan is the right plan for this tourism sector today and for the future.

LONG-TERM CARE

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: Ma question est pour le ministre de la Santé et des Soins de longue durée. Can the minister tell us what in the Sharkey report prevents him from bringing in minimum standards of long-term care as he's repeatedly promised before?

Hon. George Smitherman: I want to say to the honourable member, and she was there yesterday, so she knows the answer to this, that there is nothing that prevents the implementation of a minimum standard. In fact, we passed legislation that allows us to be able to do so.

I would be interested to know her views, once she's consumed the report, on the premise that the report offers, which is that, on investigation, a number alone is not what ensures quality performance in the long-term-care sector. I said yesterday that that's still an option, but the report pushes us further and says that numbers alone do not ensure the quality outcome that we wish on behalf of our residents. I'm very interested to know the member's views about the report and I encourage other people to read it and pass along their views.

M<sup>me</sup> France Gélinas: We realize that the minister can and should put into regulation a minimum standard of care. A minimum standard of care is the safest way to make sure residents in long-term-care facilities get what they deserve. After a lifetime of building our province and caring for their families, our seniors deserve better. Over and over again, this minister promised that a minimum standard of hands-on care would be there in regulation. Why is he breaking a promise? Why is he letting the most vulnerable down? Why won't he put it in regulation right now?

Hon. George Smitherman: I want to say to the honourable member that everyone in this House agrees on one thing: More staffing in long-term care is the answer. That's why our budget continues to deliver on advancements in care: over the next three years, 600 million additional dollars to provide for 4,500 additional workers. We all agree: More workers is the answer.

I would really encourage the honourable member to move beyond the rhetoric which she has just used in her question and to read the report and give me her view, because Ms. Sharkey challenges us to a spot further along than the rhetoric that you just used. We all agree that these are vulnerable residents. We all agree that they've built our country and our province. But the report says that a number alone doesn't cut it. It encourages us to be more sophisticated. I ask the honourable member to take a bit of time and engage the report. We can bring in a minimum standard, but that alone is not the best way to the quality that we all seek. The report challenges us to reconsider that. I really want the honourable member to give me—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): New question.

FIRE SAFETY

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Minister, as you know, I've been a proponent of residential sprinklers since arriving in this Legislature. In January of this year, the Premier expressed a desire to make high-rise buildings safer by harmonizing our building code with the model National Building Code of Canada and with the requirements in force in other Canadian and US jurisdictions. Minister, my question is: When do you foresee some building code changes coming forward based on the consultations your ministry began in February and ended in May of this year?

Hon. Jim Watson: Let me begin by thanking the member for Brampton-Springdale. There is no greater champion for fire safety in this Legislative Assembly than that member who just asked the question.

Ontario is the only jurisdiction in Canada that does not require sprinklers in residential buildings over three storeys. That's why today I am pleased to announce that effective April 1, 2010, all high-rise residential buildings over three storeys will require a fire sprinkler system in them.

I want to thank the honourable member for her work on this particular issue.

Since 1983, over 447 lives have been lost in high-rise residential buildings. That's why we have moved forward after consulting the fire marshal and others—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary?

Mrs. Linda Jeffrey: Minister, this is wonderful news. I'm really pleased with the speed of these proposed regulations, the fact that they've come forward this quickly.

Minister, because we want to continue to move forward on making our buildings safer in the future and to continue the dialogue we began with our stakeholders in February, how can municipalities, builders and other interested groups like the Ontario Municipal Fire Prevention Officers' Association and the Ontario fire chiefs provide recommendations to your ministry in the upcoming building code review in 2010?

Hon. Jim Watson: Let me just inform the member and all members of the House and the public what the process is. Every five years, our ministry conducts a review of the building code.

I want to thank the member for bringing the fire chiefs from around the province, who risk their lives every day, to the Legislative Assembly.

I can tell the member that there will be a wide consultation process in advance of the 2010 building code review—a wide cross-section of the public, from developers, municipalities, firefighters, fire chiefs, the fire marshal and others, and great co-operation from my colleague Minister Bartolucci. We will ensure that all these consultations go into the process. Members of the public can also contact us through our website, ontario.ca/buildingcode, or by calling our ministry office. We're interested in the public's input. We're interested in the public's point of view.

We again thank very much the member from Brampton–Springdale for bringing this issue—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. John Yakabuski: My question is for the Minister of Natural Resources. Minister, you'll know that the British Columbia government has recently partnered with the federal government to provide lumber and expertise needed to build temporary and permanent shelters to help the beleaguered earthquake area in China. This is not only going to help the victims of the earthquake and those survivors, but it's going to help the BC lumber industry, which is suffering, as you know. But here in Ontario, our lumber industry in northern Ontario, in my riding of Renfrew–Nipissing–Pembroke and all across the province is hurting as well.

My question is simple: Will you step up to the plate for our beleaguered industry and sit down with the federal government to negotiate and work on the same kind of deal, so that our lumber industry can benefit by sending that kind of expertise and quality Canadian product over to China as well? Will you do that?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: I thank the member for the question. Without doubt, we're open to all possibilities in working with the federal government. I'd be more than happy to continue to make the call to the federal Minister of Natural Resources, who for some unknown reason doesn't answer the phone and doesn't call back. But I'd be more than happy to follow through, any time that we can be of support and benefit to the forest industry, to sit down and have a discussion.

Our challenge, obviously, is the issue of transportation and distribution. We do not sit on an ocean; we actually have to go through the Great Lakes. Having said that, I think it's well worth following through with and I'd be more than happy—maybe the member could help me by asking Mr. Lunn to pick up the phone.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Supplementary?

Mr. Norm Miller: Well, Minister, it is time for you to do something for the people supported by the forestry industry.

Last week, Thunder Bay passed a resolution calling on your government to enact a long-term regulation that recognizes that the primary objectives of the Endangered Species Act are met through the Crown Forest Sustainability Act and forest management plans. Kenora is poised to pass a similar resolution. All this because you broke another promise to the people of Ontario.

Instead of basing your decisions on junk science provided by special interest groups, you should consider some facts.

Interjections.

Mr. Norm Miller: These are both connected with forestry and the support of communities in Ontario, Mr. Speaker.

Of the 16 species added to the Endangered Species Act list in Ontario, not one of them is found in northern Ontario and not one of them is linked to forestry practices.

If you won't honour your initial commitment, will you at least agree to hold off on any new job-killing red tape so you can hear directly from the people in communities of northern and rural Ontario?

Hon. Donna H. Cansfield: I'm more than pleased to respond. I find it fascinating that the member is not prepared to accept what the Canadian government, our government and the government of British Columbia have determined; that is, that the forest-dwelling woodland caribou is a species at risk, and has been for the number of years that we've been working on a caribou recovery strategy.

Having said that, the Premier was very clear in the letter to the industry that we would be incorporating the Endangered Species Act in the forest management plans. We have a good standard on which to build a good foundation, and we will do that. Our first meeting will be on July 8, when we have invited the industry to come and sit down with us and work towards finding a solution that works for the forest industry. That's the way we work over here. We bring people together: We have a problem and we find a solution. That is exactly what we intend to do.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. Rosario Marchese: To the Minister of Education: The Ombudsman says that your mantra of openness, transparency and accountability has yet to filter to education. Parents are still in the dark.

I remember a time when you and so many of your colleagues used to rail against government obfuscation. The minister seems to have forgotten that her party promised a standing committee on education spending. Since the minister is unwilling to turn on the light on education finances, when will she allow the Ombudsman to do the job?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: What's really important is that we have public accountability mechanisms in place. That's why we require boards to provide detailed and ongoing budget reports. In fact, since we've been in office, the number of reports and mechanisms that have been put in place has increased.

A good example comes from a report that the Auditor General put in place, questioning the expenditure of ESL—English as a second language—dollars. What has resulted from that is that we now require boards to explain to us where those English-as-a-second-language dollars are spent, what the programs are and what the benefits to students are. So quite the contrary: I think what we've done is increased accountability. That's what people need to know, that the public accountability is in place.

Mr. Rosario Marchese: When the minister wants the Ombudsman to look into select school board finances, she lets the watchdog loose. But when parents want their complaints investigated, she holds the watchdog back. How convenient.

The public has a right to know what, how and where education dollars are spent. That is why five other provinces have allowed Ombudsman oversight over school boards. When will this minister turn on the light and give the Ontario Ombudsman oversight over school boards?

Hon. Kathleen O. Wynne: The fact that the Auditor General has the right to investigate and goes into school boards is absolutely important oversight. I guess the question is why one measure of oversight is better than another. You're talking about board finances. The Auditor General looks at school boards and gives us recommendations and makes a critique of how board finances are managed.

The fact that there has had to be supervision in a board recently in the Toronto area, I would suggest, is demonstration of the system working. We know that when those systems are not working, when the accountability is not in place, when there are breaches of protocols and guidelines, then there needs to be action taken by the government. That's what we've done. The public accountability measures are in place and are increasing.

SERVICES EN FRANÇAIS

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde: My question is to the minister responsible for francophone affairs.

Un moment historique a eu lieu hier pour les francophones de l'Ontario. Le Commissaire aux services en français, M<sup>e</sup> François Boileau, a déposé son premier rapport visant l'accroissement de la qualité des services en français offerts par l'ensemble des ministères du gouvernement de l'Ontario. Suite au dépôt de ce rapport, j'aimerais demander à la ministre déléguée aux Affaires francophones, l'honorable Madeleine Meilleur, quelles sont ses réactions initiales face à ce tout premier rapport.

L'hon. Madeleine Meilleur: Premièrement, j'aimerais remercier le commissaire, M. Boileau, qui est ici avec nous aujourd'hui dans la galerie, pour son premier rapport.

Oui, en effet, la remise de ce rapport est un événement historique, puisqu'il s'agit d'un premier rapport du Commissaire aux services en français dont le poste vient d'être créé.

Le rapport contient des recommandations sur l'état des services en français en Ontario, les principaux enjeux qu'il a relevés et les réalisations dont il a été témoin depuis sa nomination. Le dépôt de ce rapport est le fruit d'un long processus visant à accroître la transparence et la responsabilité au chapitre des services en français en Ontario, envers lesquels le gouvernement demeure engagé. Il marque aussi le début d'une nouvelle collaboration constructive entre les ministères et le commissaire, un partenariat qui misera sur les progrès faits jusqu'à présent dans le domaine des services en français.

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde: Dans son rapport, le commissaire souligne le fait qu'en apportant des amendements à la Loi sur les services en français, le premier ministre a fait preuve de leadership politique et a voulu donner un souffle nouveau à la loi. En Ontario, le citoyen a le droit de recevoir un service en français de qualité des institutions gouvernementales. Elles doivent les offrir activement pour susciter la demande de services en français.

En vue d'améliorer les services en français offerts par la province, dans son premier rapport le commissaire a formulé trois principales recommandations. J'aimerais demander à la ministre déléguée aux Affaires francophones comment le gouvernement entend y répondre.

L'hon. Madeleine Meilleur: Premièrement, je tiens à préciser que nous allons continuer à travailler en étroite collaboration avec le commissaire et les ministères afin d'explorer plus à fond l'impact des recommandations plus globales visant l'élargissement de la définition de « francophone » en Ontario. Le gouvernement accueille de façon favorable les recommandations du commissaire de moderniser le rôle des coordonnateurs de services en français, qui n'a été revu depuis 1970.

Finalement, j'ai demandé au comité consultatif provincial sur les Affaires francophones de formuler des recommandations sur la meilleure façon de remédier aux lacunes quant à la prestation des services en français par les organismes de paiements de transfert. C'est une très bonne chose, une très bonne recommandation. Je voudrais réitérer l'engagement de l'office des Affaires francophones et du gouvernement à collaborer avec le commissaire pour assurer aux Franco-Ontariens les services en français auxquels ils ont droit.

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY OFFICE

Ms. Sylvia Jones: My question is for the Minister of Community and Social Services. For the past five years, the Family Responsibility Office has consistently been highlighted—or should I say lowlighted?—by the Ombudsman for their failure to enforce court orders. What are you doing to deal with the huge backlog of cases with arrears at the Family Responsibility Office?

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: I thank the member for this very important question. The Family Responsibility Office is a very important service. We know how important it is for a family to be able to enjoy a decent standard of living and for our children to get a good start in life.

Our government believes that a child should not suffer because parents refuse to live up to their family responsibilities. That's why we have invested more than $46 million in the Family Responsibility Office over the past four years to improve the operations, improve customer services and improve enforcement. Some examples of the continuing progress include the introduction of a more personal, client-friendly case management model delivered through a small, dedicated group of people who are responsible for specific case files. In the supplementary, I will continue—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you, Minister. Supplementary.

Ms. Sylvia Jones: My research shows that the backlog of parents with outstanding support payments is in excess of 121,000 people. Clearly, when two thirds of the people are trying to raise their children without money that a court order states they are entitled to, your changes mean nothing. How are you going to address this issue so that parents receive the money they deserve to house, feed and clothe their children?

Hon. Madeleine Meilleur: First of all, we have moved forward with introducing more personal and client-friendly cases. We have introduced tough new enforcement tools, and we are moving forward with collecting the arrears.

I'm very surprised to have a question from that party, who, when they were in power, did almost nothing to collect these arrears. Over 80% of the current arrears are over four years old and 42% are over 10 years old. So when your party was in power, your party did nothing to collect the arrears. On this side of the House, we are working towards progress. We are putting tools in place to collect more of these arrears, and we will continue to do so.

HOSPITAL SERVICES

Ms. Andrea Horwath: My question is for the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. The proposed restructuring of Hamilton Health Sciences is causing no end of concern in Hamilton. Adults could lose their only emergency department in west Hamilton. Objections have been raised repeatedly with the hospital administration to no avail, and concern is rising.

Minister, ultimately, who has stewardship and carriage over hospital services planning in the Hamilton region? Where does this buck stop?

Hon. George Smitherman: The honourable member, I think, does a disservice to the debate that has gone on in the Hamilton community with respect to some alteration in their emergency rooms. I think that the debate has been a very honest, open and transparent one. The hospital has put forward a proposal which does the best with the resources that are available to them, including important health human resources. Where the honourable member can talk about some impact for adult emergency room access in west Hamilton, she doesn't acknowledge that, at that very same site, will emerge in the Hamilton community a specialized pediatric emergency room very similar to the kind of capabilities that people experience with Sick Kids hospital.

I'm very proud of the work that's been done in Hamilton. I realize that change can be wrenching for people. I think they've been exemplary in their transparency around these proposed changes, and I think they've made a very strong clinical case. I'm disappointed that the honourable member hasn't absorbed much of that.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: Unfortunately, the debate is actually still ongoing. That's my understanding. The minister has now said that this new model will emerge. My understanding is no final decision has been made. In fact, that's the crux of the problem.

I have a letter dated June 6 from the chair of our LHIN that puts the whole issue back onto the hospital administrators and doesn't acknowledge any role at all, but the debate continues to rage in the community. The community feels like it's being played like a bit of a bolo bat. Yes, it's true. It's difficult, and residents are up in arms. Doctors at the hospital are concerned. They're saying that this restructuring could hurt patient care.

What I want to know is, what is the minister going to do to make this process more transparent and accountable to the citizens of Hamilton? Ultimately, the buck does stop with him, and I just want to make sure he's prepared to handle it.

Hon. George Smitherman: I fully support the debate that's going on and I fully support the capacity of the local community, between their hospital and the local health integration network, to land in the right spot.

The Hamilton community, from the standpoint of access to emergency rooms, enjoys very good emergency room access, and even after the changes that are in place, they will enjoy very good emergency room access. I think that Hamilton has a very exciting opportunity to see emerge a pediatric-focused emergency room. While the member can talk about community unrest and people up in arms and outrage, she is, as usual, speaking for a small number of people when, overall, I believe that the work Hamilton Health Sciences has done to outline these circumstances has been met with a very good degree of acceptance in the community because it's based on a very strong foundation, which is clinical service and the safety of patients. I think this is something that's been well handled and can be determined appropriately in the local community.

POVERTY

Mr. David Zimmer: My question is for the Minister of Children and Youth Services. Minister, I recently had the opportunity to co-host a town hall on poverty reduction in Toronto. We heard from community service organizations, people living on low incomes, business persons and religious leaders. A wide range of perspectives and solutions was suggested to this problem. In fact, I sensed a common drive to work together to reduce poverty.

Minister, how will you and the committee on poverty reduction take this advice into account when developing your poverty reduction strategy?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: Let me start by thanking the member from Willowdale for his ongoing, thoughtful advocacy for those who are facing challenges and need a better opportunity to be the very best they can be.

I have had the opportunity to meet with people across this province, and it's critical to us that our poverty reduction strategy reflects the voices of people who have participated. That includes the voices of people who have attended the MPP consultations, such as the one that the member opposite heard, in collaboration with the members from Don Valley East and Don Valley West. I was happy to be there and happy to hear the ideas.

I've now held 12 consultations myself, with another one tonight and the 14th one in Kitchener-Waterloo on Thursday. I've met with people on low income. I've met with community advocates, those with agencies, business people—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. Supplementary?

Mr. David Zimmer: Yesterday I was very surprised to hear the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, John Tory, taking up the issue and talking about poverty reduction. I found it surprising that he would admit to the media that his caucus had discussed the possibility of only beginning their own conversation on poverty reduction—

Mr. Tim Hudak: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I just wondered if this is consistent with the types of questions that are allowed in the Legislature. It has nothing to do with the question itself.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): It's on the same line. I appreciate it. Continue.

Mr. David Zimmer: I found it surprising that he would admit to the media that his caucus had finally begun to discuss the possibility of beginning their own conversation on poverty reduction. It seems rather late, considering that we haven't heard anything through all these months, this past year, from Mr. Tory about how to address poverty.

Could the minister please tell me in this House, for the benefit of all parties, how our government came to the decision to go out and engage people on the poverty reduction issue?

Hon. Deborah Matthews: I think we would all agree that it's a special day in Ontario when a member of the Conservative Party—not necessarily a member of this Legislature but a member of the Conservative Party—speaks about poverty in this province.

I am urging all members from all sides of this House to participate in the poverty reduction strategy. I was very happy that the member from York-Simcoe attended one of the consultations. I urge all of you to do the same. Trust me: You will learn something.

When the Premier appointed the committee on poverty reduction, it was very clear from the beginning that this strategy had to be grounded in the reality of people living in poverty. That is why we have multiple ways to participate, including consultations such as the member had with his constituents; a 1-800-number, 1-866-5953; the website; direct consultation with me; and—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. New question.

PESTICIDES

Mr. Peter Shurman: My question is for the Minister of the Environment. As Minister of the Environment, one would think the minister would take an interest in science. Health Canada approved use of 2,4-D-based pesticides if used as directed on the product label. I quote from the Health Canada website: "The PMRA has determined, based on the available scientific information, that 2,4-D is acceptable for use on lawns and turf when label directions are followed."

What information does the Minister of the Environment and the McGuinty nanny-statists possess that was not available to the expert, world-renowned scientists at Health Canada?

Hon. John Gerretsen: Let me first of all say that it's our hope in this House that for the benefit of our children, the health of our communities and the people in Ontario, that member from that party and the NDP will join us in voting in favour of Bill 64, because it's all about protecting the health and welfare of children.

Health Canada never says whether or not a particular product or ingredient is safe. All they say is that there's not an unnecessary risk. What we are concerned about and what all of those in the environmental community are concerned about is the cumulative effect of all these various products that have been used on our lawns, our backyards, our front yards and in playgrounds and parks. That's what this is all about.

We look forward to that member's endorsement of our bill, because it is for the health and benefit of all Ontarians that we're doing this.

Mr. Peter Shurman: It's all about the children, but so is the Wizard of Oz. Ontarians trust Health Canada with their food, medicine and indeed their health. The minister is saying they are wrong. PR seems to be more important to this government than sound policy. Belief that Bill 64 is based on sound scientific fact is tantamount to believing you can turn lead into gold. I can't tell if it is coming from the Minister of the Environment or the minister of alchemy. Why has the minister of alchemy—sorry, the Minister of the Environment—and the McGuinty nanny-statist government chosen to follow pseudo-science and burden Ontarians with baseless legislation rather than follow the testimony of expert Canadian scientists?

Hon. John Gerretsen: This member just doesn't get it. Health Canada looks at it on a product-by-product basis. What we're talking about is the cumulative effect of a number of these different products that are used on our lawns, clear across Ontario. Nobody knows exactly what the long-term health effect of these products together is. That's why we're doing it: to protect the health and welfare particularly of our young children who are likely to play on the various lawns and parks in this province. That's what this is all about. It's based on good science.

Once again, we ask that member to talk to the other members of his party and vote in favour of this bill.

HERITAGE CONSERVATION

Ms. Andrea Horwath: To the Minister of Culture: Knowing full well the Hamilton community's deep interest in heritage preservation, why did the McGuinty government withhold the Ontario Heritage Foundation report on the Lister Block that recommended designating this Hamilton heritage landmark a bona fide historic site?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: The government and my ministry work very closely with the commissioner. We respect the privacy rules. We have no issues at all. In the past, the Ontario heritage reports have been of a confidential nature. In this case, the decision was rendered by the commissioner to make them open, and I'm perfectly satisfied with that.

Ms. Andrea Horwath: The Lister Block is another McGuinty government debacle on the heritage preservation front. Let's not hope it becomes the next building that ends up in demolition by neglect.

The minister ignored the report that she refers to. It was commissioned, but no actions were taken. The Lister Block is still not designated. It's not a heritage site under this government's watch. That was recommended in that very report a couple of years ago.

What active steps will this minister actually take now to preserve the Lister Block, as recommended by Lincoln Alexander, and ensure that the Lister Block is spared from demolition?

Hon. M. Aileen Carroll: The Lister Block has been designated municipally. We have encouraged the owners of the Lister Block to work well with the municipality. The provincial government has provided $7 million to the municipality. There's an excellent accommodation. All of this has been moved through the process with the OMB.

This is a very successful outcome. I see no need for me to intervene in what is, as I say, a very successful outcome for the city of Hamilton.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: My question is for the Minister of Labour.

Minister, in my riding of Pickering-Scarborough East I have an extensive range of small businesses and entrepreneurs who own and operate their businesses there and also throughout Ontario. They've faced some very unique challenges, not the least of which, Minister, is the need to comply with a variety of government regulations.

I understand, Minister, that you and your ministry are undertaking some particular initiatives that seek to make it easier for businesses in my community to comply with these regulations. Could you provide us with some details on this and tell us how it's going to be of benefit to business owners throughout the province of Ontario?

Hon. Brad Duguid: I'd like to thank the member for Pickering-Scarborough East for that question and also for his work with small business in the Pickering area and right across the province.

One of the things that really pleases me with my ministry is the fact that we are communicating a lot more than used to be done in the past with small business, to ensure that the work that we're doing in assisting small businesses to comply with our regulations is being done in a way that small businesses can handle.

One of the most notable successes we've had is the creation of a one-stop-shop system that we call compliance information centres. We've targeted two key industries: the autobody sector and the plastics products manufacturing sector. These sectors can now go online and find out every regulation that would apply to them within the government. It really is of help—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Supplementary.

Mr. Wayne Arthurs: I want to thank the minister for that information. It's great news for businesses in the province of Ontario, particularly those in my riding. Measures that will assist small businesses to operate more efficiently and more effectively help support that very positive business attitude which we all enjoy.

Would the minister take the opportunity to tell us a little more about how these initiatives will improve the relationship between government and business when it comes to these compliance matters?

Hon. Brad Duguid: An act was passed in the Legislature toward the end of the term called the Regulatory Modernization Act. It didn't get a lot of public attention, as members who were involved in that act know, but it does have a huge impact on our ability as a government to break down the barriers between the compliance ministries across the government and provide a more harmonized and better level of service to our business community. So I think that's helped a great deal in our ability as a government to respond to those concerns.

There are a number of other initiatives that have taken place throughout the government.

I want to commend our Minister of Revenue, who made a very impressive speech just this week. She's worked very hard to reduce the tax burden, the compliance burden for taxes on—

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): Thank you. The time for question period has ended.

PETITIONS

HOSPITAL SERVICES

Ms. Laurie Scott: I'm reading this petition on behalf of my colleague the MPP from Simcoe North: protecting our hospital services and democratic governance.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the government-appointed supervisor of the Huronia District Hospital (HDH) has recommended a merger of HDH with the Penetanguishene General Hospital (PGH);

"Whereas the supervisor recommended changes to the governance of the hospital to eliminate community memberships and the democratic selection and governance of the hospital board and directors based on an ideology and not on the wishes of the community;

"Whereas the supervisor has also recommended the splitting up and divestment of the mental health centre in Penetanguishene, creating uncertainty in the future of mental health beds and services; and

"Whereas hospital mergers and restructuring under the local health integration network can result in a loss in the total number of hospital beds and services provided to a community,

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We call on the government of Ontario to "Protect the current level of beds and services at all sites in Midland and Penetanguishene; and

"Protect the community memberships and the democratic governance of the new hospital created by the merger of HDH and PGH."

This is signed by many people from the member from Simcoe North's riding.

ONTARIO SOCIETY
FOR THE PREVENTION
OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Monte Kwinter: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I've affixed my signature to it.

WATER QUALITY

Mr. Ted Arnott: I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the provincial government does not, at this time, have a funding program that provides financial assistance to owners and occupants of mobile home parks to assist them in complying with the Safe Drinking Water Act, 2002; and

"Whereas Mini Lakes Park is a year-round, resident-owned-and-operated non-profit residential community that has fully complied with the Safe Drinking Water Act, 2002, at great expense to each individual resident;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to retroactively amend the Safe Drinking Water Act, 2002, to include financial assistance to year-round, resident-owned-and-operated non-profit communities."

I will give it to Natalie, and I've affixed my signature at the top.

ONTARIO SOCIETY
FOR THE PREVENTION
OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Reza Moridi: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I sign it and pass it on to page Christopher.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Charles Sousa: I have a petition, compliments of Dr. Richard O'Connor. It reads as follows:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I assign my signature and provide it to page Chris.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Bob Delaney: To my colleague from Halton: Of course he can sign it; he can even read it. It's a petition to the Ontario Legislative Assembly. It reads as follows:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing despite the vigorous capital project activity at the hospitals within the Mississauga Halton LHIN boundaries; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility, thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I too am pleased to sign and support this petition and to ask page Megan to carry it.

WORKPLACE HARASSMENT

Ms. Andrea Horwath: This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas workplace harassment (physical/psychological) and violence are linked to the mental and physical ill-health and safety of workers in Ontario; and

"Whereas harassment and violence need to be defined as violations of the Occupational Health and Safety Act so that it is dealt with as quickly and earnestly by employers as other health and safety issues; and

"Whereas employers will have a legal avenue and/or a legal obligation to deal with workplace harassment and violence in all its forms, including psychological harassment; and

"Whereas harassment poisons the workplace, taking many forms—verbal/physical abuse, sabotage, intimidation, bullying, sexism and racism, and should not be tolerated; and

"Whereas harassment in any form harms a targets physical and mental health, esteem and productivity, and contributes to trauma and stress on the job; and

"Whereas Bill 29 would make it the law to protect workers from workplace harassment by giving workers the right to refuse work after harassment has occurred, requiring the investigation of allegations of workplace-related harassment and oblige employers to take steps to prevent further occurrences of workplace-related harassment;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to treat workplace harassment and violence as a serious health and safety issue by passing MPP Andrea Horwath's Bill 29, which would bring workplace harassment and violence under the scope of the Occupational Health and Safety Act."

I agree with it. I have signed it and will send it to the table by page Murray. I thank Joe Pincivero from Alliston for giving it to us.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Joe Dickson: "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Central East Local Health Integration Network board of directors has approved the Rouge Valley Health System's deficit elimination plan, subject to public meetings; and

"Whereas it is important to ensure that the new birthing unit at Centenary hospital, a $20-million expansion that will see 16 new labour, delivery, recovery and postpartum (LDRP) birthing rooms and an additional 21 postpartum rooms added by October 2008, will not cause any decline in the pediatric and maternity services currently provided at the Ajax-Pickering hospital; and

"Whereas, with the significant expansion of the Ajax-Pickering hospital, the largest in its 53-year history, a project that could reach $100 million, of which 90% is funded by the Ontario government, it is important to continue to have a complete maternity unit at the Ajax hospital; and

"Whereas it is also imperative for the Rouge Valley Health System to balance its budget, eliminate its deficit and debt and realize the benefits of additional Ontario government funding; and

"Whereas the parents of Ajax and Pickering deserve the right to have their children born in their own community, where they have chosen to live and work;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Rouge Valley Health System continue to provide the current level of service; and

"That our Ajax-Pickering hospital now serves the fastest-growing communities of west Durham; and

"That the Ajax-Pickering hospital retain its full maternity unit."

I shall affix my signature to this and pass this to page Dina.

LABORATORY SERVICES

Mr. Norm Miller: I have a petition to do with lab services in Muskoka-East Parry Sound.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the residents of the communities served by Muskoka Algonquin Healthcare (MAHC) wish to maintain current community lab services; and

"Whereas maintaining community lab services promotes physician retention and benefits family health teams; and

"Whereas the funding for community lab services is currently a strain on the operating budget of MAHC; and

"Whereas demand for health services is expected to continue to rise with a growing retirement population in Muskoka-East Parry Sound; and

"Whereas the operating budget for MAHC needs to reflect the growing demand for service in the communities of Muskoka-East Parry Sound;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the McGuinty government and the Minister of Health increase the operating budget of Muskoka Algonquin Healthcare to permit continued operation of community lab services."

I support this petition.

ONTARIO SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Mike Colle: I have a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has not been updated since 1919;

"Whereas Bill 50 would require all veterinarians to report suspected abuse and neglect, protecting veterinarians from liability;

"Whereas it would allow the OSPCA to inspect and investigate places where animals are kept;

"Whereas the bill would prohibit the training of animals to fight;

"Whereas Bill 50 would allow the OSPCA to inspect roadside zoos;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to pass Bill 50, entitled the Provincial Animal Welfare Act, 2008, to protect our animal friends."

I, along with thousands of people across Ontario, support this petition and affix my name to it.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr. Ted Chudleigh: I'm pleased to read a petition:

"Whereas wait times for access to surgical procedures in the western GTA area," which includes Halton, "served by the Mississauga Halton LHIN are growing; and

"Whereas 'day surgery' procedures could be performed in an off-site facility"—sounds like private health care to me—"thus greatly increasing the ability of surgeons to perform more procedures, alleviating wait times for patients, and freeing up operating theatre space in hospitals for more complex procedures that may require post-operative intensive care unit support and a longer length of stay in hospital;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care allocate funds in its 2008-09 capital budget to begin planning and construction of an ambulatory surgery centre located in western Mississauga," or eastern Halton, "to serve the Mississauga-Halton area and enable greater access to 'day surgery' procedures that comprise about four fifths of all surgical procedures performed."

I pass the petition to Christopher G.

IDENTITY THEFT

Mr. Tony Ruprecht: The petition I have in front of me goes to the Parliament of Ontario and the Minister of Government Services, and it reads as follows:

"Whereas identity theft is the fastest-growing crime in North America;

"Whereas confidential and private information is being stolen on a regular basis, affecting literally thousands of people;

"Whereas the cost of this crime exceeds billions of dollars;

"Whereas countless hours are wasted to restore one's good credit rating;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, demand that Bill 75, which passed the second reading unanimously in the Ontario Legislature ... be brought before committee and that the following issues be included for consideration and debate:

"(1) All consumer reports should be provided in a truncated (masked-out) form, protecting our vital private information such as SIN and loan account numbers.

"(2) Should a consumer reporting agency discover that there has been an unlawful disclosure of consumer information, the agency should immediately inform the affected consumer.

"(3) The consumer reporting agency shall only report credit inquiry records resulting from actual applications for credit or increase of credit, except in a report given to the consumer.

"(4) The consumer reporting agency shall investigate disputed information within 30 days and correct, supplement or automatically delete any information found unconfirmed, incomplete or inaccurate."

Since I agree with this petition 100%, I'm certainly delighted to put my name to it, and I know that most members will agree with it as well.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The time for petitions has ended. When the Standing Committee on the Legislative Assembly meets this summer, they may want to look at the issue of the length of petitions.

In accordance with the agreement made earlier today, the House will now revert to orders of the day.

COSMETIC PESTICIDES BAN ACT, 2008

LOI DE 2008 SUR L'INTERDICTION DES PESTICIDES UTILISÉS À DES FINS ESTHÉTIQUES

Deferred vote on the motion for third reading of Bill 64, An Act to amend the Pesticides Act to prohibit the use and sale of pesticides that may be used for cosmetic purposes / Projet de loi 64, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les pesticides en vue d'interdire l'usage et la vente de pesticides pouvant être utilisés à des fins esthétiques.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): The matter before the House is Bill 64. The debate having concluded, I will now put the question. Mr. Gerretsen has moved third reading of Bill 64. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1205 to 1235.

The Speaker (Hon. Steve Peters): All those in favour will rise one at a time and be recorded by the Clerk.
